PREFACE

It was with great reluctance that we undertook the revision of the History of Orange County, which we helped to compile ten years ago, not because we believed in Oslerism or wished to enjoy our otium cum dignitate, but because of the magnitude of the undertaking and of our lack of special preparation, not having anticipated a recall to the work of writing history.

However, with the help of expert writers on special subjects, and from the Federal crop estimator, the state board of horticulture, the county and city officers, the secretaries of boards of trade, chambers of commerce, fruit exchanges and vegetable unions, patriotic and relief associations, the newspapers—especially the Santa Ana Register—and all other available sources of information, we have collected a large array of authentic facts about the county, its people, productions and resources. To all who have assisted in furnishing the data for this work we return our sincere thanks.

Since a county history can have but a limited sale and the initial expense of its preparation is just as great for a few hundred copies as for many thousand, it stands to reason that the price per copy for a small edition must be greater than that for a large one. This condition, coupled with the increased size of the book and the present high cost of labor and material, is a sufficient justification for the price charged for the second volume of the county history. To avoid loss through unsold copies, this book, like all works of similar character, is sold by subscription and only enough copies are printed to supply each subscriber with the number ordered by him. As a further consideration for the purchase price, a brief biography of each subscriber, who thus patriotically supports a history of his county, is published without extra charge. These biographical sketches are prepared by trained canvassers and writers of long experience in this kind of work, and add much value to the history in giving personal incidents, otherwise unavailable, and in showing to future generations something of the character of the pioneers who laid the foundations upon which the superstructure of this county was built.

As citizens of this favored county, we should forget our few privations and trifling discomforts and remember our many privileges and great blessings. For instance, when the mercury hovers round the freezing point, we should not worry over the possibility of some small loss from light frosts that occasionally nip the tenderest plants; but we should extend our sympathy to less favored sections of the country, where the thermometer goes as many degrees below zero as it stops here above in our coldest weather. Again, when the winter rains are slow in coming, don't let us fret about a dry year, remembering that, in the wettest winter within the last half century, the rains commenced January 28, 1884, and that since then a good rainy season has occasionally begun even later in the year; also that the county passed through three dry years in succession, from 1897 to 1900, with comparatively little loss, and it is better equipped now with irrigating ditches and pumping plants than it was then. Furthermore, few of the present residents of the county remember the apprehension that was felt over the growing scarcity of fuel twenty-five or more years ago, when most of the available timber was stripped from the nearby mountains and coal was shipped in from Australia and New Mexico. However, before much loss was suffered, oil was discovered in the county about the year 1896, and from a small beginning the production of oil, gasoline and natural gas has become the largest asset of the county and exceeds that of the entire state of Pennsylvania at the present time. Immediately following the discovery of oil in the county, electricity began to be applied to furnishing light, heat and power ; and now practically all the business houses and residences, in and about the cities and towns of Orange County, are provided with electricity, gas and oil for light, heat and power ; with sewers for carrying off the waste matter and with water for all purposes.

In short, the more familiar do we become with the vast resources and diversified products of this county, with the wise enterprise and good behavior of its citizens, the less do we find to criticise and the more to praise and rejoice over. Let us, therefore, one and all, appropriate and apply to our goodly heritage the advice of the Psalmist to the sons of Korah, in commending "the ornaments and privileges of the church," as follows:

"Walk about Zion, and go round about her ; tell the towers thereof. Mark ye well her bulwarks, consider her palaces ; that ye may tell it to the generation following."

SAMUEL ARMOR.

HISTORICAL

HISTORY OF ORANGE COUNTY

By SAMUEL ARMOR

CHAPTER I

THE FORMATION AND DESCRIPTION OF ORANGE COUNTY

The state of California was created out of territory ceded to the United States by Mexico in the year 1848. It was admitted into the Union as a free state in 1850, with a population of 92,597. This population was located in a few little cities, with a small portion in the mining camps and scattered over the grazing lands adjacent to the water courses. The style of government inherited from Mexico might be characterized as feudal or patriarchal, each city or pueblo and the adjoining territory being governed by an alcalde or other officer appointed by the Mexican government. When the state was formed each of the principal towns with its tributary territory was created into a county; but, on account of the towns being far apart and the intervening territory sparsely settled, the area of the first counties was large and the population small. As the country settled up and other centers of population were formed efforts were made from time to time to form new counties by cutting off portions of the old ones; some of these efforts were successful and others failed.

With the growth of the communities in the southeastern part of Los Angeles County there sprang up the desire for a smaller county with a county seat nearer home. This feeling grew apace until finally an appeal was made to the legislature of 1889 for autonomy. The city of Santa Ana, which had outgrown the other cities in the proposed new county, took the lead in the struggle for county division. A lobby was maintained at Sacramento all winter at considerable expense, without being able to overcome the influence of Los Angeles against the bill for the new county. This bill was entitled "An Act to Create the County of Orange," the name Orange being selected partly on its own merits and partly to conciliate the city of that name, which also aspired to be county seat. Finally, late in the session, W. H. Spurgeon and James McFadden took up the matter in the legislature with better success. They found some members who were friendly to their project and others who were hostile to Los Angeles. There are sometimes a few members of the legislature who are looking for "Col. Mazuma" to come to the help or hindrance of much-desired legislation. Because the rich county of Los Angeles would not distribute a large defense fund among such members, they turned against that county. Then, too, San Francisco had begun to recognize in Los Angeles a possible rival, and was glad of the opportunity to deprive her of some of her territory. These various interests and antagonisms were so skilfully handled that the bill passed the legislature and was signed by Governor Waterman, March 11, 1889.

The struggle was then transferred to the territory involved. The first step in the formation of the new county was the appointment by the governor of a board of five commissioners to direct the work of organization. Following are the men who were appointed on this commission: J. W. Towner, of Santa Ana; J. H. Kellom, of Tustin; A. Cauldwell, of Orange; W. M. McFadden, of Pla-centia; and R. Q. Wickham, of Garden Grove. The commission organized March 22, by electing J. W. Towner president and R. Q. Wickham secretary.

An election was called for June 4th, to ratify or reject the action of the legislature, as provided for in the organic act. This provision was inserted in the bill to answer the objection urged, that a majority of the people in the proposed new county did not want to be set off from the old county. The most of the opposition to county division was at Anaheim, the people of that place contending that the line ought to have been located at the San Gabriel River instead of at Coyote Creek. They thought that if more territory had been taken in towards the west, Anaheim would have had a chance for the county seat; but notwithstanding this opposition, the election was carried in favor of county division by a vote of 2,509 to 500.

A second election was held on July 11, to decide the location of the county seat and to select the county officers, who would serve until the next regular election. Two cities contested for the county seat, Santa Ana and Orange. Anaheim, having no hope for herself, took little interest in the election; in fact, scores of people went to Los Angeles or elsewhere on election day to keep out of the way of the campaign workers. Orange, being thus deprived of some of the help she counted on, made rather a poor showing in the contest. On the other hand, the city of Santa Ana was not able to equal its county seat vote for six or eight years thereafter, notwithstanding it was growing all the time. The result of the election for county seat was 1,729 votes for Santa Ana and 775 for Orange.

There were three tickets in the field for county officers; a non-partisan ticket in the interest of Santa Ana for county seat, a non-partisan ticket in the interest of Orange for county seat, and a straight Republican ticket without reference to the county seat. All of the candidates of the Santa Ana non-partisan ticket were elected, except the candidate for supervisor of the Fourth District, who was defeated by a margin of four votes by the candidate on the other two tickets. The officers thus chosen were: Superior judge, J. W. Towner; district attorney, E. E. Edwards; county clerk, R. Q. Wickham; recorder and auditor, George E. Foster; sheriff and tax collector, R. T. Harris; treasurer, W. B. Wall; assessor, Fred C. Smythe; superintendent of schools, John P. Greeley; surveyor, S. O. Wood; coroner and public administrator, I. D. Mills; supervisors: first district, W. H. Spurgeon; second district, Jacob Ross; third district, Sheldon Littlefield, a hold-over from Los Angeles; fourth district, Samuel Armor; fifth district, A. Guy Smith.

The supervisors organized August 5, 1889, by the election of W. H. Spurgeon as chairman of the board. Rooms for the county offices were furnished rent free for two years in the Billings and Congdon Blocks on East Fourth Street, by the residents in that vicinity. These rooms, with some changes, were retained by the county at a moderate rental until the new court house was ready for occupancy. The board of supervisors held frequent meetings during the first few months, getting the business of the new county properly started and adjusting the differences between the two counties. Los Angeles County resisted the separation in many ways. Some of her citizens brought suit against the new county on the ground that the organic act was unconstitutional, in that the legislature had delegated its powers to the people of the new county to decide whether they wanted county division or not. The supreme court sustained the constitutionality of the act. Meantime the two boards of supervisors appointed commissioners to adjust the differences between the counties and to determine the basis of settlement of claims for and against the new county. The two commissioners selected for Orange County were James McFadden and Richard Egan. These men by their shrewdness and tact secured a fair settlement with very little friction. The question of which county should be charged with the money spent in the new county, by the old, between the approval of the legislative act by the governor, March 11, and the organization of the new county, August 5, was left to the courts to determine. This money included the cost of the long bridge over the Santa Ana River at Olive, the expense of the justice courts, the care of the indigents and possibly other expenditures on behalf of Orange County. The courts held that this burden should be borne by the old county, since it voluntarily built the bridge after the Orange County bill was approved and it was its duty to keep the local government going until relieved by the new county.

The formative steps in the creation of Orange County having thus been narrated, the next thing in order is to describe the county; giving its area, boundaries, topography and general characteristics. As previously indicated the county was formed in the year 1889 by cutting off about forty miles in length from the southeastern portion of Los Angeles County, giving the new county about that length of coast line. The legislative act made Coyote Creek the dividing line between the two counties; but the surveyors commenced at the mouth of the creek and located the county line on the property lines, jogging over from time to time to keep near the channel, until they reached the southeast corner of section 13, township 3 south, range 11 west. From that point the line was run due north three miles to the township line and thence due east to the San Bernardino County line. The rest of the boundary line of the new county was left the same as that of the old county before division. The county is therefore bounded on the west, northwest and north by Los Angeles County; on the north and northeast by San Bernardino County; on the northeast and east by Riverside County; on the southeast and south by San Diego County; and on the south, southwest and west by the Pacific Ocean.

It is customary to speak of Orange County as one of the smallest counties in the state; but there are nine counties with less territory, forty-three with less population and forty-three with a smaller assessed valuation. Its area is given officially as 780 square miles; but the number of acres assessed (446,257) would indicate only $697\frac{1}{2}$ square miles. However, there may be sufficient government land within the county to make up the difference. Perhaps a third of this area is hilly and mountainous, while the remainder is comparatively level.

There is very little timber on the southern and western slopes of mountains exposed to many months of summer sun, like those in Orange County. Most of their surface, however, is covered with chaparral, sage brush, mesquite, manzanita and other hardy shrubs, which, with the cactus, provide food and shelter for considerable game and retard the run-off from the winter rains. In some of the ravines—especially those with a northern exposure—there are clumps of live oak trees; while in the canyons, near the water courses, there are groves of live oak, sycamore and other native trees of considerable size.

When the temperature cools off in the winter months, the mountains help to condense the moisture in the atmosphere and thereby increase the precipitation; they also act as a catchment-basin to collect the rainfall and drain it into the streams for use in the summer on the plains below. A considerable portion of the mountains and hills is adapted to grazing and bee culture. The hills on the north produce large quantities of oil, and oil has also been found under the hills along the coast. The hills and mountains on the east abound in minerals and precious metals. Here, too, are extensive beds of coal of a fair quality.

The valleys and plains, which make up the larger part of the county, have a great variety of soils, among which may be mentioned the following: Adobe, alkali, clay, gravel, loam, peat, sand and perhaps others. Some of these soils are stronger than others, some are easier worked, some need irrigation and others need drainage, and some will retain the heat from the sun longer than others. When the latter kind of soil is found on the higher parts of the mesa near the foothills, it helps to make what is called "the frostless belt" in winter. Thus certain localities are better adapted to certain products than others are. For instance, the upper portion of the mesa near the foothills is suited to citrus and other semi-tropic fruits and winter vegetables; the lower portion of the mesa, bordering on the damp land, is adapted to deciduous fruits and walnuts; the damp land is favorable to the sugar beet and dairying; the peat land is almost synonymous with celery growing; while, with irrigation where needed and drainage where needed, all localities and kinds of soil are well adapted to general farming. Hence, as a whole, Orange County is well qualified to produce in merchantable quantities almost every kind of grain, grass, fruit, nut and vegetable grown in the temperate zones as well as many kinds indigenous to the torrid zone.

When the United States acquired possession of California by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo between this government and Mexico in 1848, it was stipulated in said treaty that Mexicans in the territory acquired by the United States should be allowed to retain their property in such territory or to dispose of it and remove the proceeds at their option. Thus were the titles of the many large ranchos, which were, originally granted by Spain, confirmed to their owners, who have since transferred them to their successors in interest. So far as can be learned the following are the principal grants, beginning at the lower end of the county:

Mission Viejo or La Paz, containing 46,432.65 acres; Trabuco, confirmed to Juan Forster and containing 22,184.47 acres; Boca de La Playa; El Sobrante; Niguel; Canada de Los Alisos, confirmed to Jose Serrano and containing 10,668.81 acres; Lomas de Santiago, which is now included in the San Joaquin; San Joaquin, of which 48,803.16 was confirmed to J. Sepulveda; Santiago de Santa Ana, confirmed to B. Yorba et al. and containing 62,516.57 acres; Bolsa Chico, confirmed to Joaquin Ruiz and containing 8,107.40 acres; Las Bolsas, confirmed to Ramon Yorba et al. and containing 34,486.53 acres; part of Los Alamitos, confirmed to Abel Stearns and containing 17,789.79 acres; part of Los Coyotes, confirmed to A. Pico et al. and containing 56,979.72 acres; San Juan Cajon de Santa Ana, confirmed to B. Yorba et al. and containing 13,328.53 acres; part of La Brea, confirmed to A. Pico et al. and containing all told 6,698.57 acres.

Many of these ranches have been subdivided and more or less of the acreage sold off in small tracts to different people, thereby increasing the population and settling up the county. Thus the ranch lines become indistinguishable from other boundary lines and even the names of the ranchos are lost sight of, except in the deeds transferring the property. There is still considerable room for the work of subdivision to be done before the county will have reached the limit of its capacity. In fact, the natural resources of Orange County are such that, if properly developed, they will support a population of 500,000 people instead of 61,375, as reported in the last federal census.

There are nine incorporated cities in the county, viz., Anaheim, Brea, Fullerton, Huntington Beach, Newport Beach, Orange, Santa Ana, Seal Beach and Stanton. In addition to these nine cities there are about forty towns with a varied number of residences and some business houses in each. Further along in this work a chapter will be devoted to each of the incorporated cities, while the unincorporated towns will be grouped together in a single chapter.

Trustees of Law Library

The legislature of 1891 passed an act authorizing the establishment of a law library in each county and the collection of a fee of one dollar for every case filed in the superior court, to support such library. The supervisors of Orange County objected to thus taxing the litigants for the benefit of the lawyers, so an amendment was introduced by Assemblyman C. S. McKelvey and passed by the legislature of 1895, cutting out the fee. That amendment and the repeal of the county ordinance establishing the library put a quietus on the appointment of trustees for the next twelve years. In the legislature of 1907, Senator H. M. Willis introduced an amendment to the original act, restoring the dollar fee on court cases, which was adopted. Immediately the Orange County law library was revived and trustees were appointed as before the interruption. There are three appointive members and two ex-officio members, the latter being the superior judge and the chairman of the board of supervisors. CHAPTER IIIORANGE COUNTY'S WATER SUPPLY AND WAY UTILIZED

It is generally understood that the original source of water supply for any given territory is the rainfall precipitated upon the entire surface of such territory. In a dry climate the rainfall is regarded as an asset that may be recorded and proclaimed as one of the natural advantages of the locality. There is also an indirect benefit from the rainfall that surrounding sections derive from the underground waters which are percolating through the gravel on their way from the higher elevations to the sea. Such water may be brought to the surface by pumping, or, on the lowlands near the ocean, it may be forced to the surface by the pressure from the higher elevations, whenever a boring is made for an artesian well.

The average annual rainfall at Orange for a third of a century has been 13.87 inches, the extremes being 5.32 inches in the winter of 1897-98 and over three feet in the winter of 1883-84. This is probably as low an average as anywhere in the county, since Orange is situated in the middle of a plain near the center of the county and the rainfall in the hills and mountains is greater than on the plains below. In fact, the rainfall in the San Bernardino Mountains, where the Santa Ana River has its source, averages nearly three feet of water per year. During the violent or long continued storms in winter, vast quantities of water rush down the steep slopes of the hills and mountains into the canyons and valleys, and unite, forming streams that carry the surplus to the sea. It is estimated that fully fifty per cent of the rainfall is lost by evaporation and run-off. The other fifty per cent sinks into the ground and percolates slowly through the porous soil, fructifying it and replenishing the underground reservoirs formed by pockets or strata of gravel at various depths below the surface. Gradually the excess of this underground water oozes into the channels of the streams at lower levels, thus continuing their flow throughout the year and even through a period of two or three dry years, like the one from 1897 to 1900, when the rainfall was 5.32-6.64-8.86 inches, respectively.

The streams of Orange County, that carry more or less water to the ocean in times of floods, are: Coyote Creek; Santa Ana River, including Santiago Creek and its branches; Laguna Canyon; Aliso Creek, and its tributaries; Trabuco Creek, which receives the waters from a half dozen canyons northwest of Capistrano; and a number of arroyos and lagoons which drain the plains between the streams and the lowlands near the ocean. Coyote Creek, forming the boundary between Orange County and Los Angeles County, draws its water from the adjoining plains in both counties. The Santa Ana River takes its rise in the San Bernardino Mountains, from seventy-five to one hundred miles distant, and is one of the most important streams for irrigating purposes in Southern California. The rest of the streams mentioned are wholly within the confines of Orange County.

The area of the catchment-basin of the Santa Ana River has been estimated by J. B. Lippincott, former resident hydrographer of the Federal Government, as follows: mountain section, 557 square miles; hill section, 382 square miles; valley section, 525 square miles; making a total of 1,464 square miles. From records of observers as widely scattered as possible over this area, it has been found that the average annual rainfall for a long period of years has been 33.84 inches in the mountains, 20 inches in the hills and 14.98 inches in the valleys. Applying these figures to the three classes of territory involved and adding the result, we find the average annual rainfall in the basin of the Santa Ana River amounts to the enormous sum of 79,819,529,856 cubic feet of water. If three-quarters of the rainfall in the mountains, two-thirds of that in the hills and half of that in the valleys be discarded for evaporation and run-off, and if the remainder be drawn into running water and distributed over the entire year, there would be 41,201 inches of perennial water still left within the basin of the stream. Probably not much over a quarter of that amount is actually available in the irrigating season and four-fifths of that quarter is appropriated before the stream reaches Orange County. However, a considerable portion of the underflow of the river finds its way into the county, thereby adding its quota to the underground water which the county gets from its own rainfall.

All the water entering Orange County through the Santa Ana River is equally divided between the two sides of the stream; that for the northwest side is distributed to the users by the Anaheim Union Water Company, and that for the southeast side by the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company.

The Anaheim Union Water Company, as its name indicates, was formed by the union of the Anaheim Water Company, the Cajon Irrigation Company, the North Anaheim Canal Company, and the Farmers' Ditch Company. The Anaheim Water Company was established in 1857, its water rights having been purchased in that year with the land on which Anaheim is located, from Juan Pacifico Ontiveras. The Cajon Irrigation Company was formed in 1877 to irrigate the Placentia and Fullerton sections. The other two companies were formed, or re-organized in 1882. These four companies consolidated under the name of the Anaheim Union Water Company in the year 1884. The capital stock of this company was fixed at $1,200,000, which was divided into 12,000 shares of a par value of $100 each. Two-thirds of this stock has been issued and the other one-third remains unsold in the treasury. The use of the stock is confined to about 12,000 acres of land susceptible of irrigation by gravity from the company's ditches.

The facilities of the Anaheim Union Water Company for supplying its stockholders with water consist of a half interest in the waters of the Santa Ana River at the division-gate; many miles of ditches, of which over fifty are lined with cement concrete; five pumping plants, capable together of furnishing about 1,400 inches of water; and two reservoirs for storing night water for day use and winter water for summer use. The Tuffree reservoir will hold the entire flow of the main canal over night, and the Yorba reservoir will store enough of the winter floods to furnish 300 miner's inches for three months in the irrigating season. In addition to the foregoing facilities, the company owns a half interest in nearly 2,400 acres of riparian land up the river, as well as several hundred acres in its own right. These lands strengthen and protect the company's rights in the river and give opportunity for further development, when needed. Oil has been found on some of this land and money enough is being received from leases to meet all the expenses of the company.

The Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, which distributes the waters of the Santa Ana River to the territory southeast of said river, like the Anaheim Union Water Company, is the outgrowth and legatee of previous efforts and organizations for the irrigation of the territory which it now serves. The right to use the waters of said river on the Rancho Santiago de Santa Ana is based on the appropriations of such waters by the early Spanish settlers as well as on the riparian character of the land itself. Col. John J. Warner, who died in Los Angeles a number of years ago, at an advanced age, testified, in the suit of the Anaheim Water Company vs. the Semi-Tropic Water Company, that he found Don Bernardo Yorba with a large retinue of servants, irrigating his ranch from the Santa Ana River in the year 1834. These water rights were handed down from owner to owner with the land, and in 1868 they were parceled out by the court, pro rata to the acreage, regardless of the distance of each subdivision from the river. The court also protected the exercise of these rights by granting to the holders of the lower allotments a right of way over the upper allotments for ditches to convey water to their respective holdings. In order to irrigate the portion of the Rancho Santiago de Santa Ana, purchased by A. B. Chapman and Andrew Glassell, a ditch, called the Chapman ditch, was constructed during the winter of 1870-71, which delivered water as far down as the present site of Orange the following July. Two years later, May 24, 1873, these same persons incorporated the Semi-Tropic Water Company and transferred to it all the rights and interests of the Chapman ditch. As the land was subdivided and sold, stock in this water company was furnished to the purchasers, who thus came into possession and control of the company. In 1877 this company was superseded by a larger and stronger one in the name of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company. The property and rights of the old company were purchased and transferred to the new, and all the water rights on the southeast side of the river below the intake were absorbed in exchange for equivalent rights in the new company.

The capital stock of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company was fixed at $100,000, divided into 20,000 shares of a par value of $5 each. This stock was made appurtenant to the land, one share to each acre, and is transferable only with the land which is described in the certificate. All the assessments, together with ten per cent interest, have been added to the par value of the stock until at the present writing the market value has reached $120, which amount must be paid for any new stock purchased for unstocked land. There are now in force 17,437 shares held by 2,231 stockholders, making an average of less than eight shares to each stockholder in the company. Over $500,000 has been spent on the canals, pipe lines, pumping plants and reservoirs; nearly another $100,000 has been paid for riparian lands and water rights, making about two-thirds of a million dollars invested in water facilities by this company, to say nothing about current expenses, etc. These large sums have been drawn gradually from the stockholders during the past fifty years in such low water rates and moderate assessments that the burden has scarcely been felt. In fact, this company has long enjoyed the reputation of being one of the least expensive of the large water companies of Southern California.

The facilities of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company for supplying its stockholders with water are very similar to those of the Anaheim Union Water Company and consist of a half interest in the waters of the Santa Ana River at the division-gate; about 141 miles of ditches, of which 117 miles are pipe lines and the rest are lined with cement concrete; eight pumping plants capable together of furnishing about 1,520 inches of water; and one small reservoir at Olive for regulating the flow of the water in the ditches. In addition to the foregoing the company owns a half interest in nearly 2,400 acres of riparian land up the river, as well as several hundred acres in its own right. These lands strengthen and protect the company's rights in the river and give opportunity for further development, when needed.

The stream next in importance to the Santa Ana River for irrigation purposes is the Santiago Creek, which is a tributary of said river. This creek rises in the Trabuco National Forest Reserve in the eastern end of the county, flows in a northwesterly direction across the San Joaquin ranch to the mouth of the canyon and from there proceeds in a southwesterly direction to its junction with the Santa Ana River. The creek and its branches drain about 127 square miles on the western slope of the Santa Ana Mountains and the foothills adjacent. Assuming that the average annual rainfall within the drainage basin of this stream is fifteen inches, which is under rather than over the mark, the precipitation would aggregate 4,425,696,000 cubic feet of water per year, or one-eighteenth of the rainfall in the great catchment-basin of the Santa Ana River. Like most of the streams between the coast range and the sea, this creek carries off the greater part of the rainfall shortly after it is precipitated. However, a small per cent sinks into the soil and gradually percolates into the channel, thereby continuing the stream throughout the year. The quantity thus saved and utilized can be greatly increased by storage reservoirs and by spreading part of the storm water over waste lands to sink into the gravel beds and find its way into the stream later in the season. Some of this work has already been done and more is being planned for the future.

The parties who are interested in the waters of the Santiago Creek are the Irvine Company, owner of the San Joaquin ranch, and the settlers on the lands about the mouth of the canyon, above ditch A of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, who are represented by the Serrano Water Association on the north side of the creek and by the John T. Carpenter Water Company on the south side. Naturally, the Irvine Company would have large riparian rights in the stream on account of furnishing a large part of the catchment-basin and owning land on both sides of the stream for ten or eleven miles. These rights have never been adjudicated, although the attempt to take water over the water shed to other parts of the ranch was successfully resisted in the courts by the settlers. An agreement was finally reached whereby the water of the creek will be apportioned to the different parties in interest and an opportunity be given to increase such water by diminishing the run-off. The stipulations of this agreement were made the judgment of the court, thereby making them binding on all concerned.

By the terms of this agreement the two water companies, designated as the party of the first part, get practically all the water of the creek up to 600 inches during the five irrigating months, from June 20, to November 20, of each year; the Irvine Company, designated as the party of the second part, gets the next 50 inches, and all above the 650 inches will be divided equally between the two parties. For the rest of the year the party of the first part will have the first 60 inches and the party of the second part the next 60 inches; and all above the 120 inches will be equally divided. An easement to three tracts of land, aggregating about 500 acres, is granted for spreading the storm water, and also an option to build a dam across Fremont Canyon and impound water therein, together with rights of way for roads and ditches. The party of the first part covenant to spend not less than $14,000 during the next five years in spreading water on the two upper tracts, and may spend other large sums within the next ten years; the party of the second part agrees to refund one-third of all the money thus expended each year, up to a limit of $16,666.67 for the third, during the ten years. In return for the liberal concession of the Irvine Company, that company is permitted to take its share of the water over the watershed to other parts of the ranch. The time within which a dam might be built in Fremont Canyon having expired, it is understood that the option, with all its agreements and conditions, given by the Irvine Company for that purpose, has lapsed. The two water companies, designated the party of the first part in the agreement, together own the Barham ranch upon which they have constructed a shallow reservoir of considerable area. Below this ranch they built a bedrock dam across the creek in 1892, at a cost of $3,600, the deepest point being nineteen feet below the surface of the creek-bed. The water intercepted and raised to the surface by this dam is carried off in a 28-inch cement pipe 725 feet to the division-gate, where it is divided equally between the two companies.

The Serrano Water Company was organized in 1875 by the Lotspiech Brothers, J. W. Anderson, Dr. Worrell, Charles Tiebout and a few others. The association has no capital stock, but the water is distributed among the sixty-six owners according to the acreage of each, with the limitation that two-thirds of the association's water belongs to the 631 acres in the Lotspiech tract and the other one-third to the 672 acres in the Gray tract. To serve these owners the association has laid below the division-gate 6,288 feet of 20-inch pipe and 2,679 feet of 16-inch pipe, while individual members have laid three and one-half miles of from 10 to 16-inch pipe.

The John T. Carpenter Water Company is capitalized for $16,000, divided into 1,600 shares of $10 each. This stock is held by 115 owners, who use the water on 900 acres of land. The company has laid about four miles of 16 and 20-inch pipe and about eight miles of 10 and 12-inch pipe.

Trabuco Creek, with its tributaries, furnishes water for quite an area of land in the vicinity of Capistrano. The greater portion of the water from this stream is distributed by the Trabuco Water Company, which irrigates about 500 acres.

In addition to the irrigation from the three streams just described, there are a few farms that take out more or less water from Coyote Creek, Laguna Creek, Aliso Creek and other sources. Then, too, there are thousands of acres irrigated from wells, either artesian or pumped. As already described, large quantities of water from the rainfall sink into the ground and percolate through the gravel strata on their way from the higher elevations to the sea. This water may be found at various depths in nearly every part of the plains forming the major portion of the county; but it is particularly abundant about Anaheim and in the western part of the county, where it is undoubtedly supplied by the underflow of the Santa Ana River. According to the assessor's report there are 1,224 pumping plants in Orange County valued at $3,060,000. These raise from 25 to 125 inches of water each from a single well, while in a number of cases a large plant furnishes from 200 to 400 inches from a group of wells. The lower lands near the ocean are either damp enough or they are irrigated from artesian wells. The number of acres irrigated from wells, pumping or artesian, is about 12,000; the total number of acres irrigated from all sources in the county is approximately 50,000.

If anything further were needed to prove that Orange County is well watered, it might be found in the vast quantities of nearly every kind of grain, fruit, nut and vegetable grown in the temperate zone, as well as many kinds indigenous to the torrid zone, which are produced in this county and sent to market every year, not only supporting the farmers and fruit growers, but actually enriching them. Surely Orange County may take rank alongside of the land of Canaan as described by Moses in the following paragraph:

"For the Lord, thy God, bringeth thee into a good land, a land of brooks of water, of fountains, and depths that spring out of valleys and hills; a land of wheat and barley, and vines, and fig trees, and pomegranates, a land of oil, olive, and honey; a land wherein thou shalt eat bread without scarceness, thou shalt not lack anything in it; a land whose stones are iron, and out of whose hills thou mayest dig brass. When thou hast eaten and art full, then thou shalt bless the Lord, thy God, for the good land which he hath given thee."

CHAPTER IV

THE CITY OF ANAHEIM

Supplemented by E. B. Merritt

The city of Anaheim is the oldest city in Orange County and was founded and settled by some Germans who had been residents of San Francisco for some time. They were all citizens of the United States and were looking about for cheap land that would be suitable for the growing of grapes. They traveled about the state and especially turned their attention to the southern part, and soon decided that the section that is the present site of Anaheim was best suited to the growing of grapes and the making of wine.

This corporation was organized in 1857 by fifty men, among whom were the following: George Hansen, John Fisher, John Froelich, Charles Kohler, Utmar Caler, C. C. Kuchel, C. Biltzen, Henry Kroeger, H. Schenck, H. Bunnellman, Julius Weiser, John P. Zeyn, Benjamin Dreyfus, Hugo Currance, and others. Their organization was known as the Los Angeles Vineyard Company. Each man purchased a share, which was valued at $750. They bought about 1,200 acres of land, being a part of the Rancho San Juan Cajon de Santa Ana, and owned by Juan Pacifico Ontiveras, to whom they paid two dollars per acre. This tract was laid out in twenty-acre lots, and work was at once begun upon it under the management of George Hansen, who was selected for their superintendent. He began leveling, building fences, digging ditches, etc. Expenses were $216 per day, a considerable amount for that period. The tract was one and one-half miles long and one and a quarter wide, fenced in with 40,000 willow poles, six feet above the ground and one and one-half feet apart; these were strengthened by three horizontal poles. These poles eventually took root and soon the colony was surrounded by a living willow wall. The whole was defended by a ditch four feet deep, six feet wide at the top, sloping to one foot at the bottom. Streets were laid out through the tract, a gate constructed across the end of the main street and when this was closed it made the enclosure secure from invasion. Thousands of wild Spanish cattle and horses roamed the plains at that time and these would have devastated the growing vines and other crops unless so protected.

These sturdy pioneers gave the name of Anaheim to their new found home, from the German, heim—home—and the Spanish, Ana—a proper name. Home by the Santa Ana River. A ditch was dug to convey water for irrigation, seven and one-half miles in length, and several miles of laterals were constructed. On each twenty-acre tract eight acres of vines were planted the first year. At the end of two years these vines had come into bearing. All assessments had been paid by each shareholder, which brought the total amount to $1,200 each. At this time each lot had a valuation placed upon it according to location and improvements, at from $600 to $1,400. Division was made by lot. As each man had paid in $1,200, the ones who drew the $1,400 lots paid in $200 and those who drew under that figure received balance in cash; and, besides all this, each shareholder received one lot in the town plot. During these two years the men of the company had continued their residence in San Francisco, but at this date they assumed control of their separate properties. They began building houses, having to haul lumber and necessities from Los Angeles, that being their nearest supply point. Thirty miles was a long distance to bring their necessities and as soon as possible they established a landing on the coast where boats could land supplies. This was but twelve miles west and was known for many years as Anaheim Landing.

Their main object was to grow grapes and manufacture wine, but of the entire number there was but one man who understood the art of wine making. They were mostly mechanics and carpenters, besides whom there was a watch-maker, blacksmith, a gunsmith, an engraver, a brewer, teacher, bookbinder, miller, shoemaker, poet, merchants, musicians and a hotelkeeper. Benjamin Dreyfus built the first house in 1857. John Fischer erected the first hotel in 1865; this was destroyed by fire in 1871 and the following year Henry Kroeger built the Anaheim hotel. In the town plot of forty acres, which occupied the center of the tract, one lot was reserved for a school building and this was among the very first structures erected. This was very commodious and was put up to serve as a school-house and assembly hall. During the flood of 1861-62 the Santa Ana River overflowed and damaged the foundations, rendering its unsafe and school was then held in the water company's building on Center Street until 1869, when a new building was built. It was a severe struggle against all kinds of odds for several years, but their patient industry and perseverance won the struggle and at the end of ten years each stockholder's property was worth from $5,000 to $10,000. In the meantime they made their improvements and supported their families. The company had its officers, electing Utmar Caler, president; G. C. Kohler, vice-president; Cyrus Biltsen, treasurer, and John Fischer, secretary.

A fire occurred in the town on January 16, 1877, which destroyed Enterprise Hall, a saloon, a Chinese wash-house and the Daily Gazette building, entailing a loss of about $18,000, half covered by insurance. The Anaheim Hide & Leather Company was established in 1879 and was operated less than a year, when it quit business. A. Guy Smith & Company built a steam grist and planing mill in 1875. Hinds Brewery was established by Theodore Reiser in 1874. Vines were set out in Anaheim and vicinity each year from 1857 until 1887. In 1884 a disease was discovered among the vines and in 1885 it was seen that the grape industry was doomed. Vines that had produced ten tons to the acre dwindled to nothing. It seemed to attack the Mission variety first and the oldest and strongest vines were the first to die. In 1885 there were about 500,000 vines in that vicinity and about fifty wineries, which up to that time had been making money. For twenty-five years Anaheim and vicinity was the greatest wine producing center in California. After the vines began to die out walnuts and oranges took their places and this is now one of the best sections in Orange County for these products.

The Anaheim Gazette, the pioneer newspaper, established by G. W. Barter, was first issued October 29, 1870. Barter had bought the plant of the Wilmington Journal, defunct. The press had been brought around the Horn in 1851 and had been used in Los Angeles by the Star, the pioneer newspaper of Southern California. In 1871 Barter sold the paper to C. A. Gardner, who in turn sold to Melrose & Knox, in 1872. Knox retired in 1876. F. W. Athearn was connected with it in 1876-77, then Melrose became sole owner and sold it to Henry Kuchel, the present owner, who has continued the publication for more than thirty years. The Orange County Plain Dealer, established in Fullerton in 1898, moved to Anaheim and was owned and edited by J. E. Valjean a number of years before his death. The Anaheim Daily Herald was founded by Thomas Crawford in 1913 and is now owned and published by The Anaheim Herald Publishing Company.

In 1860 the Anaheim Water Company became owner of the ditches and water rights originally belonging to the Anaheim Vineyard Company. The stock of this company was an appurtenance of the land and could not be diverted from it. The water company was incorporated with $20,000 capital stock and in 1879 this was increased to $90,000, and ditches were extended to cover the Anaheim extension. The Cajon Water Company's ditch was completed November 18, 1878, at a cost of $50,000. It tapped the Santa Ana River at Bed-Rock Canyon and was fifteen miles long. In 1879 the Anaheim Union Water Company bought a half interest in this ditch. Anaheim was incorporated as a city February 10, 1870, but the burden was too great to be carried by the people and in 1872 they petitioned the legislature to be dis-incorporated. This was granted and it was an unincorporated town until March, 1878, when it was incorporated and then in 1888 it was reincorporated.

In 1880 Anaheim boasted of the best school building in Los Angeles County, outside of that city. In 1877 Prof. J. M. Guinn, who had been principal of the

FIRST SANITARIUM AT ANAHEIM

OLD DREYFUS WINERY, ANAHEIM

Anaheim school for eight years, the building having become inadequate for the increased population, drafted a bill authorizing the district to issue bonds for $10,000. He was instrumental in securing its passage by the legislature and it became a law March 12, 1878. The bonds were sold at par and a building erected. This was the first instance on record in the state of incorporating and bonding a school district to secure funds to build a schoolhouse, a method now quite common in the state, thus giving California the best schoolhouses of any state in the Union. The schools of Anaheim embrace grades from the kindergarten to the junior college and compare favorably with the best in Southern California. For further particulars about Anaheim's schools see chapter on Orange County's Schools.

In January, 1875, the Southern Pacific Railway built a branch to Anaheim and for two years this was their terminus. In 1887 the Santa Fe built through to San Diego and that year a number of vineyards were divided and sold in town lots. Anaheim has three banks, all well capitalized; a public library, several school buildings; eight miles of paved streets, and fifteen miles of cement sidewalks. The city owns its own water supply, as well as its own electric lighting plant. There are two depots of the Southern Pacific and one of the Santa Fe, and it will soon have an outlet by the Pacific Electric, building a direct line. The country about is fertile, growing almost anything put into the ground.

The living willow wall that surrounded the original colony disappeared long ago and but few of the present citizens of the city remember the appearance of the original place, called by the native Californians Campo Aleman—German camp. Anaheim is now a city of beautiful homes, with a population of 5,526. Early in the year of 1911 bonds were voted for $90,000, to construct a sewer system; and $8,500, for additions to the electric lighting system. As showing the progressive sentiment of the people it may be said that the former received 352 votes for, and 24 against, and the latter 303 for, and 68 against. The city has six packing houses for oranges and lemons, one beet sugar factory, one marmalade factory, one cigar factory, a large hotel and several apartment houses, besides the usual complement of all kinds of business houses. Its area is two and three-quarters square miles; its assessed valuation in 1920 was $3,017,415, and the building permits issued the same year amounted to $92,000. This shows a healthy growth when it is remembered that the war lid was on building operations that year. During the year 1919, Anaheim had a building total of more than $200,000. Included in the construction program was a thirty-apartment building, a bungalow court, many individual residences, a large new First Methodist Church and a few business buildings, but here, as in other towns, construction could not keep up with the demand, and still greater activity is foreseen in the future.

The churches of Anaheim represent fourteen denominations, as follows: Catholic, Presbyterian, Methodist, Episcopal, Christian Science, Lutheran, Baptist, Evangelical, Mennonite, German Methodist, Mexican Methodist, Seventh Day Adventist, German Lutheran, and German Baptist.

Following are the city officers as they stood after the election and appointment in 1920: Board of trustees, William Stark, president; Frank N. Gibbs, Fred A. Backs, Jr., Charles H. Mann, Howard E. Gates; clerk, Edward B. Merritt; marshal and tax collector, N. F. Steadman; treasurer, Charles A. Boege; recorder, J. S. Howard; manager and street superintendent, O. E. Steward; electrician, V. W. Hannum; attorney, Homer G. Ames; rate collector, W. A. Wallace.

The soil about Anaheim is a sandy loam, easily worked, retains the heat and moisture. This, with its proximity to the ocean and distance from the snow-capped mountains, places that section in the frostless belt of the county. Then, lying in front of the mouth of the Santa Ana Canyon, the territory about Anaheim gets the greatest benefit from the underflow of the river. A people with such natural resources and with the sturdy manhood to voluntarily close their saloons, as they did January 1, 1919, cannot help but prosper.

Anaheim Municipal Light and Water Works

By V. W. Hannum

The first step, in the building of the present Municipal Light and Water System, was taken in April, 1879, when the pioneers of the Mother Colony started the municipal water plant, then located on West Cypress Street.

Making a success of this venture, and wishing to keep abreast of modern improvements, they started the electric light plant on August 23, 1894, with a connected load of thirteen arc lamps, used for street lighting, and 145 incandescent and nine arc lamps from which a revenue was derived. By 1907, there were 324 light and 372 water consumers, which made it necessary to construct an entirely new plant at 518 South Los Angeles Street. The equipment at that time consisted of two 125 horsepower boilers, two steam-driven electric generators of eighty kilowatt capacity, two twelve-inch wells with a pumping capacity of 600 gallons per minute. In 1912 another 125-horsepower boiler and a steam-driven electric generator of 150 kilowatt capacity was added. In 1913, the increasing water demand made it necessary to drill a new sixteen-inch well, in which a pump of a capacity of 800 gallons per minute was installed, this installation being duplicated in 1915.

By 1916 the electric load had reached such proportions that the generating equipment was inadequate, so rather than add more generating equipment, an agreement was made with the Southern California Edison Company whereby the city purchases all of its electric energy wholesale, but maintains its own distributing system.

In 1918 it became necessary to again increase the water supply. This was done by replacing one of the small capacity pumps with one of a capacity of 1,200 gallons per minute. In 1920 a new sixteen-inch well was drilled and a 1,200-gallon pump installed. The city now has three wells, each 335 feet deep, with a pumping capacity of over 3,000 gallons per minute. A reinforced-concrete reservoir, with a capacity of 173,000 gallons, at an elevation to give forty pounds pressure on the mains, insures an adequate supply of good pure water at all times. A two-stage centrifugal pump, driven by a 125-horsepower motor, is used to increase the pressure in case of fire; this pump will deliver 1,500 gallons of water per minute at a pressure of 125 pounds.

Until May, 1914, the rate for lighting purposes had been ten cents per kilowatt-hour; at that time the plant had become self-sustaining, so the lighting rate was reduced to seven cents per kilowatt-hour. This cut, while greatly reducing the revenue for the city, was a great saving to the consumers.

While the past few years have seen prices rise by leaps and bounds on all materials used in the light and water departments, as well as increases of wages, and two increases on the wholesale price of electric energy, the city by conservative methods has been able to keep its water rate at ten cents per hundred cubic feet, and the electric lighting rate at seven cents per kilowatt-hour, thereby furnishing light and water at pre-war prices to its many patrons, and still maintaining a source of revenue, of which the year ending May 1, 1920, is a good example.

At that time there were more than 3,000 services for light and water, with a revenue of nearly $70,000, leaving better than $20,000 for the general fund after all operating expenses had been paid. Besides being a source of revenue to the city, the Municipal Light and Water Works furnish steady employment to many of the citizens of Anaheim.

BREA CANYON

CHAPTER V

THE CITY OF BREA

By Mable McGee

Brea is situated at the mouth of the canyon of the same name adjoining the eastern part of Fullerton on the north. The canyon has long afforded an easy passage for a wagon road from the interior valley to the coastal plains and was named Brea Canyon from the brea, or mineral tar, which oozed out of the ground in the canyon. The city is the youngest and one of the smallest in the galaxy of Orange County cities. It was incorporated February 23, 1917, and has an area of one and three-quarter square miles. The assessed valuation of the city in 1920 was $718,880, with a tax rate of $1.00. The population given by the 1920 census is 1,037.

While there are some orchards and farms in the southern part of the city, the principal support of the place is derived from the oil industry. The city is in the heart of a rich oil district, surrounded by about twenty-three leases. In fact, looking up and down the mesa in front of the hills, hundreds of oil derricks may be seen in either direction. This oil industry is not only the main support of the city of Brea, but it is a valuable asset of the whole county, as manifested by the increase in the assessment roll each year as the territory expands and new wells are brought in.

The city has one and a half miles of cement sidewalks and three miles of paved streets. There are four churches, Congregational, Christian, Nazarene and Seventh Day Adventist. (The schools may be found in the chapter on Orange County's Schools.) The following organizations have branches in Brea: Oil Field, Gas Well Refineries International Workers of America (this is a labor organization of oil men and used to be called "The Oil Field Workers' Union"); Women's Union Label League (the latter is an auxiliary of the men's organization just mentioned); Knights of Pythias; Woodmen; Maccabees; Royal Neighbors; and Brea Study Club.

The Brea Boiler Works and Union Tool Company are home industries that employ a great many men.

The city officers at the present time are as follows: Board of trustees, Jay C. Sexton, president; Isaac Craig, P. C. Huddleston, R. H. Mitchell, Frank J. Schweitzer; clerk, Mrs. L. A. Sayles; treasurer, Leon A. Sayles; attorney, Albert Launer; engineer, Robt. W. Phelps; marshal, street superintendent and pound master, D. O. Stegman.

That Brea went over the top in subscribing to the five liberty loans may be seen in the lists published elsewhere in the history.

The Union Oil Company has a beautiful building and picturesque grounds in Brea, showing what can be done with capital and good taste, where the climate is equable, the soil fertile and the water abundant.

CHAPTER VI

THE CITY OF FULLERTON

Supplemented by H. L. Wilber

Twenty-three miles southeast from Los Angeles lies the thriving little city of Fullerton with its population of 4,415 souls. Until 1887 this section of the county was largely given over to pasturage for sheep and cattle. Its richness had not been discovered except by a few, but now it is considered by the residents of the vicinity as the "garden spot of Orange County." The city was laid out in 1887 by Amerige Brothers and the Pacific Land and Improvement Company. The first building was erected the same year, in which year also occurred the advent of the railroad. The peculiar location of the town has much to induce home making, for it is surrounded by a very productive country and its climatic conditions are ideal, far enough away from the snow-capped mountains and near enough to the sea, to have a very equable temperature.

Soon after the advent of the railroad the little hamlet grew rapidly. At an early date the planting of oranges and walnuts was begun and the results were so gratifying that the locality soon attracted general attention as a fruit section. Planting of various kinds of deciduous fruits followed and soon it was discovered that soil and climatic conditions were the best to be found in Southern California. Besides the fruit industry there sprung up a lucrative business in vegetable growing. With a ready market in Los Angeles a man with a limited amount of money could get good returns from his farming venture from the very start.

It was at the close of the "boom," in 1888, that this part of California was the center of attraction and towns sprung up in the desert and, by the development of water for irrigation, garden spots were made to blossom out of drear waste. The Amerige Brothers were among the men who came to Southern California during this period and, seeing the possibilities of the section that is now Fullerton and Placentia districts, purchased 500 acres of bare, unimproved land, from the Miles' estate. They had inside information that the Santa Fe Railroad would be built in this direction on its way to San Diego and entered into negotiations with the Pacific Land and Improvement Company to have a change made in the surveys in order to strike the proposed town site. To insure the building of the road and location of a depot the brothers gave railroad rights to the company. The first stake was driven on July 6, 1887, in a field of wild mustard. Soon the land was cleared, streets laid out and graded, business blocks and several dwellings erected. On account of some obstruction in securing right of way, the railroad was unable to build to the town until the following year and thus it was greatly handicapped for lack of transportation facilities. Amerige Brothers sold an interest in their holdings to Wilshire Brothers, and soon afterward all interests were merged into the Fullerton Land and Trust Company, to facilitate development.

The town was given its name in honor of G. H. Fuller, then president of the Pacific Land and Improvement Company, which was an organization of the directors of the Santa Fe. He was a factor in the early beginning of the town, but soon was deposed from office. The name of the town was then changed to La Habra, in harmony with the name of the valley adjoining. The opposition to this change was so strong that the town was re-christened Fullerton, although the first railroad tickets were issued to La Habra. In the fall of 1888 the first train reached the place; this did not increase the growth of the town as was expected, for by that time the great boom of Southern California was over. The hamlet has had only a conservative growth from the beginning.

The first good building to be erected in Fullerton was the St. George Hotel, costing $50,000. This was followed by the Wilshire block, costing about $8,000. It was in this building that the first postoffice was established and the first store opened. The Chadbourne block, costing $22,000, was the next one of importance, followed quickly by the Schumacher, Grimshaw and Schindler buildings. The first church was the Presbyterian, which was erected in 1889.

The streets were all named by the founders of the town. Fullerton remained a town until 1904, at which time, on January 22, it was incorporated as a city of the sixth class. In 1920 the assessed valuation of property was $19,558,695. The town has but small indebtedness and the limits of the city embrace eighteen square miles. It is one of the best shipping points in Orange County, and is admirably located for manufacturing industries. It is near the oil fields, which thus guarantees a permanent and cheap fuel supply, and has an abundant supply of water.

The warehouse facilities of Fullerton are the best in the county and its packing houses give employment to a large number of men and women. All the roads leading to the city are paved. There are two well-capitalized national banks, one savings bank and one state bank; the professions are represented by able men in law and medicine. There are among its industries of importance the following besides those already mentioned: Seven orange and two vegetable packing houses, two grist mills, three lumber yards, three hotels and a number of good boarding houses. The city maintains a band and two newspapers, the Orange County Daily Tribune, established in 1889, and the Fullerton News, which was established in 1902. There are six churches—the Presbyterian, organized in February, 1888; the Methodist, December 2, 1888; Baptist, November 12, 1893; Christian, in April, 1905; also the Catholic and Christian Science.

The following account of the origin and development of the Fullerton Public Library was furnished by Miss Minnie Maxwell, the librarian:

The Fullerton Public Library had its origin in a little reading room that was established about 1903 by a little group of women led by Mrs. Anna T. Dean. A room over the First National Bank was secured and funds for rent, heat and light were raised by subscriptions solicited by Mrs. G. W. Sherwood and Miss Anna McDermont. Magazines, newspapers and books were freely donated by citizens, and the room soon became a popular place. Volunteer attendants cared for the room and lent books to patrons.

In 1905, realizing the advantages to the city of such an institution, the city trustees took up the matter of securing funds to build a public library, and application was made to Andrew Carnegie. In order to comply with the requirements, the city purchased a lot on the corner of Wilshire and Pomona avenues, and also appointed a committee to secure subscriptions amounting to $1,000 for the purchase of books. The committee appointed consisted of Miss Anna McDermont, Mrs. G. W. Sherwood, Mrs. Otto des Granges and Mrs. Wm. Schulte. The money was subscribed and a gift of $10,000 was secured from the Carnegie Corporation. The board of library trustees, acting at the time of the construction of the library building, was made up of J. C. Braly, president; W. W. Kerr, secretary; D. R. Collings, Prof. A. L. Vincent and Meredith Conway.

Early in 1907 work was begun on the building, which was completed and ready for use by December, 1907. Miss Minnie Maxwell was elected as the first librarian, and began her work in September, 1907. By the time the new building was completed about 1,000 volumes were ready to place on the shelves. From the beginning the books added to the library have been classified and catalogued according to the most approved methods, making the contents of the library readily accessible to the users. The collection of books has grown steadily until now (1919) there are about 7,000 volumes, besides valuable files of magazines, newspapers, pamphlets, etc.

The library serves not only the people of the city of Fullerton, but gives free service to the people of the surrounding country and the neighboring towns as well. The present building is inadequate for the needs of the rapidly growing city, and a new addition or an entirely new building is necessary in the near future. The board of trustees of the library is as follows. Dr. F. J. Gobar, president; H. W. Daniels, secretary; Mrs. G. W. Sherwood, Anna McDermont, S. J. Lillie.

November 12, 1902, a hospital association was incorporated and this has been in operation ever since, maintaining a reputation for having a thorough equipment and efficient service.

The city has one union high school, organized in 1893, and in 1906-07 a new building was erected, costing about $50,000. This was totally destroyed by fire in 1910. A new site was purchased and more and better buildings were erected, as may be seen in the chapter on Orange County's Schools. On August 12, 1908, Fullerton organized a fire department. It has a paid service and is modernly equipped. Fullerton has an active Board of Trade, which has done more than any other agency to advertise the city and its surroundings, and to beautify them as well. It was organized in 1901 and now has 150 members. It has a Masonic Lodge, which was organized in October, 1900; the Independent Order of Odd Fellows was instituted in March, 1901; the Independent Order of Foresters in September, 1897; Fraternal Brotherhood in August, 1899; Fraternal Aid in 1893; also Knights of Pythias, Modern Woodmen of America, Woodmen of the World, Eastern Star, P. E. O. and Rebekahs. It has also a Woman's Club, which is affiliated with the state federation. This organization has wielded a strong influence in the social and civic work in the city. The Ebell Club is also a dominant factor in the city's life.

Following are the city officers as they stood after the election and appointments in 1920: Board of trustees, W. F. Coulter, president; L. F. Drake, R. A. Marsden, R. R. Davis, Robert Strain; clerk, F. C. Hezmalhalch; treasurer, Fred Fuller; recorder, William French; attorney, Albert Launer; engineer, George Wells; street superintendent, A. G. Barnes; water and sewer superintendent, Geo. Witty; marshal, Vernon Myers; health officer, Dr. J. H. Lang; park superintendent, J. G. Seupelt; board of health, J. H. Lang, M. D., health officer; E. T. Hall, M. D., G. C. Clark, M. D., G. W. Finch, Mrs. Carrie Ford; community nurse, May Pierce.

Fullerton nestles in the center of orange and walnut groves and is distant but ten miles from Santa Ana, the county seat. The city is made up of comfortable homes and is surrounded with very fine land suitable for growing almost anything put into it. The people are generous and hospitable and anxious to promote the general welfare in any way that will serve the interests of all.

During the year 1919, the city of Fullerton issued 188 building permits, whose total value was $528,609. I. H. Dysinger, building inspector, says the actual value of the improvements is greater than the amount indicated by the permits; but that is the case generally in all the cities.

Recent building operations include the Fullerton Improvement Company's building at Spadra and Amerige, erected at a cost of $55,000, and a later one at Spadra and Wilshire costing $62,000. This latter building houses the temporary city hall and the Rialto theater, the latter being one of the classiest playhouses in the state. The Masons have bought ground at Spadra and Chapman for a $60,000 temple; the Christian Scientists have built a $26,000 church, and the Ebell Club plans to erect a $40,000 club house.

CHAPTER VII

THE CITY OF HUNTINGTON BEACH

Supplemented by Charles R. Nutt

In the spring of 1904, the name of a little village known as Pacific City was changed to Huntington Beach, and the townsite was acquired by the Huntington Beach Company, a corporation with its principal offices at Los Angeles, from a syndicate of Long Beach and Santa Ana men who were owners of Pacific City. On July 4, 1904, the first electric car from Los Angeles reached Huntington Beach.

In addition to purchasing the holdings of the Pacific City syndicate, the Huntington Beach Company bought large acreage sites which they included in the limits of the new city, dividing it into lots 25x117½ feet, laid many miles of cement pavement, built a water and an electric lighting system, installed a telephone system and made many other municipal improvements which added greatly to the value of their holdings.

At that time there were only three houses on what is now Main Street, and about twenty homes in the town. The grammar school building was also completed in the summer of 1904.

In the spring of the above mentioned year a meeting was held in a Main Street building by a Union Sunday school, and in the following year a church of the Methodist denomination was organized and services were held in the present bank building, in the room now used as a city hall. In March, 1906, the newly organized church secured a church building, locating it at the corner of Seventh Street and Magnolia Avenue, where it still stands. In the spring of the same year the present Baptist Church was erected and an organization of the Christian Church was formed about the same time. In 1908 the last named denomination built the church which it now uses on Eighth Street.

In 1906 the Southern California Methodist Association, which had been holding its annual sessions at Long Beach, built in Huntington Beach the commodious auditorium which it has ever since used for its annual camp meetings and sessions of the Epworth League.

Early in the year 1904 a bank was organized by business men residing chiefly at Long Beach and called the Huntington Beach Bank. A year later its name was changed, having been reorganized under the national banking laws and it was called, as it still is, the First National Bank of Huntington Beach. A savings bank was also formed in connection with it and called the Savings Bank of Huntington Beach, and the present quarters of the two banks were built in 1905 and have been occupied continuously by them ever since. The stock of both institutions is now owned by local men. In the year 1905 two lumber companies were formed to do business in the city, one the Starr and the other the San Pedro Lumber Company; the latter afterwards buying the former and continuing in business to the present time.

Other business enterprises which came to Huntington Beach in the early years of its existence were the Anthracite Peat Fuel Company in 1905, the La Bolsa Tile factory, the Raine Tile Company, the Huntington Beach Cannery (which put up a substantial canning plant and flourished until 1908); the Huntington Beach Tent City Company (composed of local business men, which has enjoyed a fairly successful career), and various mercantile establishments. The Tent City Company each summer puts up and rents a large number of tents to those attending the Methodist camp meetings, the Grand Army encampments and other conventions and meetings for which Huntington Beach is fast becoming popular.

Huntington Beach was incorporated in February, 1909, as a city of the sixth class. Its area is about 2.77 square miles. Its assessed valuation in 1920 was $1,023,635, with a tax rate of $1.50, which includes special taxes for library, music, promotion and sinking fund. The bonded indebtedness is $104,750.00. The postoffice receipts in 1913 were $5,625.52, and in 1918 were $7,867.40, an increase of 39.8 per cent in five years. Village delivery was established in September, 1917. The present population is 1,687.

The following denominations have each a church in the city: Methodist Episcopal, Baptist, Christian, Catholic, Church of Christ, and Christian Science. The Southern California Methodist Association maintains an auditorium here with a seating capacity of over 2,000, where the Methodists hold their annual camp meetings, and which is also used by other organizations, such as the Southern California Veterans' Association, Epworth League, Church of Latter Day Saints, etc., for their annual outings.

The elementary school district has a very modern and up-to-date school building, erected in 1915 at a cost of approximately $75,000, employs thirteen teachers and has an enrollment of 300 pupils. The Union high school employs nine teachers and has an enrollment of 115 pupils. It has a well-equipped manual arts building and teaches domestic science in all its branches in addition to the regular training for college or business. Much attention is also paid to agriculture in the course of study.

The public library, housed in a Carnegie building and supported by the city, has over 6,000 bound volumes on its shelves and many of the leading magazines and other publications on its tables. A weekly newspaper was established almost with the birth of the city, and has been published without intermission ever since, increasing in importance with the city's growth.

Huntington Beach has been selected as a suitable place for the location of a number of important industries, among which may be mentioned the following: Holly Sugar Factory with an annual output worth $2,225,000; Beach Broom Factory, output worth $40,000; Pacific Linoleum and Oilcloth Factory, output worth $250,000; Pearse Cannery, output worth $8,000; Huntington Beach Nurseries, output worth $4,000. The city has exported approximately 625 carloads of sugar and 325 carloads of beans, besides other products in less than carload lots.

The total length of paved streets in the city aggregates 16.85 miles with about fourteen miles of oiled streets. Approximately fifty-eight miles of cement sidewalks have been laid. The length of the sewers, including laterals, is seven and a half miles. The trunk lines, septic tank and outfall cost $35,000; extension to main and construction of laterals, under district assessment, cost $29,158.

The municipality owns the gas distributing system, which includes about twenty miles of mains and laterals. It has 500 patrons consuming about 75,000 cubic feet of gas daily; the gas is the natural article purchased from the Southern Counties Gas Company.

The city has four parks of moderate size aggregating about eleven and a half acres. It also has a pleasure pier constructed of reinforced concrete at a cost of about $60,000.

Following are the present city officers: Board of trustees, Ed. Manning, president; Richard Drew, C. J. Andrews, R. L. Obarr, Albert Onson; clerk, Chas. R. Nutt; treasurer, C. E. Lavering; attorney, L. W. Blodget; recorder, C. W. Warner; engineer, C. R. Sumner; superintendent gas and sewers, F. L. Snyder; marshal and superintendent streets, Geo. M. Taylor.

The city has a chamber of commerce with about seventy wide-awake members. The Free and Accepted Masons have a good healthy lodge, and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows have a good membership and fairly good attendance. The Order of Eastern Star and the Rebekah lodges are reported to be very much alive. There is but one labor organization, The American Federation of Musicians, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. There are two fraternal insurance lodges, the most active of which is the Modern Woodmen, although the Woodmen of the World has some membership.

The municipality gives aid to and partially supports a brass band under the direction of C. H. Endicott, more generally known as "Pop," who is a thorough musician and very active in every good work for the advancement of the community and the county. The Huntington Beach Municipal Band under his leadership has become a very creditable organization and a veritable booster for the county.

Surrounded by a rich agricultural section, supplemented by the beach as a summer attraction, Huntington Beach will not only maintain its place in the struggle for existence, but it will forge ahead of some of its less favored competitors and become one of Orange County's important cities.

CHAPTER VIII

THE CITY OF NEWPORT BEACH

Supplemented by George P. Wilson

When the final history of California shall have been written Newport Beach will be counted as one of the most thriving of her coast towns. Not only is its location beautiful from a scenic point of view, but better still it has a more abiding attraction in its admirable location from a commercial standpoint. Located upon the body of water from which it takes its name, Newport Bay, which is the largest body of water between San Francisco and San Diego, it had been the habit of vessels of other days to make port here because it was possible to cross the bar on high tide, unload and reload the vessels in still waters, not on piers constructed for the purpose, but upon the solid ground of the mainland. Inasmuch as the Pacific Coast is not sufficiently equipped with ports of entry and as Newport Bay offers unsurpassed natural advantages, it is the earnest hope of citizens of the town located upon its borders that the Government, which needs for the carrying on of its own business every available port on this coast, will unite with the citizens of Orange County in perfecting one of the most important harbors on America's western coast. This hope is strengthened by the fact that comparatively speaking the improvement could be accomplished at small cost. Newport Bay is a perfectly land-locked body of water, covering eight square miles, and the union of Nature's efforts with modern engineering could easily convert this into one of the best ports in the world.

Appeals to the Federal Government have thus far brought no material assistance, although the inspecting engineers and visiting statesmen all speak favorably of the natural advantages of the bay for harbor purposes. The Hon. Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, in his recent trip through the county, gave strong encouragement for Federal aid. Some time ago the people of Newport Beach bonded their city for $100,000 to start the improvement. The good results from that outlay were so apparent that they were encouraged to solicit aid from the county. An election was called for June 10, 1919, to vote county bonds in the sum of $500,000 for the development of the harbor. The result of that election was: Bonds, yes 6,077; bonds, no 2,572. These bonds sold at a premium of $11,887, which speaks well for the credit of Orange County.

Not only will Newport Harbor become the yachting center of the Pacific Coast, it is expected, but the opening of this safe anchorage will no doubt attract industrial establishments to this already favorable location. A fish cannery has been built which will employ about fifty people and it is quite probable that this will lead to the location of other fish canneries on the harbor.

The city of Newport Beach is clustered about the bay and water front so promiscuously that it is hard to determine its area from the map with any degree of accuracy; however, it seems to occupy from three to three and a half square miles of territory. The census of 1910 credits Newport Beach with a population of 445; the 1920 census gives the city a population of 898. The assessed valuation of the city for the year 1920 is $1,289,685. The city has one and a half miles of paved streets and seven miles of oiled streets, fourteen miles of cement sidewalks and one and one-half miles of board walk, and two pleasure piers.

The present city officers are as follows: Board of trustees, J. P. Greeley, president; J. J. Schnitker, Art L. Heard, Dr. Conrad Richter, L. S. Wilkinson; clerk, Alfred Smith; treasurer, Lew H. Wallace; marshal and tax collector, J. A. Porter; attorney, Clyde Bishop; street superintendent, Frank J. Knight; gas manager, F. L. Rinehart; water superintendent, John McMillan; engineer, Paul E. Kressley; recorder, Byron Hall; harbor master, A. J. Beek; clerk of harbor commission, Lew H. Wallace.

The following associations maintain organizations in Newport Beach: Methodist Episcopal Church, Bible Institute Chapel, Newport Beach Chamber of Commerce, Newport Harbor Yacht Club.

CHAPTER IX

THE CITY OF ORANGE

Supplemented by D. G. Wettlin

Almost in the exact center of the county of Orange may be found the city of Orange, thirty-one miles southeast of Los Angeles, on the Santa Fe Railroad, at the junction of the kite-shaped track with the surf line to San Diego. It is also centrally located on the upper half of the mesa between the foothills and the Santa Ana River, and is surrounded by a productive, densely populated area containing the communities of McPherson, El Modena, Villa Park, Olive, West Orange and Santa Ana, the county seat, all within a radius of four miles.

The following statement, taken from the testimony of A. B. Chapman in the famous water suit between the two sides of the river in 1877, explains the origin of the city:

"The townsite of Orange was laid off in 1870 or 1871 by Captain Glassell and myself. The town of Santa Ana was laid out at the same time. At that time I went to Santa Ana and there were two or three men there in tents, a Mr. Spurgeon and two or three others. Santa Ana was not laid off by the same parties who laid off Orange. I was the father of Orange and Spurgeon and Bradford were the fathers of Santa Ana. Columbus Tustin laid off Tustin and lives there."

The original townsite of Orange contained forty acres of land which was subdivided into eight five-acre blocks with twenty lots in each block. Eight lots were reserved at the center for a public plaza. The town was called Richland, but later the name was changed to Orange, because there was already one Richland in the state and the government would not grant a postoffice to another. Additions have been made to the town from time to time by subdividing the acreage tracts surrounding the original townsite and naming such additions after the owners. In that way P. J. Shaffer, Joseph Beach, N. D. Harwood and others have left their names to streets or additions to the city.

Building material was an important item in the early days, the lumber in the first houses being hauled by team from Los Angeles or Wilmington. The residence of Joseph Beck on Almond Avenue is said to be the oldest house in Orange, having been built for Captain Glassell's office where the Ainsworth block now stands. If we mistake not, the building moved to the northwest corner of the plaza square to make way for the Campbell building, was the first store.

The early settlers were a sturdy band, collected from all parts of the world for the sake of the cheaper land and the better opportunities afforded by a new country. Their very hardships and privations brought them closer together, enabling them to realize the truth of the proverb that "one touch of nature makes the whole world kin." Previous distinctions of birth, rank and precedence were forgotten; individual peculiarities were either ignored or treated with good natured banter. All met on the common plane of good will and helpfulness.

Inexperience and ignorance are serious handicaps for any individual; but when a whole community is so afflicted, with no one qualified to suggest, advise or instruct, it means a frightful loss of time and energy in finding out by actual experience what the climate and soil of the new country, very different from that of the old home, are best adapted to produce and how to bring about the best results. For instance, Joseph Beach planted one ten-acre tract to four different kinds of trees and vines in succession, devoting several years to each before being convinced that it did not come up to his expectations. After millions of grapevines had grown to maturity and a reputation for superior raisins had been established, some mysterious disease, which baffled the government experts, destroyed all the vines. Before there were any quarantine laws, the nurserymen imported several kinds of insect pests on their stock, which crippled fruit-growing for several years and even threatened its extinction; but finally methods of spraying and fumigating were perfected that keep the pests in check. The difficulties of developing an irrigating system were almost insuperable, to say nothing about the litigation over the water rights. The soil, which never had been irrigated, was porous and the squirrels and gophers honeycombed the ditch banks, so that it was hard to make them hold water. Many an orchard was kept alive by water hauled in a barrel on a sled. While all these experiences were being worked out, the people had to live somehow. Every profession, trade and vocation had its representatives in the community; while all kinds of farming, dairying, poultry raising, etc., were carried on with different degrees of success. Many men found employment abroad and the women did the outdoor work at home.

Notwithstanding the hardships and privations of the early days, the educational, religious and social wants of the community were not neglected. Schools were established, some of the children coming as far as eight miles on their ponies. At first religious services were held in the schoolhouse by the different denominations, with a union Sunday school. People thought nothing of mounting the high seat of the farm wagon and riding from one to twenty miles to church; in fact, one old Scotch couple used to walk the latter distance from the Santiago Canyon to the Presbyterian Church in Orange nearly every Sunday. The Musical Union was one of the earliest musical organizations, and from that time down to the present many other organizations, both vocal and instrumental, have furnished the people with music of a high order. Literary societies were carried on, and entertainments of various kinds for various purposes were frequent. One of the best amateur baseball clubs in Southern California, if not in the state, had its headquarters at Orange.

The esprit de corps, or spirit of local patriotism, was just as strong in the early days as now. Nearly every exhibit, of whatever character, from Orange in competition with others, won a prize, because the people were willing to contribute of their products and labor to make it a success. When the Santa Fe wanted a right of way through the valley, the citizens of this community donated one of their streets and $8,000 in money to get the railroad where they wanted it. A few months later a little diplomatic work secured the junction for Orange after it had been promised to Santa Ana. Some $1,500 was raised to improve the plaza, the ladies raising one-third of the amount by the production of an original play, with local coloring, and other entertainments; a few years ago about $1,000 more was added to provide cement curbs and gravel walks. Bonds were voted from time to time to build schoolhouses as fast as they were needed, one $7,000 building being destroyed by fire. Most of the present church buildings were erected in the early days, though some of them have since been enlarged. The public library had grown to considerable proportions on private subscriptions, entertainments and membership dues before it was turned over to the city. When the new county was being formed, in 1889, the Rochester Hotel, which cost over $50,000, was offered free for a courthouse, and a vigorous but unsuccessful campaign was waged for the county seat. A little later the hotel was bought by the people, with the assistance of Rev. J. H. Harwood, and turned into the Orange County Collegiate Institute. After carrying on the school for three years, Mr. Harwood mortgaged the property to get his money out, and left the city. More examples of the early hardships might be given; but perhaps enough have been mentioned to show something of the difficulties encountered in the settlement of Orange and the character of the people who overcame those difficulties and made the later successes of the community possible.

The city of Orange was incorporated April 6, 1888, as a city of the sixth class, with an area of approximately three square miles and a population of about 600 people. Its location midway between the sea and the mountains gives it almost an ideal climate the year round. The invigorating sea breezes temper the extreme heat experienced farther inland, while the damp and chilling atmosphere prevailing nearer the coast, seldom causes discomfort here. There is scarcely ever sufficient frost to do any material damage. The soil of this portion of the valley is a sandy loam, rich and fertile, easily cultivated and adapted to a great variety of products. Citrus and deciduous fruits, nuts, vegetables and all kinds of farm products are successfully grown and easily marketed over the many railroads or by ocean transportation.

The railroad facilities of this section are unsurpassed. The Santa Fe has stations at Orange and Olive, and the Southern Pacific at West Orange, Villa Park, McPherson and El Modena. The Pacific Electric has recently built through Orange on its way from Santa Ana to connect with its line from Los Angeles to Placentia. Its fine new depot is located on the northwest corner of Chapman Avenue and Lemon Street. On account of the convenient location of the Santa Fe depot in Orange and the excellent service of that road, it has received the greater part of the business of this community thus far.

Water for domestic purposes, for lawns and flower gardens and for street sprinkling, is supplied by the city water system. The city owns its water system, which consists of three deep wells, two 50,000 gallon tanks on sixty-foot steel towers and a large reservoir, steam engines, air compressors, pumps, etc., with mains and pipes adequate to supply the growing needs of the city. The water is abundant and wholesome. Ample fire protection has been provided, including a fine motor truck, hose and hose carts and hook and ladder equipment, in charge of a well organized volunteer fire department. Water for irrigation is supplied from the Santa Ana River by the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, which is described elsewhere. The charges for water in both systems are very moderate—much below the average.

Notwithstanding its close connection with larger places, Orange is itself a business center, and has enough stores, shops and offices to supply all the ordinary wants of the people. These establishments represent almost every business, profession and trade found anywhere; many of the lines have more than one representative in the city. The stores, shops and offices are generally housed in substantial buildings and modern business blocks, some of which are equal to anything of the kind in the county. Surrounding this business center are hundreds of beautiful residences, furnished with all the conveniences and luxuries of the modern home. The cement sidewalks and well kept streets give easy access to all parts of the city for pedestrians and every kind of vehicle. There are twelve miles of streets with cement sidewalk and curb on each side, which improvement was made at a cost of about $75,000. Two and three-quarter miles of streets in the business section have been paved with the regular cement asphalt pavement. Twenty miles in the residence portions have been graded, oiled, wet down, graveled and rolled, making a smooth, firm roadway, free from dust, at a cost of about $750 per mile. The city trustees on March 8, 1920, let the following contracts for street paving according to specifications including five-inch thickness: To B. R. Ford, on Collins Avenue, .78 miles or 4,145.97 feet long by 8 feet wide at 21½ cents per square foot, amounting to $7,131.06; to H. E. Cox, on Tustin Street, .98 miles or 5,197 feet long by 16 feet wide at 21 cents per square foot plus $618 for culverts, $18,079.92; to H. E. Cox, on N. Glassell Street, .12 miles or 630.26 feet long by 44 feet wide and .37 miles or 1,982 feet long by 20 feet wide at 21 cents per square foot, $14,148. Total 2.25 miles at a cost of $39,358.98. This leaves only one mile of unsurfaced dirt road in the city. About nine years ago a good sewer system was installed, consisting of septic tanks, two and a half miles of outfall and several miles of laterals reaching all the thickly settled portions of the city.

A contract was awarded to Joseph A. Lieb on November 21, 1919, to erect 117 concrete electric light posts with single lamps complete in the business center and principal streets of Orange for the sum of $18,000. Bonds were voted on February 24, 1920, to the amount of $80,000 for a city hall; also to the amount of $12,000 for an additional city well.

According to the United States census the population of the city of Orange in 1890, two years after its incorporation, was 866; ten years later, in 1900, it was 1,216; and in 1910 it was 2,920, having more than doubled in that decade. The 1920 census gives a population of 4,884. Besides this good number in the city itself, the territory surrounding Orange, and tributary to it, is thickly settled, adding strength and support to the schools, churches and other institutions of the city.

The elementary schools, which take the children through the eighth grade, thereby fitting them to enter the high school, are housed in two substantial eight-room buildings and one larger intermediate building, with all the necessary conveniences, which with the grounds are worth over $100,000. The Orange Union high school district includes the elementary school districts of Orange, El Modena, Villa Park and Olive. The four high school buildings, which are located in Orange, are among the most commodious and tasteful buildings in the state, considering their cost, which was over $100,000, including the furnishings and six acres of grounds. The St. John's Evangelical Lutheran Church supports a large parochial school at Orange, to teach the children the tenets of the church and to give them correct instruction in the use of their mother tongue, the German language. The school occupies two buildings valued at over $9,000.

There are nine religious denominations that are maintaining regular services in Orange, each having its own house of worship. These church edifices range in value from $1,000 to $50,000, including the furnishings and grounds. Lodges—or other titles—of nearly every known organization, benevolent, educational, fraternal, industrial, patriotic and social, have been instituted here and are well supported. The Orange Public Library, containing several thousand well-selected books, besides current papers and periodicals, is housed in a $10,000 Carnegie building, the grounds and furnishings for which cost about $2,500 additional. Miss Charlotte Field is the competent librarian and is assisted by her mother, Mrs. Anna C. Field, who had charge of the library for many years.

The officers of the city at the present time are as follows: Board of trustees, Elmer D. Hayward, president; F. E. Hallman, W. T. Walton, O. E. Gunther, L. W. Hemphill; clerk and assessor, D. G. Wettlin; treasurer, Bessie Wilkins; attorney, L. F. Coburn; recorder, H. L. Dearing; water rate collector, Florence Reavis; marshal and tax collector, H. S. Warner; night marshal, C. W. Pulley; water superintendent, W. J. Richardson; health officer, Dr. F. L. Chapline; gardener, C. F. Sauer; fire chief, A. L. Tomblin; fire truck drivers, Wm. Vickers and D. C. Squires; street superintendent and general inspector, G. W. Buchanan; board of health, Dr. F. L. Chapline, G. W. Whitsell, Perry V. Grout, F. A. Grote, C. C. Bonebrake.

The Edison Electric Company supplies electricity for light and power; the principal streets, all of the business houses and most of the private residences are thus lighted, while practically all the manufacturing and repair shops use electric power. The Southern Counties' Gas Company furnishes gas for light and fuel. The city is provided with excellent mail, express, telegraph and telephone service.

Orange made commendable progress in 1919 with quite a number of new residences, a few new business buildings, and several fruit packing houses, the building cost totaling more than $100,000. The headquarters of the Orange County Fruit Exchange are in Orange, as well as several independent buyers. Following are some of the more expensive buildings recently erected in the city, as shown by the building permits: The Santiago Orange Growers' Association packing house, $52,290; Orange Union High School garage and machine shop, $7,000; A. H. Pease, packing house, $6,000; A. H. Pease, another packing house, $6,000; N. T. Edwards, addition to offices, $2,000; Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, garage, $2,200; George H. Pirie, remodeling building, $3,200; A. H. Pease, addition to packing house, $4,000; F. H. Kredel, business block, $7,000; H. W. Duker, dwelling and barn, $6,500; J. McInnes, packing house, $7,000.

One of the first acts of the first board of trustees was to forbid the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage in the city, and this opposition to saloons has been maintained from the incorporation of the city down to the present time.

Thus the city of Orange, with much that is good and little that is evil in its make-up, attracts and retains the best class of people for citizens.

Financial Resources of Orange District

There are two strong national banks and two savings banks in the city of Orange, and to these may be added the Orange Building & Loan Association and the First National Bank of Olive in estimating the financial resources of the district. All of these institutions by their liberal assistance, carefully administered, have done much toward the advancement of the best interests of the community. The large amount of deposits in each, in proportion to the size of the community, shows the confidence the people have in their stability.

The deposits in the National Bank of Orange, June 30, 1920, were $1,545,-343.27, and in the Orange Savings Bank, affiliated with it, $863,572.06, making a total in these two banks of $2,408,915.33. The deposits in the First National Bank of Orange on the same date were $840,514.37, and in the Security Savings Bank, affiliated with it, $736,982.43, making a total in these two banks of $1,577,-496.80. The Orange Building & Loan Association has deposits of $745,358.84 and the First National Bank of Olive, $169,436.51, making a total of $4,897,207.48 for the Orange district, a comfortable balance for the community after having invested considerably over a million dollars in the five Liberty Bond issues, to say nothing of War Savings Stamps and all the contributions to the various relief funds.

CHAPTER X

THE CITY OF SANTA ANA

By Linn L. Shaw

A history of Santa Ana, the county seat and principal city of Orange County, would be incomplete and lacking in real historic value, did it not embody the tales of the struggles and achievements of its pioneers—the men who, backing their foresight with their limited capital, their energy and toil, selected its site in the wilderness of mustard and cactus and made its future development possible. As this volume contains interesting biographical sketches of nearly all these men, wherein much is related concerning the early history of Santa Ana, the attention of the reader is directed to them in conjunction with this article, particularly to the life stories of W. H. Spurgeon, James McFadden, Samuel Ross, Granville Spurgeon, Noah Palmer and D. Halladay. And we would also refer to the separate article on the public library, which contains much of interest of the early days of our municipality.

Santa Ana was founded as a settlement in October, 1869, by Hon. William H. Spurgeon, who from that incident and from the fact that during all the years of his activity he was a leading factor in its development, is fairly entitled to the distinctive title of the "father of the town," which he has always borne. The original townsite as platted by Mr. Spurgeon, and surveyed by George Wright, was recorded December 13, 1870, and consisted of but twenty-four blocks; bounded on the north by Seventh Street, on the south by First Street; on the east by Spurgeon and on the west by West Street, or what is now officially named Broadway. Prior to this date, however, Mr. Spurgeon built his plain red-wood store, at the corner of Fourth and West streets, and the English home had been erected on the east side of Sycamore Street, between Second and Third, where it still remains and is being used as a blacksmith shop. December 18, 1870, is an important date in the town's history, for upon that day the first child was born within its borders—Lloyd Hill, a son of Jasper C. and Maria Hill.

That others than Mr. Spurgeon were attracted by news of the rich, cheap lands of this section is attested by the record that in December in 1869 a sufficient number of settlers had arrived to organize a school district, known as Spring. And as usual the little American schoolhouse blazed the way for patriotic citizenship—only in this instance the schoolhouse was not “red,” but a rough board affair without desks or blackboards, and provided only with long, hard benches. Miss Annie Cozad was the first teacher and deserves a place in the history with our local pioneers.

At this time Santa Ana was three miles off the main traveled stage road between Los Angeles and San Diego, which crossed the Santa Ana River north of where the city of Orange now stands, at a ford designated the “Rodriguez Crossing,” and continued southeasterly through Tustin, where a settlement already existed. With characteristic energy Mr. Spurgeon induced the stage company to change its route to Santa Ana, and thereby secured a postoffice for the new town in 1870. He was appointed postmaster at the munificent salary of $1 a month. The first postoffice consisted of a wooden shoe box, with partitions to separate the mail of the settlers. He also cut a road through the mustard connecting the new town with the Anaheim road, with the view to making it as accessible as possible to settlers and homeseekers. Town lots were placed on the market at ridiculously low prices and in many instances donated outright where immediate improvements were agreed upon. The little hamlet thus struggled on for several years, slowly adding to its population and advantages, and receiving the benefit of a general development of the rich, damp lands to the south and west, to which had already been applied the facetious title of the “Gospel Swamp,” a term which has almost been forgotten in the rapid march of progress. Good, pure water was easily obtainable, and in June, 1873, Mr. Spurgeon established a plentiful supply with an eleven-inch well, sunk to a depth of 340 feet, with a large elevated tank for a reservoir.

The Wells-Fargo Express Company opened an office at Santa Ana in July, 1874, and the following year marked a new era of activity for the town. Just preceding this period D. M. Dorman built the Santa Ana Hotel, a really fine structure for those days, at the corner of Fourth and Main streets, on the present site of the First National Bank. This old building is now located at the corner of Fruit and G streets. From 1875 the growth of the town gained momentum. The Masonic brethren of the community organized Santa Ana Lodge, No. 241, F. & A. M., which was instituted on October 1 of that year, the Odd Fellows immediately following with Santa Lodge, No. 236, on the thirtieth of the same month. The year 1877 marked the erection of the first brick building of Santa Ana, which was built by Mr. Dodge, near the corner of Fourth and Bush streets.

Early in the spring of 1877 the Southern Pacific completed its line to Santa Ana, from Anaheim, which for two years had been its terminus, placing its depot at Fruit Street. The fare to Los Angeles was two dollars, and twice that amount for the round trip, which restricted the journeys of our people and caused a good deal of dissatisfaction. Complaint was not confined to the exorbitant fare, but the character of the service was also bitterly condemned, as it was furnished entirely with mixed trains and three hours was the usual running time each way. While these complaints were apparently justified, yet the great advantage of the railroad was at once manifested.

With the advent of the railroad a rival townsite, called Santa Ana East, was platted and was expected by its promoters to attract all the business houses of the town. The streets of this new townsite ran diagonally, parallel, and at right angles with the railroad track, which entered the town on an angle almost due southeast. The lots were all twenty-five foot fronts, designed for business purposes, and the site extended from the railroad to French Street, including D, E, F, G and H streets, with the cross thoroughfares from Wellington Avenue to Fruit Street. The venture was a total failure so far as any effect on the business center was concerned, which has always remained practically as outlined by the founder of the city, never varying more than a block or two in the swing of the commercial pendulum.

A strong temperance sentiment in the village was indicated by the organization of a large lodge of Good Templars January 19, 1878. The last of what might be termed the pioneer lodges was that of the A. O. U. W., which came into legal existence February 27, 1879. During the month of March of this same year Dr. J. G. Bailey began the erection of a brick block, at the corner of Third and West streets, where it still stands. Many new dwellings now marked the site where ten years before an absolute waste prevailed; several business houses supplied the commercial wants of the people, and with its railroad, postoffice, newspaper, express office and hotel, the inhabitants of the young city were justified in anticipating a prosperous future. Already a bitter rivalry had developed between this lusty new aspirant for municipal distinction and the older town of Anaheim, which, established as it was in 1857, had held undisputed supremacy of the valley in this regard for twenty years.

The census of 1880 was anxiously awaited by both towns, and when the figures were finally received, showed the following population for the two localities:

Anaheim township.....	1,469	Anaheim town.....	833
Santa Ana township.....	3,024	Santa Ana town.....	711

Such a condition could have but one result. Santa Ana, having the advantage of by far the most populous contiguous territory, soon forged ahead of its rival and as early as 1882 became the chief town of the valley, a position which it has always maintained. Just at this time, however, occurred the most discouraging calamity of its career. The people of Santa Ana had for several years been discussing the need of a bank and in December, 1881, B. F. Seibert, a prominent citizen of Anaheim, opened a general banking house in the new Gildmacher block, which had just been completed at the corner of Fourth and West streets. His venture was met with enthusiasm and the entire confidence of the community, which was eloquently illustrated by the fact that his first day's deposits amounted to $28,000. Mr. Seibert immediately became the moving financial spirit of the town. He negotiated for business property, residences and ranch lands, inaugurated a movement for a fine new hotel building and exhibited a most inspiring and inexhaustible spirit of enterprise generally. His bank steadily grew in popularity and importance until, on the fateful day of August 16, 1882, the citizens were almost paralyzed by the news that it had failed to open its doors, behind which $130,000 of their good money was supposed to have been safely entrenched. Practically all the ready money of the town had passed into the hungry maw of this unscrupulous swindler, and, as the truth of the appalling situation became understood, the temporary apathy of despair overcame the hitherto bustling little city. Business was generally suspended and the bank failure and its probable outcome monopolized the conversation of anxious throngs everywhere. Seibert had discreetly vanished, and in this precaution he evinced his old-time shrewdness, for had the outraged populace been able to lay their hands upon him at this hour the most drastic measures would, no doubt, have been resorted to.

The general impression was that Seibert's affairs were a complete failure, but Messrs. C. F. Mansur and Charles Wilcox, who were appointed receivers of the defunct bank, held the securities which came into their possession until advantageous sales were made and were finally able, after a period of many months of trying circumstances, to clear up the affair with a total payment of seventy cents on the dollar.

A few weeks prior to Seibert's failure a new bank, called the Commercial, was opened on Fourth Street, near Main, being financed chiefly by Noah Palmer and Daniel Halladay. This institution being perfectly sound and conducted on absolutely safe and conservative lines, assisted materially in restoring the financial conditions of the town to a normal basis, though naturally suffering temporarily from the general lack of confidence resulting from the previous disaster. In spite of the retarding influence of that overwhelming loss, the tales of the wonderful fertility of this new region served to bring new settlers and new money into the town and its surrounding country, and improvements followed each other with such rapidity that a genuine boom was soon in full progress.

Sycamore hall, which for some time had been used for dances and general public gatherings, was arranged for a primitive theater in May, 1881, and two rival but enterprising citizens put on the first street sprinkling wagons the same month. The Stafford block had been built the year previous and the year 1882 was made notable by the erection of the pretentious Spurgeon block, a large two-story brick at the corner of Fourth and Sycamore streets; the Commercial Bank building, at Fourth and Main streets; the Dibble, Titchenal, Layman and Vanderlip blocks, all two stories, and the Hollingsworth block, a one-story brick structure. No less than forty good residences were erected during the year. At this period there were eighty business houses in the town, and the religious element was represented by five churches; the South Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist, North Methodist and the German Evangelical. The citizens were proud of their "large new two-story school house," which by the way was later condemned and sold by the school board, moved further north on Sycamore Street and remodeled for a lodging house.

Many wooden structures of more or less importance now housed commercial enterprises of various sorts all along Fourth Street, the principal thoroughfare: real estate agents were eagerly showing and selling ranch lands and town property and the Griffith Lumber Company was taxed to its utmost to supply the demands of the busy contractors. In 1883 Mr. Spurgeon's water system had a storage capacity of 20,000 gallons of pure artesian water, pumped from two deep wells, and the taxable wealth of the town had reached the very respectable sum of $597,785. The first fire-fighting apparatus, a chemical engine, was purchased in December of that year, the money being raised by popular subscription.

During the summer of 1884 a handsome new hotel, the Taylor House, a large two-story wooden building, was erected at the corner of Fourth and French streets; and the west end of town received another important building in the D. Gildmacher block, on the north side of Fourth Street, between West and Birch. The winter and spring preceding marked the heaviest rainfall ever recorded in the history of the city, the total precipitation for 1883-84 reaching over thirty-six inches. Early in February, prior to which time the rainfall had been rather less than the average, a season of flood began. All streams were transformed into raging torrents, and as there were no wagon bridges, soon became impassable. Railroad traffic was suspended altogether February 16, when the bridges over both the Santa Ana River and Santiago Creek were practically destroyed and several miles of track beyond washed out. Away to the west and south for miles the country resembled an inland sea, and a rowboat, launched by some courageous citizens at the western edge of town, voyaged into the Newport district, where it was reported that human lives were in danger. These men did take several parties out of the flooded district, but found no one in imminent peril. Much property was destroyed by this flood, a few families being rendered almost destitute, but such instances were readily cared for by the warm-hearted people of the valley.

Train service to Santa Ana was not resumed until March 26, and was interrupted several times after that by freshets. Mail, provisions, etc., had been brought in with great hardship intermittently during the period of isolation, and while supplies were often at a low ebb, there was never any suffering. As late as June, 1884, the Santa Ana River was described as being one-third of a mile wide and even in August a sudden rise of two feet in the turbulent stream, caused by the melting snows in the mountains, washed out the dam of the irrigation company at the headworks of their system. Wells of all depths were flowing that summer and water was the cheapest thing in use. Authentic history of the valley records only one similar season to this—that of 1861-62, when it rained almost continuously from December 24 to April 9, and the precipitation must have been measured in feet, if at all.

During all these years Santa Ana had existed merely as a village, under control of the county of Los Angeles. Sentiment for incorporation as "a city of the sixth class" had been growing steadily and on June 1, 1886, at which time the population of Santa Ana was about 2,000, an election was held to determine whether the town should assume the responsibility of separate municipal government. The advocates for corporation carried the day by forty-four majority and the following gentlemen were elected as the first officers of the city: Trustees, W. H. Spurgeon, J. R. Porter, T. J. Harlin, John Avas and A. Snyder; clerk, Samuel Wilson; treasurer, G. J. Mosbaugh; marshal, Charles H. Peters. The new board of trustees met June 21 and organized by electing Mr. Spurgeon as its chairman. A few weeks later J. W. Turner was appointed town attorney; C. W. Humphreys town recorder, and Adam Foster chief of the fire department.

At this period the "boom" was rapidly approaching the zenith of its spectacular existence. People were pouring into Southern California from all parts of the country and the abnormal and unfounded demand for real property of all descriptions had developed into a mania. Matters of location and price were not considered and town lots several miles from a railroad, with absolutely nothing to recommend them for such a purpose, sold readily at really enormous prices. The unbridled frenzy of speculation was rampant all over Southern California, and the young city of Santa Ana was soon enveloped within its dazzling folds.

This fact, coupled with the natural desire to improve the town as rapidly as possible, placed upon its newly organized government a heavy load of business and responsibility. On August 11, 1886, the trustees granted to M. G. Elmore a franchise to lay gas mains through the streets and alleys of the town, and a week later decided to purchase twelve street lamps from Mr. Elmore to be used on Fourth Street on alternate corners from Mortimer to Olive. On this same date steps were taken for the organization and maintenance of a fire department, the southeast room in the Spurgeon block was rented for a city hall and the Herald was designated as the first official paper. A communication was also received from C. W. Humphreys asking for a franchise to build and operate the Santa Ana, Orange and Tustin Street Railway, which was later granted. This was the first street railway in the town and was operated for several years with horses, finally being discontinued after heavy financial losses. The line to Tustin was removed entirely, but the one to Orange was continued through subsidies on the part of the merchants for several years, when it was sold to the Pacific Electric Company and still remains a part of that system.

The First National Bank was organized in May, 1886, and in September the Pacific Weekly Blade, a Republican paper, was started by A. J. Waterhouse and Walter F. X. Parker. Business blocks and residences were in process of construction everywhere and any man who could run a saw or swing a hammer found ready employment as a carpenter. Acreage adjoining the city was snapped up by speculators and subdivided into town lots which were sold with a rush, either through the usual office methods or by auctions. "South Santa Ana," where enterprising farmers are now raising sugar beets, threatened for a time, at this period, to become a world-famed metropolis.

If anything further was needed to complete the utter speculative abandon with which the people were now possessed it was supplied in the advent of the great Santa Fe system, which built into Santa Ana in 1887 and on to San Diego. Being now furnished with two great competing railroads, both of which were daily bringing new people by the score into the new city, all doubts as to the future were dispelled. Realty values climbed higher with each setting sun and dreams of opulence became the nightly portions of dozens of men who, with a little property, deemed themselves poor a couple of years before.

Perhaps the most notable of all the boom-time operators were the men composing the "Fairview Development Company," who purchased several hundred acres on the mesa eight miles southwest of Santa Ana and proceeded to build a city of their own. They constructed a railroad from Santa Ana to this town of Fairview, sold lots by the hundred, erected quite a number of good buildings there, started a newspaper, established a hotel and bath house, which was made locally famous on account of the warm sulphur water which they had procured from a deep artesian well, and it is said, held an option on every piece of property between the two places.

Everywhere the same spirit manifested by this company prevailed, and in many instances their methods were imitated so far as resources and ability permitted—the resources often consisting very largely of credit acquired through matchless nerve and balmy influence. Conservatism was roughly jostled aside or trampled under foot, and day by day the boom ascended the smooth pathway of plausible hope and apparently tangible prosperity until, reaching the summit of human credulity, it began to weaken; slowly at first, but with ever-increasing impetus until in 1889 the whole structure collapsed, leaving the fair face of Southern California strewn with pitiful wrecks of erstwhile handsome fortunes.

It was almost impossible to place a fair value on any piece of realty, particularly town property, in the general slump which followed and Santa Ana suffered heavily in the reverses. However, in spite of the undeniable ruin meted out to veritable armies of investors during this spectacular period of California history, the fact remains that much permanent good resulted to Santa Ana after all, for during these years it had been transformed from a village to a modern young city of importance. The Brunswick Hotel, First National Bank building, Opera House block and Richelieu Hotel—all three-story structures—besides a large number of good two-story brick buildings, were erected during the boom, as well as hundreds of residences, all of which, of course, remained and formed a solid nucleus upon which to resume the building up of the city later on.

Once more the boundless resources of the fertile valley were appreciated, perhaps as never before; and while the collapse of the boom struck hard at the financial strength of all Southern California cities, Santa Ana, by reason of its splendid agricultural backing, was able to weather the reverses with but little harm as far as its municipal standing was concerned.

About this time (in the year 1888) an important commercial enterprise known as the Newport Wharf & Lumber Company was organized, being the outgrowth of the transportation business which had been conducted by James and Robert McFadden since 1874, through a vessel operated between Newport Bay and San Francisco. The new company erected a wharf at Newport Bay extending about 1,500 feet into the ocean, in conjunction with the Pacific Coast Steamship Company, and established a wholesale lumber business at Santa Ana which soon developed into the largest and most important commercial enterprise the city has ever known. In the year 1891 the McFadden brothers, with others of the company, organized the Santa Ana & Newport Railway and built a steam road connecting the city with the new wharf, eleven miles distant, and thus provided cheap and quick transportation of their immense cargoes of lumber to the general yard at Santa Ana. This business rapidly increased in volume, its transactions reaching half a million dollars yearly and its payroll carrying one hundred men who never failed, during all its existence, to receive their wages regularly every week. This enterprise assisted very materially in the prosperity of Santa Ana during the dull period following the boom and continuing on through the national panic of 1893-96. The lumber business was finally discontinued in 1902 on account of transportation difficulties and the railroad was sold to Senator Clark, of Montana, who almost immediately disposed of it to the Southern Pacific, which company still operates it.

The year 1888 was also a notable one in the city's history on account of the organization of its original board of trade, now known as the Santa Ana Chamber of Commerce, which has always been a potent factor in the development of the town, but the most important event of this period was the creation of the new county of Orange on March 11, 1889, and the selection of Santa Ana as its county seat July 11, of the same year.

The census of 1890 gave the city a population of 3,628. Company F, its first military organization, was mustered in in June of that year with sixty-one men, Capt. C. S. McKelvey commanding, H. T. Matthews being first lieutenant and N. A. Ulm second lieutenant.

Up to this time Mr. Spurgeon's water system had supplied the town, but on December 1, 1890, the city voted $60,000 for a municipal plant, which was at once installed. The supply was secured from a number of deep artesian wells, forced to all parts of the city by the Holly system. On November 21, 1904, additional bonds of $100,000 were voted for a general enlargement of the plant.

The city's history during the '90s was marked by few important events and its growth was exceedingly slow for the greater part of that decade. A bond issue of $60,000 was voted March 7, 1898, for a complete sewer system, to which about $7,000 has since been added, represented by a total of about twenty-five miles of mains.

Free mail delivery was established in Santa Ana in March, 1899, with letter carriers, the receipts of the postoffice having passed $10,000 a year. The postal receipts of this office for the year 1911 exceeded $30,000 and seven city carriers, seven rural carriers and eight clerks were employed.

The census of 1900 showed a population of 4,933. During this year a handsome court house, costing $100,000 with furnishings, was erected by the county on the old plaza owned by Mr. Spurgeon, which had always been reserved by him for that purpose. This building with its imposing architecture and spacious, well-kept grounds, is the most conspicuous structure in the city.

One of the notable achievements during the city's history was the abolition of saloons, which was accomplished at the regular election in April, 1903, the proposition being submitted directly to the people and carried by nearly two-thirds majority. For a number of years preceding this crisis the anti-saloon forces had been agitating prohibition, and the action of the city trustees in granting an extra saloon license in 1902, increasing the number from six to seven, brought the issue to a head. All saloon licenses expired June 30, 1903, and Santa Ana has remained "dry" ever since. That a strong high-license sentiment still existed, however, was demonstrated by the fact that the next year the trustees were compelled by a popular petition to again submit the question, the majority still being in favor of prohibition, but greatly reduced. An important coincidence was here manifested, for while the city's growth had been exceedingly slow since 1890, and the retarding effect of banishing the saloons had been one of the chief arguments of the high-license people, a marked era of improvement was soon inaugurated and has continued without interruption to the present time.

A handsome new city hall, costing $20,000, was formally dedicated in November, 1904, at the corner of Third and Main streets. In the fall of 1906 the great Huntington trolley system entered Santa Ana from Los Angeles, giving our citizens the best passenger service possible and affording a new and popular means of transit for tourists and homeseekers to reach this section. This important event was celebrated in December by a novel innovation, called the "Parade of Products," in which the varied resources of the county were marshaled into an attractive pageant of floats, which was such an unparalleled success that the following year it was extended to three days, with a different street display each day and a large tent exhibit. The name was changed to the "Carnival of Products," under which more comprehensive title it was for several years an annual event.

It would be impossible to attempt to enumerate the great list of improvements which have been made in Santa Ana in recent years. Handsome new residences, in which the world-famed California bungalow style predominates, have been erected by the score in all parts of the city; several new imposing church edifices which would be a credit to any city, mark a prosperous condition in religious circles; the school facilities have been greatly improved by the addition of modern structures and including a commodious separate building for a commercial high school; and miles upon miles of cement sidewalks and curbs have been put in.

Banks of Santa Ana

Following were the deposits in the banks of Santa Ana as reported to the Government on June 30, 1920, in comparison with those reported on June 30, 1919:

Banks—	1920	1919	Increase
First National	$ 6,390,621.03	$ 4,790,945.05	$ 1,599,675.98
Farmers & Merchants Sav..	2,260,395.95	1,554,442.92	705,953.03
Orange Co. Trust & Savings.	1,763,271.69	1,286,136.60	477,135.09
California National.....	1,296,526.53	888,977.72	397,548.81
Totals	$11,700,815.20	$ 8,520,502.29	$ 3,180,312.91

While the date of these reports may not be regarded as the most favorable time of the year for the best showing of deposits, on account of so much money being tied up in the growing crops, yet it is just as good as any for making comparisons either with the deposits of past years or with those of banks in other cities, since the same date would be used on both sides of every comparison.

However, $11,700,815.20 is a lot of money to have in the banks of a city the size of Santa Ana. It is $2,623,865.20 more than all the property, real and personal, is assessed at in the county seat for the purpose of taxation. If the amount were divided equally among the citizens of Santa Ana, every man, woman and child would have a bank account, for a brief period of $755.62 in addition to any other property that he might possess. But these bank deposits do not all belong to the citizens of Santa Ana; quite a portion of them came in from the surrounding country. In any case, they are not community property or subject to any kind of distribution without an equivalent in exchange. What is true of these deposits is true of other deposits elsewhere and of all kinds of property throughout the world. Private ownership and use of property is almost invariably the reward of industry and frugality and should not be shared with the idle and dissolute. Wealth honestly acquired and rightly used is a great blessing not only to its possessors, but also to the whole community in which it is held or expended.

Present Status of the Banks

The Commercial Bank of Santa Ana began negotiating the sale of its assets to the Farmers & Merchants National Bank of Santa Ana in May, 1910. It took several months to complete the transaction on account of the legal questions involved. The Commercial Bank ceased to exist on the first day of August, 1910.

The Citizens' Commercial & Savings Bank was organized and opened in November, 1914. On January 1, 1917, it merged with the California National Bank under the name of the latter, which had been doing business since February, 1911.

The First National Bank and the Farmers & Merchants Bank merged February 21, 1919, taking the name of First National Bank.

The Santa Ana Savings Bank, affiliated with the First National Bank, and the Home Savings Bank, affiliated with the Farmers & Merchants National Bank, merged July 1, 1919, under the name of Farmers & Merchants Savings Bank.

The Orange County Trust & Savings Bank was remodeled in 1911. Additional real estate with leases on same cost $18,245, building cost $39,612.33, and vaults and safety deposit boxes cost $11,000.

Public Library of Santa Ana

The spring of 1878 was one of great rejoicing for Santa Ana, as it marked the completion of the Southern Pacific Railway to the town. The round trip from Los Angeles was $4 and the trip was a luxury which was enjoyed only on state occasions, but it gave the citizens a new feeling of responsibility, a desire for greater opportunities for self culture and mutual improvement. It was at this time that the need of a circulating library was suggested. The Santa Ana Weekly Times of April 11, 1878, has a communication as follows: "Editor of The Times: Several times I have through the medium of your paper called attention to the fact that Santa Ana ought to have a circulating library. The project has met with universal appreciation. I have now much pleasure in informing the public the Santa Ana Public Library Association has been organized, to be governed by the following constitution and by-laws. Further particulars can be obtained by applying to Mrs. H. C. Berry, Mrs. H. W. Lake, Mrs. O. B. Hall or to

Yours respectfully,

J. G. BAILEY, M.D."

Then followed the constitution and by-laws in full, one part of which was "the by-laws of the association can be altered or amended at any semi-annual meeting, providing two-thirds of the charter members present agree to the same, and not otherwise."

A few persons became intensely interested in the enterprise and assumed the task of soliciting names for membership. The following officers were elected, viz.: Mrs. O. B. Hall, president; Rev. H. S. McHenry, vice-president; Dr. J. G. Bailey, secretary; Mrs. N. O. Stafford (now Mrs. R. J. Blee), treasurer, and Mrs. C. E. French, librarian. Santa Ana had a library association organized—on paper—with about $20 to purchase and equip the institution. Persons having books that were of interest kindly donated them; thus a nucleus was formed. C. E. French contributed a wardrobe into which shelves were fitted and he offered the society a portion of the office he occupied at the corner of Fourth and Main streets. Books were added from time to time from the membership fees. In the fall of 1878 the library was opened to the members and their families. The struggle to maintain it was then begun. To keep it supplied with new matter socials, musicals and literary entertainments were given and collections taken to increase the funds. Among some of the workers besides those already mentioned were Rev. H. I. Parker and wife, Mrs. Walter Kent, Mrs. S. H. Hersam, Miss May Kent, Miss L. Berry, Miss M. D. Hotell, Miss Claribel Nichols, Dr. J. N. Burtnett, Pearl Kent and Col. W. F. Heathman. In April, 1879, the latter succeeded in giving an entertainment which was very successful and brought over $100 to the fund, and this increased the interest in the organization. The location of the library was changed several times owing to changes in business firms, it being placed wherever the best place was offered without cost to the association.

In 1886 an organization of the W. C. T. U. was perfected in Santa Ana. The following year they decided to establish a library and free reading room. They gave a book social and over 100 volumes were donated. They leased a place over Rowe's book store and fitted up the front room as a reading room. The library of the old association numbered then about 400 volumes. After due consideration the members voted to turn the library over to the new organization, which was done in 1887 and in January following the W. C. T. U. gave a formal opening. The problem of meeting the necessary expenses was a grave one and the organization deserves great credit for the manner in which they solved it. One "flower festival" they gave netted them $700. A merchants' carnival for the same purpose was a great success.

The next important step was the transfer of the library by the W. C. T. U. to the city of Santa Ana, September 1, 1891. This included the 960 volumes with all fixtures and equipment and the lease of the hall at 112 West Fourth Street. From that date it was to be supported by a tax levied for that purpose and to be thrown open to the city as a free library and reading room "to all proper residents and taxpayers therein." The first funds received from this source was October 5, 1891. The first board of trustees were E. E. Keech, C. E. French, Dr. J. A. Crane, Rev. Mr. Booth, and D. M. Baker. Helen A. Kernodle was appointed librarian. A report of the board of library trustees of July 3, 1893, shows the library to have had about fifty patrons and the highest number of books given out in one day, twenty. The report for the year was 950 patrons and the maximum number of books passed out in one day, 135.

October 1, 1892, the library was transferred to the Hervey building, 121 East Fourth Street, where it remained until it was removed to its present home, made possible by Andrew Carnegie, who donated $15,000 to the city for the building. W. H. Spurgeon gave the lot and the Native Sons built the walks and the retaining wall. The furnishings were provided by private subscription and the trustees of the city gave $1,000. When it was first used only the main floor was occupied and there was then ample room. As the years have passed shelving has been added for the books and the quarters gradually became crowded. A document room has been added in the basement. The circulation from July 1, 1909, to June 30, 1910, was 47,588. The present building was started in August, 1902, and the library moved in July, 1903. The board of library trustees are, viz.: Dr. C. D. Ball, Mrs. W. B. Tedford, Mrs. P. L. Tople, Chas. Robinson and J. S. Smart. The present librarian, Miss Jeannette E. McFadden, became associated with the library in 1897 and in June, 1901, was appointed to her present position, which she fills with satisfaction to all.

Commercial Progress

The commercial progress of the city of Santa Ana has been even greater in recent years than its growth in population, as may be seen in the fact that there are $2,623,865.20 more deposits in the city's banks than its entire assessed valuation. While the assessment is undoubtedly low, that will not account for such a discrepancy. The fact is that a considerable part of those deposits belong to the rural population for miles around Santa Ana. The county seat is the center of trade and distribution for practically all of the middle and lower parts of the county and to some extent for the upper parts as well. With trade and distribution come production and manufacturers. In 1909 the Southern California Sugar Company commenced operating a factory with a daily capacity of 600 tons of sugar beets. Two or three years later the Santa Ana Sugar Company entered practically the same field, each of these companies employing about 300 men during the campaign, besides providing a market for the farmers' beets. Two large lumber yards with well-equipped planing mills have been kept busy supplying the increasing demand for building materials. Several large packing houses for fruits, nuts and vegetables make this city an important shipping point. A number of autos are constantly employed collecting and returning clothes for the steam laundries of the city. Among other industries that made noteworthy progress during the year 1919 may be mentioned the C. H. Kaufmann & Sons' plant, which manufactured and shipped nearly 100,000 automobile spotlights during the year, and employing about fifty people. The Haven Seed Company produced, cleaned, packed and shipped nearly five billion tomato seeds during the season of 1919, with an annual payroll of $100,000. The J. E. Taylor Canning Company packed thousands of jars of marmalade, jellies, preserves and canned fruits, and the California Packing Corporation's plant packed approximately 7,000,000 cans of chili, pimentos and apricots. A horse-collar factory, a rug factory, an iron and brass foundry, artificial stone works, several machine shops, numerous garages and bicycle shops and oil stations, an ice plant and many other industries have added their quota to the general volume of business.

Two important industries have been reserved from the foregoing brief summary for special mention, because they gave some special data about their business to chronicle in the history. They are the "Mission Woolen Manufacturing Company" at Washington Avenue and Santiago Street, and the "California Crate Company."

The woolen mill has been running since August, 1917. Up to January 1, 1919, it made 70,000 army blankets and 60,000 yards of melton for overcoats for the Government. It is now making blankets, cassimeres and lap robes. Some of the blankets are exported to Siberia and China. The company is employing seventy-five men and women, and has a weekly payroll of $1,600; at one time, while on Government work, it had $90,000 worth of wool in the warehouse. The officers are: A. E. Bennett, president; C. A. Robinson, vice-president; P. A. Robinson, treasurer. According to a newspaper report the mill is planning to put on a night shift of weavers to keep pace with the demand.

The California Crate Company dates the first step that led to its organization back about four years. Fred P. Jayne of Santa Ana established a small factory in August, 1916, for manufacture of folding or collapsible crates of his own invention. In February, 1917, M. A. Carter, formerly of Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, joined him under the firm name of Jayne & Carter. In October of the same year the California Crate Company was incorporated with F. P. Jayne as president, A. M. Jayne as vice-president and M. A. Carter as secretary and treasurer. The principal product of the company has been the manufacture of the standard "Cummer Type" folding onion crate and during the last year this company has furnished the largest part of these crates used in Imperial and Coachella Valleys. This year the company has spread out and in addition is now making two sizes of a fruit crate invented by F. P. Jayne and known as the "Midget Crate," which is meeting with large success. It has also begun the manufacture of a new toy aeroplane and is fairly launched in the toy business having recently purchased two new buildings for use of the toy department. Mr. Jayne and Mr. Carter are both actively engaged in establishing and enlarging the business, the former as president and manager and the latter as superintendent. There are about twenty men and women employed in the factory at present and the number will be largely increased during the busy season beginning in December and running until June. The factory buildings consist of large, light and roomy machinery house, assembling rooms and storage warehouse, all well located on the tracks of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway in Santa Ana.

The Chamber of Commerce maintains a substantial fund to aid in securing industrial enterprises.

Churches

The Methodist Episcopal Church South holds the distinction of being the first religious organization in Santa Ana, which was effected at the home of W. H. Titchenal in December, 1869. Services were held for a time in a private residence, later on in the schoolhouse and finally in its own building erected in 1876, which is now supplanted by a commodious and well-arranged edifice. The Baptist Church was organized in 1871, the Methodist Episcopal North in 1874, and the United Presbyterian in 1876. After these pioneer churches various other denominations have been established here, until at the present time the list includes the following churches with their locations:

The Press

Nap Donovan, pioneer printer, published the first number of the Santa Ana News, on May 15, 1876. This paper died young from inanition. In October of the following year, he started the Santa Ana Herald, which, after passing through many hands, was absorbed by the Blade in 1903.

Some time in the eighties the Stamps Brothers started the Santa Ana Times, which they afterwards sold to D. M. Baker. He changed its name to the Santa Ana Standard and continued its publication through the formative period of Orange County's history. He then sold the paper and traveled through the North-western States in search of a better field. After passing through a number of hands and suffering a change of name, the paper gave up the ghost.

The Evening Blade was founded in 1887 by A. J. Waterhouse and W. F. X. Parker; but it was soon turned over to other owners. While it suffered many vicissitudes it continued to be the only daily paper in the county for several years, except for a brief period in the early nineties when the Free Press was making a vain struggle for existence. The Blade was purchased by Horace McPhee in 1895, who with his brother George carried it on for nearly a score of years. It was then sold to a Mr. Clarkson, who in turn sold it to the Register Publishing Company, and thus ended its existence.

The Register was founded in 1905 by the Register Publishing Company with Fred Unholz and Frank Ormer as managers. The following year J. P. Baumgartner bought a controlling interest of the stock, and has been editor and manager ever since.

D. M. Baker, failing to find a more promising field for newspaper work, returned to Santa Ana, and with W. J. Rouse established the Bulletin in 1899, which he continued to publish until his death. The paper is now owned and published by C. D. Overshiner and M. A. Yarnell.

The following are the present city officers: Trustees and committee assignments, J. G. Mitchell, president; H. H. Dale, city and fire departments; Walter A. Greenleaf, street committee; C. H. Chapman, water, sewers; and John W. Tubbs, police; city clerk, E. L. Vegely; city marshal, Sam Jernigan; city attorney, Geo. H. Scott; city treasurer, Olive Lopez; city recorder, W. F. Heathman; superintendent water and sewers, Walter Wray; street superintendent and city engineer, W. W. Hoy; city health officer, Dr. J. I. Clark; fire chief, John Luxembourg; building inspector, Thomas Ash; city electrician, Wm. McCulloch; sanitary inspector, W. W. Chandler.

Area of the city is nine square miles. It was first incorporated as a city of the sixth class June 1, 1886; then later its boundaries were extended to correspond with the boundaries of the school district and it was incorporated April 9, 1888, as a city of the fifth class. The assessed valuation of the city in 1920 was $9,076,950, with a tax rate of $1.45 for city purposes. Building permits for last year amounted to $215,344.48. The postoffice receipts for the last fiscal year were $64,648.61. Thirty miles of the streets are paved and as a rule cement sidewalks and curbs always border paved streets.

October 10, 1919, was the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the city of Santa Ana. On his fortieth birthday, October 10, 1869, W. H. Spurgeon rode through mustard higher than his head on horseback to the sycamore tree, still standing, a few yards south of Fifth Street between Sycamore and Broadway.

Dismounting he climbed the tree and viewed the landscape o'er. Pleased with the prospect he bought seventy-four and one-quarter acres of this land from Ana M. Chaves, widow of Vicente Martinez, for $594. This was the allotment of Zenobia Yorba de Rowland in the division of the Santiago de Santa Ana grant, effected in 1867 in the Los Angeles Superior Court as the result of the suit of A. Stearns vs. L. Cota. The place was called Santa Ana from the name of the grant, Mr. Spurgeon being unwilling to call it by his own name. He lived to see his fondest hopes realized in the marvelous development of the city he founded and the county he helped to organize.

What the future holds in store for this favored municipality no man can foresee. With a population of 15,485, according to the government census of 1920, and the development of the magnificent territory hereabouts, yet practically in its infancy, an increase to 25,000 in the next ten years would not appear an over sanguine expectation. As yet no effort has been made to attract tourist support to the city, although the mountains and coast line afford more varied attractions than most tourist centers have to offer. It is not at all visionary to predict that when the Santa Ana Valley awakens to the possibilities which it has neglected in this respect for all these years, its chief city will become as famous as a mecca for pleasure seekers as it has for its purely stable characteristics. At the present time there is not a first class hotel or restaurant in the city, nor accommodations of any sort which travelers of means desire. Located as it is on the El Camino Real, or "King's Highway," the main thoroughfare for automobiles between Los Angeles and San Diego, as well as on two steam lines and one electric, in the midst of the most celebrated playground for tourists in the world, it does not seem possible that such a condition can long continue.

CHAPTER XI

THE CITY OF SEAL BEACH

By Sadie C. Sweeney

The city of Seal Beach is located in the extreme southwest corner of Orange County, bordering on the Pacific Ocean southeast of the mouth of the San Gabriel River, into which Coyote Creek empties some distance from the coast. According to tradition, the place was selected and promoted as a beach resort by Los Angeles capitalists under the name of Bay City, which name the school district still bears. Although the city continues to receive the patronage of many Los Angeles people, its main support comes from its own residents who are citizens of Orange County.

The city was incorporated under its present name on October 25, 1911. Its area, as nearly as can be determined from the map, is about one and five-eighths square miles. Its assessed valuation for the year 1920, exclusive of operative property, is $638,755. Its present population is 669, according to the Federal census of 1920. There are two miles of paved streets, eight miles of oiled streets and about twenty miles of concrete sidewalk.

A complete sewer system is being constructed now, and the city has voted bonds to install a municipal water plant. Following are the present city officers, and officers of other organizations: Board of trustees: John J. Doyle, president; Albert J. Morris, Walter A. Storts, A. J. Spinner, J. Burkhart; clerk, B. B. Brown; marshal, Harry Mayer; city attorney, Joe C. Burke; treasurer, Mrs. Sadie C. Bailey; recorder, John H. May; health officer, J. P. Dougall; plumbing and electric inspector, Harry Mayer; board of health: Dr. J. Park Dougall, Sadie C. Sweeney, A. W. Armstrong, James Graham, Mrs. Millie Ernie; chamber of commerce: James A. Graham, president; J. H. May, vice-president; A. W. Armstrong, secretary; Sadie C. Sweeney, treasurer; Gustav Mann, Wm. Templeman, W. A. Storts, J. H. May, Raymond Aldrich; school board: Miss Amy Dyson, president; I. E. Patterson, clerk; Mrs. C. L. Flack.

The number of teachers employed in the public schools, the number of pupils enrolled, the value of the school property and the cost of the schools for the year 1918-1919, may be found in the chapter on Orange County's Schools under the title "Bay City," which is the name of the school district belonging to Seal Beach.

The only church to report in the city is the Bungalow Methodist Church.

Bathing is enjoyed the year 'round; it is absolutely safe for the children. There has never been a drowning in the surf at Seal Beach; there is no undertow. The climatic conditions, too, are the best that can be found in Southern California; it is cooler in the summer and warmer in the winter than at most other places.

The Pacific Electric Railway passes through Seal Beach on its way from Long Beach to Balboa. There is a paved road from Seal Beach to Long Beach and provision is made in the $40,000,000 state bonds, recently voted, to extend the state highway from Oxnard to Capistrano along the coast.

The growth of Seal Beach is retarded at present by the lack of housing facilities, and it might pay the holders of vacant lots to build on them; but it would be better for the community, as well as the home-seekers, if they would buy and build in Seal Beach for the sake of the many natural advantages it has to offer.

CHAPTER XII

THE CITY OF STANTON

The city of Stanton is located centrally in the agricultural section in the western part of Orange County, southwest of Anaheim and northwest of Garden Grove. It was named after Hon. Phil. A. Stanton of Los Angeles, who has large holdings of land in that vicinity. The city was incorporated on March 29, 1911; the principal purpose of the incorporation was to prevent Anaheim's sewer farm being located in that community. The area of the territory first included was afterwards reduced until now it is about six and one-half square miles. The assessed valuation of the city for the year 1920 is $629,335; and the tax rate for city purposes is $1.00. The population, according to the 1920 census, is 695. No one ever heard of Stanton parading itself as a railroad center; yet so it is, as may be seen on the map. The branch of the Southern Pacific Railroad, running from Anaheim to Los Alamitos, intersects the main line of the Pacific Electric Railway, running from Los Angeles to Santa Ana, in the very heart of the city of Stanton.

Following are the city officers as they stood after the election and appointments in 1920: Board of trustees, John F. Roe, president; E. B. Hosking, True W. Clark, James F. Robison, Frank G. Redmond; clerk, F. C. Beecher; treasurer, F. D. Turner; recorder, E. X. Willard.

CHAPTER XIII

UNINCORPORATED TOWNS

Besides the nine incorporated cities in Orange County, which have been described elsewhere, there are about forty unincorporated towns, ranging in size from a few families to nearly sufficient population to incorporate as a city of the sixth class. Each of these towns serves as a business and social center for the surrounding territory, the postoffice in many cases having been superseded by the rural delivery from the larger cities. These towns may be briefly described in alphabetical order, as follows:

Arch Beach is a small seaside resort one mile east of Laguna Beach. The shore line in front of this town is the most attractive on the coast, with its picturesque bluffs, jutting rocks and cunning coves. The name, Arch Beach, comes from a natural arch formed by the action of the breakers cutting a passage through a large projecting rock.

Balboa is the name given to the eastern end of Newport Beach, to an island in the bay, and to the palisades near Corona del Mar.

Berryfield, Benedict and Cypress are way stations on the Pacific Electric Railway northwest of Garden Grove in the order named going toward Los Angeles. Besides accommodating the local travel they form shipping points for the products of the surrounding farms, gardens and poultry yards.

Bolsa is located four miles west of Santa Ana in the grain, vegetable and stock-raising lands. It consists of a store, church, schoolhouse, and a few residences which are badly scattered.

Brookhurst is the first station on the Southern Pacific Railway northwest of West Anaheim. Although it is located near the dividing line between the fruit lands and the dairy section, there are some fine orchards near the station.

Buena Park is the last station on the Southern Pacific Railway before crossing into Los Angeles County. It is surrounded by alfalfa, beet and general farming lands. Here is located the large condensed milk factory of the Pacific Creamery Company.

Capistrano, the "Old Mission Town," is situated near the junction of San Juan Creek and Trabuco Creek, on the Santa Fe Railway, about twenty-five miles southeast of Santa Ana and three miles from the coast. The locality seems to be well adapted to fruits, grains and grazing, but the principal distinction is being the home of the San Juan Capistrano Mission.

The first attempt to found the Mission of San Juan Capistrano was made October 30, 1775. A cross was erected and a mass said in a hut constructed for the purpose. The revolt of the Indians at San Diego on the night of November 5th, and the massacre of Father Jaume and others, news of which reached San Juan on the 7th, called away the soldiers. The bells which had been hung on the branch of a tree were taken down and buried and the soldiers and padres hastened to San Diego. November 1, 1776, President Serra and Fathers Mugartegui and Amurro, with an escort of soldiers, reestablished the mission. The bells were dug up and hung upon a tree, and their ringing assembled a number of the natives. An enramada of boughs was constructed and mass was said.

The first location of the mission was several miles northeast of the present site, and at the foot of the mountain. The former location is still known as La Mission Viejo. Whether the change of location was made at the time of the reestablishment or later is not known. The erection of a stone church was begun in February, 1797, and completed in 1806. A master builder had been brought from Mexico, and under his superintendence the neophytes did the mechanical labor. It was the largest and handsomest church in California and was the pride of mission architecture. The year 1812 was known in California as el año de los temblores—the year of earthquakes. For months the seismic disturbance was almost continuous. On Sunday, December 8, 1812, a severe shock threw down the lofty church tower, which crashed through the vaulted roof on the congregation below. The padre who was celebrating mass escaped through the sacristy. Of the fifty persons present only five or six escaped. The church was never rebuilt. "There is not much doubt," says Bancroft, "that the disaster was due rather to faulty construction than to the violence of the temblor. The edifice was of the usual cruciform shape, about 90x180 feet on the ground, with very thick walls and arched, dome-like roof all constructed of stones imbedded in mortar or cement. The stones were not hewn, but of irregular size and shape, a kind of structure evidently requiring great skill to insure solidity." The mission reached its maximum in 1819; from that on until its secularization there was a rapid decline in the number of its livestock and of its neophytes.

This was one of the missions in which Governor Figueroa tried his experiment of forming Indian pueblos of the neophytes. For a time the experiment was a partial success, but eventually it went the way of all the other missions. Its lands were granted to private individuals and the neophytes scattered. It was restored by the Landmarks Club of Los Angeles, and its picturesque ruins are a great attraction to tourists.

Celery is one of the stations and shipping points on the branch of the Southern Pacific Railroad running from Newport Beach to Smeltzer.

Corona del Mar is a small hamlet on the mesa east of the mouth of Newport Bay.

Delhi is a community center about two miles south of Santa Ana.

El Modena is snuggled up against the foothills on a slightly mesa three miles east of Orange. The town proper was started in the boom, about 1886, by immigrants from the East, chiefly of the Quaker or Friends' denomination. The boomers went out with the boom and those who were left set to work to develop the country. As a result there are many fine orange and lemon orchards in this section and many other fruits and farm products are grown here. About half a mile south of the schoolhouse is the famous Hewes ranch, containing several hundred acres of diversified fruits and a large packing house on the Tustin branch of the Southern Pacific Railway. El Modena has a good water system, a Friends' Church, a graded school, a general merchandise store and other conveniences pertaining to a prosperous community.

El Toro, twelve miles southeast of Santa Ana on the Santa Fe Railway, is the trading point of an extensive grain and grazing district. It is also the nearest railroad point to certain mining camps and bee ranches in the hills on the north and to Laguna Beach and Arch Beach on the south.

Fairview, seven miles southwest of Santa Ana, is located on the northwest part of the broad mesa lying between the ocean and the damp lands southwest of the county seat. A carline was projected in boom days to connect the town with Santa Ana, but there was not sufficient travel to justify its continuance. Circumscribed by the San Joaquin ranch on the east and south and by the damp lands on the west and north, the place has made but little growth.

Garden Grove, five miles northwest of Santa Ana on the Pacific Electric Railway, is the center of a large area of land adapted to general farming, dairying and poultry raising. The shipping records show that Garden Grove has become the greatest egg producing district in Southern California. Ample water can be obtained for pumping at a maximum depth of 125 feet, which rises to within a few feet of the surface; in fact, many of the wells flowed in the early days. This abundance of water has induced the installation of many pumping plants, thereby increasing the productiveness of the section. The town itself is making rapid strides toward a city, with brick blocks, cement sidewalks and nearly every kind of business house. A lighting district has been established under a state law, and a brass band is being maintained by the people.

Garden Grove people must have considerable satisfaction—not to say pride—in helping to produce the following eggs-traordinary results, as set forth in The Youth's Companion:

"The value of the eggs and poultry produced every year in the United States is now three-quarters of a billion dollars, or more than that of all the gold, silver and diamonds produced in a year in the whole world. There are about three hens to a person, and each hen lays on an average eighty eggs a year. The best layers produce as many as 240 a year. Farmers' flocks consist on the average of only about forty birds, but even at that they contribute notably to good living on the farm.

"Of all sad words of tongue or pen,
The saddest are these: 'I have no hen.'"

As proof that Garden Grove's productions are not confined to eggs alone, note the following products shipped from there in 1919: Beans, 45 cars, 1,350 tons; beets, 130 cars, 4,662 tons; cabbages, 37 cars, 439 tons; eggs, 3,283 cases, 98,490 dozen; oranges and lemons, 126 cars, 1,755 tons; peppers, green chili, 132 cars, 1,990 tons; peppers, dried chili, 121 cars, 1,455 tons; pimentos, 75 cars, 1,125 tons; potatoes, Irish, 11 cars, 157 tons; potatoes, sweet, 26 cars, 404 tons; tomatoes, 33 cars, 328 tons; walnuts, 40 cars, 483 tons; approximate value, $2,000,000.00.

Greenville is the new name for what used to be the Newport school district, or Old Newport to distinguish it from the beach city of the same name. Whether the new name will supersede the latter name for the town remains to be seen. The place is a small cluster of houses about three miles southwest of Santa Ana in what was formerly known as the "Gospel Swamp" region.

Harper is a station on the Santa Ana and Newport branch of the Southern Pacific Railroad near the north boundary of the latter city.

Irvine is a station on the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway about seven miles southeast of Santa Ana. It is the principal shipping point for the products of the great San Joaquin ranch.

Laguna Beach, at the mouth of the Laguna Canyon and almost due south of El Toro, has been retarded in its growth by its difficulty of access. It has many natural advantages, the shore line here being nearly as picturesque as at Arch Beach, but most people prefer to go where there is railroad communication. Nevertheless, with regular automobile connection with Santa Ana and private conveyances, the town continues to grow and the resort to keep many loyal patrons.

A few years ago Pomona College, recognizing the advantages of Laguna Beach for the study of marine life, established a summer school there and gathered quite a collection of specimens in aquariums and cabinets to illustrate the instruction. For the same reason, and also for its coast scenery and atmospheric effects, Laguna Beach has become a veritable Mecca for worshipers at the shrine of the fine arts. "Nature calls mightily here and answers the craving of every being who appreciates her wonders and delights in her beauty." The many artists thus drawn thither have formed the Laguna Beach Art Association and maintain an art display in the auditorium. Funds are being raised for an art gallery, library and music room in a new building. The present officers of the association are: Edgar A. Payne, president; Anna A. Hills, vice-president; Mrs. Thaddeus Lowe, 2nd vice-president; Nevada Lindsay, secretary; Mrs. E. E. Jahraus, treasurer.

The following appreciation, clipped from the Santa Ana Register, though not localized by the author, Thomas Wright of Tustin, will apply to Laguna Beach as well as to other places along the coast:

"Orange County, fringed on its western boundary by scenic grandeur—the blue of the Pacific that ebbs and flows on its golden shores—the waves that beat against the scarred and rugged rocks that defiant stand, as they have done for ages, as the breakers hurl their restless forces against the barriers placed in their path by Him who holds the seas in the hollow of His hand!

"In this wonder spot of scenic grandeur, the wave-washed rocks reflect the glory of the sun and the blue of the sky, with their countless thousands of beautiful stone formations in all the colors and shades and delicate tints of the rainbow's glorious glow.

"As a lover of the beautiful, I stand among the rocks, in the misty spray, unable to comprehend the true wonders of creation; the unfathomable mysteries of the deep; the wonders in stones, shells and sea life washed in by the tides. I hear the happy laughter of children who play among the rocks and in the sand. I see lovers of the beautiful who come for recreation close to Nature's breast, some to meditate, others to study the wonders in curious shells, stones and sea life washed in upon the shore. I think of the Master who gave to us Christianity, who preached to the whole world by the Sea of Galilee, teaching the unfathomable Love of God, and the simple lessons of faith and trust—as 'the lily that toils not, neither does it spin, yet Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.' I think of the sermons in stones, in flowers, in every living thing in purple dawn, in sunset's radiant glow; in life, in love, in joy and tears—the inexpressible grandeur of it all!

"Then I remember what the Good Book says—that it was the fool who said in his heart, 'There is no God.'"

La Habra is the name of a rancho and settlement near the extreme northwest corner of Orange County. The town is one of the stations of the Pacific Electric Railway from Los Angeles to Riverside through the La Habra Valley and the Santa Ana Canyon. This valley contains some excellent land and, with its close connection with the Los Angeles markets, has a bright future before it.

Los Alamitos, named after a rancho of that name, is situated on Coyote Creek at the western boundary of the county nearly due west of Anaheim. It owes its existence to the large beet sugar factory established about 1896 by Ex-Senator W. A. Clark and his brother, J. Ross Clark. This factory worked up 80,000 tons of beets in 1909 and 90,000 tons in 1910. An auxiliary company to the Los Alamitos Sugar Company is the Montana Land Company holding 8,000 acres of land in the Los Cerritos rancho, which is in Los Angeles County, near the factory.

Mateo is the last station of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway in Orange County, about four miles on this side of the San Diego County line.

McPherson, two miles east of Orange on the Tustin branch of the Southern Pacific Railroad, took its name from the McPherson brothers who were most active in establishing the town. In the heyday of the raisin industry McPherson was a busy place, but, with the passing of the grapes and the competition of El Modena on the east and Orange on the west, the town has not made much progress. However, the place is surrounded by fine orchards and maintains an excellent packing house, extensive nurseries, a blacksmith shop and other conveniences for a rural community.

Modjeska Mineral Springs is a mountain health resort opened up in the Santiago Canyon.

Olinda is a bustling town in the oil district eight miles northeast of Fullerton. The wells of the Santa Fe Railway, from which the company procures its chief supply of fuel, are located here.

Olive is situated at Burruel Point on the Santa Fe Railway, four miles north of Orange. Evidences of an earlier occupancy of this locality were visible forty years ago in adobe ruins and abandoned ditches, and the present name of the town is said to come from a group of olive trees found growing at the west end of the point. The whole territory about Olive is one vast orchard and garden with many individual owners. In the language of a resident, "whatever soil, water and sunshine will germinate, sustain and fructify in any part of California, can be grown in the vicinity of Olive." Here are located the large flour mills of the Central Milling Company, which are operated by water power from the canal of the Santa Ana Irrigation Company, supplemented by steam power. The capacity of the mills is about 100 barrels of flour per day. In 1919, 335 cars of Valencia oranges, and fifteen cars of Navels and lemons were shipped out. Wheat, barley and milo maize are shipped in for the Central Milling Company, of which John M. Gardiner is president. The First National Bank of Olive has deposits of $169,436.51.

Peralta, or Upper Santa Ana, is a Spanish settlement on the southeast side of the Santa Ana River about four miles above Olive.

Placentia is the name given to the territory east of Fullerton and northeast of Anaheim. The nucleus of a town by that name was started in the year 1910 on the Santa Fe cut-off between Fullerton and Richfield. Trains on this cut-off pass through orange groves, some of whose fruit might almost be plucked from the car window. Here are the famous Chapman orchards, whose "Old Mission" brand of fruit brings the highest price of any similar fruit in the world. The Placentia Library District was formed September 2, 1919, the vote in favor being unanimous.

Richfield, a couple of miles north of Olive on the Santa Fe Railway, has been nothing but the shipping point for the oil from the Olinda district for several years. Now, however, that it has been made the eastern terminus of the cut-off, it has commenced to grow and several substantial buildings have been erected.

San Juan-By-The-Sea, or Serra, is a small fishing hamlet at the mouth of the San Juan Creek. Here the surf line of the Santa Fe Railway, on its way to San Diego, first strikes the beach.

San Juan Hot Springs, fourteen miles northeast of Capistrano in the San Juan Canyon, has long been a noted resort for rest and recreation. Here many people find relief from various diseases in the hot baths and enjoy the rest and relaxation which the mountain seclusion affords.

Smeltzer is situated in the heart of the celery district south of Westminster. The town was named after the late D. E. Smeltzer of Kansas City, who discovered the adaptability of the peat lands, when drained, to the growth of celery. Smeltzer and Wintersburg, one mile further south, are busy places in the shipping season. These towns are on the Southern Pacific Railway from Newport Beach to Los Alamitos.

Sunset Beach is an ambitious resort between Huntington Beach and Seal Beach. The coast line of the Pacific Electric Railway from Long Beach to Newport Beach passes through these beach resorts, giving easy access to the pleasure seekers from Los Angeles and the interior cities.

Talbert is the business center of the Fountain Valley region southeast of Wintersburg and was named after some of the leading citizens of that locality. It is surrounded by productive farming lands similar to those generally found west of the Santa Ana River.

Tustin, founded in the early '70s by Columbus Tustin, is about three miles southeast of Santa Ana. It is the terminus of the Tustin branch of the Southern Pacific Railway, and has a station on the Santa Fe Railway, southwest of the town, called Aliso station. At one time there was a horse car line from Tustin through Santa Ana and Orange to El Modena, but the owners, finding it did not pay, took up the track between Tustin and Santa Ana, and also between El Modena and Orange. Although Tustin is near the upper border of the damp lands, it is still on the mesa and is surrounded by many fine orchards of oranges, lemons, walnuts and deciduous fruits. The residents of Tustin have always taken great pride in their well-kept streets lined with stately trees; in order to light the same, they have established a lighting district, similar to the one established at Garden Grove.

Villa Park was originally named Mountain View on account of its slightly location near the mouth of the Santiago Canyon overlooking the rest of the valley, but the postoffice department objected to the name because there was another Mountain View in the state. Although the objection has since been removed by the abandonment of the postoffice, it was sufficient at the time to secure the adoption of the name Villa Park. The soil around Villa Park has considerable gravel in its composition, making it good material for roads, and also enabling it to absorb the heat of the sun during the day and retain it through the night better than a clay soil. For this reason the Villa Park section is specially adapted to the growth of semi-tropic fruits and winter vegetables. The Serrano Water Association, a cooperative concern, furnishes abundance of water for irrigation from the Santiago Creek and from wells.

Westminster was promoted as a Presbyterian colony by Rev. Weber of Paterson, N. J., and John Y. Anderson was the first purchaser of land in the settlement. In 1870 he bought eighty acres, which later he reduced to thirty-two acres and kept till his death, which occurred at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Mary Tilton, at East Los Angeles, May 18, 1920. James D. Ott, of Santa Ana, helped him build his house in 1871, the same house in which his son, Harry Anderson, lives today. Mr. Anderson was eighty-two years old when he died, having lived in what is now Orange County practically fifty years.

Westminster is rated as one of the older settlements of the county, perhaps next to Anaheim. It early became known in the political conventions at Los Angeles as a foe to intemperance. More than one tippling candidate went down to defeat before the combined delegations from Westminster, Orange, Pasadena and other temperance communities. Located seven miles west of Santa Ana, in the midst of a broad plain of rich, damp lands, Westminster began with a dairy industry, the first products of its herds being hauled to Los Angeles to market. A creamery company was organized in 1895, which invested $5,000 in a building. These improved facilities increased the profits; still with the drainage of the peat lands to the south and the introduction of cultivated crops the land became too valuable for a mere cattle range. At the present time all kinds of stock and poultry raising is carried on to a certain extent, and nearly every product of the farm and garden is grown in great profusion.

Wintersburg is a shipping station on the Newport Beach and Smeltzer branch of the Southern Pacific Railroad one mile south of Smeltzer.

Yorba takes its name from some of the Spanish families in its vicinity. It is a station on the Santa Fe Railway to Riverside, east of Richfield. Its surroundings are adapted to fruits, grain, vegetables and stock and poultry raising.

Yorba Linda is a comparatively new town north of the Santa Ana River and east of Yorba on the Riverside branch of the Santa Fe Railway. It has made a fine start and, with so many thriving young orchards, it will continue to grow.

CHAPTER XIV

ORANGE COUNTY'S SCHOOLS

Perhaps the best index of the character of any people may be found in the provision such people make for the education of their offspring. In order to make a fair showing of the school facilities of Orange County in the briefest space possible, it is thought best to present in tabular form the same kind of data about every school in the county. The following four descriptive items have been selected out of more than a dozen given in Superintendent Mitchell's report for 1920, as most typical of the size and quality of the county's schools, viz., Number of teachers, number of pupils, value of property and year's expenses.

High Schools

The legislature of 1891 passed two high school laws, one allowing the people in an entire county to authorize the establishment and maintenance of one or more high schools at the expense of the county, and the other permitting two or more contiguous school districts to unite and form a union high school district. The county board of education advocated the establishment of a high school under the former law. After more or less agitation of the subject, petitions were circulated, signed and presented to the board of supervisors asking that an election be called to vote on the question. With one exception, the supervisors were in favor of the county measure, and called the election for August 29, 1891. The supervisor from the Fourth District, having failed to even delay the calling of the election, started in to defeat the measure at the polls. He furnished the county papers each week with articles against a county high school and carried on a discussion in the Evening Blade with Gen. H. A. Pierce, a Santa Ana attorney, over the legal points involved. A resident of Tustin reported that the papers containing these articles were passed from voter to voter until they were literally worn out. The result of the election was 749 votes in favor of a county high school and 1,026 against. This defeat prepared the way for union high schools in different parts of the county, instead of one large institution at the county seat. There are now (1920) six of these schools in the county, each doing good work and in flourishing condition, allowing the pupils to board at home while pursuing their advanced studies in the high school.

The following statistics, along the same lines as those presented on the elementary schools, show that these high schools are appreciated and are liberally supported and patronized by the communities in which they are located.

Names of Schools	Number of Teachers	Number of Pupils	Value of Property	Expenses of 1919-1920
1. Anaheim	22	330	$ 172,500	$ 61,463.93

Junior Colleges

There are two junior colleges in the county at the present time (1920). They are carried on in connection with their respective high schools and are dependent on them for teachers, grounds, buildings and other accommodations, leaving nothing but the number of pupils to be reported in this paragraph, as follows:

1. Fullerton Junior College	79 Pupils
2. Santa Ana Junior College	51 Pupils

Total number in Colleges..... 130 Pupils

Number of Graduates

The number of graduates from the schools of the county in the class of 1920 was as follows:

Anaheim Union High	46	65	111

Public Kindergartens

Nine of the school districts maintain kindergartens in connection with the other grades of their elementary schools. Most of these, like the junior colleges, are somewhat dependent on another department for grounds, buildings and other accommodations; still they are so far separate that the same lines of data can be given on them as on the other departments, as follows:

Names of Kindergartens	Number of Teachers	Number of Pupils	Value of Property	Expenses of 1919-1920
1. Anaheim	2	97	$ 1,700	$ 2,177.73

9. Tustin	2	26	3,006	1,875.00
Totals	25	746	$32,514	$24,765.99

Private Schools

There are at least seven private schools in the county, supported by religious denominations, or by tuition charged the pupils, instead of by taxation as are the public schools. Although not quite so easy to trace and separate the items as with public schools, yet some of the lines of data can be given on the private schools, as follows:

Names of Schools	Number of Teachers	Number of Pupils	Value of Property	Expenses of 1919-1920
1. Seventh Day Adventists, Garden Grove	1	18	$ 545.00

As an indication of the growth of the schools of Orange County and of the way the taxpayers respond to the call for more school accommodations, County School Superintendent Mitchell gave out figures on March 16, 1920, showing that a number of districts in the county had voted an aggregate of $870,000 worth of bonds since March, 1919, to be used in the erection of new buildings, while other districts are planning to vote bonds within the next six months that will bring the total up to $1,100,000. Inasmuch as a few districts, which need more school room, failed to get the necessary two-thirds vote for their bonds, we may be permitted to state here some of the underlying principles that should govern the voting of bonds.

A public corporation, such as a state, county or district, issuing bonds upon all the taxable property within its jurisdiction, as security for the repayment of borrowed money with interest, is like an individual's placing a mortgage on his property for the same purpose. In either case the borrower must meet his obligation or have his property seized and sold, in the one case for delinquent taxes and in the other under foreclosure of the mortgage, to repay the lender. It behooves every citizen, therefore, to weigh carefully the needs for the public improvement called for at any time, as well as the ability of the average taxpayer to meet his pro rata of the obligation he is thus helping to incur, before he votes for bonds.

The officers in charge of any department, or portion of the government, having concluded that more room, or other accommodations, is absolutely necessary for the successful handling of the increasing business of such department, should carefully consider the ways and means for procuring the needed improvement. If the amount wanted is small, it may be obtained by a single assessment or tax; but, if large, it will require several assessments or taxes in succession, or a bond issue, to raise the requisite amount of money. A succession of assessments or tax levies can only be applied when the improvement can be made a piece at a time, like road building. This method of raising money is much more economical than issuing bonds, and also gives opportunity to correct mistakes in construction, that may be discovered by use, before much money is misspent.

For instance, after the proceeds of the good road bond issue were practically exhausted, the county highway commission decided that the concrete base would be stronger and better with one part less of sand in the mixture. Still later the supervisors concluded that the paving should be five inches thick instead of four to withstand the strain of the heavy traffic. If this paving had been done under the continued contract system, a portion each year, instead of all at once under a big bond issue, the improved methods just described could have been applied to the unpaved portions of the highways to be improved, and thus have made a better job on the greater part of the work.

Another case in point is the improvement of the ditches of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company. From three to seven miles of these ditches were lined or piped with cement concrete each year until now practically the whole system is thus improved. Funds for this work were obtained by levying about three ten-per-cent assessments per annum on the capital stock of the company, every dollar of which went directly into the work. This vast improvement, costing thousands of dollars, but worth millions to the central part of the county, was accomplished without much hardship on the stockholders and without a dollar of indebtedness to the company. Had bonds been issued to finance the improvement, more than double the par value of the bonds would have been spent before the last bond was paid off, to say nothing about the money that would have been wasted in mistakes, if the work had all been done at once thirty years ago.

However, there are some kinds of public improvements requiring large sums of money, like school buildings, which must be completed at the time of their construction in order to get the immediate use of the entire structures. Such improvements must be financed by the issue of bonds; there is no other practical way. Since good schools are essential to the future welfare of the community, state and nation, and since they cannot be carried on successfully without adequate support, it becomes the patriotic duty of loyal citizens to economize on other enterprises, that can either be dispensed with altogether or be procured by "the continued contract system," and give their hearty support to their schools by voting bonds for needed improvements, provided that such improvements are wisely planned without any extravagant superfluities.

Evidence of Efficiency

The foregoing record of the establishment and maintenance of Orange County's schools, wonderful as it is, would be incomplete without some evidence of the efficiency of such schools.

The high schools of this county are accredited by the University of California, showing that their scholarship is rated as high as that of other schools. They have repeatedly joined in friendly rivalry in forensic and athletic contests with the high schools of other counties, to quicken the pupils' interest in elocution and keep their equilibrium, in accordance with the Latin formula, Mens sana in corpore sano. In all such contests Orange County's representatives have proved to be the peers of their competitors.

While every person receives more or less benefit from his attendance at school, according to his ability and application, and hundreds of Orange County high school graduates are filling positions of importance and trust in the trades and professions, yet lack of space will permit only a few, from such of the schools as have furnished the data, to be mentioned as examples of pupils who have received at least a part of their preparation in these schools and who are making good in every walk of life, with honor to themselves and credit to their alma mater, as follows:

UNION HIGH SCHOOL, FULLERTON

Louis E. Plummer, Principal of the Fullerton Union High School, kindly furnished the following data about that institution:

The Fullerton Union high school was organized in 1893. Mr. W. R. Carpenter was elected principal, serving until 1906, at which time he became County Superintendent of Schools and was succeeded in Fullerton by Mr. Delbert Brunton. Mr. Brunton served as principal until 1916, at which time he was superseded by Mr. E. W. Hauck, who in turn was followed by Mr. Louis E. Plummer, the present principal. During the time of Mr. Carpenter's service the school grew until the enrollment reached 65. The period of greatest growth came during the ten years of Mr. Brunton's service as principal. At the time he left the school in 1916 the total attendance reached 400. In 1913 a junior college was established, in connection with the high school. The college has flourished. The enrollment for 1920-21 totals nearly 100, while our high school for the same year totals 650.

So many of the persons who spent their school days in the Fullerton Union high school have achieved more or less prominence that it becomes a difficult task to select those deserving of special mention. A few, however, will be mentioned with the full knowledge that many more as worthy will remain unnamed so far as this article is concerned.

The first graduating class, that of 1896, numbered only two, both of whom have made their mark in their chosen work. Mr. Arthur Staley continued his education in Stanford University, graduating in 1900. Since that time he has held positions of influence in his own community. He is an auditor of high ability, a splendid packing house foreman, and very successful rancher. Mr. Thomas McFadden, also a graduate of Stanford University, is now a very successful and prominent attorney of Orange County, with residence and extensive citrus holdings at Placentia.

Dewitt Montgomery of the class of 1897 has proven unusually successful in the teaching profession. Following his graduation from Stanford University his marked ability won for him position as county superintendent of schools in Santa Rosa County. He was later elected city superintendent of schools of Visalia, which position he now holds.

A student and athlete in his school days in the Fullerton Union high school later won for himself undying fame in the pitcher's box in big league company. This person is none other than the world-famous pitcher, Walter Johnson, of the Washington Nationals.

A young attorney, growing in prominence, and likely some time to be heard of in state affairs, is Mr. Albert Launer, now city attorney for Fullerton. Mr. Launer graduated with the class of 1909, and after completing his law course, returned to northern Orange County to win his first laurels.

Mr. Arthur Schultz, a graduate of the class of 1902, is steadily climbing upward in the ministerial field. Mr. Schultz is now located at San Diego.

Mr. Barrett Case, a classmate of Mr. Schultz, entered the University of California to take engineering work. He later returned to the oil fields of northern Orange County, where he remained in the employ of the Columbia Oil Company for a number of years. He now holds a position of importance with the State Mining Bureau in the Oil Production Department.

A more recent graduate of the high school, Mr. Max Henderson, of the class of 1908, is one of Orange County's most successful dentists. He is now located at Anaheim, and has one of the largest practices in the county.

Miss Sue Dauser, a graduate of the class of 1907, later took training in the California Hospital and followed the profession of nursing. During the recent war she was in charge of the relief work at Camp Kearney. She has served her country and fellowmen with such rare skill that she became known to many through her activities.

Captain Delbert Brunton, late principal of the Orange Union high school, with the assistance of Professors Mason M. Fishback and Alfred Higgins, furnished the following list of a few of the graduates of this school who have made good and what they are doing:

Fred Kelley, World Champion High Hurdler, Lieutenant of Aviation, U. S. A.

Nina Harbour, Ph.D., Professor of Economics, Vassar College for Women.

Carey Billingsley, M.D. Died in service of his fellowmen during the influenza epidemic.

Clyde Shoemaker, J.D., Prominent Attorney, Los Angeles, Calif.

Clyde Slater, Lieutenant Infantry, U. S. A. Now a student at the University of California.

Paul Schooley, Athlete. State Agricultural College, N. C.

Maurice Forney, Instructor, University of California.

Ralph Woods, M.D., Los Angeles Hospital.

Lew Wallace, Instructor in Farm Mechanics, University of Nebraska.

Besides the laurels of individual students, like Fred Kelley and others, won in athletic contests, the school has become distinguished by the phenomenal success of its baseball, basketball and track teams on many a hard-fought field in the southern part of the state. In fact, the men's basketball team holds the championship of the California and Nevada high schools at the present time. In 1918 the school won five first prizes in forensic contests, one by each class, and one by the school; an unusual occurrence in a single contest.

The Santa Ana High School was established in 1889 in the building on Church Street, now known as the Washington School. In 1897 it was moved to larger quarters at Tenth and Main streets, where it remained until the present modern Polytechnic plant was completed for it in the fall of 1913. Since its establishment, diplomas have been granted to 1,535 graduates, the class of 1920 numbering 112.

Space will not permit the mentioning of the names of the many graduates of the high school who have been successful in their chosen life work. Found near and far will be ministers, teachers, farmers, lawyers, doctors and business men along various lines who have been successful.

Charles Martin, an authority on Oriental Relations, is now a Professor of International Law at the University of California.

Willsie Martin is pastor of the First Methodist Church of Hollywood; also a lecturer.

John Nourse is Associate Justice of the District Court of Appeals.

James Nourse is a Washington and New York correspondent.

Glenn Martin, while not a graduate, is a Santa Ana boy and his success as an inventor, manufacturer and operator in aviation is well known.

CHAPTER XV

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND SITES

Shortly after the organization of Orange County, temporary provision was made for housing the prisoners in a little brick jail which cost the county, without the cells, about $4,000. With the kindest of motives the jailer was in the habit of leaving the cell doors open so the prisoners could have the range of the entire jail for air and exercise. Some vagrants took advantage of this liberty and picked a hole through the brick wall with a case knife, thereby making their escape. At the request of the sheriff, the superior judge issued an order requiring him to place a guard over the jail. This was the jail, thus guarded, from which Francisco Torres was taken and hanged, as narrated in the Chapter of Tragedies. The building and lot were sold to the city as soon as the present county jail was ready for occupancy.

Early in the nineties the board of supervisors called for sealed proposals for a site for the county buildings. A half dozen persons responded with offers of sites ranging in price from one dollar for a block in the Harlin tract on East Fourth Street up to $16,500 for a block on Birch Street by John Avas. None of the supervisors favored the Harlin site, notwithstanding its cheapness, because it was distant from the center of the city and was on comparatively low ground. Two, Yoch and Hawkins, favored the old Layman property, offered by Joseph Yoch for $6,000; two, Tedford and Schorn, favored the present site, offered by W. H. Spurgeon for $9,500 and afterwards reduced to $8,000; and one, Armor, favored the block immediately south of the present intermediate school site on North Main Street, offered by James Buckley on behalf of the Fruit heirs for $5,000. When attention was called to the impropriety of the chairman's supporting his own offer, the advocates of the Layman site joined the supporters of the Spurgeon site; and, when the advocate of the Fruit site failed to get any support for his choice, he also joined the supporters of the Spurgeon site and made the vote unanimous. This was the present site of the courthouse and jail selected and purchased from W. H. Spurgeon for the sum of $8,000.

Not long after the purchase of the site for the county buildings, the board of supervisors took steps for the erection of a commodious and substantial county jail. Provision was made in the tax levy to raise the funds by a direct tax; the plans of Dennis and Farwell of Los Angeles were adopted; and the contract for the erection of the building was awarded to Hulteen & Bergstrom of Los Angeles, who were the lowest bidders. This firm was hampered throughout the work by the lack of capital, certifying bills to the supervisors for payment in advance of the sums due on the building, which created friction with the board. It also quarreled with Hall's Safe and Lock Company and protested against the full payment of that company's bills for steel and iron work. The board, therefore, quit the payment of all bills and instructed the district attorney to bring suit compelling the claimants to interplead and settle their accounts through the court. This was done and only such bills as were approved by the court were allowed by the supervisors. The contractors then stopped work and locked up the building, hoping to compel the board to make terms with them. Instead of doing so, however, the supervisors took forcible possession of the building and had it completed according to the plans and specifications, charging the cost to the contractors. Thus were the public interests protected and the unfortunate complications cleared away with as little loss as possible to all concerned. The entire cost of the jail to the county was about $23,000.

Because of the cramped quarters for the county offices, the exposed condition of the county records and the clause in the deed to the site requiring a court house to be built thereon within ten years after its purchase, a movement was started early in 1899 to raise funds and commence the erection of the building. An election was called for September 5, 1899, to vote on the question of issuing $100,000 court house bonds. At this election the bonds carried by a vote of 1,414 in favor to 283 against. On the submission of competitive plans for the building by different architects, there followed a campaign of vilification and vituperation by certain newspapers and mechanics to secure the adoption of the plan each was championing rather than any one of the others. To all appearances, some of the non-resident architects had enlisted these local influences against their competitors to help land the prize for themselves. Charges of corruption were made and denied; the board of supervisors investigated some of the accusations against its own members and seriously considered bringing suit against the worst offenders. Finally the two supervisors who were supporting the plans of C. B. Bradshaw, fearing the other three might unite on the worst plans, changed over to the plans of C. L. Strange, which were thus adopted December 20, 1899. The contract for the erection of the building was let to Chris. McNeal of Santa Ana, who carried it through to completion in a creditable and workmanlike manner. The cost of the court house, including a few expensive changes, was about $117,000.

On June 8, 1912, the Grand Avenue schoolhouse in Santa Ana was leased by the county for a Detention Home. Two months and a half later the supervisors bought the building and grounds from the Santa Ana Board of Education for $2,750. The purchase of this property enabled the county to make improvements in the buildings and grounds for the convenience of the management and the comfort of the inmates that otherwise could not have been made.

A bond election for two purposes was held on July 20, 1912, viz., to vote on the issue of $60,000 bonds for a county hospital, almshouse and poor farm combined, and on the issue of $100,000 for county bridges. The returns on the hospital bonds were, Yes, 1,983 and No, 361; and those on the bridge bonds were Yes, 1,829 and No, 479. Notice of intention to buy seventy-two acres of land for $24,250 from the Dawn Land Company, as a site for the county hospital and poor farm, was given by the board of supervisors on October 22, 1912, and the purchase was completed November 19, following. This site is in West Orange and is a part of the U. L. Shaffer estate, west of the Southern Pacific Railway at the end of Chapman Avenue. A contract for the erection of foreman's bungalow and four cottages was awarded to Anderson & Bolyard, on December 26, 1912, for $5,996; also one to Horton & Eaton Company to furnish a 6,000-gallon tank on a thirty-foot octagonal tower with three-horsepower motor and Bulldozer head pump, for $700. Chris McNeal was given the contract to erect the main hospital building for $45,441, on September 16, 1913, and Munger & Munger were awarded the contract for the lighting and heating plant for $5,115. November 18, 1913, A. H. Anderson secured the contract to erect three cottages, a laundry and club house for $8,450. February 17, 1914, Robertson & Packard were employed to put electrical fixtures into the county hospital for $412; and March 10 the Johns-Manville Company to put in refrigerator and ice box for $494.40. On April 14, the bid of the Western Laundry Machinery Company was accepted to put in laundry appliances for $2,232; and Fairbanks-Morse Company's bid of $65.50 for a motor was also accepted. A month later Chris McNeal was given the contract to provide sewers and sewer connections for the hospital buildings for $5,545. November 17, 1914, Fred Siefert secured a contract for buildings at the county farm amounting to $10,925. August 8, 1917, contracts were given to G. A. Barrows to erect a service building, including dining room and kitchen, at the poor farm for $7,652, to the Anglo Range & Refrigerator Company for kitchen equipment for $2,357 and to the Automatic Refrigerator Company for refrigerator equipment and cold storage boxes for $3,707.

The following clipping from the Santa Ana Register is of interest:

"With the sale, announced by F. W. Slabaugh, county purchasing agent, of 5,240 pounds of lima beans, grown on the Orange County Farm property, at the end of West Chapman Avenue, it became known today that $641.90 has been added to the account of the institution, and that the farm's income from all sources this year will total slightly more than $10,000.

"The lima beans were sold to the C. C. Collins Company, buyers of this city, at twelve and one-quarter cents per pound.

"The County Farm property consists of approximately seventy-two acres. There are 1,000 six-year-old Valencia orange trees on the property, as well as 1,600 one-year-old Valencias. The income from these trees during the present year was $3,131, Slabaugh announced.

"It is estimated that the returns from the oranges next year will be at least $7,000. There is a bumper crop on the trees, and Slabaugh has recently purchased 2,000 props for use in preventing branches from breaking as a result of the great weight of fruit.

"In addition to the oranges that are sold, an ample supply is always available for use of the 80 persons who live at the farm.

"While the Orange County Farm is not a self-sustaining institution, still the cost of operation is cut down considerably by sales of fruit. There are two acres of deciduous fruit on the property. In addition, the farm raises its own vegetables. Four cows supply milk for the institution."

Shortly after the county came into possession of the grounds now forming the county park, a cottage was erected for the use of the custodian; a well was dug, a tank and engine were provided and the water was piped into the house and to different parts of the grounds where needed. A few years later, a neat and commodious pavilion was built for dancing and the use of assemblies. Furnaces were built for outdoor cooking; long tables and benches were stationed under the trees for large picnic parties to spread their lunches; swings, teeters and other devices for the amusement of the children were supplied. On October 21, 1913, E. G. Stinson contracted to excavate a basin of considerable proportions for a lake in the county park for the modest sum of $3,960. Boats and a boathouse soon were added to the accommodations of the park and now aquatic sports are available for those who enjoy such pastimes. On the same date, C. M. Jordan agreed to refit and furnish the old office of the sheriff in the court house, to accommodate the new department of the superior court, for the sum of $1,529.50.

On December 23, 1919, the board of supervisors accepted a proposition submitted by Florence Yoch, landscape architect of Los Angeles and daughter of Joseph Yoch of this city, with reference to beautifying Orange County Park.

Included in the services which are to be rendered are the drawing up of a picture plan of the park; working drawings and an engineering plan for system of walks and roads, indicating the proposed planting areas and locating buildings, recreational features and park utilities; a sketch of the proposed treatment of the entrance; detailed planting plans for the entrance; a report and recommendation concerning methods, time and amounts of development; personal supervision of the laying out of roads and principal walks and personal supervision of such planting as may be done at this time.

On July 10, 1919, C. McNeill was awarded the contract to make changes in the court house, to provide better accommodations for Department 2 of the Superior Court, for the sum of $10,558. A memorial arch is being built at Orange County Park and other improvements are under consideration.

On September 16, 1919, G. A. Barrows was awarded the contract for building a garage at the County Hospital for the sum of $2,935.

December 2, 1919, a contract was let to E. W. Smith to build a cowshed at the county farm for the sum of $1,099.65.

On March 4, 1920, the supervisors awarded a contract for building a county garage at the southeast corner of Church and Sycamore streets to R. C. McMillan for $27,000, which was the lowest of seven bids. They also awarded the contract for erecting a sheriff's office, at the southeast corner of Seventh and Sycamore streets, to the same bidder for the sum of $4,600.

While the foregoing list of disbursements does not include money spent for changes, repairs and small furnishings, it does include practically all the large constructive expenditures for sites and buildings for the county offices and public institutions. An examination of these accommodations and of the methods by which they were procured will convince any fair-minded citizen that the public funds have been judiciously expended and that the county has got value received for the money paid out.

CHAPTER XVI

PLEASURE DRIVES AND RESORTS

The title to most of the land in Orange County came down through Spanish grants. The largest of these grants is the San Joaquin ranch, which extends entirely across the county from northeast to southwest and contains 108,000 acres. The greater part of this vast estate still belongs to one person, James Irvine, who leases parts of the hill land for grazing and parts of the valley land for agriculture and occupies other parts with enterprises of his own. In the basin of Santiago Creek, which flows across the ranch, are some fine groves of large sycamore and live oak trees. One of the finest of these groves had been used as a picnic ground by the people long before the property came into the possession of the present owner. In considering how to make the best use of his heritage Mr. Irvine conceived the idea of donating that grove to the county for a pleasure resort for the people. He accordingly conferred with the supervisors as to the best method of protecting the gift and making it effective in accomplishing the beneficent purposes intended by the donation. The conditions proposed by Mr. Irvine and agreed to by the board of supervisors were that the tract should be enclosed and put in charge of a keeper, thereby protecting the majestic trees from destruction, and that the sale of intoxicating liquors should not be permitted anywhere on the property. All the preliminaries having been satisfactorily arranged, Orange County, through the generosity of James Irvine, came into possession, on October 11, 1897, of 160 acres of the finest wood land in the southern part of the state, as a perpetual playground for its inhabitants.

Some time during the seventies Rev. H. H. Messenger, a retired Episcopal clergyman, bought a tract of land on the mesa south of the present location of the town of El Modena and settled a small colony of members of that denomination on it. These people, having no water system provided and being without means with which to develop one, soon starved out and scattered to parts unknown. A few years later David Hewes came down from San Francisco, bought this land and set to work to improve it. One of the oracles in that vicinity warned him that nothing could be done with such land. Mr. Hewes answered that he could cover the tract with twenty dollar gold pieces, if he wanted to. "You'll have to do so, to make it worth anything," was the retort. Nevertheless, the Hewes orchards, consisting of about 525 acres, are now worth a million dollars and the Hewes Park is one of the show places of the county.

In January, 1920, the David Hewes Realty Company, representing the heirs of the Hewes estate, sold the property to a syndicate of Los Angeles and Orange County people for $1,000,000, which is an average of about $1,487 per acre for the 672.54 acres of highly improved, water-stocked land. The improvements consist of 425 acres of lemons, 212 acres of Valencia oranges, fifteen acres in the park, two large packing houses, pumping plant and pipe lines, ranch houses, etc. The principal reason for such valuable property selling below the market price is that its magnitude prevented competition among buyers. The market price for good bearing orchards ranges from $3,000 to $5,000 per acre. In a few instances offers of $6,000 per acre have been refused.

About a quarter of a century ago a nine-hole golf course was laid out in the valley southeast of the El Modena grade. Among those interested in the sport, the following names have been recalled: James Irvine, Dr. J. P. Boyd, W. H. Burnham, R. H. Sanborn, James Fullerton and Henri F. Gardner. Golfing parties would be made up in the different communities from time to time as inclination prompted and the cares of business permitted until the inclination was overborne by the cares and the sport languished. Then in 1910 the club revived and increased its membership to about 100, drawing in such members as F. B. Browning, J. R. Porter, A. J. Klunk, Kellar Watson, C. F. Newton, H. T. Rutherford, C. G. and A. C. Twist, J. F. Parsons, J. W. Tubbs, and George B. Shattuck. In 1913 Messrs. Browning, Porter and Shattuck looked up the present grounds, containing about 160 acres adjoining the city of Newport Beach west of the bay, which the club leased for ten years with the privilege of renewal for another like period. The name "The Santiago Golf Club," was dropped and June 4, 1914, the organization was incorporated as The Orange County Country Club. An eighteen-hole course was laid out and a club house built. A tennis court and croquet grounds were also provided. A professional is employed to give instruction and look after the grounds, which are kept open the year round for the use of members. The membership has increased to 278 and the present officers are: Charles G. Twist, president; F. B. Browning, vice-president; George B. Shattuck, secretary; Harry L. Hanson, treasurer; and board of directors as follows: C. G. Twist, F. B. Browning, C. S. Gilbert, Lew Wallace, W. A. Huff, Edward McWilliams, C. D. Holmes, Hugh G. Smith and George B. Shattuck. With automobiles and good roads, groups of players come to the grounds from any distance for an afternoon's sport in the open air; besides special features are provided at intervals in the club house for the entertainment of the members.

In 1910 C. E. Utt and Sherman Stevens bought about 600 acres of hill land northeast of Tustin and the following year commenced to set out orchards and build roads and drives. The eminence was christened "Lemon Heights" and early attracted the attention of Mr. Marcy, one of J. Ogden Armour's lieutenants. He bought the original purchase of Messrs. Utt and Stevens, and later added to his holdings over a thousand acres, purchased from others. Much of this land is unfit for cultivation; but with water it is susceptible of improvement as a park, like Smiley Heights at Redlands. However, Mr. Marcy is already developing about three hundred acres, building scenic roads, setting out orchards and conveying water to the tract. The water is supplied from three wells near Tustin, and is forced to the heights through two twelve-inch steel pipes, by electric power, which convey 240 inches into a large reservoir on the very top of the heights, from where such water can be delivered through pipes by gravity to all parts of the tract. He also has a well on his own land which yields thirty inches of water. Mr. Stevens disposed of all his interests in the enterprise some time ago, but Mr. Utt still retains about 200 acres of the land and a large share in, if not complete control of, the main water supply. Other former Chicagoans who are financially interested, are Robert M. Simons, who has over ninety acres set to oranges and lemons, and Doctor and Mrs. Bartholomew, who have about sixty-five acres. Of local people besides Mr. Utt there are Arthur Lyon, who recently refused $108,000 for his thirty-eight acre orange and lemon orchard; Doctor Waffle, who has about thirty acres of lemons, and a number of others with smaller holdings. A fine view of the valleys and plains, constituting the central and southern portions of the county, may be had from these heights; and doubtless many palatial residences will be erected there in the near future, whose occupants may thus perennially enjoy the beauties of nature enhanced by the arts of civilization.

From time immemorial San Juan Hot Springs in the canyon of that name, has had quite a reputation as a health resort. Water may be obtained there at any temperature desired, without artificial heat; but whether it has mineral ingredients that give it medicinal value we are not advised. It is well attested, however, that hot baths at these springs have relieved patients afflicted with different diseases, and that the tepid mud baths have been very helpful in the treatment of rheumatism. Hence, if any one wishes to get rid of his rheumatics while enjoying a pleasant outing, let him camp at these hot springs for a few weeks, taking a regular course of warm baths and spending the rest of the time in exhilarating exercise and refreshing sleep.

A number of the cities and towns in the county have a plaza or public park, a breathing place, as such places are called in the large cities. The land for this purpose is sometimes donated to the public by the person or company that lays out the town, and in other cases it is donated by some public-spirited citizen or association of such citizens. In the former case the land often lies neglected for several years, a sort of "No Man's Land," while in the latter case the improvement generally follows immediately after the donation. The plaza at Westminster is an example of the former class, and is specifically mentioned because it has come under the care of the board of supervisors. The Stearns Land Company donated about four acres to the community for a plaza and two acres each to the Presbyterian Church and the public school for building sites in the year 1871. No improvement was made on the plaza grounds for forty years. Then the community had to chip in and buy the property back, for through its own inattention it had allowed it to be illegally assessed and sold for taxes past redemption. Nearly $400 was raised for this purpose and for sinking a well. This well flowed for a while; but, with the capping and the light rainfall, it has ceased to flow, in common with all the wells in that vicinity. In 1914 the care of the park was committed to the board of supervisors and in 1916 trees were furnished by the forestry commission. January 8, 1919, the supervisors appointed James A. McFadden caretaker of this park and he has bought an engine and pump; so the prospects for better care are brightening. This example illustrates the difficulty of a community in having any public improvements without a local government to take care of such improvements. It also shows that the community has the right spirit at heart in recovering its plaza and taking steps to improve the same. Doubtless this spirit will push the improvement until the Westminster Plaza will rank with similar "beauty spots" in other cities. Santa Ana's Birch Park is almost as popular as the County Park in attracting small groups of people for an outdoor lunch and a quiet social time. The Plaza at Orange forms a picture in the minds of the beholders that never can be forgotten, to say nothing about the pleasure it affords citizens with leisure to enjoy its comfortable seats and grateful shade while discussing the questions of the day. Anaheim was willing to pay six per cent interest per annum on a twenty-acre orange orchard, valued at $60,000, during the life of the owner, to acquire the property at his death for park purposes; but the governor vetoed the legislative act designed to legalize such a deal. Since the blocking of that deal the board of trade has secured options from every property owner in the library block, to purchase that property at an estimated cost of $75,000 for a public park. Fullerton has a five-acre park now; but the board of trade and the city trustees are advocating the purchase of the twenty acres known as Reservoir Hill for park purposes. They are also proposing to lay out a skyline drive, one and one-eighth miles long, on the nearby hills, which will give a fine view of the entire coastal plain.

At a meeting of the city trustees of Newport Beach on or about April 19, 1920, J. P. Greely, president of the board, and Lew H. Wallace, city treasurer, were made a committee to negotiate with the owners of a tract of land for a city park. A tract has been offered the city for $4,000 on an easy payment plan, which is suitable for that purpose; it lies between Bay and Central avenues, facing Island Avenue, directly across the street from the East Newport Garage. The tract has several big trees on the grounds and has long been used by visitors to the beach for a camping ground.

Reference is made in the chapter on Orange County's Good Roads to the construction of a road in Trabuco Canyon from the schoolhouse up to the forks by the United States Bureau of Roads, Orange County bearing half the expense. Trabuco Canyon is said to be one of the most beautiful in Southern California, and to have a very fine camping ground near the Forks. The Forest Service proposes to lay out this ground and lease the lots to campers, for whom it will furnish tables and other equipment, including public toilets. Several applications have already been made for lots on which to erect cabins. This will add another pleasure drive and resort to the many within the county.

"Modjeska's Home and Inn" is the business name of the idyllic retreat in the Santiago Canyon which belonged to Madame Modjeska for a number of years and to which she would return for relaxation and rest after finishing a season's engagements on the stage. The place was selected in the early days by J. E. Pleasants, when all the sites were unoccupied. He built a commodious house with wide porches, developed a water system and added such other improvements as would help to make a comfortable and tasteful home for himself and family. After Madame Modjeska bought the property, we visited the place over thirty years ago and were shown all about the premises by the housekeeper, in the absence of the owner. The house was elegantly furnished with antique furniture made of mahogany and other rare and costly woods; the floors were covered with rugs of intricate patterns and skins of wild beasts; and every nook and cranny was filled with expensive articles of vertu, curios, ornaments and various kinds of relics. On the walls and easels were paintings of noted actors and actresses, among which were some of Madame Modjeska in different poses in stage attire. About the grounds were some good-sized trees that suggested to the actress the "Forest of Arden," one of the scenes of Shakespeare's play, "As You Like It," as a romantic name for her sylvan retreat. The flowers, shrubbery and decorations were so placed as to add to the artistic effect of the landscape. Now, however, the large tract originally held under one ownership is being rapidly sold off in lots and acreage tracts which, of course, means more homes and more community interests, without impairing or lessening the grandeur of the mountain scenery.

"And this our life exempt from public haunt Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks, Sermons in stones and good in everything."

—Act 2, Scene 1—"As You Like It."

Besides Modjeska's Home and Inn, there are numerous houses and camping grounds in the different canyons throughout the mountains. Some of the houses are occupied all the time by families that live in the mountains for various reasons, and others are occupied only in vacation or when their owners wish to take an outing. The camping grounds are generally occupied by a few families or congenial friends in vacation time only, like Camptonville in the Santiago Canyon above Orange County Park.

Most of the cities and towns along the coast appreciate the ocean as a valuable asset, not only for fishing and transportation, but also as an attraction for pleasure seekers who spend more or less money in their midst. They accordingly gave the deciding vote for the big bond issue for good roads to draw travel their way; they also built bath houses, pavilions, pleasure piers and other conveniences for the accommodation of their visitors. Residents of the interior generally go to the beach for their annual bath in summer time when "the water is fine;" but tourists, accustomed to the variable climate of the East, consider California climate as "summer all the year" and, therefore, frequent the beaches without regard to season.

Thus with over 300 miles of paved roads, including city streets, tree-lined avenues between evergreen orchards, and scenic drives entering canyons or climbing foothills that overlook the coastal plain and ocean beyond and with a great variety of resorts and camp grounds to choose from in the mountains or at the beach, Orange County is a veritable paradise for pleasure seekers.

CHAPTER XVII

ORANGE COUNTY'S GOOD ROADS

Just prior to the meeting of the legislature of 1907, some representative automobile men came together at Los Angeles and drafted a road law which was introduced in the legislature by Senator Savage of San Pedro. This "Savage Act" authorized any county in the state to vote bonds for the improvement of its main highways connecting the cities and towns, exclusive of the streets in the incorporated cities, such improvement being confined to a width of sixteen feet along the middle of said highways, which width was later increased to at least twenty feet, as may be seen in the following tables.

Shortly after the passage of this act an agitation was commenced to make it applicable to Orange County; but, some opposition being encountered, the matter was dropped for a time. Two years later the subject was taken up by the Associated Chambers of Commerce. Petitions were circulated for signatures and presented to the board of supervisors, asking that the question of issuing bonds of the county for highway purposes be submitted to the electors. The supervisors granted the petitions on March 2, 1910, and appointed C. C. Chapman, W. H. Burnham and M. M. Crookshank as a highway commission to prepare the preliminary work and have charge of the improvement of the highways. C. C. Chapman served but little more than a month, resigning on account of too many other interests that needed his time and attention, and Richard Egan was appointed to take his place. The commission employed R. T. Harris as secretary, Daniel S. Halladay as engineer and S. H. Finley as assistant engineer. Several months were spent in surveying and mapping the roads and in obtaining data from all available sources; but, when the commission was about ready to report, the approval by the people of the state's issuing $18,000,000 road bonds, caused some doubt and hesitation.

However, after the state engineers had located the state highway through Orange County and the county highway commission had amended its report two or three times, said report was finally filed with the board of supervisors September 19, 1912, recommending a bond issue of $1,270,000. The supervisors promptly approved the report and called the election for November 4, the day before the regular election. The result was: Bonds, yes 5,290 and Bonds, no 2,236. The opposition was to bonding and not to the improvement of the roads. It was argued that, if a sum equal to the interest on bonds were put into the improvement of a piece of road each year, the roads would all be improved in a few years and the county would have no debt, or double burden, to carry meanwhile. But over two-thirds of the voters declared in favor of the bonds in order to get the immediate benefit of the improvement; so the taxpayers have no just cause for complaint of the burden which they voluntarily assumed.

In addition to the resignation of C. C. Chapman, which has already been mentioned, the following changes in the personnel of the commission, during the progress of the work, have been noticed in the records: On December 3, 1912, D. C. Pixley succeeded W. H. Burnham who had resigned. On March 4, 1914, S. H. Finley and Ralph J. McFadden were joined with D. C. Pixley to constitute the commission, but on April 21, following, Mr. Finley resigned and W. T. Newland took his place. Seven days later Mr. Finley was appointed chief engineer with W. W. Hoy as division engineer. June 1, 1915, N. T. Edwards succeeded D. C. Pixley, who had resigned from the commission.

While the "Savage Act" did not go into particulars about the kind of materials and methods to be used in improving the roads, it did require the materials to be durable and the work to be permanent. Imbued with this spirit the highway commission sought information from all available sources and gleaned wisdom from the experience of others. It was decided that, after each road was properly graded and the soil compacted, its surface should be paved with a cement concrete base overlaid with an oil and grit finish. In carrying out this decision the concrete was composed of 1 part best Portland cement, $2\frac{1}{2}$ parts clean sand and 5 parts crushed rock. In some of the work the proportions were 1-2-4, respectively. These ingredients were thoroughly mixed, moistened and tamped or rolled into place to a uniform thickness of four inches. When sufficiently dry, the surface was treated to a thin coating of heavy oil and sprinkled with finely crushed rock. This work was all done under the vigilant eye of a competent, trustworthy inspector employed by the county.

On March 3, 1915, the highway commission reported the original 108 miles of road, estimated to be built by the bond issue of $1,270,000, as completed, with a balance of about $240,000 left over, and recommended that such surplus be spent in paving certain other specified roads. The board of supervisors approved the report and authorized the expenditure of this surplus as recommended. The final report of the commission was received and approved by the supervisors on January 3, 1917; thus the Orange County Highway Commission, having completed its task, was discharged with the commendation and thanks of the board of supervisors.

Following is a tabulated statement of the improved roads in the county, furnished by the county surveyor, in which the different widths of the paved portions are separately grouped, as well as the sections paved by bonds and by the county road funds; the length of each section is given in miles:

As shown in the foregoing tables, the county highway commission not only constructed more good roads with the big bond issue than the estimated amount, but it also built many miles with county funds provided by the board of supervisors. Since the discharge of the commission, the supervisors have continued the road improvement policy with whatever funds they were able to command, as may be seen from the following items of business transacted by the board:

November 5, 1919, a contract for paving East Fourth Street, Mabury Street and Tustin Avenue was awarded to Wells & Bressler for $10,009.87; also, on the same date, the bid of the same contractors to regrade the road to the County Park for $29,238.90, was accepted.

December 30, 1919, the board of supervisors let the contract for the improvement of the Buena Park-Commonwealth Road to Wells & Bressler for $14,322.64.

March 30, 1920, the bid of B. R. Ford for paving .83 of a mile of Collins Avenue, 8 feet wide, the county to furnish some materials, for eleven and three-quarter cents per square foot, was accepted, provided the bidder secured the paving of the city's half of the street, which he did. This contract amounted to $4,119.46, for the county's half and to $7,362.43 for the city's half.

On March 2, 1920, the board of supervisors awarded the contract to Wells & Bressler for paving 1.64 miles of county roads in the Fairhaven district for $13,080, which was the lowest of three bids. This strip of road includes portions of South Glassell Street, Fairhaven Avenue and Grand Street, and connects the paved street of Orange with the paved road from Santa Ana to the cemetery, thereby making the second all-paved highway between the two cities, and giving to each a paved road to the cemetery.

August 10, 1920, the contract for the improvement of the Fairview Road in Fifth Road District was awarded to Wells & Bressler for $24,861.24, as the lowest responsible bidders.

In building the state highway, the engineering department required the county to build the bridges over all the streams. To meet this expense and build bridges on the county highways, bonds were voted to the amount of $100,000, as mentioned in the chapter on Public Buildings and Sites. The bridges built with this fund are span bridges, constructed of reinforced cement concrete, and are artistic and substantial.

Since the foregoing figures were furnished, the supervisors let a contract to Steele Finley to pave three and three-quarter miles of road at Sulphur Slide in Santa Ana Canyon for $36,211.93. The width is to be sixteen feet with eighteen feet on the turns.

Early in August the supervisors accepted the proposal of the United States Forest Service to go fifty-fifty in the construction of a good mountain road up the Trabuco Canyon from the schoolhouse to the Forks. The board appropriated $3,500 for this purpose on the promise of a federal appropriation of a like amount. The road will not be paved, but will be a good substantial road for automobile travel. The work will be done by the United States Bureau of Roads.

On September 11, 1919, County Surveyor J. L. McBride announced that the State Highway Commission had let a contract to a Los Angeles firm for the improvement of the Irvine-Galivan road for the sum of $86,000. The improvement consists in adding two and a half feet shoulders to each side of the paving, increasing its width from fifteen to twenty feet between Irvine and Galivan. The contract also requires the surfacing of the highway south from Irvine for a distance of five miles with a layer of asphaltum one and one-half inches thick.

Orange County's vote July 1, 1919, on the $40,000,000 state highway bonds was: Yes, 3,529; No, 344. The part of the improvement affecting Orange County is the piece from Oxnard to Capistrano, which would enter the county at Seal Beach and follow the coast most of the way, thereby adding nearly twenty-five miles to the county's paved highways, exclusive of the paved streets in the cities through which the road will pass.

Besides the number of miles of paved country roads described above, each incorporated city has more or less paved streets which have been reported as follows:

City	Miles	City	Miles
Anaheim	8.00	Brought forward.....	49.35
Brea	3.00	Orange	5.00
Fullerton, estimated.....	20.00	Santa Ana.....	30.00
Huntington Beach.....	16.85	Seal Beach	2.00
Newport Beach.....	1.50	Stanton, estimated.....	1.00
<hr/>		<hr/>
Carried forward.....	49.35	Total	87.35

The total number of miles of paved roads in the county, including those under construction and provided for and those in the cities, is as follows:

Reported by County Surveyor.....	201.82
Under Construction.....	28.75
Paved Streets in Cities.....	87.35

Total Paved Roads.....317.92

Many miles of the unpaved roads in the cities and county have been brought to a proper grade, wet down and rolled, and then treated with a thin coating of heavy oil, evenly distributed while hot, and covered with a sprinkling of sand or crushed rock—preferably the latter. The asphalt in the oil cements the top gravel or soil of the roadbed together, thereby forming a hard, smooth surface almost equal to paving. Such roads are practically free from mud in the rainy season and from dust in the dry season.

Hence, in view of the foregoing facts and figures, Orange County may fairly be awarded the palm for good roads.

CHAPTER XVIII

THE COUNTY'S TRAFFIC FACILITIES

The traffic facilities of Orange County are unsurpassed, due partly to its own need of such facilities and partly to its lying in the path of traffic to other sections of the state. These facilities consist of branches of two transcontinental railroads, an electric interurban railway, littoral contact with the Pacific Ocean and thousands of motor vehicles to carry on the traffic over the hundreds of miles of good roads.

The first railroad to enter the territory now comprising Orange County was the Southern Pacific. The spirit of enterprise and achievement, that inspired the building of the Central Pacific Railroad, still burned in the breasts of the heroic band who accomplished that feat, or of their successors, when the increasing immigration to the southern part of the state in the early seventies attracted their attention. They immediately formed another company, naming it the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, bought the Los Angeles and Wilmington Railroad, which had been built by local enterprise, and commenced building out of Los Angeles in three directions: North toward San Francisco, east through San Geronio Pass and south toward San Diego. The latter ranch reached Anaheim January 1, 1875, where it stopped over two years. The management, however, becoming jealous of the ocean traffic developing through Newport Bay, extended the railroad across the river to East Santa Ana, where the terminus of that branch remains to this day.

Shortly after the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad came into the county and went on through to San Diego, the Southern Pacific Railroad thought it would pick up its terminus at Santa Ana and transfer it to San Diego, so as to continue the competition in that county that it had been waging with the new road in this county, but even the most determined people cannot always have their own way. That company could not get its terminus out of Santa Ana because the property owners between the county seat and Tustin refused to allow the road to cross their property. In sheer desperation it started another branch road south of Anaheim, thence east to Villa Park and south to McPherson, thence southeast through the Hewes ranch past Tustin to a point on the San Joaquin ranch where that terminus would be safe from sequestration. This Tustin branch of the Southern Pacific has become a feeder of the main line in the fruit shipping season.

When the Los Alamitos sugar factory was built near the western boundary of the county in 1896, the Southern Pacific Company built a road from Anaheim across to that place to handle the traffic of the factory. About the year 1902, when the McFadden Brothers were curtailing their activities, they sold the Santa Ana and Newport Railroad to ex-Senator W. A. Clark, who immediately turned it over to the Southern Pacific Company. Shortly after this purchase the company built a line from Newport to Smeltzer, eleven miles, to handle the celery, sugar beets and other products of that section.

These various branches make a total of nearly sixty miles of railroad, distributed throughout the county so as to be accessible to the majority of the people, and owned and operated by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company.

The following account of the building of the Santa Fe lines in Orange County was furnished by the chief engineer of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Company:

"From the northeastern boundary line of the county in Santa Ana Canyon near Gypsum to near the north boundary of the city of Santa Ana, via Olive, and from the city of Orange, via Anaheim and Fullerton, to the northwestern line of the county near Northam, was constructed in the years 1887 and 1888 by the Riverside, Santa Ana & Los Angeles Railway Company.

"From near the north boundary of the city of Santa Ana, via Rancho San Joaquin and San Juan Capistrano, to the southernmost corner of the county at San Mateo Point near San Mateo station, was constructed by the San Bernardino & San Diego Railway Company in 1887 and 1888.

"The branch line from Richfield to Olinda oil fields was constructed by the Southern California Railway Company in 1889, and "The main line between Richfield and Fullerton was constructed by the Fullerton & Richfield Railway Company in 1910.

"The mileage of the above is 71.79 miles. The mileage of side tracks in the county is 37 miles."

As soon as the Santa Fe was ready to do business it found the Southern Pacific determined to beat it to the business and, if possible, maintain its monopoly of the field. This resulted in several months of fierce rate-cutting, so that a first class ticket could be bought to Missouri River points for a dollar and freights from the Middle States were almost nothing. Finally rates were restored at less than the old monopolistic prices and the service was greatly improved by the competition.

When Henry E. Huntington decided to put his ideals of good railroad building into practice and make use of electricity as the motive power, he saw no more inviting field than Southern California for the investment of his millions. He announced that his company would ask no right of way nor bonus of any kind, but it would buy and pay for whatever it needed. He soon found that he didn't have sufficient money to buy a right of way at the landowner's price and have any left with which to build and equip a railroad thereon afterward, so he changed his policy and required the communities desiring the road to furnish the right of way.

During the year 1905 the people of Santa Ana and vicinity acquired the right of way for the Pacific Electric railway in a straight line from Watts to Santa Ana for about $22,000. The following year the road was built and its arrival was celebrated in Santa Ana by a "Parade of Products" in December, 1906. Without regard to the chronological order, the following additional lines have been built in the county within the past fifteen years: A line from Los Angeles via Whittier enters Orange County near the northwest corner, passes through La Habra, Brea and Yorba Linda and heads for the Santa Ana Canyon, but stops for the present at a little station east of Richfield called Stern. It is the intention to extend this line up the canyon to connect with the Corona and Riverside line and thereby make a through line from the interior to Los Angeles. The company has already acquired portions of the right of way through the canyon. A third line branches off from the Los Angeles and Long Beach line at Signal Hill, enters Orange County at Seal Beach and, skirting the beach cities and towns, terminates at Balboa near the entrance to Newport Harbor. A fourth line connects the first line at Santa Ana with the third line at Huntington Beach, passing the Southern California Sugar Factory on its way to the coast. A fifth line leaves the first line at the intersection of Fourth and Main streets in Santa Ana, goes north on Main Street out of the city and then swings east to Lemon Street in Orange, terminating for the present at its depot in the latter city.

While the negotiations for the fifth line were pending, Mr. Huntington traded all his interurban red car lines for all the street yellow car lines in Los Angeles, which up to that time belonged to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. This deal gave the latter company possession of the Pacific Electric Railway Company; but it was decided to keep the two companies separate. However, it is understood that the companies will mutually assist each other, and rumors have been rife about the Southern Pacific's intention to electrify the Tustin and Newport branches. It is probable that the Tustin branch will be thus changed and be used as an extension of the fifth line north from Orange to connect with the company's line into Los Angeles. In fact, the roadbed has already been graded north from Orange; but work was stopped by the late war. The total length of the various lines of the Pacific Electric Railway Company in the county of Orange is 66.268 miles.

The following figures show the mileage and valuation of these railway systems, as fixed by the State Board of Equalization:

Assessment of Railroads, 1918

Names of Roads	No. of Miles	Price per Mile	Total Valuation
S. P. R. R. Co.....	59.682	$28,137.18	$1,679,402.54
Pullman Co.	62.42	1,034.61	64,580.36
A., T. & S. F. R. R. Co.....	71.97	22,432.19	1,614,444.71
P. E. Railway Co.....	66.268	21,402.77	1,418,318.76

It will be understood from the foregoing description, or it may be seen on the map, that these railroads are about as widely distributed over the settled portions of the county as possible; hence the greatest number of people are reached by their service and the only duplication is in the through service between the large cities.

A county bordering on the great Pacific Ocean for its entire length, as Orange County does, would naturally have a fresh, invigorating climate; it would also have easy access to water transportation, which is the cheapest transportation in the world. With such a traffic facility in reserve, no exorbitant transportation charges would long be endured by the people, especially as population increases and means for business ventures become abundant.

The last of the county's traffic facilities to be mentioned is the thousands of motor vehicles that are used on the hundreds of miles of good roads. The motive power for the vast majority of these motor vehicles is gas, generated from gasoline which is a product of petroleum; hence these motor vehicles get their fuel at first hand, from the oil producers of Orange County. The first gasoline engine ever seen in this county was exhibited to a crowd on one of the vacant lots in Santa Ana about thirty years ago. The demonstrator predicted then that the gas engine would largely displace the steam engine, which prediction has come true so far as small, portable engines are concerned.

To get an idea of the amount of traffic carried on by motor vehicles a person should ride over some of the principal roads and note the number of vehicles he meets. Then he should go into the marts of trade and packing houses and see the number of huge motor trucks, with one or two trailers each, piled high with the products of the orchards and farms. But perhaps the best evidence of the large number of motor vehicles in actual use would be a report of the registrations for Orange County in the State Motor Vehicle Department at Sacramento. While Orange County is in the fourteenth class according to population based on the 1910 census, it ranks ninth in the 1919 motor vehicle registration. The counties having the highest and the lowest registrations are given along with Orange County by way of comparison, and also the totals for the state, as follows:

Counties	1914	1915	1916	1917	1918	1919
Alpine	9	11	15	18	17	16
Los Angeles	43,099	55,217	74,709	93,654	107,232	109,435
Orange	3,761	4,913	6,440	8,132	9,430	9,794
Totals for State.....	123,516	163,795	232,440	306,916	364,800	376,768

The foregoing registrations do not include farm tractors, of which there were 750 in 1919, as reported by the dealers selling them in the county.

The report of the department for 1920, containing five separate items about each county, is given a separate table, as follows:

Counties	Automobiles	Commercial Trucks	Motorcycles	Auto Dealers	Motor-cycle Dealers
Alpine	14	2
Los Angeles	132,145	10,083	6,231	678	25
Orange	14,240	397	548	85	10
Totals for State.....	450,155	31,195	17,750	3,199	219

The semi-annual statement of apportionment of motor vehicle fees to counties for the period from January 1, 1920, to July 31, 1920, was as follows:

Counties	Net Receipts	State and County Apportionment
Alpine	$ 169.62	$ 84.81
Los Angeles	1,384,435.50	692,217.75
Orange	114,045.48	57,022.74
Totals for State.....	$4,646,529.23	$2,323,264.61

It is noticeable in the foregoing tables that Orange County's automobiles increased 4,446 in 1920 over those in 1919, making this county fifth from the top in the graduated list of automobiles in the state. The county will probably move up from the fourteenth class to the tenth in population under the new census.

While noticing that the great county of Los Angeles owns nearly a third of the registered motor vehicles of the entire state, and has nearly twelve times as many as this county, don't overlook the fact that the little county of Orange is fifth in the ownership of cars; that is, there are only four counties in the state with more cars than Orange and fifty-three with less.

The interruption of the mails and other traffic in Orange County for three days during the last week in August, 1919, by a strike of the employees on the steam railroads, points to the following conclusions: (1) No matter how good the county's traffic facilities, they must be utilized and operated in order to be of real benefit to the people. (2) Government ownership per se will not cure labor troubles, for these steam roads were absolutely controlled by the Government, yet such control did not prevent the strike. (3) Government regulation will cure labor troubles, as was seen in the cessation of the strike when the Government issued its mandate without itself owning the roads. However, such regulation should be fairly and squarely administered on behalf of employers, employees and the general public whose patronage pays the bills.

CHAPTER XIX

SUNDRY VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

Orange County Medical Association

By Dr. John L. Dryer

The Orange County Medical Association was organized June 13, 1889, just nine days after the election for county division which separated Orange from the mother county of Los Angeles.

The first meeting of physicians was held on that day at two p. m. in the office of Judge Humphreys, a small frame building located where the Sunset Club now stands. Those present were: Dr. W. B. Wall, Dr. J. M. Lacy, Dr. J. A. Crane, Dr. J. P. Boyd, Dr. C. D. Ball, Dr. S. B. Davis and Dr. John L. Dryer, all of Santa Ana.

Dr. J. A. Crane called to order and stated the objects of the meeting.

Dr. W. B. Wall was chosen temporary president, and Dr. J. P. Boyd temporary secretary.

The following agreement was drawn up and signed by all present: "We, the undersigned physicians of Orange County, agree to form ourselves into an organization to be known as the Orange County Medical Association, and to be governed by such rules as may be hereafter determined upon."

On motion the secretary was instructed to receive the signatures of Dr. J. R. Medlock of Santa Ana, and Dr. L. H. Fuller of Tustin, each of whom had signified his intention to be present but was unable to do so.

The following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, That any regular physician of Orange County against whom no objection is raised at a subsequent meeting, be allowed to participate in the organization of this Association."

Under the foregoing resolution Dr. J. H. Bullard of Anaheim and Dr. W. B. Wood of Orange were received and added to the list of charter members—eleven in all.

The next meeting was held on June 25, following, at which time a Constitution and By-Laws were adopted, and under the permanent organization the following officers were elected and installed to serve until the first annual meeting in 1890:

President, Dr. W. B. Wall; Vice-President, Dr. J. M. Lacy; Secretary, Dr. J. P. Boyd; Treasurer, Dr. W. B. Wood.

The first members elected under the Constitution were Dr. I. D. Mills of Santa Ana, and Dr. D. W. Hunt of Anaheim, both in September. On November 5th Dr. J. A. Blake of Fullerton was also elected to membership, but never attended any session of the Association.

The year 1889 closed with fourteen members as named on the roll, and no others were added until 1894, while during this period the records show a net loss of three, on account of removal from the county. These were Doctor Blake, above mentioned, Doctor Fuller and Doctor Davis, the last two being charter members.

The first annual meeting was a public one held in Spurgeon's Hall and addressed by Dr. Walter Lindley of Los Angeles, then president of the State Medical Society, and Professor (now Judge) Conrey, also of Los Angeles.

In June, 1891, the Association entertained the Medical Society of Southern California, the meeting and banquet being held in what was then Odd Fellows' Hall, in the First National Bank Building. The sessions were well attended. An excursion about and through the valley was greatly appreciated by the visiting doctors, although there was a marked absence of automobiles. Twice since then the Association has entertained the Southern Society, once in 1897, again without automobiles, and in 1908, when machines were abundant.

From its very beginning to the present time good work, in the preparation of papers, and the presentation of cases for clinical study, has been the rule. The meetings have been regular and well attended, and even when its membership was small the attendance was proportional to that of later times, although long drives had to be made with horses from distant towns, to attend the monthly sessions, which have always occurred on the first Tuesday evening of each month.

Until the completion of the Carnegie Library in Santa Ana, the sessions of the Association were usually held in the office of the doctor who was to read the paper or lead in the discussion of a selected topic. For the most part these were in the county seat, though many interesting gatherings were held in surrounding towns.

Since the completion of the Library the sessions when in Santa Ana have been held in the executive committee room of that building, adjoining which, in a convenient alcove, a growing medical library, consisting of several hundred volumes, has been established.

Though from the first organization until 1894 the membership declined in numbers, it never fell below the original number—eleven, and from said date the list steadily increased with the growth of the county and enlargement of its towns.

From, and including the first enrollment in 1889, there have been during the thirty and one-half years, ending December 31st, 1919, a total of ninety-one members received, while the present number is forty-four.

A number of physicians have come into the county, affiliated for a time, and then removed to other fields. Since under the rules of the Association such removal terminates membership, it is impossible to give exact duration of one so ended.

Death has dealt kindly with the Association during the period mentioned, and although a large per cent of the original founders were men well advanced in years, but nine active members have been so taken. Of these Dr. J. A. Crane, Dr. W. B. Wall, Dr. J. M. Lacy, and Dr. J. R. Medlock were charter members, and with Dr. Ida B. Parker were ex-presidents. One member was, by a unanimous vote, expelled from the Association for unethical conduct. Of the original charter members there remain on the roll, Dr. C. D. Ball, Dr. J. P. Boyd and Dr. John L. Dryer.

Beginning with the new influx of members in 1894, the list of those received since then is as follows:

- 1894—J. G. Berneike, L. N. Wheeler, C. W. Rairdon.
- 1895—A. F. Bradshaw, G. J. Rubleman, L. W. Allingham, F. E. Wilson.

The Orange County Bar Association

By Samuel M. Davis

On October 31, 1901, members of the Bar of Orange County signed a call for a meeting to organize the Orange County Bar Association, to be held on November 22, 1901. The following attorneys signed the call for the meeting: Victor Montgomery, W. F. Heathman, J. W. Towner, Ray Billingsley, Richard Melrose, Z. B. West, E. E. Keech, F. O. Daniel, R. Y. Williams, A. Y. Wright, S. A. Bowes, H. C. Head, Horatio J. Forgy, John N. Anderson, E. T. Langley, W. E. Parker, W. B. Williams, Homer G. Ames, Samuel M. Davis, J. Howard Bell, J. C. Scott, H. S. Peabody.

On November 22, 1901, the following members of the Bar, met in the Court Room of the Superior Court, in the Court House, at Santa Ana, and organized the Orange County Bar Association: Z. B. West, E. E. Keech, F. O. Daniel, R. Y. Williams, Horatio J. Forgy, W. E. Parker, Homer G. Ames, Samuel M. Davis, J. Howard Bell, J. C. Scott.

The first officers of the Association were as follows: President, Victor Montgomery; vice-president, Richard Melrose; treasurer, R. Y. Williams; secretary, Horatio J. Forgy. A constitution and by-laws were adopted. F. O. Daniel was duly elected as second president of the Association, and following him in order as presidents were Eugene E. Keech and R. Y. Williams. H. C. Head is now the president of the Bar Association.

Following the secretaryship of H. J. Forgy, J. C. Burke was elected secretary, and is now acting secretary of the Association.

The Association has been very active in keeping up the standard of the profession. It has brought to the attention of the courts several of its members and other attorneys practicing in the county, who had violated certain sections of the Codes, relating to the practice of the law, and had been accused of unethical methods of practice. It has continuously and consistently attempted to raise the standard of the profession, especially in regard to the honorable practice of the law.

This Bar Association was active in having one of the attorneys practicing in the county disbarred for reprehensible conduct after he had been admitted to practice by the Appellate Court of the Third District. It was shown afterwards that he had practiced fraudulent and surreptitious methods of gaining admission. The disbarment of this attorney caused the entire membership of the Bar Association to be joined as defendants in the United States District Court of the Southern District of California. The case was tried before Hon. Oscar Trippett, of the United States District Court. When the plaintiff rested his case, the case was dismissed on a motion for a nonsuit made by the attorneys representing the Orange County Bar Association.

In the prosecution of this litigation, the Bar Association of this county did not prosecute any of the parties with a vindictive spirit, but solely to raise the moral and ethical standard of the profession. In this endeavor, the Bar Association, and its officers and members, have been sustained, both by the Supreme and Federal Courts of this state. These facts are mentioned as noteworthy, because laymen generally think that the ordinary lawyer is liable to be unethical in practice, and will take no steps to rid the profession of undesirable members.

The Association is now in a flourishing condition, and has had considerable work in forming public opinion in legislative matters that have come before the Association. Several members of the Association have had high honors conferred on them.

The first judge of the Superior Court, after the formation of the county in 1889, was Hon. J. W. Towner. He was followed by Hon. J. W. Ballard and Hon. Z. B. West.

In 1913 the legislature passed an act increasing the number of judges in the Superior Court from one to two, and this act took effect on August 10, 1913. Gov. Hiram W. Johnson, on September 13, 1913, appointed Hon. William H. Thomas to be Judge of the Superior Court, thus established, which became known as Department Two of the Superior Court of Orange County.

Subsequently, Gov. W. D. Stephens, in December, 1918, appointed William H. Thomas, Associate Justice of the newly established Court of Appeals, Second District, Division Number Two, sitting in Los Angeles, Cal., to take effect January 1, 1919.

Gov. W. D. Stephens, in December, 1918, appointed to Hon. R. Y. Williams as Judge of Department Two of the Superior Court of Orange County, to take the place made vacant in that Court by the appointment of Judge Thomas to the Appellate Court. Judge Williams took office January 1, 1919.

The Hon. Z. B. West was elected Judge of the Superior Court in November, 1902, and has succeeded himself for two consecutive terms, and is now Judge of Department One of the Superior Court of Orange County.

The following members of the Orange County Bar Association have filled the office of District Attorney: J. W. Ballard, Z. B. West, R. Y. Williams, H. C. Head, S. M. Davis, L. A. West.

The Orange County Bar Association is an aggressive and active force in the legal history and activities of Orange County, and is doing its part to keep the standard of the profession high and honorable.

Orange County Historical Society

Attorney S. M. Davis of Santa Ana, in May, 1919, invited a number of citizens from different parts of the county to meet in the Santa Ana library to consider the question of forming a historical society to collect and preserve a record of the events of historical interest to the county together with any souvenirs, trophies or other articles connected therewith. At that meeting the proposition was unanimously approved and the following persons were selected to act as the first board of directors in forming the organization and securing the incorporation of the society, viz.: Dr. John L. Dryer, S. M. Davis, Mrs. W. B. Tedford, C. C. Chapman, Samuel Armor, H. Clay Kellogg and George W. Moore. Doctor Dryer was elected president and S. M. Davis secretary. Articles of incorporation were adopted and the secretary was instructed to file copies of the same with the board of supervisors and the secretary of state. In due time the secretary received the certificate of incorporation and called a meeting of the society to convene on June 26, 1919, to perfect the organization. At that meeting the resignation of George W. Moore as director was accepted and Dr. C. D. Ball was elected to fill the vacancy. With this change the temporary board of directors was made permanent. Doctor Dryer declining to continue in the chair, Doctor Ball was elected president; Samuel Armor, vice-president; S. M. Davis, secretary and treasurer; and Miss Jeannette E. McFadden, curator. Thus was the Orange County Historical Society organized on June 26, 1919.

Orange County Farmers Mutual Fire Insurance Company

One of the cooperative organizations of Orange County that reflects great credit on the judgment and forethought of its organizers is the Orange County Farmers Mutual Fire Insurance Company. Organized June 30, 1898, with about twenty or thirty present, the company now has about 4,500 members. During the ensuing years it has paid losses amounting to $51,681.51, and has the enviable record of never having had a claim contested in court.

At the time of the organization of the company the farmers of the county were paying from thirty cents to $1.08 per year on a $100 valuation. For insurance that gives additional safeguards to its policyholders, the company has a rate of about fifteen cents per year on $100. It has now in force insurance to the amount of about $7,500,000 in valuation.

The first official board consisted of the following: W. A. Beckett, Garden Grove, president; N. H. Leonard, Bolsa, vice-president; F. D. Reed, Garden Grove, secretary; E. W. Crowell, Orange; Thomas Nicholson, El Modena; Albert Barrows, Fullerton; H. Larter, Westminster. Of the first board of directors only two are now living, N. H. Leonard and H. Larter, the former being the only one who was actively engaged in all the details of the company's organization. Mr. Leonard, who is now living in Santa Ana, personally wrote the first applications that were filed with the secretary, F. D. Reed, and served as the vice-president of the company for four or five years.

Orange County W. C. T. U.

By Elizabeth H. Mills

In writing the history of Orange County, all who read its history should know that the organized forces of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union—organized immediately after the organization of the County in 1889—though numerically small, have been a potent factor in the moral, spiritual and political uplift of the county. The education given by this organization has been progressive along all lines that tend to the betterment of the human race. It has spared neither sacrifice nor service to this end, and today not a county in our beloved state can show a better record. Splendid men have stood behind the brave women who have dared to blaze the way through indifference, criticism and intolerance that ever marks the path to victory. These kept the faith and waged the warfare that made it possible for Orange County, with its present eleven Unions and over five hundred members, to be an effective part in placing in our National Constitution the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Amendments. All honor to the W. C. T. U. women, and their helpers, of this County for their part in making the nation's present and future sober. Christian citizenship.

SERVICE MEN'S RECOGNITION

A monster celebration was held at Orange County Park September 9, 1919, to pay tribute to the service men and to lay the cornerstone of a memorial arch. The attendance was estimated at 30,000 people, with 5,000 automobiles. Three bands were present and discoursed appropriate music, adding much to the entertainment. R. L. Among the remarks by Governor Stephens, while laying the cornerstone of the memorial arch, were the following:

"We would be remiss in our duty as citizens of America were we to forget, even for a brief instant, the memory of those who lie on the hillsides of France, beneath the poppies. The service men of this country performed achievements worthy of the greatest honor that the world can give them. The people who did not go to France, as well as those who came back, can honor the dead by living a life of service to their fellowmen and country, and thus win in a measure a small part of the glory which was theirs."

In contrast with this helpful, patriotic attitude, the governor condemned Bolshevism as destructive of all government, and said: "Those who brook Bolshevistic utterances in this country are themselves traitors to their flag. There is now on the statute books of this state a law which the man who now stands before you succeeded in having passed—a law, which, if enforced by the officers of California, would stamp out every trace of Bolshevism."

It is needless to add that such sentiments were vociferously applauded by the large audience gathered together to express its appreciation of the patriotic services of its returning citizen-soldiers.

In introducing Governor Stephens to present the recognition medals to the service men, Chairman Bisby declared that Orange County was very proud of the fact that the Governor had given up all other calls for the day, and had joined with the people of Orange County in their recognition exercises. He then turned over one of the medals to the Governor who, expressing his thankfulness for the return of so many of the men, and glorifying the memory of those who rest in fields of poppies overseas, presented the medal to Lieut. Clyde Slater, who had accompanied him to the platform.

In reply, Lieutenant Slater of Orange, who had been selected by the service men to represent them in receiving the typical medal, declared that the returned soldiers and sailors deeply appreciated the demonstration in their honor and the medals presented to them. He said the medals would be cherished, and kept always by the men as souvenirs of the day, expressing to them the fact that in their service they were backed up by the people at home.

"We are here today," said Governor Stephens in his afternoon address, "to do honor to those men who have returned from war service, and never shall we forget those services, rendered in a splendid spirit and in a splendid way; I only wish that they could have had the opportunity to lick hell out of Germany. That is my only regret in the ending of the war. I am here today to salute the veterans of the G. A. R., the veterans of the Spanish War, and the veterans of the war that has just passed into history.

"California celebrates today the sixty-ninth anniversary of her admission to statehood. With every commonwealth, entrance into the Union must have been the occasion of profound rejoicing, for there was instinct in the pioneers who founded new states, a love of self-government which was incompatible with an inferior territorial status and which chafed under federal jurisdiction over local affairs. Such conditions were felt in an extraordinary degree in California, situated on the western rim of the continent, peopled by bold and adventurous spirits and separated from the older states by desert wastes and formidable mountain ranges, across which as yet no railroad had found its way. . . .

"As in courage and wisdom the pioneers discharged the problems of their day, so in equal patriotism and purpose, we must give the best that is in us to the right solution of the problems, that in our turn we are called upon to face, dealing with them loftily, not as partisans, but as Americans. California cannot escape this responsibility if it would, and I would not have it make such escape if it could.

"We cannot better celebrate the birthday of our beloved state, we cannot better honor the memory of the gallant men and women who were the builders of the commonwealth, we cannot better honor the achievements, the patriotism and the loyalty of the men of California who are just returning from their noble service in their country's defense, nor can we better honor the proud memory of our heroic sons who gave their lives for their country's flag than by a united and whole-hearted support of whatever rightly makes for the lasting security of the republic, the establishment of enduring peace amongst the nations of the earth, and the creation of a new era in which all mankind shall know the happiness of a warless world."

Rev. Robert Williams, who offered the invocation at the beginning of the exercises and delivered an address on the World War in the afternoon, spent several years of his childhood with his father's family in Orange, Orange County, Cal., the family afterwards returning to Wilkesbarre, Pa. Reverend Williams went into the army first as an enlisted soldier, and afterwards served as a chaplain.

In his address Chaplain Williams told how the American operations in France and Belgium grew little by little until the time came soon after Chateau Thierry when men and munitions were sufficient in numbers to enable Field Marshal Foch to take the offensive and keep going until the Germans were forced to sue for peace. After he had gone over the battles on such fronts as St. Mihiel and the Argonne, leading up to the victorious march of the Allied armies on to German soil, the speaker said:

"To my mind the greatest victory of all was indicated to me as the Entente armies were marching into Coblenz. There the Stars and Stripes were seen waving over the double eagle of the flag of Prussia. That American flag, floating there, seemed to say that when the time came when the Prussian flag could be replaced by the flag of a German republic, guaranteeing that Prussian militarism was forever crushed, when that time came, then the American flag in Germany would come down, for we did not come into Germany as conquerors. We did not come with any idea of subjugating the people of the country. We came solely as an army representing a people whose unshakable conviction is that right must prevail over might in the world."

The chaplain's address was spiced with anecdotes of the war, incidents humorous and pathetic that came under his observation, and in some of which he was a participant. He closed amid tremendous applause after making an earnest plea in behalf of the League of Nations. He said, in effect, that if the peace of the world were not made secure in the future, then the men who fought in France would have been betrayed.

The records of the War History Department of the Doe Library, Berkeley, show this county's service men to have gained only seventeen citations and decorations, as follows: 1, Diedrich V. Burdorf, Fullerton, cited by America; 2, Carl F. Burns, Santa Ana, Croix de Guerre; 3, Pvt. Paul Cozad, Santa Ana, commended for bravery, cited by America; 4, Major W. T. Crook, Anaheim, Croix de Guerre, Distinguished Service Cross, Distinguished Service Order (England); 5, Corp. Ora J. Easton, Santa Ana, Distinguished Service Cross, decorated for bravery; 6, Jacob M. Fisher, Santa Ana, Medaille Militaire, Distinguished Service Cross; 7, Floyd L. Geyer, Santa Ana, cited by America; 8, Ivan R. Gillaspay, Santa Ana, cited by America; 9, Sgt. John Guess, Jr., Elmond, Distinguished Service Cross awarded posthumously; 10, Harold J. Henry, Balboa, Croix de Guerre; 11, Capt. Nelson Miles Holderman, Santa Ana, Distinguished Service Cross, Congressional Medal of Honor; 12, Lieut. Perry Schurr, Santa Ana, Distinguished Service Cross; 13, Jay B. Taylor, Santa Ana, Croix de Guerre; 14, Jose Frank Velasco, Yorba, cited by America; 15, Allen C. Wallace, Anaheim, cited by America; 16, Pvt. Curtis Ware, Tustin, Belgian Croix de Guerre; 17, Joseph P. Zimmer, Placentia, cited by America.

Genevieve Ambrose, secretary of the department, explained her difficulties in getting information, admitted that there were undoubtedly omissions and errors in the list, and asked persons discovering either to transmit the information and corrections to the department. The Santa Ana Register pointed out that there is no such post office in the county as "Elmond," given in No. 9, and called attention to the following omissions:

"Capt. Holderman, in addition to his American awards, received two Croix de Guerre decorations, one for bravery before the stand of the Lost Battalion and one for a part he played in that desperate historic fight.

"The Distinguished Service Cross awarded Lieut. Elmer T. Worthy of Huntington Beach is not on the list. Neither is the citation given Sergt. Russell Coleman of this city listed among the seventeen."

A cursory examination of a book entitled "With the 364th Infantry in America, France and Belgium," a copy of which is in the Santa Ana library, disclosed the fact that there were at least nine Orange County men of that hard-fighting regiment who were "cited for exceptional bravery and meritorious conduct under fire," and are not in that list, as follows:

Peter Laport, Fullerton; Charley Lindley, Anaheim; Milton M. Bolton, El Modena; Clifton E. Lowen, La Habra; James H. Dickson, Placentia; Frank J. Schrott, Anaheim; John P. Holditch, Orange; George L. Vance, Fullerton; Ralph Huffman, Orange.

Those who know of the esteem in which the work of Orange County's service men was held by the authorities believe that enough citations and decorations have been bestowed, if all were reported, to raise the county's rank to fifth or sixth instead of tenth, as the seventeen, which were reported, now make it.

CHAPTER XXIII

RELIEF WORK OF ASSOCIATIONS

There were four chapters of the Red Cross in active operation in the county during the recent World War, one in each of the following cities: Anaheim, Fullerton, Orange and Santa Ana. Each of these chapters, by its drives for membership, included a large part of the community, in which it was located, as members. The real work of the chapter, however, was done by a few score of people, mostly women, some of whom devoted almost their entire time to the work.

In answer to a request for information, the secretary of each of the chapters furnished a copy of the last report, giving a detailed history of the work of the chapter from its inception down to its close. These reports are highly creditable and deserve to be reproduced in the history without abridgement; but the most that can be done is to give the results without recounting the processes by which those results were obtained.

Anaheim Chapter of Red Cross

The Anaheim chapter of the American Red Cross was organized in April, 1917, by the committee on organization. The officers then chosen served until the following October when some changes were made, as was also done at subsequent elections. However, the treasurer, Mr. A. B. McCord, and the secretary, Mrs. Eva H. Boyd, served in their respective offices from the beginning until the end of the work.

At the risk of overlooking some of the results in Christmas packages, canteen work, etc., we skip over to the financial statement, which covers the period from April 20, 1917, to May 1, 1919 and is as follows:

Junior Red Cross Report

The Juniors of Anaheim Chapter made and sent to the Pacific Division headquarters 389 knitted articles and 524 miscellaneous articles.

One thousand two hundred twenty-five garments were collected and made over into refugee garments. Since March 1, 1919, 150 refugee garments have been sent in and girls were working on 15 men's pajamas, 15 girl's petticoats, about 20 knitted garments, to be finished before June 1st.

Mr. J. A. Claves, treasurer of the Juniors, reports the following financial condition:

There are twelve schools represented: ten public, two parochial.

Report of Grammar School Juniors

About 1,500 garments were sent to French and Belgian refugees. Many of these were in good condition, others were mended or made over by pupils.

About 250 pounds of castor beans and 100 pounds of fruit pits were collected. Tinfoil, rags, rubber, etc., were collected and sold for about $300. Three hundred sixty-five glasses of jam and jellies were shipped to Camp Kearny May 19, 1919.

Fullerton Chapter of Red Cross

Following is a synopsis of the secretary's report of the Fullerton Chapter of the American Red Cross: This chapter was organized February 19, 1917, and included all of the territory in Orange County north of Anaheim, classified as one branch at La Habra and seven auxiliaries located at Brea, Buena Park, Placentia, West Orangethorpe, East Orangethorpe, Olinda and Yorba Linda.

The officers of the chapter from the beginning were as follows: Chairman, J. R. Carhart, from February 19, 1917, to October 24, 1917; vice-chairman, Waldo O'Kelly from October 24, 1917, to October 25, 1918; G. W. Finch from October 25, 1918, until next election; secretary, Mrs. E. I. Fuller from February 19, 1917, until April 1, 1918; Mrs. Ruth Talmadge from April 1, 1918, until October 1, 1918; Mrs. Helen Carhart from October 1, 1918, until next election; treasurer, E. K. Benchley from February 19, 1917, to October 25, 1918; T. Eadington from October 25, 1918, until next election.

There is also a board of directors and an executive committee of such board; otherwise the chapter is conducted along lines laid down in the charts sent out by the National Headquarters, with committees appointed for the departments specified in the charts.

A record of the work done is kept in the rooms of the Red Cross in the shape of production sheets and shipping receipts. The surgical dressing department made 82,043 surgical dressings. The garment department shipped 2,781 garments and 4,000 knitted articles. The chapter doubled its quota in the first drive for second-hand clothing; but in the second drive it was not so fortunate. In the first war-fund drive the chapter's quota of $10,000 was oversubscribed $2,000 and in the second drive its quota of $15,000 was oversubscribed more than $5,000. The two membership drives ran the membership up to over 3,000. A canteen service was organized in Fullerton with Mrs. J. B. Reeve as captain from August, 1918, until January 1, 1919, when Mrs. C. W. Crandall took charge and continued during demobilization. This department served about 500 meals each month during its organization to the returning soldiers.

For nearly a year the chapter was able to get quarters rent free; after January 31, 1918, it had to pay $25 a month for quarters in the Schumacher Building. The services of all officers have been donated, except about nine months of Mrs. Fuller's time as secretary, for which $75 per month was paid. All other work was donated, so that practically all the funds raised went for relief purposes.

The civilian relief work was under the supervision of Rev. Clark H. Marsh until May, 1918, when he was called overseas to Y. M. C. A. work, since which time Miss Dean has been in charge of that important committee.

The Orange Chapter of the Red Cross was organized as a branch of the Los Angeles Chapter in April, 1917. It closed May 26, 1919, with 2,217 members. In the meantime it accomplished the following amount of work: Hospital garments, 2,955; miscellaneous articles, 1,307; refugee garments, 8,600; surgical dressings, 102,038; pairs of knitted socks, 5,564; other articles, 2,284.

The report closed with the acknowledgment of the many favors extended to the chapter and the return of thanks for the same.

Outside of and in addition to the work of the Orange Chapter of the Red Cross, the Orange Union high school raised about $1,600 for a hospital ambulance. The original plan was to send an American-made ambulance over to France, but, on account of the difficulty of transportation, the money was sent instead and was invested in an ambulance of French manufacture.

Any record of the Orange Red Cross would be incomplete which did not make honorable and reverent mention of its president, Mrs. Carolyn M. Porter, wife of J. R. Porter, who by patriotic devotion to the duties of her office shortened the term of her life, death occurring June 6, 1919.

Santa Ana Chapter of Red Cross

The Santa Ana Chapter of the American Red Cross contributed the following amounts of relief during the war:

Contributions	Quota	Collected
First War Fund	$15,000	$25,143
Second War Fund	22,500	35,378
Total War Funds	$37,500	$60,521

Aside from war funds, the chapter raised about $25,000. Red Cross dining room and shop made $5,700.

The chapter carried on numerous activities, such as aid for the helpless during the influenza epidemic, home service work in which a separate office and department were maintained.

The Junior Red Cross of Santa Ana Chapter was recognized by Red Cross Division headquarters as without a superior on the Pacific Coast. Through its thirty-three schools, the Juniors invested $146,090.04 in war securities, raised $3,679 for Belgian and French orphans, $4,690.50 for Junior Red Cross work, $820.31 for Armenian relief, $3,127.50 for the United War Work fund, making total donations of $12,955.75; collected 2,272 new garments for foreign and home relief work and got together 27,435 used garments for foreign work and 3,776 for home relief, over 600 quilts, 41 afghans, made 1,680 new garments and 325 knitted garments, made 32 layettes, provided 180 sheets, 343 bath towels, 426 hand towels and 201 napkins, 717 handkerchiefs, 518 wash cloths, 37 treasure bags, 295 property bags, and various other articles, totaling about 1,000.

The officers of the Santa Ana Chapter of the American Red Cross are as follows: T. E. Stephenson, chairman; Mrs. A. J. Crookshank, vice-chairman; Fred Rafferty, secretary; Harry L. Hanson, treasurer.

The board of directors consists of twenty-two members and the work was apportioned among nine departments or committees.

Salvation Army's Report

The relief work of the Salvation Army in Orange County was as follows: In May, 1918, $628.82 was raised for a war service ambulance. In August, 1918, $10,000 was collected in the county for Salvation Army war work.

In the United War Campaign the national allotment to the Salvation Army was $3,500,000; but how much should be credited to Orange County is not known. In March, 1919, $8,100 was raised in the county for the Salvation Army's home service work.

CHAPTER XXIV

A CHAPTER OF TRAGEDIES

The Killing of Sheriff Barton and the Capture of His Slayers

By J. E. Pleasants

In the year 1855 a team of horses was stolen from the Hardy brothers in Los Angeles, and the thief, Juan Flores, was captured, tried and sentenced to ten years in the penitentiary.

The Hardy brothers, who were living on a part of the William Wolfskill place, were owners of several good draft as well as riding horses. They were doing considerable freighting, the business requiring good stock, and this class of animals was of great value. Their riding horses were of the native stock, but were selected for their speed and endurance, as they were often used to run races.

In the above-named year, one Juan Flores and a companion stole one of these freighting teams and probably intended to make for the Mexican border and sell the horses. Both Flores and his companion were captured and, after a trial, each was sentenced to ten years in prison.

Two years after the event of the stealing took place one of the Hardys had a load of freight to haul from Los Angeles to San Juan Capistrano. He made the trip without mishap and, arriving at his destination during the forenoon, delivered his goods, and put his horses in a corral and fed them; this done, he started out to see the town. A few hours later, as he returned to look after his animals in the corral, he noticed several men looking at them; the nearer he approached he thought he recognized Juan Flores among the number; this did not seem possible, for he remembered it had been but two years since the episode of his having his horses stolen by him and he had received a ten-year sentence. Observing the approach of Hardy the men went away and the matter was forgotten by Hardy for the time.

It so happened that there was a Mexican woman in an adobe building adjoining the corral who had overheard the conversation of the men who were looking at the horses, and recognized Flores among them by his remarks, which were to the effect that the horses in question were the same that he had stolen and received his ten-year sentence for, and it was now a chance for him to get even by waylaying Hardy the next day when he was on his way home, kill him, and take the team to Mexico. His companions, looking upon him as the leader, consented to the plan. This talk frightened the woman and she did not know what to do, for if it were known that she had overheard the conversation her own life would be in danger, and at the same time she did not want to have Hardy murdered. Finally she went to Don Juan Forster, who was a medium through which many of the natives settled their differences, and related the conversation as she had overheard it. It did not take Don Forster long to decide upon a plan of action. He found Hardy, told him the circumstances, but told him to keep quiet about it and that he would send a runner out that night to notify the sheriff in Los Angeles to come out and capture the bandit. The runner was sent to inform Sheriff Barton, who immediately made arrangements to frustrate the plans of Flores and capture all of the bandits if possible.

The sheriff notified Hardy's two brothers, one of whom selected his best saddle horse and, after arming himself, joined the sheriff and his three deputies, all starting for Capistrano. Sheriff Barton was a typical frontiersman and had seen many desperadoes, and knew how to handle them. However, he took the precaution to make his will before he started out. Each man was armed with a double barreled shot gun and revolvers. They reached Carpenter's ranch and stopped there for dinner. That night they camped by the Santa Ana River, but the next morning were on the road very early and the ranch of Don Jose Sepul-veda was reached for breakfast. On the road the party came up with a Frenchman riding a mule; he stated he was on his way to San Diego and no objection was made to his joining their party. When the men went into the house for their breakfast they stacked their guns on the porch, and these were viewed with some curiosity by the hangers-on about the ranch. Breakfast over, the sheriff and his men came out, took up their guns without examining them, mounted their horses and resumed their journey towards San Juan Capistrano. At a point about midway from the Sepulveda ranch and San Juan some men, twelve or fifteen in number, were seen by the sheriff, who was riding in advance of his deputies, they being strung out along the road, with Hardy and the Frenchman on his mule, quite a distance in the rear. As soon as the men saw the sheriff they called to him not to fire upon them as they were friends. They came up rapidly and as they were near enough, fired, and with deadly effect, for the sheriff and his three deputies, after emptying their guns with no apparent effect, fell dead in their tracks. As soon as Hardy heard the firing he rode rapidly to the scene; as he approached he saw the sheriff and his men lying in a heap together, dead. He thought he could do nothing alone, and, wheeling his horse, rode swiftly back towards Los Angeles. His fleet horse soon took him away from the bandits, who overtook the Frenchman, but did not molest him in any way, as they were after Hardy. It was fortunate that he had chosen their fastest horse, for the bandits soon gave up the chase.

Reaching Los Angeles, he told the news of the killing of the sheriff and his men, and soon a party was being organized to go in search of the murderers. In Los Angeles excitement ran high, and it was some time before a party could be organized. In the American settlement at El Monte, not far from Los Angeles, were several settlers who were used to the hard life of the frontier and were none too law-abiding; they wanted blood and were ever ready for a fight. These joined the posse from Los Angeles and soon, under the wise guidance of General Pico, a brother of Governor Pico, who was very cool in the face of danger, had an understanding that Pico's orders would be obeyed by all. The general decided to catch the men who had committed this wanton murder and he counseled caution among the men.

After killing the sheriff and his men the bandits headed for San Juan Capistrano, raided the store for supplies, as they were headed for the Mexican border, and possibly looking for Hardy and his team, who had in the meantime gone into the mountains and taken a roundabout way back to Los Angeles, which he reached a week later. When the pursuing party reached the town they found the bandits had fled, and then began one of the notable man-hunts in Southern California.

The bandits made for the mountains by way of Santiago Canyon, were followed by Pico and his men, who tracked them to the top of a ridge where they could not get away, as it was found to be too steep. They had let down one of their horses with ropes, but it was killed in falling, and they then gave up all hope of escape. Flores abandoned his horse and, with two others, took to the brush on foot and made good their escape. One young man who was known by Pico, was called upon to give himself up and for the information he would give, was told he would not be prosecuted. He followed this advice, and after some parley the rest of the band were taken prisoners, bound hand and foot and turned over to the Americans in the party, who took them to a settlement on the present site of Olive. They were placed in an adobe house and kept securely bound and placed under guard. Pico went after Flores and the two others, and by his knowledge of the country, and being an expert trailer, soon captured the former, who was sent back to be kept under guard with the others. He, too, was securely bound and placed on the floor with the rest, and, as usual, the guard was posted over them. During the night Flores rolled over to one of the other prisoners, and with his teeth loosed the thongs that bound him and, this done, his own were taken off, and soon all of the men were free and made a break to escape; they were all captured, with the exception of Flores, who made good his escape and headed for the mountains.

A runner was sent to inform Pico of the escape and he was met coming in with the other two men, whom he had captured alone. Upon hearing the news he was angry, for he had thought the Americans would surely be watchful and not let the prisoners get away. He was determined that these last two prisoners should not escape and, taking them to a large sycamore tree in the canyon, hung them. To show that he had done his duty and partly avenged the death of the sheriff, he cut off the ears of the bandits and sent them to Los Angeles, and then took up the trail of the chief conspirator. These bodies were left hanging, and it was some time the next year that the bones were buried. The writer buried some of them himself. The tree from which these men were hung is still standing on what is known as the Modjeska ranch.

Pico followed the trail of Flores for some days, seeming to know about where he would eventually be found. The news had spread to Los Angeles of the bandit's escape, and the citizens were thoroughly aroused, for Barton had been very popular. Flores thought to steal a horse at Los Nietos, knowing that Mr. Carpenter kept many good animals. He approached the place at night, and the dogs alarmed the owner, who was asleep on a stack of hay; as he arose with a gun in his hands Flores could see by the bright moonlight that it would be useless to try to secure a horse there and so passed on. Arriving in Los Angeles he tried to obtain food and shelter, but such was the feeling that had it become known such aid had been given him the persons so doing would have been lynched. He then skirted the town and made for the Cahuenga Mountains. Pico followed him, and at a point about the present site of Hollywood, came upon his man almost exhausted, made him prisoner and brought him to Los Angeles and turned him over to the people, who erected two poles with a bar across, at the present site of the county court house, and hung him. The other bandits were taken to Los Angeles and shared the same fate. The last one of the band was captured in San Jose two years later and was returned for trial. After a year in the courts with the lawyers wrangling over the case, his attorneys had the case transferred to Santa Barbara County.

The good citizens of Los Angeles had patiently stood the delay and thought that justice would be done by the court, but when the case was ordered transferred, took the law in their own hands and, taking him from the officers, made another "example" of him. There was no doubt of his identity, for when he was captured he was wearing the silver mounted belt that had belonged to the sheriff he had helped to kill. There are comparatively few men now living who can recall the incidents noted here. The writer, who is one of the oldest living American settlers of Orange County, was an eyewitness of the hanging of Flores.

A Breach of the Law

By Linn L. Shaw

The only case of mob violence in Santa Ana history occurred August 20, 1892, when Francisco Torres was hanged to a telephone pole at the northeast corner of Fourth and Sycamore streets. William McKelvey, foreman of Madame Modjeska's famous ranch home in Santiago Canyon, was brutally murdered July 31, 1892, by this Mexican, who was employed as a laborer under him. Torres fled, was captured at Mesa Grande a couple of weeks after the crime and brought to this city, where he was held for the murder, without bail, and was confined in the old jail on Sycamore Street, between Second and Third. McKelvey had many friends in this city and the officers, fearing trouble, placed Robert Cogburn on guard at the jail. About one o'clock on the morning of August 20 there was an alarm at the jail door and a muffled demand to open it, which order Mr. Cogburn refused to obey. Immediately the door was battered in with a sledge and about thirty men, armed and masked, filed inside. Upon being refused the keys to the cell they forcibly took them from the guard, secured Torres and departed. Mr. Cogburn attempted to follow them, but, upon being invited to return to the jail at the point of what appeared to him a "horizontal telegraph pole," returned to his duties without any further desire to associate with his determined and systematic visitors. There was evidently no time wasted with the captive, and he was strung up to the pole, where the body remained as a gruesome surprise to early risers the next morning. An attempt was made to locate the perpetrators of the lynching through the grand jury, but no indictments were issued and the affair was quietly dropped in official circles.

A Political Episode

Perhaps the most notable political event in Santa Ana's history was the physical undoing of Dennis Kearney, in the fall of 1879. This man was campaigning the state in the interest of the workingman's party and the anti-Chinese movement, which at that time was a formidable issue in California politics. He was popularly known as the "sand lot agitator," and, starting from his home in San Francisco, he deluged the state with a ceaseless flow of vituperation and platform blackguardism. Up to the time of his arrival in Santa Ana he had been allowed to pursue his bullying style of oratory without molestation, as his own personality and the many followers who flocked to his support all over the state presented an aspect of brute force which no one seemed disposed to investigate.

In his speech here, in addition to the usual program of abuse, he also included a number of false accusations against the McFadden brothers, who had operated a steamer from Newport to San Francisco, but had been compelled to sell it at a considerable loss to their stronger competitors, the Old Line Steamship Company, and it was this transaction to which Kearney devoted his slanderous tongue.

Among the employees of the McFaddens was "Tom" Rule, a man of large stature, supreme courage and prodigious strength. The morning following the speech, as Kearney was about to take the stage for San Diego at the old Layman Hotel, he was confronted by Mr. Rule who demanded the name of the man who had given him the lying information concerning his employers. Kearney recognized the nature of the trouble in store for him at once, and immediately lost the nerve which had been so proudly exploited by his followers. He timidly explained that he "would not give away his friends," and upon a second and more imperious demand for the name, commenced backing away from his unwelcome opponent, at the same time endeavoring to draw his revolver. Rule, who was unarmed, hesitated no longer, but struck the pride of the sand lots a heavy blow which landed him against the side of the hotel, from whence the once feared Kearney ran with great vigor and utter lack of dignity to the barroom, out through the dining room and across the street into a drug store, where he was overtaken by the now thoroughly aroused Rule, who pinned him to the floor and pummeled him quite severely. By a strange coincidence Kearney was rescued from his very mortifying position by one of the McFadden brothers, neither of whom had known of Mr. Rule's contemplated raid on their slanderer. None of his adherents had offered him the slightest assistance, and his departure was in marked contrast to his triumphant entry into the town the day before. In his speeches he had advocated hemp and mob law for the hated plutocrats and capitalists, but certainly did not relish an application of his own medicine. He had announced on his home sand lot platform, before departing on this campaign: "I hope I will be assassinated, for the success of this movement depends on that"; but the sacrifice palled upon his appetite when the opportunity for which he had so eagerly petitioned presented itself in apparent good working order. This incident, which was at once heralded over the state, had the effect of immediately diminishing Kearney's power and influence to an alarming extent, and he soon passed into history as a mere blatherskite.

Mr. Rule, who was the regular pilot at Newport Bay, was drowned a few years later while attempting to cross the bar at the entrance of the bay in a row boat, which capsized in the breakers. The hero of the Kearney episode was struck upon the head by the boat as it overturned and his body immediately sank, being recovered several days afterward just inside the bar.

CHAPTER XXV

THE OIL INDUSTRY

By William Loftus

Some development work had been done in this county previous to 1896, and in the Dan McFarland well, located in the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 8 twp. 3 S. Range 9 W. S. B. B. M., about ten barrels of oil per day was struck at a depth of less than a thousand feet. But the formations were so difficult and expensive to drill with the machinery then employed that the well was abandoned, and the field temporarily condemned.

In 1896, E. L. Doheny—a name that will ever be prominent in the history of the development of the California oil fields as well as those of Mexico—was favorably impressed with the indications of oil. He obtained a lease with an option to purchase the lands now owned and operated by the Petroleum Development Company, which company is now owned by the Santa Fe Railroad Company. Mr. Doheny entered into a contract with the Santa Fe Company to operate the territory in partnership. He moved onto the property in February, 1897, and the first well, which was drilled to a depth of about 700 feet, was completed and put on the pump in a few months. It was started off with a production of about fifty barrels per day. This agreeably surprised Mr. Doheny as he, when making the contract with the Santa Fe, only predicted wells of a capacity of from ten to twenty-five barrels per day at such a shallow depth, but it was his opinion that the quantity would increase with depth and that the formations would carry oil very deep. Up to October, 1898, the Santa Fe and Mr. Doheny had drilled ten wells, all less than 900 feet deep, which was about as deep as could be drilled in this formation with the methods then employed. Their best well produced about 100 barrels per day.

The Graham-Loftus Oil Company commenced operations in this field in October, 1898. They drilled the first well 650 feet deep, and could get no further. The well started off with a production of forty barrels per day. They encountered the same difficulties in No. 2. Four strings of casings were struck within the first 450 feet. The hole was then filled with water and drilled to 1,465 feet, with two strings of casings. This was the first well drilled full of water for the purpose of holding up the walls, as far as I have been able to ascertain, though it may have been used before. The idea was not mine, but suggested to me by Frank Garbut in 1894, at which time I turned it down as impracticable. It is now used generally throughout the state of California, and I consider it the greatest of the three chief factors that have made the large production of petroleum oil in California possible. The other two are the double under-reamer and the steel drilling cable.

The Graham-Loftus well No. 2 started with a production of 700 barrels per day and blazed the way for deeper and more productive wells. The depth has gradually been increased to over 4,000 feet, and the initial production to approximately 20,000 barrels per day for a few days.

In the fall of 1898 the Columbia Oil Company was organized and started operations on a lease from the Olinda Ranch in Section 9, upon which they developed oil of about 32 gravity Baume. The oil appears to be the same as that in the old Puente wells about five miles northwest, and it is the opinion of well-informed oil men that the light oil belt is continuous between these two points. There has been very little development made in this strike, but wherever wells have been drilled they have proven productive.

In 1899, Charles V. Hall, George Owens, Martin Barbour and James Lynch leased fifty-eight acres of land from the Olinda Ranch in section 8. After drilling a hole about 400 feet deep, Owens, Barbour and Lynch, who were experienced oil men, sold out their interests to C. V. Hall, whose experience consisted of a few shallow wells drilled in the city of Los Angeles, and who was consequently "not supposed to know a bad thing when he saw it." At about 1,500 feet he had a flowing well, and opened up what has proven to be the richest portion of the field. One well on this lease is credited with a production of about 20,000 barrels per day for a few days.

In January, 1894, the Union Oil Company of California purchased about 1,200 acres from the Stearns Ranch Company in sections 5, 6, 7 and 8, Twp. 3, S. range 9 W. sections 1 and 12 twp. 3 S. range 10, W., 100 acres of the east end of which they leased to the Columbia Oil Producing Company. This lease has proven very prolific producing property. To compromise a legal claim on the 1,200 acres, the Union Oil Company gave 200 acres from the west end, which has proven very productive also. It was purchased by the Brea Cañon Oil Company. E. L. Doheny was the promoter of this company, which proved very successful.

The value of the oil deposit is not determined, however, by the product of a few large wells, but is estimated by men familiar with the business by the amount of oil sand and the per cent of saturation, which means the amount of oil per acre. In this respect the Olinda-Fullerton field is considered the best in the state, which means the best in the United States.

The proven area of this field is about 2,000 acres. Judging from my own experience and the information I have obtained from others, I estimate the average thickness of the oil and sand at two hundred feet. Geologists estimate the saturation at ten per cent, which would give about 155,000 barrels per acre, or an aggregate of 310,353,000 barrels. Divide this by two for safety, and we will have the very considerable sum of 155,176,500 barrels. Throw off the odd figures and in round numbers say 155,000,000 barrels.

When we take into consideration the fact that the probable oil area is double the proven, and the possible very much greater, we begin to appreciate the value of the oil deposits in Orange County. To date (1910) there has been produced approximately 20,431,481 barrels. The average price has been about sixty-five cents per barrel, aggregating $12,550,922. The equivalent in coal, at six dollars per ton, would cost $33,102,665, a saving to the consumer of $20,551,743.

In 1910, the writer of the foregoing article said: "The evolution of the oil business has been very rapid, and in my judgment, will so continue. Machinery and facilities for drilling deeper will be employed and quantities of oil will be produced from greater depths than is now generally considered practicable." This prediction has been literally fulfilled in the intervening years since it was made, as can be shown by the increase in the assessed valuation of the county and by mentioning some of the important developments of the industry.

Following are the county assessments for the past six years; it will be noted that the greatest gains are in the years when there was the largest development in the oil industry.

1915-1916	55,266,628
1916-1917	57,532,662
1917-1918	69,680,472
1918-1919	73,910,565
1919-1920	96,906,815

The county assessor, in listing the oil wells for taxation, follows the law where it says, "All property in the state, . . . shall be taxed in proportion to its value." Some of the large producers have protested against his valuations; but the courts have sustained the assessor. The Standard Oil Company paid taxes on the production of its wells for the year 1919-1920, to the county assessor, $443,670.36, and to the county tax collector, $15,050.84, making a total of $458,721.20. For further proof of the development of the oil industry and of its great value to the county, note the following reports gleaned from the Santa Ana Register:

The Union Oil Company opened up the Placentia-Richfield district in March, 1919, by bringing in an 8,000 barrel gusher on the Chapman property, which has been a regular producer ever since.

March 21, 1919. Oil wells located in Orange County are producing 1,475,000 barrels of oil a month. That, at the present price, means a value of $1,843,750 a month, and $22,125,000 a year, which is $1,625,000 more than the estimate of the Santa Ana Chamber of Commerce.

April 14, 1919. The Union Oil Company's Chapman well is now regarded as the finest well in the state and the pride of the southern field. This great well has been throttled down to 2,500 barrels, the product coming through a $\frac{7}{8}$ dip nipple. The oil is testing 23 gravity and the cut is less than .6 of one per cent. The gas pressure continues and is now up to 300 pounds. The well is making close to a million feet of gas daily. Gas from the well is furnished Anaheim.

August 18, 1919. A later account. At Richfield the Union's Chapman gusher has become the wonder of all Southern California. This great producer continues to increase daily until now the output has reached 5,200 barrels. Accompanying this tremendous volume of oil that is coming easily and quietly from a depth of 3,000 feet, is some 3,000,000 feet of gas. The oil is coming through a $1\frac{1}{4}$ inch opening, and if opened up the well would produce 10,000 barrels as easily as it is now producing 5,200.

August 14, 1919. Barney Hartfield of Anaheim, one of the owners of the Heffern well, said oil and gas at 2,385 feet indicated a good well then, but it was cemented up and bigger stakes are being sought. The Heffern Company has over 500 acres under lease. It has refused $100,000 for the release of a 70-acre tract.

September 10, 1919. Throwing oil and sand a distance of seventy-five feet above the derrick Kraemer well No. 1, of the Standard Oil Company, came in, adding a new gusher to the Fullerton field. It is estimated that this well is producing 5,000 barrels of oil daily.

September 22, 1919. An experienced Pennsylvania oil man, reported to be very wealthy and with strong eastern connections, has leased for oil the properties of Mary J. Bond, M. J. Monette, W. K. Mead, H. D. Lyman and others, comprising more than 1,000 acres. These lands are located just east of El Modena, four miles east of Orange and six miles southeast of the Richfield district.

October 3, 1919. The Standard's Kraemer 2-1 well blew a charge of gas and oil out of the hole and covered about twenty acres of C. C. Chapman's choicest orange trees with oil. It also discharged large quantities of sand.

October 13, 1919. The Chapman gusher is again referred to as the best producer in the state, having poured forth a million and a half barrels of 27 gravity oil since it came in the latter part of March.

October 15, 1919. What promised to be another gusher was brought in on the O. M. Thompson property, one-quarter of a mile east and one mile south of the Chapman well. The oil forced its way up through the sand and mud to the top of the pipe; but the men clamped on a cap and prevented its flowing for the time being.

October 20, 1919. The Standard Oil Company and others have leased considerable acreage on the Huntington Beach mesa, though no derricks have been erected as yet. Some of the leases carry a cash bonus and a monthly rental as well as a share in the oil developed. Joe Simas of Seal Beach, in boring for water, opened up a small gas well, which he utilizes for light and fuel supply for his house and barn.

October 24, 1919. A 3,500-barrel oil well was brought in by the Standard Oil Company on the Murphy lease on Monday. The well, No. 66, completed at 2,833 feet, is the second largest well brought in during the year, and maintains the supremacy of the Murphy property as the greatest oil producing lease in the state.

October 30, 1919. The well, reported fifteen days ago on the O. M. Thompson place as having been capped without letting it display itself, proves to be a 5,000-barrel gusher, rivaling the famous Chapman well.

November 18, 1919. The Heffern Oil Company, which heretofore has been an association, decided to incorporate with a capital stock of $5,000,000. The cost of the test well to date is $214,000, including $30,000 value of the Heffern leases. There are three drilling crews at work in the vicinity of Newport Bay. The Liberty Oil Company is cleaning out its well No. 1 at the head of the bay. Some oil was found at a depth of 2,100 feet when work was stopped. Now the company will go several hundred feet deeper.

As proof that Orange County's oil production has not reached its limits, but is on the increase, note the following recent developments:

The Petroleum Oil Company brought in Thompson well No. 2 on March 12, 1920, with a reported flow of 3000 barrels and increasing. The company was expecting a gusher and prepared to care for the oil so that none of it would be wasted. Thompson well No. 3 came in June 1, 1920, with a flow of 650 barrels, which many believe too low an estimate.

The Kraemer well No. 2-5, which was brought in recently, is producing 150 barrels of 26 gravity oil. The Thompson-Goodwin well of the Union Oil Company came in with a roar June 14, spouting oil over the top of the derrick and then sanded up. However, it started flowing again a steady stream which experts estimate at 1,800 barrels per day of 27 gravity oil.

Spouting over the tops of the derricks, two wells on the Standard Oil Company's Sam Kraemer lease, in the Placentia-Richfield district, came in with a roar June 23, 1920. They are numbered 6 and 7. The yield of No. 6 has been estimated all the way from 1,000 to 3,000 barrels per day. No estimate was reported on the yield of No. 7, although it was said to be equally violent with No. 6.

Early in August, 1920, Huntington Beach well No. 1 on the mesa was brought in with a small intermittent flow, which later became constant and increased to nearly 150 barrels of 24 to 26 gravity oil per day. This established the character of that section as proven oil territory. Immediately all land, not already under contract, was leased by some of the operating companies. The Newport mesa well and the well at Olive are about ready for testing early in September, although the drillers think they may have to go deeper. A new well is being started near Orange County Park, and others are being planned or drilled in different parts of the county, especially in or near proven territory. It is not always wise in argument to reason from a few particulars to a general conclusion; but, producing oil wells are becoming so numerous and widely scattered, it is almost safe to conclude that the whole of Orange County is underlaid with oil sand, though it may be at different depths in different localities.

Other wells might be mentioned, but space forbids. However, the Brea Progress-Munger Oil News Service gave quite an extensive survey of the oil fields of Orange County and adjoining territory on June 26, 1920, prepared by Elwood J. Munger. A summary of this report shows 170 wells drilling, 930 producing, with a daily output of 76,000 barrels of oil, ranging in gravity from 14 to 27, and in price from $1.43 per barrel for the lowest gravity oil to $1.93 for the highest. While a large majority of the wells mentioned in the report are in Orange County, yet the inclusion of wells at Santa Fe Springs, Whittier, Montebello and other outside fields would prevent this county claiming all the credit for the fine showing in this report. If only half of the daily output reported, or 38,000 barrels, be credited to this county, and if the average price received be $1.68 per barrel, which is the average between $1.43 and $1.93, then Orange County would receive a gross income of $23,301,000 from its oil industry each year. If, however, two-thirds of the daily output reported, or 50,666 barrels, be credited to this county, and if the average price received be $1.68 per barrel, then Orange County would receive a gross income of $31,068,391 from its oil industry each year. The latter sum tallies pretty closely with the estimate of the Santa Ana Chamber of Commerce.

But, however estimated, the oil industry is clearly the largest asset of Orange County, and makes this county safe from light, heat and power troubles.

CHAPTER XXVI

THE CITRUS INDUSTRY

By G. W. Sandilands

The orange was born in India: when, history does not say. Thence it found its way into Arabia and Syria, and in the eleventh century was growing in Italy, Sicily and Spain, Europe's greatest citrus fruit regions. The sixteenth century brought the orange to America. Across the Atlantic the Spaniards brought it in their conquest of the new world.

California saw the orange in 1769, or within the next few years after, for it was then that the Franciscans started north out of Lower California. In 1792 oranges are known, by mission records, to have been growing at the San Buena Ventura Mission. San Gabriel Mission, near Los Angeles, had the most extensive grove. This was set out in 1804. In 1818 there were 211 fruit trees, oranges and others, at San Gabriel. Two small groves were planted in Los Angeles in 1834, the first outside of the Mission gardens. William Wolfskill set out two acres in 1841, the first intended for commercial use. In 1857, L. Van Luven, pioneer fruit man in the region now holding the great orchards of San Bernardino Valley, planted forty-five seedling trees. In 1865, 200 trees were set out at Crafton, near Redlands.

Sacramento saw the first orange tree in the northern section in 1855. By 1862 there were 25,000 citrus fruit trees in California. In 1870, the first seeds were planted at Riverside. However, the real era of the citrus fruit industry was started in 1873. It was in that year that L. C. Tibbetts, of Riverside, planted two trees from the Department of Agriculture, which secured a small shipment of trees from Bahia, Brazil. The superiority of the fruit of these trees was quickly recognized. The trees were named the Washington Navel, and in the next decade several thousand acres of Washington Navels were planted in California. The original trees are still living and are objects of interest to the people and visitors of Riverside. Some years ago one of these trees was removed from its original home to the grounds of the Glenwood Inn, and reset with great pomp and ceremony on the occasion of a visit of President Roosevelt, the distinguished visitor taking part in the work of transplanting.

By Charles C. Chapman

Orange County, as the name implies, gives splendid evidence of being the ideal section for the culture of the orange. It is as highly developed here as in any other part of the world. Indeed, I do not hesitate to say that the orange grown here has no equal. This is demonstrated by the fact that for years oranges from this county have brought the highest prices, in the most discriminating market of the country, of any oranges grown in the world.

The soil and climate of Orange County are splendidly adapted to the culture of the orange. Indeed, the Divine hand has been lavish in bestowing upon all Southern California, and upon Orange County in particular, rare natural advantages, perhaps greater than those enjoyed by any other section over which the flag floats. The magnificent mountain ranges not only form picturesque scenery and giant bulwarks to guard the fertile valleys, but are our great natural reservoirs. Our coast is washed by the boundless Pacific. Our climate is faultless. In fact, it is not too much to say that as to the fertility of soil, the charming climate and the scenery with its grandeur and beauty, it is not surpassed the world around.

Not only are the climate and soil of this county adapted to the culture of the orange, but irrigating water is in abundance and rain is as plentiful as in any other section in Southern California. The temperature does not go as high in summer or as low in winter here as in the more inland sections. The extremes are not experienced, and, therefore, oranges are frequently held here upon the trees for many months after they are fully matured and without serious detriment to their texture, color or flavor.

The splendid equipment for packing oranges now found in our packing houses is the result of a very considerable evolution in the orange industry. Ingenious men have invented machinery, as well as discovered new and improved methods of doing work in every department, from clipping the fruit from the tree to putting it on the market.

The methods of handling oranges were very crude and simple at first. There was no uniformity of pack, or any method in general adopted by the early growers and packers. The only thought seemingly in the mind of the shipper was to get the fruit in some sort of package in order to ship to the consumer. During these early days Chinamen were generally employed to do the packing. The fruit was cut from the trees and piled up on the ground or in sheds, and the Chinamen sat upon the ground or floor and made selection as to size from the pile and put them in the box, sometimes wrapping them with the ordinary coarse brown paper, such as was usually found in the grocery stores of that day.

Soon, however, enterprising shippers began to realize that if the fruit was uniformly sized it would pack more evenly and be more attractive. Some very simple and inexpensive machinery for doing this was invented. Perhaps the first machine for sizing of any pretensions was the one known as the California grader. This was a simple rope grader about ten feet long and worked by foot power. From time to time this was lengthened until some were made from twenty to thirty feet long, delivering fruit to bins arranged on either side and extending five to ten feet longer.

Other sizers more complicated and with greater capacity and accuracy have been invented. There are two or three quite extensive factories in Southern California which make packing-house equipment for doing practically all work in the handling of the orange. There are now on the market washers, driers, polishers, graders, sizers, separators and wrapping machines of several designs and at various prices.

Progress has been made along all lines of the business. Uniform packages have been adopted for both the orange and the lemon. These are embellished with lettering and designs printed in colors on slats and ends. Shippers have individual brands, and most shippers use elaborate and beautifully colored lithographic labels of these on the ends of the boxes. The orange wrappers have also been changed from the coarse brown paper to fine silk tissue, upon which richly colored designs or monograms are printed. Some of the most enterprising shippers use two-color prints on their wrappers, and some who cater to the best Eastern trade use beautifully laced and printed side curtains for the boxes. Thus we have now going from all our packing houses uniform and attractive packages. One shipper in Orange County even tags every orange of a certain brand with a little green and gold tag, a specially prepared machine being used for the purpose. In some packing houses the equipment is very elaborate and expensive, costing many thousands of dollars, and with a capacity of ten cars per day.

The first orange trees put out in Orange County, as in Los Angeles and Riverside counties, were seedlings, the present popular varieties being unknown here. Much time was required for these to come into bearing, as the seedling is slower in this regard than the budded varieties. However, the time came when there were a few oranges ready for the market.

The modern packing houses with their splendid equipment were, of course, unknown in that early day; nevertheless the fruit was, after a fashion, packed and shipped. It found a ready market and at such splendid prices that the culture of the orange became an attractive and established industry in several sections of the country.

Very naturally an occupation which is so attractive as citrus culture soon interested many enterprising men. Some realized that other varieties than the seedling might prove more profitable. Immediately steps were taken to secure varieties adapted to the climate. The result in a few years was the introduction of a number of varieties which have proven productive and profitable and well adapted to our soil and climate.

Among the standard varieties of oranges grown in this county, besides the Washington Navel, are the Mediterranean Sweets, St. Michael, Malta and Ruby Blood, Satsuma and the Valencia Lates. From 1886 to 1890 quite a run was made by the Mediterranean Sweets and many thousand trees were put out. It was thought that this variety would supply the late spring demand, after the season of the Washington Navel had passed. It has proven a tender orange and not altogether satisfactory. One reason for this variety not being in more favor (though of late years it has very generally proven profitable), was the introduction of an orange that more completely filled the requirements of a late orange. This is the Valencia Late, which in many respects, as it has been developed here, is the best orange grown in the world. For more than twenty years it has made the record for prices received for California oranges. It has many excellent qualities which make it a most desirable and profitable orange for grower, handler and consumer. It is the best keeper on or off the tree, and therefore a splendid shipping orange for the autumn. It has been the most popular orange with growers for many years, and especially in Orange County, which seems to be able to produce this splendid variety more perfectly than any other section of the state.

The writer has been informed by A. D. Bishop, an old and honored orange grower living near Orange, that the first orchard planted in that section, if not in the county, was by Patterson Bowers. He put out about two acres in 1873 on the south side of what is now Walnut Avenue, a street running east from the city of Orange and where the street descends into the bed of Santiago Creek. In 1874 B. River planted five acres of seedling trees. These trees were purchased from T. A. Garey, of Los Angeles, and hauled down in a wagon. The following year the remainder of the ten-acre ranch was set out with trees grown in the nurseries of D. C. Hayward and Joseph Beach at Orange. This orchard was on land platted by Chapman and Glassell and known as the Richland farm, and now a part of the city of Orange. This was soon followed by an orchard planted by a Mr. Dimmock and Joseph Fisher. This was located northwest of Orange. In 1876 Dr. W. B. Wall put out an orchard at Tustin. This was soon followed by orchards set out in that district by Samuel Preble, Mr. Tustin, Mr. Wilcox, Mr. Snow and Mr. Adams, old-time residents.

In 1878 M. A. Peters and John Gregg planted orchards about one mile south of Orange from trees grown by themselves budded from trees purchased from the Garey Nursery in Los Angeles.

The Gregg place is the one now owned by A. D. Bishop. Trees in good bearing condition are here which were budded in the nursery in 1876, now forty-three years ago. Some of the trees planted by Mr. Peters in 1878 are producing fruit equal to if not identical with the Valencias coming from Florida at a later date.

The first orchard set out in the Placentia district was by R. H. Gilman. He put out forty acres in 1875 on what is still known as the Gilman ranch on Placentia Avenue. William M. McFadden, about 1880, put out twenty acres further up the same avenue. The following year Dr. Tombs, whose property lay between Gilman's and McFadden's, put out several acres. These men planted seedlings and Australian Navels, as it was before the stock of the Washington Navels was on the market.

Closely following the setting of the above orchards came Theodore Staley, Peter Hansen and Mr. McDowell into the neighborhood. These men set out small orchards, the two former on Placentia Avenue and the latter the orchard now owned by Mr. Klokke. For a few years thereafter there was considerable activity in planting orchards in this district.

Even before any of the above orchards were put out there were scattered about in the yards of the residents of Anaheim a few orange trees. These were seedlings, but they demonstrated that what is now the northern part of Orange County was adapted to orange culture. Among the first, if not the very first, to put out orchards of any considerable size about Anaheim was a Mr. Knappe and Henry Brimmerman.

It is thought that the black scale was brought in on trees from Los Angeles. We are to suppose, therefore, that growers from the very beginning of the industry were troubled with this pest.

The red scale, which has at times done great damage to orchards, did not make its presence felt until 1884 and 1885. T. A. Garey, above mentioned, is supposed to claim the honor for having introduced it into California. Some, however, say it was brought in by Mr. Hayward on Australian Navel stock which he brought from Australia. The fact, however, that this scale appeared in the San Gabriel orchards some time before it did at Orange would seem to disprove the latter statement.

These scale pests soon became a real menace to the orange business and very early efforts for their destruction were made. About 1882, spraying with caustic washes, using fish oil as a base for carrying the alkali was pretty generally adopted. Little benefit, if any, was had from this spray, it not proving effective, and often doing damage to the fruit and tree. In 1885 Mr. Bishop invented what is known as the raisin wash. This was quite generally used until the invention of fumigating in 1889.

Fumigating with gas made from cyanide of potassium and sulphuric acid has proven the most effective method of destroying scale pests yet discovered, and is used in all orange sections infected with scale. A. D. Bishop must have the credit for giving to the growers this splendid discovery. It has really been the salvation of the orange industry in Southern California. The division of entomology of the Department of Agriculture at Washington sent special agents here from time to time to discover some method, if possible, to destroy the scale pests which were becoming a serious menace. For several years experiments were made chiefly with sprays. These have proven unsatisfactory, in fact, practically worthless as an insecticide.

There was trouble at first in fumigating because of the gas burning the trees and fruit. Then it was noticed that the injury was less on cloudy days; so the tents were painted black. In their experiments Drs. W. B. Wall and M. S. Jones discovered that fumigating at night was even better than with painted tents, because of the lower temperature at night. They accordingly associated themselves with A. D. Bishop and took out a patent on night fumigation, which soon was dubbed the "twilight patent." This patent was offered to the fruit growers of Southern California for $10,000; but they lacked one vote on the board of supervisors of Orange County to consummate the sale to the counties. The courts afterward annulled the patent on the ground that darkness, or the absence of light, was not patentable.

The first cars of oranges were shipped in 1883 by M. A. Peters and A. D. Bishop. These gentlemen sent two cars to Des Moines, Iowa. A few other cars were sent out from the county that year. The shipment for 1910 was 840,960 boxes of oranges and 43,392 boxes of lemons; that for 1920 was estimated 2,000,000 boxes of oranges and about 300,000 boxes of lemons.

Many hundreds of acres only recently set out will soon be in bearing, so that we may confidently expect to ship out of Orange County before many years from five to six thousand cars of the finest citrus fruit grown in the world.

Crop estimators have used the returns of the Orange County Fruit Exchange for 1919 as a basis for estimating the value of the county's citrus crop for that year. This exchange, with headquarters at Orange, is the selling agent for eleven citrus associations, all located southeast of the Santa Ana River, except the one at Garden Grove, and handles at least seventy per cent of the crop in that territory. It is claimed that the territory northwest of the river produces fully as much fruit as that southeast of the stream.

At the annual meeting of the exchange, February 9, 1920, the following directors were elected for the ensuing year: D. C. Drake, Willard Smith, R. W. Jones, Wade Flippen, George B. Shattuck, Ed. Utt, E. B. Collier, E. D. White, J. O. Arkley, D. E. Huff, A. E. Bennett. The board organized with D. C. Drake as president; Willard Smith, vice-president; L. D. Palmer, secretary, and A. E. Bennett, exchange representative.

From the secretary's annual report it is learned that the exchange shipped 2,622 carloads of oranges, of 462 boxes to the car, and 584 carloads of lemons. The shipments, divided according to varieties, were as follows: Valencias, 1,152,145 boxes; lemons, 239,609 boxes; Navels, 42,073 boxes; sweets, 12,858 boxes; miscellaneous, 3,022 boxes; total, 1,450,707 boxes. The returns from these shipments were $5,495,444.49, which is $1,261,525.42 more than for any previous season.

The large acreage of oranges set out during the last five years will soon increase the orange crop for the county to five and six million boxes annually. In no other section in Southern California have so many orange trees been put out in recent years as in Orange County.

CHAPTER XXVII

BET SUGAR INDUSTRY

The following description of the beet sugar industry has been largely gleaned from an article on that subject prepared by Truman G. Palmer, secretary of the United States Beet Sugar Industry, in 1913, three years subsequent to the publication of the first volume of this history, and one year prior to the beginning of the recent World War.

The earliest attempt to produce sugar from beets in the United States was made in Philadelphia in 1830 by two Germans named Vaughan and Ronaldson, but their efforts were unsuccessful. Eight years later David Lee Child erected a small factory at Northampton, Mass., and succeeded in producing a small quantity of sugar, for which he was awarded a silver medal which bore the following inscription: "The Massachusetts Charitable Mechanic Association. Award to David Lee Child, for the first beet sugar made in America. Exhibition of 1839."

Due to lack of technical knowledge in both field and factory, the Northampton plant operated but one season.

In 1852 Bishop Tyler, of the Mormon Church, purchased in France the machinery for a factory, shipped it by water to Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and hauled it by ox team from there to Salt Lake City. This effort was also a failure. During the next few years, attempts were made to produce beet sugar in the United States as follows: Illinois, 1863-71; Wisconsin, 1868-71; New Jersey, 1870-76; Maine, 1876; but all these efforts ended in failure, which absorbed some $2,250,000, and ruined most of the men who attempted to establish the industry in America.

The first American to wrest success from failure was E. H. Dyer, who erected a small plant at Alvarado, Cal., in 1879. Although a failure for many years, much of which time the plant was idle, it finally became a success. Several times it has been rebuilt and re-equipped with machinery and while running today, it never will pay interest on more than a fraction of the money invested in it.

In 1883 the Federal Treasury needed money and Congress had become enthusiastic about the possibility of producing our sugar supply at home, so our national legislature enacted a tariff bill which carried a duty of three and one-half cents a pound on refined sugar and two and one-half cents on raw. But no one knew what soil or climate were required for producing high grade beets, nor how to grow them, nor how to operate a factory, and the string of dismal failures reaching from ocean to ocean made capitalists cautious. Even when our Federal Treasury was overflowing in 1890 and sugar was placed on the free list, the bounty of two cents per pound, which was placed on domestic production, failed to attract capital, as did also the Wilson forty per cent ad valorem bill of 1894.

However, when the Dingley bill of 1897 was passed and William McKinley made James Wilson secretary of agriculture, a new order of affairs was established. Although the duty fixed on sugar imports was but fifty-two per cent of what it had been under the bill of 1883 and but six factories were in existence, the Department of Agriculture set to work to determine where favorable natural conditions existed, to learn and to teach the farmers cultural methods and to exploit the industry generally. It was deemed wise that a great industry, destined to supply a large portion of the $400,000,000 worth of sugar which we annually consume, should be scattered as widely over the states as possible. To this end the Department issued a wall map, on which was traced the theoretical beet sugar area of the United States. This map was changed from time to time to correspond with increased knowledge of the adaptability of the country to this industry. The last statement of the Department concerning this subject shows that we have in the United States 274,000,000 acres, the soil and climate of which are adapted to sugar beet culture. If but a fraction of one per cent of this area were planted to sugar beets, it would furnish all the sugar we consume.

Doctor Wiley and the Bureau of Chemistry and Doctor Galloway and the Bureau of Plant Industry were set to work; a field agent was placed on the road to investigate conditions throughout the country and experiments were conducted in various states. As a result of the information and the inviting conditions set forth in the numerous bulletins and reports of the Department, in fourteen years, $84,000,000 has been coaxed into the industry, the number of factories has increased from six in two states to seventy-six in sixteen states, and the annual output has grown from 40,000 to 700,000 tons, or one-fifth of the total sugar consumption of the United States, enough to supply all the people living west of the Mississippi River. As a result of the Newlands bill, great areas of desert land have been reclaimed where sugar beets can be raised more profitably than can any other crop, and upon the expansion of this industry largely depends the success or failure of the great irrigating works which the Federal Government has constructed at an expense of $80,000,000.

James Wilson knew that the long haul freight charges ate up the profits of the far western farmers on low-priced cereal products when shipped to the East. They cannot successfully compete in the East with the farmers of the great Mississippi Valley who have a much shorter haul to market. But with alfalfa and beet pulp with which to fatten stock, they obtain two crops, sugar and livestock, on which the freight charges are small in proportion to the value of the product. Sugar beets reach their greatest perfection when grown under irrigation and our farmers, especially in the irrigated West, have found the crop to be one of the most profitable, if also the most difficult, which they can grow. Due to rotating other crops with sugar beets one year in four, thousands of farms are producing greater yields of such other crops than ever before.

This industry now distributes $63,000,000 annually to American farmers, to laborers in the sugar factories and to laborers in coal mines and other American industries which furnish it with supplies, all of which money would be sent to foreign countries in payment for imported sugar, but for the establishment of this domestic industry.

Since the industry was established up to 1913, it has distributed $400,000,000 to American toilers, and when fully developed it will distribute $200,000,000 annually to American industry.

During the fourteen years in which the domestic beet sugar industry grew from 40,000 to 700,000 tons, the average wholesale price of sugar declined from $4.97 per 100 pounds to $4.12 per 100 in 1913, or seventeen per cent, despite the fact that during the same period the price of practically all other food commodities has increased from thirty-three and one-third to 100 per cent. When fully developed, this industry will still further reduce not only the price of sugar, but of all other food products through increasing the yield per acre.

The German increase in yield per acre of wheat, rye, barley and oats has been eighty per cent during the past thirty years, as compared with an increase of but six and six-tenths per cent in the United States. German economists are a unit in attributing Germany's increase in yield to the introduction of sugar beet culture which taught their farmers to grow a root crop one year in four in rotation with cereals, and thus out of $986,000,000 worth of these crops which Germany annually produces, $438,000,000 worth is due to the introduction of sugar beet culture. Even greater results than those obtained in Germany have been secured wherever sugar beet culture has been introduced in this country, and should the further expansion of the industry result in duplicating Germany's experience throughout the United States, our yield of these four crops, at present farm prices, would be worth $2,000,000,000 instead of $1,124,000,000, as at present (1913). In the language of Knauer, one of the foremost agriculturists of Germany: "It is our firm belief that increased beet culture is the greatest blessing for every land."

To secure a heavy tonnage, fields to be planted to sugar beets should be thoroughly fertilized. Barnyard manure is the best fertilizer, but in Europe it is supplemented with large quantities of commercial fertilizers. The beets exhaust only a portion of the fertilizer, leaving the balance, with a mass of fibrous roots, to enrich the soil for the three succeeding crops which should be grown before replanting the field to beets. To teach the farmers the art of rotation and how best to grow beets and all other crops, each factory employs a scientific agriculturist and a corps of assistants who spend their time with the surrounding farmers. In 1912 the actual cost to the factories for this educational work amounted to thirty-eight cents for each ton of beets sliced, or a total of nearly $2,000,000. So beneficial have been the results of this work, that Secretary of Agriculture Wilson declared that a beet sugar factory is as valuable to the farmers of a community as is a government agricultural experiment station, which costs the public thousands of dollars to maintain.

Sugar beets require deep plowing, ten to fourteen inches, or twice the usual depth. When using horses, farmers are inclined not to plow deeply enough to secure maximum results, and some of the factories have put in power plows which turn six furrows and harrow the land at the same time. They plow and harrow the land for $2.50 per acre, which is about one-half of what it costs the farmers to plow equally deep with horses. The traction engines also are used for hauling train wagon loads of beets to the factory. In some localities farmers are banding together and purchasing engines for plowing and hauling beets.

Beets are drilled in rows, usually eighteen inches apart, eighteen to twenty-five pounds of seed to each acre. Practically all the beet seed used in America is grown in Europe, but it has been demonstrated that superior seed can be produced in the United States. Sugar beet seed growing requires five years of the utmost skill, care and patience, from the planting of the original seed to the maturing of the commercial crop which is sold to the trade. The factories contract for their seed for three to five years in advance, sell it to farmers at cost price and deduct the amount from the payment for beets.

When the beets are up and show the third leaf they should be thinned. Unless thinned at the proper time, the pulling up of the superfluous beetlets injures the roots of the remaining ones. Scientific experiments in Germany, where all other conditions were identical, showed that one acre, thinned at the proper time, yielded fifteen tons; the next acre, thinned a week later, yielded thirteen and one-half tons; the third acre, thinned still a week later, yielded ten and one-half tons; and the fourth acre, thinned three weeks after the first, yielded seven and one-half tons. The rows are blocked with the hoe, leaving a bunch of beets every eight inches. These bunches are thinned by pulling up the superfluous beetlets, leaving one in a place eight inches apart. The ideal factory beet weighs about two pounds and a perfect stand of such beets, one every eight inches, in rows eighteen inches apart, would yield forty-three and one-third tons per acre. The present average yield in the United States is about ten tons per acre, while the hitherto "worn-out soils" of Germany yield fourteen tons per acre, or forty per cent more than is secured from our "virgin soils."

While the beets are growing it is necessary to keep them free from weeds, so that they will get the full benefit of the sun and the strength of the soil. Where the cultivation is done with horse power instead of with the hoe, the rows are generally placed farther apart. After the beets have reached their maturity, they are plowed out and are then topped by hand, which consists in cutting off the top and that portion of the beet that projected above the ground, which was found to contain very little sugar. The tops are fed to stock, for which purpose they are worth three dollars per acre.

In the United States, eight miles is the usual limit for hauling beets to the factory by wagon, while the supply of beets may be drawn from an area with a radius of fifty miles or more. To reduce the labor of unloading, the factories erect receiving stations on the railroads in the beet growing area and pay the same price for beets delivered at these stations as for those delivered at the factory. Tim Carrol of Anaheim invented the method of dumping the beets from the wagon into a chute that conveys them into the car; a similar method is employed for dumping the beets from the cars into the bins at the factory. In 1912 the freight on the railroads averaged forty-five cents per ton of beets, and the receiving stations with their dumping apparatus cost the factories about $2,000 each, many of them having from $40,000 to $50,000 invested in such stations.

As the beets arrive at the factory, they are first weighed and then dumped into bins for storage or floated directly to the beet washers. While being dumped, a fair sample both of the beets and of the loose dirt which the car or wagon contains is caught in a basket. These samples, properly tagged, are conveyed to the beet laboratory where they are trimmed, if not properly topped, and the difference in the weight of the samples as received and their weight when trimmed and washed is called the "tare." Whatever percentage this amounts to, is applied to and deducted from the weight of the car or wagon load. A sample of these beets then is tested by the polariscope for its sugar content and its purity; farmers often are paid a stipulated price per ton for beets of a given sugar content and twenty-five to thirty-three and one-third cents per ton additional for each extra degree of sugar which they contain. The tare rooms and the beet testing laboratories are open to any one, and in some localities the farmers' associations employ experts to tare and analyze each sample of beets.

LOS ALAMITOS SUGAR FACTORY

The bins are V-shaped, about three feet wide at the bottom, twenty to thirty feet at the top and twenty to thirty feet high. As beets are needed, beginning at one end of the bin, the loose three-foot planks at the bottom are removed one at a time and, with hooks attached to long poles, the beets are rolled into the flume or cement channel below, in which they are floated into the factory. This is not only to save labor, but to loosen up the dirt which attaches to the beets, thus partially washing them. The water which is used in the flume is warm water pumped to the upper end from the factory.

After being floated in from the bins or sheds, the beets are elevated from the flume to a washer, where they are given an additional washing before being sliced. From the washer they are elevated and dropped into an automatic scale of a capacity of 700 to 1,500 pounds. From the scale they pass to the slicers, where, with triangular knives, they are cut into long, slender slices which look something like "shoestring" potatoes. These slices drop through an upright chute and are packed tightly into cylindrical vessels holding from two to six tons each; the battery consists of eight to twelve vessels arranged either in a straight line or in circular form. Warm water is run into these slices, and coaxes out the sugar as it passes from each vessel to the succeeding one. After passing through the entire series of vessels, the water has become rich in sugar, of which it contains from twelve to fifteen per cent, depending upon the richness of the beets. It then is drawn off and is called diffusion juice or raw juice. This is carefully measured into tanks and recorded. As this juice is drawn off, the vessel over which the water started is emptied of the slices from the bottom, the leached slices containing from one-quarter to one-third per cent of sugar. These slices are called pulp, and by conveyors are carried out from the factory and deposited in bins, from which they are fed to stock as wet pulp or are conveyed to dryers where the water is evaporated and the dry pulp is sacked and shipped for stock feed.

Warm, raw juice is drawn into the carbonatation tanks and treated with about ten per cent milk of lime—about like ordinary white-wash. This lime throws out impurities, sterilizes the juice and removes coloring matter. Carbonic acid gas from the lime kiln is forced through the lime juice in the tank, throwing out the excess of lime, converting it into a carbonate of lime or chalk. Tests are taken here by the station operator to show when the process is finished.

From the carbonatation tanks the juice is pumped or forced through filter presses consisting of iron frames so covered with cloth that the juice passes through the cloth as a clear liquid, leaving the lime, and impurities precipitated by it, in the frame, in the form of a cake. This cake, after washing, is dropped from the presses and conveyed out of the factory. It contains from one to two per cent of its weight in sugar, which constitutes one of the large losses of the process. It also contains organic matter, phosphate and potash, besides the carbonate of lime, which makes it an excellent fertilizer, all of which is used in Europe on the farm, but so far is little used in America. The juice passes through the Danek filters by gravity after having been treated with carbonic acid gas a second time.

After a second, and sometimes a third, carbonatation and filtration, the juice is carried to the evaporators, commonly called the "effects," usually four large air-tight vessels furnished with heating tubes running from 2,000 to 7,000 square feet in each vessel. A partial vacuum is maintained in these evaporators which makes the juice boil out at a low temperature, thus preventing discoloration, and to a large degree the destruction of sugar, which would be caused by high temperature. There always is, however, some unavoidable loss of sugar in this apparatus. The juice passes along copper pipes from the first vessel to the last, becoming thicker as it does so. It comes into the first vessel at ten per cent to twelve per cent sugar and is pumped out of the last one so thick that it contains about fifty per cent of sugar.

After a careful filtration, the juice that comes from the evaporators and is called thick juice, is pumped to large tanks high up in the building and from there is drawn into vacuum pans. These are large cylindrical vessels from ten to fifteen feet in diameter and from fifteen to twenty-five feet high with conical top and bottom, built air-tight. Around the inner circumference they are furnished with four to six-inch copper coils which have a heating surface of 800 to 2,000 square feet. Exhaust steam is used in the evaporators and live steam in the pans, the juice in both being boiled in a vacuum to prevent discoloration and reduce losses. As the syrup continues to thicken by this evaporation, minute crystals begin to form. When sufficient of these have formed, fresh juice is drawn in and the crystals grow, the operator governing the size of the crystals to suit the trade. If small crystals be desired, a large quantity of juice is admitted at the outset, while if large crystals are desired, a small quantity of juice first is admitted, and, as it boils to crystals, fresh juice gradually is added to the pan and the crystals are built up to the desired size. The operator of this pan, known as the "sugar boiler" is one of the most important men in the factory. The water furnished the condensers of these vacuum pans and the evaporator goes to the beet sheds and is used for floating in the beets. It amounts to from 3,000,000 to 8,000,000 gallons every twenty-four hours, according to the size of the factory, and must be very pure.

The mass of crystals with syrup around them and containing about eight per cent to ten per cent of water is let out of the vacuum pan into a large open vessel called a mixer, beneath which are the centrifugal machines. These are vertically suspended brass drums perforated with holes and lined with a fine screen. They are made to revolve about 1,000 times a minute, and the crystal mass of sugar rises up the side like water in a whirling bucket. The centrifugals force the syrup out through the screen holes leaving the white crystals of sugar in a thick layer on the inner surface. These are washed with a spray of pure warm water and then are ready for the dryer.

The damp white crystals from the centrifugal machine are conveyed to horizontal revolving drums about twenty-five feet long by five to six feet in diameter. These drums are furnished with paddles on the inside circumference, the paddles picking the sugar up and dropping it in showers as the drum revolves. Warm dry air is drawn through and takes the moisture out of the sugar, which now is ready to be put in bags or barrels for the market.

After the moisture has been thoroughly removed in the granulators or dryers, the sugar drops directly to the sacking room through a chute, at the lower end of which the top of the double bag is attached. The sugar flows directly into the sack, the flow being cut off automatically with each 100 pounds, when an endless belt conveyor passes the upright sack past the sewing machine at the proper speed and the product is sealed ready for storage or shipment.

Five of the seventy-six beet sugar factories, reported by Truman G. Palmer as being in existence in the United States in 1913, are located in Orange County, Cal., and are described by him as follows:

Only two of the five sugar factories in the county answered any of the questions addressed to them by mail; and even they neglected to mention the amount and value of their annual production of sugar. Following is a summary of the information received.

The Los Alamitos Sugar Company was organized in 1896. It is a corporation of which the following persons are the officers: W. A. Clark, president; J. Ross Clark, vice-president; Henry C. Lee, second vice-president; E. C. Hamilton, manager. Number of employees during sugar campaign 300; daily capacity of factory, 800 tons of beets; land produces ten tons of beets per acre; water is supplied by artesian wells and pumping plants; percentage of sugar in beets is high compared with that in other sections.

The Santa Ana Cooperative Sugar Company was organized in 1911 and began active operations in 1912. The officers are James Irvine of San Francisco, president; C. A. Johnson of Huntington Beach, vice-president; Remsen McGinnis of Denver, secretary; S. W. Sinsheimer of Denver, general manager; E. M. Smiley of Santa Ana, manager. The daily capacity of the factory is 1,200 tons of beets. The average quantity of beets worked up annually is 100,000 tons. The sugar content in the beets is nineteen per cent. Water is supplied by artesian wells located on the company's own ground at the plant.

Having thus failed to get the actual amount and value of the sugar produced in the county from the factories, the transportation companies, or any other local source, the writer applied to E. E. Kaufman, field agent of State Commission of Horticulture, and received a bulletin containing statistics on "California Crop Distribution and Estimates for 1918." This bulletin shows that Orange County excels all other counties in the state in the production of sugar beets. It is credited with 216,000 tons and Monterey County, its nearest competitor, with only 156,800 tons. The bulletin gives no values—only quantities; but, by using the foregoing data and assuming that the factories received as much as the sugar equalization board recently fixed as the maximum price, we can approximate pretty closely the value of the sugar produced in Orange County in 1918. If the beets in this county average nineteen per cent sugar, as the Santa Ana Cooperative Sugar Company alleges they do, then the 216,000 tons of beets, grown in the county, would produce 41,040 tons, or 82,080,000 pounds of sugar; and if the factories received "ten cents cash, less two per cent aboard basis," as the sugar equalization board recently fixed the maximum price, or nine and eight-tenths cents per pound, then they received $8,043,840 for Orange County's sugar crop in 1918. The estimated value of the 1919 crop was $10,500,000.

Late in June it was announced that the sugar company contracts for the season of 1920, would start with twelve dollars per ton as the basic price for beets testing fifteen per cent sugar with the price of sugar at nine dollars per hundred pounds, and for each additional per cent of sugar in the beets, fifteen per cent of the price of sugar would be added to the basic price for beets. To illustrate by a suppositional example, let us use the sugar content of the beets, given by the Santa Ana Sugar Company, of nineteen per cent, or four more than the basic per cent, and the price of sugar, as fixed by the sugar equalization board of $9.80 per hundred pounds, the equation would be $$12.00 + 4 (.15 \times $9.80) = $17.88$, the price per ton of beets to the growers under such conditions. With sixteen inches of rainfall, in gentle showers that all went into the ground, to supply moisture where not provided by irrigation, and with good prospects for high prices for sugar, the outlook for a bumper crop of beets and a prosperous sugar campaign could hardly be brighter than on July 1, 1920.

The sugar beet is said to be the most scientifically bred plant in the world. Beginning with a small, tough, woody root, found near the salt water in Southern Europe, which contained little more than a trace of sugar, it has been bred by a century's most scientific and painstaking investigation to yield a heavy tonnage of pure sugar equal to one-sixth of its weight in Germany and one-seventh in the United States. Notwithstanding this intensive cultivation and high development, the sugar beet still retains its partiality for soils located near salt water, which doubtless accounts for the domesticated plants yielding good returns on the alkali soils near the sea coast in Southern California. There is also an indirect benefit from planting such lands to beets, in fertilizing, aerating and enriching the soil for other crops, that is said to be even more valuable than the direct benefit. But, to gain these advantages and produce our own sugar instead of buying it abroad, large investments of capital are necessary, some of which have been made, and must be maintained perpetually. Therefore, in justice to such investments and for the good of Orange County and the country generally, it becomes the patriotic duty of every loyal citizen to protect the beet sugar industry from hostile legislation, and to encourage its legitimate development, to the full extent of his ability.

CHAPTER XXVIII

ORANGE COUNTY'S FRUITS, GRAINS AND VEGETABLES

Fruits

Orange County has such an infinite variety and wealth of products that it would be impossible to give a detailed account of each within the limits of this work. Fairly complete descriptions of the orange, walnut and celery industries have been presented; but only a brief reference can be made to some of the other more lucrative productions without undertaking to give an exhaustive list.

Nearly every kind of fruit known to the temperate zones and many kinds from the torrid zone have been tried here with more or less success. Some seem to be well suited to the soil and climate; but they are seriously handicapped with insect pests, which experts are learning how to eradicate. Some do better on one kind of soil than on another; some prefer higher elevations than others; and some thrive best inland and others near the coast. Practically all kinds of conditions can be found within the confines of Orange County; and enterprising growers are constantly experimenting to find out just what conditions and localities are best suited to each kind of fruit.

Although Orange County is not rated as an apple-growing section, yet considerable of this fruit is grown in some parts of the county. Apples do very well on the damp lands near the coast, provided the roots do not reach standing water. They also thrive as well in certain choice localities in the mountains, as they do in the famous apple regions farther up the coast. The statistician's report for 1910 gives 12,795 bearing and 1,540 non-bearing trees, producing 511,800 pounds of fruit, worth $5,118. The Santa Ana Chamber of Commerce's estimate for 1919 was $50,000.

The apricot seems to be well adapted to the conditions that prevail in this county, with one exception. Occasionally the spring rains injure the blossoms and cause a light crop. Possibly this defect in the conditions may be overcome, or at least minimized, by continually selecting the most hardy and latest blooming trees for planting; but, even as it is, the apricot is one of the moderately profitable fruits of the county. A good crop of apricots, at the prices which have prevailed for several years past, will net the grower about $250 per acre. The number of trees credited to Orange County is 167,240 bearing and 23,370 non-bearing. The statistician for 1910 gave the dried apricots from that year's crop as 1,700,000 pounds, worth $170,000; but he took no account of the fresh apricots that were marketed and consumed before the drying commenced. The pits amounted to 105 tons, worth $12,600. The estimate for 1919 was $200,000.

The avocado was discussed in the April, 1919, Bulletin of the State Commission of Horticulture in part as follows:

"In Volume VI, No. 1 of the Monthly Bulletin, Mr. I. J. Condit of the University of California, listed fifty-four varieties of the avocado that originated in California, and eighty-six of foreign origin, or a total of 140 named varieties. With this large number to select from, a real problem exists to determine the varieties that are best for California conditions. Already considerable experimental work has been done, and it is now known that there are places that are not subject to frost where certain varieties of avocado will do well. Commercially the industry is of little importance at present. Fruit sells in the larger cities of the state for exorbitant prices and seventy-five cents for a single fruit is a price that is frequently paid by the consumer. Prices have been so high that the fruit has not yet become generally known in this country, and there is no way of judging of its popularity, although most people who have tried it sound its praises."

In the chapter on "Semi-Tropic Fruits in Orange County," C. P. Taft gives a complete account of experiments with the avocado and results obtained. He mentions one variety whose fruits weigh from two to four pounds or more each, which would be considerable fruit even though the price is high. As to productiveness he cites one tree, the "Taft," which produced over $500 worth of fruits in 1917 and over $600 worth in 1919. He says the "Sharpless" tree, owned by B. H. Sharpless of Tustin, has done equally well. Both are among the oldest trees in the county.

In answer to an inquiry about the correctness of the report that his tree had produced $5,000 worth of fruits and buds, Mr. Sharpless supplied the following information: The Sharpless avocado was planted in 1901 and bore its first fruits in 1912, when it bore 2 fruits; in 1913, 20 fruits; in 1914, 75 fruits; in 1915, 250 fruits; in 1916, 700 fruits. He says, "Now you will notice the crop has not been so heavy since 1916; but when I tell you that there have been 10,000 buds a year cut from the tree—and buds cut this year take off next year's fruit wood—it is a wonder there is any fruit at all. And $5,000 is the value of fruit and buds up to this year. It looks as though there were 800 fruits on the tree for next year, as the tree has the habit of the Valencia orange, which blossoms in April and May and the fruit does not mature until the following year." One dollar apiece or ten dollars a dozen is the price for the Sharpless avocado fruit.

Bearing fig trees to the number of 2,500 were reported in 1910; but nothing was said about the quantity and value of the fruit produced.

In the early '80s, the grape was one of the leading fruits in the territory now included in Orange County—especially in the northern part. The first vineyards were of the Mission variety, either planted by the padres or with cuttings from vineyards of their planting. These grapes were used principally for making wine. Later, Malaga, Muscatel and other varieties were introduced, some of which were used almost exclusively for making raisins. This locality acquired quite a reputation abroad both for its wines and its raisins; besides, a great many carloads of table grapes were shipped every season to the middle western states. In the latter part of the '80s some kind of a disease appeared in the vineyard at Anaheim and gradually spread over the vineyards of Southern California. It was most destructive of the finer varieties, and completely wiped out the raisin industry of this section. The tonnages of grapes for 1910 was 490, worth $3,600.

Grape fruit is highly prized by many people as an appetizer at breakfast and is therefore grown to a limited extent. The crop for 1910 was valued at $3,840.

The lemon industry has not proved so attractive to growers as the orange industry, partly on account of the necessity for curing the fruit before marketing and partly on account of the sharper competition of the foreign article in the Eastern market. Relief was afforded on the latter point by Congress raising the tariff on lemons from one to one and a half cents a pound; now more lemons are being planted than heretofore. The crop of 1910 amounted to 43,392 boxes, valued at $151,872. The value of the 1919 crop was $3,500,000.

In comparison with the lemon crop, the size and value of the orange crop for 1910 may be given here, although that industry is described elsewhere, as follows: oranges, 840,960 boxes, valued at $1,261,440. That of 1919 was valued at $12,000,000.

Very few people in the county have paid any attention to the growing of olives; nevertheless there were 520 tons raised in 1910, worth $26,000. The 1919 crop value, including olive oil, was $125,000.

Peaches seem to require about the same conditions that apples and pears do and therefore thrive best in the same localities. The peach crop for 1910 was reported to be 575,250 pounds, valued at $5,752; the pear crop was 108,500 pounds, valued at $1,085.

There are 1,270 bearing plum trees in the county, producing 38,100 pounds of fruit in 1910, valued at $762. The county is also credited with 17,320 bearing prune trees.

A few scattered growers raised 8,000 crates of raspberries, in 1910, worth $8,000; there was also grown 19,000 crates of strawberries, worth $20,900. Berries of all kinds were estimated in 1919 at $125,000.

Grains

Grouping alfalfa under this head, because it is a forage plant and no subdivision has been made for grasses, we will take up that product first. Alfalfa is the main reliance of the farmers for green feed; and it will grow anywhere in the county that other vegetation will grow. It is a deep-rooted, perennial plant and will not thrive with standing water near the surface; on the other hand it will not continue to grow vigorously on the mesa without frequent irrigations in the summer season. It cannot be pastured a great deal, because the tramping injures the crown of the plant; but irrigate it once a month during the summer season and eight or nine crops of hay can be cut from it each year. Many of the fruit-growers have small patches of alfalfa near their barns; but the large-sized fields can only be found in the dairy, or general farming section. The acreage and yield for 1910 were reported as follows: alfalfa, 4,000 acres, 20,000 tons, value $200,000.

Barley is grown both for the grain and the hay. In the former case it is allowed to thoroughly ripen and is then headed, threshed and sacked ready for the market. In the latter case it is cut while the grain is in the dough and the leaves are still green, and is then raked and cocked. As there is no fear of rain in the summer season, the farmer takes his own time for baling or stacking the hay, as the unthreshed straw and grain together are called. More often the hay is baled out of the cock; but even when stacked it is generally baled later. The statistician gives the following figures on the acreage and yield of the barley harvested for grain in the county in 1910: barley, 34,120 acres, 27,296 tons, value $545,920. For 1918, 660,000 bushels or 15,840 tons.

A third of a century or more ago there was considerable corn raised in the cultivated portions of the present territory of Orange County. They used to tell fabulous stories about the immense yields in the Gospel Swamp region southwest of Santa Ana. In fact, good crops of corn could be grown almost anywhere in the county, if irrigated on the upland, and can yet. In the article on livestock it is stated that the number of hogs had decreased in the county because the land could be used more profitably for other purposes than in raising feed for hogs. Well, here is corn, one of the best of hog feeds, that is not raised very extensively in a county which is adapted to its growth because the land can be used more profitably for other products. The statistician's figures for the 1910 crop are: corn, 2,690 acres, 1,345 tons, value $40,350. For 1918, 36,900 bushels or 1,033.2 tons.

Oats are preferred by some people for horse feed; but they are not so extensively grown as barley, because they are more liable to rust. However, the statistical report for 1910 gives the following figures: oats, 4,375 acres, 1,750 tons, value $52,500.

Wheat is also one of the light crops of Orange County for the same reasons that corn and oats are light crops; nevertheless there is quite a little of the hill land devoted to wheat as shown by the figures on the 1910 crop, as follows: wheat, 5,000 acres, 2,500 tons, value $87,500. For 1918, 5,600 bushels or 168 tons.

Grain hay is given in the report without indicating the kind—barley, oats or wheat—or how much of each kind is included. These three grains must, therefore, be credited collectively in 1910 with the following additional yield: grain hay, 25,350 acres, 16,742 tons, value $200,904. The 1919 crop value was $1,000,000.

Vegetables

This subdivision includes a great variety of products, some of which are grown for the wholesale market and others for the retail trade. The Chinese and Japanese gardeners and vegetable peddlers may be grouped in the latter class. It is doubtful whether the statistician got much of the data on the products peddled out by the growers, or even on that retailed through the local grocery stores. However, the same criticism may be applied to the other subdivisions, though to a less extent; the report of products consumed at home or sold or bartered to neighbors must necessarily be incomplete.

The county is credited in the statistical report with producing 38,000 pounds of asparagus in 1910, worth $1,900.

The bean industry is becoming one of the important industries of this county. As an introduction to the subject, a paragraph is quoted from an exhaustive article by George W. Ogden, as follows:

"The lima beans of commerce do not grow to maturity back east. Those you buy dry in the stores at all seasons are ripe beans and not green beans dried. They grow in only two places on the globe, Southern California and the island of Madagascar. The lima beans of commerce do not grow on poles, but run along the ground like sweet potato vines. Five counties in Southern California supply the United States and Canada with lima beans. England uses the Madagascar crop, so there is no competition anywhere for the growers of California. The California lima bean crop of 1910 amounted to 1,175,000 bags, a bag averaging a little over 80 pounds, and the gross returns to the growers was $5,000,000. Santa Barbara, Ventura, Los Angeles, Orange and San Diego are the five lima bean producing counties of California, and within their confines is embraced all the land in the entire United States upon which this peculiar plant will bring its fruit to maturity."

Thus is Orange County found to be in very select and exclusive company in this industry. The real beginning of the lima bean growing on a large scale dates back to 1886, when James Irvine, owner of the San Joaquin rancho, planted 120 acres as an experiment. Although the industry was successful from the start, the farmers were slow in following Mr. Irvine's advice and example. In 1909 he had 17,000 acres of his ranch in beans, which is said to be the largest bean field in the world belonging to a single individual. Besides the San Joaquin ranch, the mesa about Huntington Beach and Smeltzer and the La Habra valley produce large quantities of beans. There were 28,000 acres planted to beans in the county in 1910 producing 210,000 sacks, worth $672,000. The bean straw makes very good feed, of which there was 550 tons, valued at $2,200. The lima bean crop in 1918 amounted to 473,000 bushels or 354,750 sacks; all kinds, 696,000 bushels or 522,000 sacks. The value of the 1919 bean crop (ninety per cent limas) was $3,000,000.

Large fields of cabbage are grown in the winter season about Anaheim, Fullerton and other parts of the county; and the product is shipped East when the markets of that section are bare of fresh vegetables. The 1910 crop is reported at 5,900,000 pounds, worth $54,100. In 1918, 300 cars, worth $120,000.

The celery industry, which is more particularly described elsewhere, yielded in 1910 1,212 cars, worth $275,720. In 1919 the crop value was $100,000.

The cauliflower crop amounted to 11,970 crates in 1910, valued at $5,985.

Melons of every kind are grown in the county, of large size and fine flavor, and in sufficient quantities to supply the local demand.

Peanuts do well in this county and are grown to a considerable extent between the tree rows of young orchards; but, on account of the Japanese competition, they are not so profitable as some other kinds of crops. The crop of 1910 amounted to 60,000 pounds, worth $2,400.

Peas are among the winter vegetables that are grown on the mesa near the foothills, where there is comparatively little frost. The quantity and value of the 1910 crop were reported to be 160,000 pounds, worth $4,000.

The most of the chili peppers are grown about Anaheim, which has acquired quite a reputation with this product. They are grown in rows like potatoes, requiring frequent irrigation, and are artificially cured in dry houses. The crop of 1910 was reported as follows: chile peppers, green, 40 tons, worth $8,000; chili peppers, dry, 100 tons, worth $20,000. The Federal Bureau of Crop Estimates says that practically all of the chili peppers grown in the state are grown in Orange County. The estimate for 1919 is $1,125,000. First prize for chili peppers at the recent Riverside County Fair was won by John B. Joplin of the San Joaquin Ranch. He won second prize for chili peppers at the Huntington Beach Fair.

The soil and climate of Orange County are well adapted to the growing of potatoes—Irish potatoes, as they are called to distinguish them from sweet potatoes. The potatoes grown in this county, particularly on the upland, are of medium size, with a smooth, clean surface, and cook evenly throughout, producing a mealy pulp not unlike crumbly cake or well-cooked rice. Two crops are raised each year, one from the early spring planting and the other from the late summer or early fall planting. The yield reported for 1910 was 250,000 sacks, worth $250,000; the 1919 crop had a value of $750,000.

Credit is claimed on behalf of the late Thomas Nicholson of El Modena for introducing the sweet potato into the state. He shipped more or less of his product to San Francisco and from there the seed potatoes were conveyed to other parts of the state. He secured a silver medal for his product at the Columbian Exposition in Chicago. The crop for 1910 is given at 30,000 sacks for the county, worth $37,500. That for 1919 is valued at $200,000. "The sweet potato now ranks second in value among all the vegetables of the United States, having increased in this respect more than eighty per cent in the last ten years. The crop of 1917 was worth $90,000,000 and the crop of 1918 is estimated to be worth almost $117,000,000. In a recent conference at Birmingham, Ala., representatives of the U. S. Department of Agriculture and horticulturists and pathologists from the Southern States discussed every phase of planting, cultivating, storing and marketing the sweet potato. The time when it was allowed to decay in primitive dirt beds in the open fields has long since passed."—The Youth's Companion.

Pumpkins make valuable food for stock—especially milk cows—and are grown everywhere the farmers wish. The average size is about that of a half bushel measure; but some of them grow so large that it takes two men to load one of them into a wagon. Photographs of fields literally covered with them and labeled "Some Pumpkins" may be seen in almost any collection of picture cards in this part of the state. The pumpkins are generally sold by the wagon load for a lump sum to those who keep a family cow or two, but haven't sufficient land upon which to raise their own stock feed. They are not shipped any distance; hence there is no record of the quantity grown in the county.

Thousands of acres of land in the western and southwestern part of Orange County are well adapted to the growing of sugar beets. Besides suitable land the industry needs capital to provide factories to work up the product of such land. The first factory was established about 1896 at Los Alamitos by Senator W. A. Clark of Montana. As soon as the factory was provided the beets were grown and they proved to be the equal of any grown elsewhere. It was also discovered that one factory was entirely inadequate to work up all the beets that could be furnished. Another factory was therefore built south of Santa Ana about 1908; and during the next three years three more sprang into being, one near Anaheim, another near Huntington Beach, and still another near Tustin. With the five factories in operation in 1918, they worked up 216,000 tons of beets grown in Orange County and a considerable tonnage grown in Los Angeles County. Orange County is credited in some of the published statistics with producing $10,500,000 worth of sugar in 1919, but probably $8,000,000 is nearer the mark.

When once started, tomatoes will propagate themselves like weeds in this county; but, like other plants, the better the selection and care the better the product. So far as natural conditions are concerned, there is practically no limit to the quantity that might be produced; the limit is in the profitable disposal of the product after it is grown. The crop of 1910 was reported as follows: fresh tomatoes, 2,568,000 pounds, worth $25,680; canned tomatoes, 20,000 cases, worth $30,000. The crop of 1919, including tomato seed, is valued at $350,000.

The production of tomato seed for the marts of the world is being carried on successfully by the Haven Seed Company, now located south of Santa Ana. This company was established in 1875 at Bloomingdale, Mich., by the late E. M. Haven. The seeds of this company soon attained a world-wide reputation for purity and reliability which they still maintain to this day. A good name is a valuable asset in any business, so the company grew and prospered in its first location for many years; but, notwithstanding its euphemistic title of Bloomingdale, the place was badly handicapped for growing plants by its rigorous winter climate.

Accordingly the Haven family moved to California in 1904, and made their first planting in 1910 near Tustin. Different tracts were leased year after year, but always of increased acreage, until finally a tract containing 100 acres was purchased on Edinger Street, just outside Santa Ana's southern boundary, and a half mile west of Main Street. On this tract, shortly after its purchase, an office building and a warehouse were erected and the headquarters of the company were established there. In 1918 a fine, large, three-story warehouse was built of hollow tile, strengthened with reinforced concrete pillars. This building will give ample room for cleaning, sacking and storing the seed ready for shipping, and will have a fairly even temperature throughout on account of its hollow tile construction. The building is equipped with modern machinery driven by electricity.

Three years ago, that is in 1917, the elder Haven died and left the business to his sons whom he had trained until they knew every detail of the work. The company was reorganized with A. B. Haven, the elder son, as president and general manager, and L. S. Haven, the younger son, as secretary. The company was capitalized at $100,000.

In 1918 the company produced 75,000 pounds of tomato seed and about 15,000 pounds of pepper, melon and miscellaneous varieties of seed. More than $50,000 was paid out in wages. In 1919 the company is harvesting 400 acres of tomato seed and 200 acres of lima beans, egg-plant, peppers, cucumbers, etc. It expects to harvest about 100,000 pounds of tomato seed and other kinds in proportion from the above acreage. That is, it expects to harvest 12,000 tons of tomatoes from which it will extract approximately 100,000 pounds of seed, or eight pounds of seed from each ton of tomatoes.

As the price of everything has advanced within the last three or four years and still is unsettled, it is difficult to give what might be regarded as a fair average of the annual productions of the company. However, the round figures on sales for 1918 were approximately $200,000 for all kinds of seeds produced by the company, and it would be reasonable to expect as much from the 1919 harvest, which is not yet completed at the date of this writing, or even more from the increased acreage, noted above.

As a further indication of the advantageous conditions of Orange County and the superior merits of its productions, the fact may be cited that this county, in competition with the whole world at the St. Louis World's Fair in 1904, received twelve gold medals and four silver medals as testimonials of the superiority of its products exhibited there. Orange County took second prize of $250 for fine display of products at Riverside in October, 1919. The judges credited San Bernardino County with 92.8 points and Orange County with 90.8 points. Concerning the exhibit of this county, the Riverside Enterprise says: "The Orange County display is in a class by itself, both as to the products shown and the manner of their showing. It is a finished picture in a superb and worthy frame, a magnificent study in still life almost over-elaborated but saved from that criticism by an austerity of arrangement that suggests sureness of touch and certainty of selection. It suggests the studio rather than the farmstead, the salon rather than the show tent; but this is said in no spirit of detraction. When such a display, so arranged, can be brought to the Southern California fair from the neighboring county, there is no longer any argument to be made against the claim that this is a sectional rather than a county fair. The artist who arranged the exhibit, for he has shown himself an artist—is D. W. McDannald. The setting of the display is sumptuous—redwood, heavy brown burlap, deep green velour hangings, brass fixtures and jardinières holding ferns and admirable lighting effects. For the display itself, it contains picked specimens of the fruits, grains and vegetables, as well as the mineral products for which Orange County is famous. There are also novelties like the Feijoa, a new fruit from Uruguay and the Chinese varnish nuts from which the so-called tong oil is extracted."

Now, as promised at the beginning of this chapter, the foregoing is by no means an exhaustive list of the fruits, grains and vegetables grown in Orange County; for instance, there are onion fields near Anaheim, whose rows stretch away in the distance almost as far as the eye can distinguish the plants from other vegetation, and there are many other products worthy of mention. Then, too, many plants, that in the East are grown in small beds in the garden or in the hot house, are here grown in large fields and in the open air. Enough, however, has been mentioned to substantiate the claim that Orange County can produce nearly everything grown in the temperate zones and many things indigenous to the torrid zone, and that, too, in almost limitless quantities.

CHAPTER XXIX

HISTORY OF THE CELERY INDUSTRY

By George W. Moore

Less than fifty years ago, the now famous peat lands of the Westminster and Bolsa country, known as cienegas, were regarded as worthless. These cienegas were tracts of swampy lands containing usually ponds of water in the middle, skirted around with a rank growth of willows, tules and nettles. During the rainy season the entire area of the cienega was overflowed. In the fall and winter these marshy lands were the resorts of millions of wild geese; they were also the haunts of wild ducks and other water fowl, and were the favorite hunting grounds of sportsmen of that day. The early settlers counted the cienegas as so much waste land, or rather as worse than waste, for the drier portions of these swamps were the lurking places of wild cats, coyotes, coons and other prowlers, which preyed upon the settlers' pigs and poultry.

Early in the history of the county the supervisors were petitioned to construct a ditch in this territory under the "Drainage Act of 1881," which authorized the cost and care of such ditch to be apportioned to the adjacent land according to the profits derived therefrom. This work was undertaken in 1890 and was contested before the board of supervisors and in the courts for about three years by those for and against the improvement. Finally the Bolsa ditch was completed; and it, with other drainage systems since established, has turned thousands of acres comparatively worthless land into some of the most productive soil in the county. It opened the way for the establishment of the celery industry in Orange County. This industry has become famous throughout the world and, according to a local writer, raised the value of the land from $15 to $500 per acre; but without drainage no celery could be grown on these lands and they would still be comparatively worthless.

The following sketch of the origin and growth of the celery industry of Orange County is compiled from the Santa Ana Blade's Celery edition of February 1901: "The first experiment in celery culture on the peat lands was made in 1891, on a tract of land south of Westminster, known locally as the Snow and Lambs place, on which several thousand dollars was expended, but without satisfactory results. E. A. Curtis, D. E. Smeltzer and others were the prime movers in making the experiment, the outcome of which was such a flat failure that all but E. A. Curtis gave up the idea. Mr. Curtis' pet scheme came to fruition sooner than was anticipated, for about this time he entered the employ of the Earl Fruit Company, and with the consent of the firm resolved again to give celery culture a trial.

"The proposition had many drawbacks, not least of which was the scarcity of help to cultivate the crop and the entire lack of experience in the laborers available. In this extremity Mr. Curtis bethought himself of the Los Angeles Chinese market gardeners and their knowledge of celery growing, and at once entered into negotiations with a leading Chinaman to undertake the work of growing eighty acres of celery on contract, the Earl Fruit Company to furnish everything, including implements needed in the cultivation of the crop, also money advanced for rental of the land and the supplying of water where needed by digging wells; so that $5,000 was advanced before a stock of celery was ready for shipment. The result was fairly successful, notwithstanding the untoward experience of the Chinese laborers at the hands of white men, who worried and harassed the Celestials, both in season and out of season, carrying their unreasonable resentment to the extent of burning the buildings erected by the Earl Fruit Company, carrying off the implements used in the cultivation, and terrorizing the Chinamen employed to the imminent risk of driving them away entirely and thus sacrificing the crop for want of help to attend it.

"All this risk and expense fell directly on the Earl Fruit Company, for returns on their investment could only come when the crop was ready for market, and it is easily imagined that E. A. Curtis, as a prime mover in the venture, occupied a most unenviable position. But Mr. Curtis kept right on, and overcame every obstacle that presented itself, and to him is due the credit for demonstrating the superior advantages of Orange County for the successful growing of celery and for the introduction and establishment of an industry that has permanently added hundreds of thousands of dollars to the resources of the county.

"The crop from the land thus experimented with was shipped to New York and Kansas City and consisted of about fifty cars, a considerable shipment at that time, as prior to then a carload of California celery was an unheard of quantity. There was, of course, not much profit made for that season after everything was paid, for the items of expense were many and included all the loss and damage suffered while the crop was maturing and a bill of $1,100 paid an officer of the company for protection afforded the Chinese laborers while at work during the season. But it paid a margin of profit and proved beyond dispute that under favorable conditions celery culture might be undertaken with prospects of success, and this once established, the rest was easy."

Celery growing developed into one of the leading industries of Orange County.

The area of celery culture exceeded 275,000 acres and extended from the peat lands where it was begun, over a considerable portion of the "Willows," a tract of land lying between the old and the new beds of the Santa Ana River, the scene of the squatter contest of over thirty-five years ago.

Quoting from the April (1919) Bulletin of the State Commission of Horticulture: "The total movement of celery from California for the season of 1917-18 was 2,775 cars. Florida had the second heaviest shipments with 2,458 cars. New York ranked third with 1,739 cars. * * * The falling off of shipments from October to the first of January was due primarily to a short acreage. Discouraged by slow transportation, unsatisfactory returns, and high labor costs, growers cut their acreage in two for the season 1918-19. Very heavy rains in September injured many fields in the Delta district of central California, which resulted in about twenty per cent damage. Stock in Southern California made slow growth and much of it was shipped while still small." Orange County's acreage was reduced by planting sugar beets or other crops instead of celery. The Santa Ana Chamber of Commerce estimated the value of this county's celery crop for 1919 at $100,000; but the California Vegetable Union gave 100 cars at $800 per car, or a total of $80,000, as its estimate.

CHAPTER XXX

ORANGE COUNTY'S LIVESTOCK AND POULTRY

Horses

The aborigines and their successors, the Mexicans and Spaniards, paid little attention to domestic animals. Their nomadic mode of life was not conducive to the acquisition of flocks and herds. There was, however, one exception and that was the horse. This animal was such a help in traveling and hunting and so little expense to keep that nearly every person provided himself with a pony. In fact, in many places the cost of keeping was nothing, the animals running wild, getting their own living and propagating their kind. Whenever one or more was needed, the natives would round up a band of wild horses and lasso the requisite number. It is not strange that animals thus reared and treated should be hard to tame and never become entirely trustworthy.

In later years the Mexicans, Spaniards and Americans, who succeeded the Indians, established an ownership over the different bands of horses, which ownership they maintained by branding and herding the animals. More or less friction arose between the owners of the different bands and also between them and the other settlers who were growing crops instead of raising stock. Various stories are told of the clashes between the farmers and the stockmen, which at this late day sound rather apocryphal. It is said that in one instance a Mr. Sepulveda, who owned hundreds of horses and cattle, came to take them away; but he was afraid to go near them, because some settler was picking them off with his rifle from a hiding place. In order to save their crops the settlers banded together and ran three hundred animals over a high bluff near Newport, killing them all, and chased a thousand head into Mexico.

With the incoming of better breeds these Mexican ponies were largely displaced or were improved by crossing with the other strains of horses. Of course there are still some Mexican horses in the county, handed down from generation to generation with little or no improvement; but such animals are the exception to the rule that Orange County is well supplied now with good horses. The improvement, which would have come about gradually through the immigrants bringing in better horses, was greatly accelerated by the importation of thoroughbreds for breeding purposes. The late Don Marco Forster of Capistrano is credited with being the first, in the territory now included in this county, to attempt to improve his stock by the introduction of blooded stallions. He kept thousands of horses and sold them for all purposes wherever he could find a market. A number of other breeders were active in improving the horses of this section, among whom the most prominent were E. W. Squires, George B. Bixby, Walter K. Robinson, Jacob Willitts, R. J. Blee, J. H. Garner and George W. Ford.

The Orange County Fair Association was organized in 1890 with a race track located southwest of Santa Ana. This track was considered one of the best in the West. Some of the records reported as being made on it were Silkwood, 2:07; Klamath, 2:07½; Ethel Downs, fastest five-heat race ever trotted on the Coast. These records, and others not readily obtained now, gave the track and the county great praise abroad and stimulated the raising of blooded stock at home. As a result of this increased interest, some of the finest strains of thoroughbreds and fastest race horses have been produced in this county. Horses for other purposes have been improved in like proportion until Orange County can justly take pride in all its horses.

The county statistician in his report for 1910 gave the following figures on the horses of the county and other kindred animals, viz.: Horses, thoroughbreds, 39, value $7,800; common, 7,649, value $780,000; colts, 1,257, value $63,850; jacks and jennies, 2, value $1,000; mules, 2,035, value $407,000. The county assessor in his report for 1919 gives all kinds of horses, 6,787, value $848,500; mules, 2,440, value $549,000.

Although the work and activities of the people in the county, demanding horse power, have greatly increased since 1910, the number of horses in the county is now about 1,000 less than at that time. The reason is not far to seek. The gasoline engine has displaced the horse as a motive power. With 9,794 registered motor vehicles and over 750 tractors in the county, each motor vehicle being propelled by an engine rated at from eighteen horsepower to sixty horsepower and each tractor by an engine rated at from ten horsepower to forty-five horsepower, it is easy to see why horses have decreased in the county instead of increasing in proportion to the increase of the work. Then, horses are too slow for this fast age; even the best of them make a poor show at "keeping up with Lizzie."

Cattle

The cattle of Orange County passed through a very similar process of development to that described of the horses of said county. In the early days, when hunting for a living was being displaced by the pastoral life, some cattle were brought into this region from other states or countries. These animals may have been of poor quality or their offspring may have degenerated through a long period of abuse and neglect. At all events they were better fitted for perpetuating their existence under adverse conditions than they were for dairy purposes. Ownership of cattle was maintained in the same way as that of the horses, by branding and herding. The flocks and herds of the Spanish dons roamed over the hills and valleys which are now dotted with orchards and farms. Dependent almost wholly upon the variable rainfall and native grasses, the cattle industry of early times was subject to great fluctuations between affluence and poverty. It is related that, in periods of bountiful rains, the children of the cattle barons cut a swell in the educational institutions of New York and Paris; but that, in periods of extreme drouth, hundreds of animals were driven into the sea to prevent their carcasses from breeding pestilence on the land.

With the American occupation of the country came diversified farming and some precautions against the capriciousness of Nature. The diversified farming necessitated smaller holdings of land and permitted a denser population. Such a change, however, might not decrease the number of live stock, for, while the size of the herds would be decreased, the number of owners would be increased and the subsistence of the animals would be more certain.

The Fletchers near Olive were credited with having made the first importation of blooded stock in the territory now included in Orange County. Later Henry West of McPherson shipped in a number of registered Jerseys, as did G. Y. Coutts of Orange still later, and there were doubtless other importers in different parts of the county. Whenever animals of high grade were brought into one part of the county, stockraisers in the other parts would breed from them and thereby improve their own herds; thus has the stock of the entire county been brought to a high standard of excellence. As corroborative proof of this claim, the stock sale of the Santa Ana Jersey Farm in December, 1909, may be mentioned. In order to reduce stock the owner, J. T. Raitt, sold 122 fine cows at prices ranging from $30 to $150 apiece, the average being $74 apiece. The total amount of the sales was $9,028; nevertheless the owner had a sufficient number of cows left to continue to supply his customers, over a large range of territory, with milk.

The 1910 county statistics on this subject are as follows: Cattle, beef, 347, value $13,880; stock, 850, value $25,500; dairy cows, 5,141, value $257,050; heifers, 189, value $3,780; calves, 1,565, value $9,390. The assessment for 1919 gives all kinds of cattle, 17,676, value $1,237,320.

Cattle for beef and dairy purposes have no gasoline competitor; hence they have more nearly kept pace with the increase of population in the county. The number of all kinds in 1910 was 8,092; that of all kinds in 1919 is 17,676, or an increase in number of more than 118 per cent. The value of all kinds in 1910 was $309,600; that of all kinds in 1919 is $1,237,320, or an increase in value of more than 299 per cent. Instead of the promiscuous herds of early years that continued to propagate their kind without let or hindrance, the cattle of late years are widely distributed in dairies and among families; hence they are better bred and better cared for, thereby increasing their quality and value, as noted by the assessor in the foregoing statistics. In order to encourage the dairymen of the county to still further improve their stock, the supervisors bought five head of fine Holstein stock at a sale in Phoenix, Ariz., in February, 1919. These animals consist of a bull, three cows and a calf, all registered in the records of the Holstein-Friesian Association of America, giving the pedigree and achievements of their ancestors and their own names and stock numbers. They are kept at the county farm in West Orange.

Sheep

About thirty-five or forty years ago the sheep industry was one of the important industries of this section. Large flocks were located at different points of what is now Orange County and were herded over the intervening territory during the day and returned to the camp at night. Jonathan Watson, in the Santa Ana Canyon above Olive, had 25,000 head of sheep along about 1876 and there were other flocks nearly as large within the present confines of the county at that time. The industry declined, however, as the range was occupied for other purposes.

The statistician's report for 1910 gives the following figures upon the sheep industry: Sheep, 18,030, value $63,105; lambs, 7,330, value $18,325; wool, 216,360 pounds, value $25,963. The assessment roll for 1919 gives only 739 sheep worth $7,390.

The sheep industry of this county has been annihilated. It is true there were 739 assessed in 1919; but this small band was temporarily in the county when it was listed by the assessor for taxation. The reason for the decline of the industry given in 1910, viz.: "The range was occupied for other purposes," did not tell the whole story, for, at the time that reason was given, there were 18,030 sheep and 7,330 lambs being pastured in the hills of the county. Now those sheep have all disappeared and that range is not being occupied for other purposes. The other part of the story is that the low tariff gave the death blow to the sheep industry in this country. One of the elder Eyraud brothers, who pastured sheep in the hills east of El Modena for many years, told the writer that they lost $30,000 under the low Wilson tariff act during President Cleveland's last term; and one of the sons told him in 1913 that, if the new administration adopted another low tariff act, they would get out of the sheep business. This they did when the Underwood tariff act was adopted. Others did the same until there are no sheep left in Orange County.

Thirty-five or forty years ago there were a few goats raised in some of the small canyons tributary to the Santiago Creek; but with the removal of the regular residents from the canyons, the raising of goats in the mountains ceased. Within the past five years goat raising has taken a fresh start in Orange County, but this time the industry has broken out in spots over the valley section of the county. Recently the Department of Agriculture issued a bulletin urging the American people to turn their attention to goat farming as a means of reducing the high cost of living. One of the results of the awakened interest in the industry has been the increase in the price of goats. Where formerly goats sold from two dollars to five dollars now they bring from $50 to $200 a piece, because the demand has outrun the supply. The Huntington Beach News mentioned the following persons as being interested in goat raising in that community: L. T. Young, F. L. Snyder, George W. Wardwell, H. H. Campbell, Al. Clark and others. A. B. Collins of Villa Park is raising goats as a side line in connection with fruit growing. He has a flock of thirteen goats of different ages, one of the bucks registered and the other animals of good grade.

Hogs

Very few people, if any, in Orange County raise hogs for the market. Most of the stockmen and general farmers raise a small number each year for home consumption, and may occasionally market a few when they have a surplus. These few animals can be raised on the waste of the farm; but the fruit growers can utilize their ground more profitably than in raising feed for hogs.

The statistical report of the number and value of the hogs in the county in 1910 was as follows: Swine, 1,037, value $12,444. The 1919 assessment roll shows 1,356, worth $27,120.

Evidently the citizens of Orange County would rather buy their ham and bacon already grown and cured, than to buy high-priced feed for hogs or produce it on high-priced land, for the 1,356 hogs in the county in 1919 would make but a small part of the pork consumed annually in the county, to say nothing of the stock animals carried over from year to year. Only enough hogs are being raised to consume the waste from the canneries, the kitchens and the packing houses.

Poultry

In the early days this state abounded in nearly every kind of wild game. The swamps and lagoons near the coast afforded food and shelter to myriads of wild ducks and geese. These birds, in passing from one place to another, would frequently alight in the grain fields and destroy more or less of the growing crops. In order to protect such crops and to provide meat for the table, a systematic war was made on these birds for many years. In some parts of the state pot-hunters were hired by the farmers to slaughter the wild game that was devastating their fields. Now this game is protected by game laws, which require a license for hunting, regulate the open seasons and fix the bag-limit for the various kinds, in order to prevent such game from becoming extinct. Hence what could be obtained for the table by a few hours' hunting in the early days must now be provided through the rearing of domestic fowls.

From quite an early date chicken raising, as it is commonly called, has been followed in the territory now included in Orange County. It offered the quickest returns on the investment and the most ready support for families that could not wait for fruit trees to come into bearing or even for annual crops to mature. In fact, eggs were legal tender through the seventies, and helped to tide many a family over the dry spell of 1875 to 1877, before the irrigation facilities were well developed. Followed as a separate enterprise, poultry raising has proved profitable or otherwise, according to the careful attention and capable management of those engaged in the business. It is a business, however, that can be sandwiched in with fruit growing, general farming and stock-raising without material loss or inconvenience to those industries. The fowls do better when they have considerable freedom, including the range of the barnyards and alfalfa fields. Thus they pick up much of their living from the waste of the farm. The mild climate and green feed the year round are conducive to making hens lay more here than in the East, and to distribute their eggs more evenly throughout the year. This helps to equalize the price, and the large cities near by with their tourist population keep up the demand. As to the profits of producing hens' eggs for the market, one example must suffice. A careful record of all receipts and expenses of thirty-four hens, confined in a yard 22x150 feet and fed entirely on purchased food, showed a net profit per hen of $2.60 per year. Allowing more time and space for the care of the fowls, the profits on a greater number ought to increase in proportion to the number.

With the improved facilities of incubators and brooders, the raising of broilers for the market is a paying part of the business. It can be carried on all times of the year in this mild climate, and the demand is great. With so many people to feed in the cities, it is almost impossible to glut the market. This demand, too, is at our doors; there is no long haul of freights to consume the profits. The Jubilee incubator was manufactured at Orange for a number of years and the Santa Ana incubator was manufactured at Santa Ana. Other styles of incubators were shipped in as needed.

In 1907 a poultry association was formed at Fullerton. Later in the same year the Orange County Poultry Association was formed, by a union of all the poultry men, and held an exhibition at the county-seat. Various exhibits have been held since that time, which have done much to improve the fowls of the county.

The county statistician gives the following figures on the poultry and eggs of Orange County in the year 1910: Chickens, 16,500 dozen, value $115,500; ducks, 2,200 dozen, value $17,600; geese, 150 dozen, value $3,520; turkeys, 225 dozen, value $4,500; eggs, 236,750 dozen, value $71,025. Total value of poultry and eggs $212,145. The Santa Ana Chamber of Commerce report for 1919 gives $1,500,000 as the value of poultry and eggs.

Poultry raisers complained during the World War that chicken feed was so high and the price of poultry products was so low they couldn't make any money in the business; so they sold out or ate up their flocks without replacing them, until after the war it was found next to impossible to collect enough broilers in a day's ride to furnish a chicken supper for a church social. And eggs, following the law of supply and demand like other commodities, mounted higher and higher until a single egg sold for more than a whole dozen did in the same territory thirty-five years ago, and a single egg sold for 100 per cent more in New York City than Henry Ford's character was rated at by a jury of his peers.

CHAPTER XXXI

THE BEE INDUSTRY

By J. E. Pleasants

The history of beekeeping in California is the history of beekeeping on the Pacific Coast, as the first bees to be brought west of the Rockies were those brought to California in 1857 by John S. Harbison. This shipment was brought by water from Pennsylvania to California via the Isthmus. Samuel Shrewsbury was the first man to bring bees into what is now Orange County. This was in 1869. He first kept them on the Montgomery ranch at Villa Park. In 1871 he moved them into the Santiago Canyon. Beekeeping as an industry has grown gradually until there are now about 10,000 colonies kept in Orange County. There are from 75 to 100 practical beekeepers who make it their chief business. The average yield of honey during a good year is about 200 tons. This year (1920) there will be over 300 tons. The cash income from honey and wax, at the present prices, is something over $100,000 annually. The main sources of nectar supply are from the native mountain plants, such as the sages, sumac, wild alfalfa, wild buckwheat, etc., the sages being the best nectar yielders both for quantity and quality. There is undoubtedly no better or more delicately flavored honey in the world than that produced from the sages of Southern California. There is also a large amount of honey produced from the orange and bean blossoms of the valleys. The orange honey is white, and has the spicy flavor of the orange blossoms. The great economic value in honey production lies in the fact that such a delicate and wholesome food is produced from a source which requires no manipulation from the hand of man save the care of the bees. The vast quantities of nectar, commercially speaking, would go to waste were it not for the bees, and their presence in the orchards are a positive value in the production of fruit owing to cross-pollination.

Orange County appointed its first inspector in 1902. At that time the "foul brood" had spread to over fifteen hundred stands, and these were scattered all over the county. The inspector, with the cooperation of the keepers, had, up to 1910, about stamped out the disease and at that time it affected only about fifty stands. This means those stands that are handled, for there may be some in out of the way places that are not known to the inspector. However, the disease is now under control. This disease is known as the American foul brood, and it is known to have existed for more than eight hundred years, though it was not called the American until importations were made from Italy to this country.

In 1905 a disease known and called the European foul brood was discovered in New York, and was so severe that it was certain death to the bees infected. It spread with such rapidity that it reached California in 1908, and was found in the San Joaquin Valley, north of the Tehachepi, and exterminated the bees in nearly every section of the Valley. Mr. Pleasants was sent from Orange County to that region to make a study of it in order to be able to recognize it if it made its appearance in this section. He found it was very disastrous and that it menaced the industry in the state should it get beyond control. It has not made its appearance in this county up to the time of this report.

J. E. Pleasants was in charge of the California honey exhibit at New Orleans in the winter of 1884-85, and it was there that he met with some of the most prominent men engaged in this business in the United States. He was appointed the first inspector for Orange County and has been continued in that position to the present time. He has made a study of the bee for the benefit of those engaged in the business, and has always had their hearty cooperation, the men working in harmony with him on every occasion. The men interested in the bee business in Orange County are in it for commercial purposes only, not from a scientific point of view. The county now has a "clean slate," but holds a quarantine on bees from any infected district. The duties of the inspector necessitate a thorough knowledge of bees, and he is expected to look into each stand in every apiary if possible. Even though the keepers know the signs of the disease, they insist upon the inspector doing the work.

It is a well known fact that bees save for the keepers, injure nothing, and for those engaged in the fruit business are a boon, as they carry the pollen from flower to flower and tree to tree. The valleys and canyons were the richest and best producing places in the early days, the best flowers were to be found there, especially the kind most needed, but when the settlers began to come in they wanted the ground to raise hay and other farm products, and this drove the bee men from their haunts, as the shrubs that were so abundant were grubbed out. This condition has been changing back to the old order again, the more fertile land in the valley has been sought out by the ranchers, and the places once occupied by the bees are fast returning to the original condition.

CHAPTER XXXII

SEMI-TROPIC FRUITS IN ORANGE COUNTY

By C. P. Taft

The history of the semi-tropic fruits, other than citrus, in Orange County, is quite similar in most particulars to that of the other counties of Southern California. The first Spanish settlers introduced little that is still of especial value, except the Mission olive and grape, and there are yet some trees and vines in existence once planted by the padres. Other and better varieties have practically superseded them, and there are numerous vineyards and olive orchards which are profitable, but not to an extent to induce very extensive further planting.

Of more recent introduction, if not yet of equal value, and quite successfully grown, are the avocado, or alligator pear, feijoa, many kinds of guavas, the loquat, cherimoya, persimmon, pomegranate and sapota. When Orange County was first organized the persimmon, pomegranate and cherimoya were known to a slight extent, planted by a few of the more enterprising citizens, and there are today in Anaheim, Orange, Santa Ana, Tustin and vicinity some specimens of each which are approximately thirty years old. The avocado, carissa, feijoa and sapota, in the county, are in a few cases over twelve years of age.

While other semi-tropical trees and plants have been tried, it is the very rare exception that any have consented to live even a year, and only those mentioned above have been sufficiently enduring and prolific to result in or to justify extensive propagation. For instance, the banana, pineapple, eugenia, mango, papaya, etc., have been repeatedly tried, but as yet without satisfactory results, though it is not impossible that among the multitude of varieties of these fruits, there may yet be found some which will prove themselves adapted to this region. In fact, the avocado, which is now so full of promise, was long regarded as of very dubious value. The first trees grew well indeed, but bearing only in the rarest instances.

It is not necessary to enter upon a detailed description of each of these fruits, such as may be found in almost all first-class nursery catalogues, but mention may be made in a general way of their special development.

The loquat is in a way the most characteristic fruit of Orange County, for it is here that it has been most highly developed, and so far as yet ascertained, has reached a perfection unknown elsewhere, not only in California, but in the world. At any rate, as a result of new varieties originated here, Orange County has the largest and best loquat orchards. Approximately from one hundred to one hundred fifty tons are marketed annually. Relatively this is not a large amount, to be sure, but it is the most and best of any.

Of more recent introduction, the avocado or alligator pear, is by all odds the most desirable fruit on the list. Attention has been especially called to prove that this superb and fascinating fruit can be grown in many portions of Orange County with great success. It is not unlikely that there will soon be extensive development of this industry, rivalling the orange it may be, in value and acreage. Excellent and prolific varieties have been established and orchards of budded trees are making their appearance. There is every reason for believing, that by proper selection of varieties, the avocado may be made to mature fruit every month of the year and be a constant source of income and gratification. If it is so desired, the grower may confine his attention to varieties ripening at such a time as he may regard the most profitable and market his entire crop in a few months.

Persimmons, especially the Hachiya, a Japanese variety, here attain a perfection unsurpassed anywhere. While the market does not as yet absorb a very large quantity, the demand is increasing and from ten to twenty tons are marketed from Orange County each season, at good prices. A limited number of pomegranates also find a ready market, principally as a very interesting novelty to tourists, though they are not without an intrinsic value.

The feijoa sellowiana is the most recent introduction on the list and has not yet been tested on the market, nearly all of the fruit going to furnish seeds to nurserymen who wish to increase their stock. It has a most delightful flavor and perfume, as well as unusually excellent keeping qualities. It ripens in November and December, at a time when fruit begins to be scarce. There is no doubt that it will prove very profitable and should be largely planted.

Guavas of all kinds have their representative varieties, which find a congenial home in many portions of the county and ripen according to variety, at all times in the year. They are mostly used to eat out of hand, but the largest and handsomest are principally used for jellies and preserves, for which purpose they are unsurpassed.

The carissa is a thorny bush, bearing an abundance of fragrant blossoms, more or less bright red, and very handsome fruits, which can be used for sauces much like the cranberry. The sapota is a large handsome tree, bearing somewhat fitfully, a considerable quantity of yellowish-green fruit about the size of a peach. Occasionally one finds a desirable variety, but most of the trees bear relatively poor fruit. The time for ripening is October, when other fruits are plentiful, and this puts it at a disadvantage. Thus it is not likely that even the best varieties will ever be much grown. The carissa, however, may develop into something more than a successful curiosity.

During the nine years since the foregoing description of "semi-tropic fruits" was written, the status of the less grown fruits in Orange County has changed relatively little. The avocado continues to take the lead and considerable planting has been done in spite of some drawbacks from frost, which injured some trees and nursery stock in the more exposed situations. New varieties from Guatemala, by Mr. E. E. Knight of Yorba Linda, have proved quite adaptable and prolific, one, the "Linda," having fruits weighing from two to four pounds or more each. Other new kinds furnished by the department of agriculture, also from Guatemala, are being tested. Individual trees of the older planting have established new and remarkable records for productiveness, notably the "Taft," which produced over five hundred dollars' worth of fruits in 1917 and over six hundred dollars' worth in 1919. The "Sharpless" tree, owned by B. H. Sharpless of Tustin, has done equally well. Both are among the oldest trees in the county, and they give some idea of what to expect when trees of later planting attain bearing age.

The persimmon has advanced considerably in the estimation of the public, which now takes all that are offered it at very good prices. There has been and is a good demand for trees, more than exhausting the entire available supply of nursery stock, of which there bids fair to be a shortage for several years. In Orange County the Hachiya, which is the best commercial variety, has rarely been known to fail after the trees have reached the full-bearing age, which is about eight years from planting. On the oldest trees the production amounts to 400 pounds or more annually.

Among the feijoas new varieties have been developed, which are not only larger, but extend the season so that it now lasts from September to December inclusive, and the fruit is in increasing demand, not only for immediate consumption, but for preserves.

The jujube, a recent introduction by the department of agriculture, is proving very well suited to this section, being both a vigorous grower and very prolific. It is likely in due time to take place among the standard fruits of Orange County.

Originating in this county, a seedless sapota is the latest novelty to attract the attention of horticulturists. In addition to its seedlessness it has other very surprising characteristics, and it may be heard from again. The original tree has only lately reached the bearing stage; it is very prolific.

As one object of this article is to show what semi-tropical fruits can be grown with confidence and profit, and what are at best only experiments, we will recapitulate: The avocado, loquat and feijoa are very desirable and may be grown extensively with good results financially. The persimmon and pomegranate also are reasonably desirable. The carissa and sapota should only meet with individual favor and a few specimens be grown in every collection.

CHAPTER XXXIII

THE ENGLISH WALNUT INDUSTRY

What is generally called the English walnut in this country should more properly be called the Persian walnut. Its scientific name is Juglans Regia. Because of its thin shell and rich flavor it has been grown in the old world for many centuries. In America, however, it has not been very successfully grown except in parts of California. Not every kind of soil and climate, even in California, is suitable for securing the best results. The walnut requires a deep, rich loam, or even adobe soil, free from hardpan or standing water within reach of the roots. It also requires a mild and equable climate, such as is found in the southern part of the state near the coast.

More than a third of a century's experiments seem to have demonstrated that the best conditions for the successful growing of walnuts are found in Orange, Los Angeles, Ventura and Santa Barbara counties. The tree does not do well farther up the coast, while in the hot valleys of the interior it grows to an enormous size, but produces few nuts and those of an inferior quality.

All the early planting of walnuts, both in Europe and the United States, was done with seedlings, and even now many such trees are planted, either to save the expense or because grafted trees are not always available. Many prefer the seedlings, for the results secured are as satisfactory, when they have been bred up to a high standard, as those obtained from the grafted stock. However, many growers prefer the grafted stock. According to some authorities, the Mayette type is not profitable and is only suited for high altitudes. Experiments show that these foreign walnuts do not grow as vigorously when grafted upon roots of their own species as they do on some of the American species.

Professor Van Deman, in an article in the Rural New Yorker, says there are four species of native walnuts, Juglans nigra, Juglans cinerea, Juglans rupestris and Juglans Californica, upon all of which he has experimented, and he prefers the latter two, which are very much alike. Prof. W. J. Clarke, in the California Fruit Grower, says: "The native black walnuts, strong, vigorous growers and self-adapted to the different climatic and soil conditions of the state, should be used as stocks upon which to graft or bud the less vigorous European varieties and their seedling progeny."

The seed nuts are carefully selected from trees bearing the largest nuts of the desired variety and planted in layering beds, the soil of which is composed of equal portions of sand and loam well mixed. The nuts are spread evenly over the beds and covered to a depth of two inches with the same kind of soil. This layering is done in the latter part of the winter and the beds kept moist until the nuts germinate. As soon as the nuts crack open and the caulicle or root-stem appears, the nuts are transplanted to the nursery row, care being taken not to injure the caulicle. They are replanted two inches deeper than before to allow for settling of the dirt, and about four or five feet apart in rows at least thirty inches from each other, the soil having been prepared for their reception. Constant attention with the judicious use of water and the necessary cultivation bring forward the little plants until large enough to bud or graft to the desired variety.

If, however, an orchard of seedlings is wanted, the right variety of nuts is selected for planting and the budding or grafting dispensed with. One successful grower, George W. Ford, of Santa Ana, took his selected nuts, when the time came, in April, for planting, put them in barrels and covered with water, letting them soak for forty-eight hours. The water was drained off and the nuts spread evenly over a surface and covered with wet sacks for another forty-eight hours, during which time they crack open and sprouts show, then they were set out in prepared beds, five feet apart, and were kept well irrigated.

The nursery stock is usually one, two or three years old when transplanted to the orchard. The prevailing price for seedlings in 1910 was from ten to thirty cents apiece, while the grafted trees usually cost from fifty cents to $1.25 each, or at the rate of ten cents per foot in height. On rich, heavy soil the trees are planted forty-five or fifty feet apart; but on lighter soil they are frequently planted forty feet apart.

The quantity of water used in irrigating the trees, the number of times and the best season of the year to make the application, are questions that every grower determines for himself by observation and experience. There is more or less variation in the seasons and different kinds of soil require different kinds of treatment. As a general rule no more water is applied than is necessary to keep the trees in a thrifty condition. More than enough increases the expense and injures the trees and soil. On good walnut land, in seasons of average rainfall, one irrigation each year is all that is generally given.

Mr. Ford stated that he had not plowed his walnut orchard for fifteen years. His production from 283 trees in 1909 was 28,040 pounds, for which he received twelve and a half cents, orchard run. Some of his trees yielded 300 pounds each. They weighed sixty-eight pounds to the sack. In 1910 the crop weighed fifty-eight pounds to the sack and he received fourteen cents orchard run for the crop. By careful experiment he had found that a "plow-hardpan" is formed by cultivating, and also that it breaks off the small shoots sent up by the roots to draw the necessary nourishment from the air. This retards the development of the tree to some extent, besides the nut is not as perfect. He had planted his trees the ordinary distance apart, but by cutting out every other tree, found his yield much greater.

The California Walnut Growers' Association quoted the following prices in 1918:

No. 1 soft shell.....	28	cents
No. 2 soft shell.....	25	cents
Fancy budded	31½	cents
Standard budded	29	cents
Jumbos	31½	cents

The value of the 1919 crop for Orange County was estimated at $5,750,000.

The monthly bulletin of the State Commission of Horticulture for April, 1919, says: "More walnuts are raised in California than in any other state or country in the world." Table XI in the same bulletin gives the acreage and production of walnuts by counties in 1909 and 1918. The figures for the latter year only are quoted and for those counties only that produce a million or more pounds of nuts, as follows:

County	Acres in Bearing	Average Pounds per Acre	Production in Pounds
Los Angeles	15,572	757	11,794,000
Orange	12,350	1,283	15,849,000
Santa Barbara	4,500	789	3,551,000
Ventura	11,334	678	7,688,700
The State	48,520	829	40,230,680

Let the people of Orange County rejoice and be glad that California produces more walnuts than any other state or country in the world, and that Orange County produces sixty-two per cent more of nuts per acre than Santa Barbara County, its nearest competitor, and thirty-four per cent larger crop than Los Angeles County, its nearest competitor in quantity, notwithstanding its twenty-six per cent less acres in bearing.

CHAPTER XXXIV

FARM BUREAU REPORT

By Harold E. Wahlberg

The Orange County Farm Bureau is just now closing its second year, which has been one of numerous activities and county-wide interest. Although located in a county of intensive agricultural industry, a county well supplied with numerous other organizations, marketing, political, social and others, this infant organization has made noteworthy strides notwithstanding. At the time of the last annual report the membership of the County Farm Bureau of Orange County numbered 704. During the past year several have fallen out, and still more have been added, making a total at this writing of 827. This membership is distributed throughout the county among thirteen Farm Centers, as follows:

Anaheim	73	La Habra	83
Buena Park	76	San Juan Capistrano.....	23
El Modena	30	Tustin	65
Fullerton	108	Villa Park	61
Garden Grove	73	West Orange	39
Harper	66	Wintersburg	51
Yorba Linda.....		79

During the early part of the present year a systematic membership campaign was conducted under the leadership of the Farm Advisor, assisted by membership committees in each of the Centers. It is planned to have another membership drive in the early part of next year, with the end in view of doubling the present membership.

Owing to the fact that the Farm Bureau has been a new organization in the county, and owing to the large number of other organizations and attractions which exist in this highly developed community, the Farm Bureau found existence in its early history rather doubtful but, with the cooperation of a strong Board of Directors, who have encouraged the Farm Advisor from the very beginning, the institution has made great strides during the past year, and has established for itself a permanent home in the hearts and needs of the farmers of the county. There has been a continuous and untiring campaign of education to bring the farmer of this highly developed county to the appreciation of his need of such an organization as represented by the Farm Bureau, but now that it has established a firm foothold, there is no doubt in the minds of the officers of the organization that the Farm Bureau will become stronger year by year, and become the organization through which the farmers of the county will obtain their due representation and voice their sentiments as they have never been able to do before. Especially, with the organization of a State Farm Bureau Federation, do the Farm Bureau members feel that their organization in this county, as well as throughout the state, is going to help solve the large problems and issues facing agricultural interests, and it is this one step in the experience and development of the Farm Bureau work that we feel will insure the permanency of the organization. Its mission as far as Orange County is concerned will be to take up the larger issues of legislation and representation among the other great classes of the state and nation. It is on this strong argument, as well as the projection of local county projects, that the next campaign for membership will be based.

The average farmer of this county is a man of education and business ability, especially among the citrus growers, where we find a large percentage of doctors.

educators and professional men, and necessarily the Farm Bureau has been called upon to present highly specialized subjects in its monthly meetings, and for this reason it is most urgent that the University, the Experiment Station and the U. S. Department of Agriculture be called upon to meet this specialized demand. It is not possible for the County Agent to become so specialized in all the industries of the county, which include orange growing, lemon growing, sugar beet, bean and truck crop growing, besides the many other highly specialized minor industries which have developed in the county. In order to do justice to the work, therefore, the Farm Advisor deems it necessary to meet these special demands by calling upon experts of the various state and government departments, which is a condition that has to be met by most of the southern counties of this state where the crops grown are so highly specialized.

Agriculturally speaking, Orange County may be divided into two main sections; the northern third specializes almost entirely on citrus fruits and walnuts, while the southern two-thirds is devoted to growing beans, sugar beets, grains, as well as dairying. As far as the Farm Bureau is concerned with relation of these two divisions, the interests and demands on the Farm Advisor of these respective parts are widely different, and it has been his aim to meet them accordingly.

The high values of farming lands of this county, ranging from $200 to $5,000 per acre, make intensive farming necessary. Double cropping is the general rule on most of the lands devoted to annual crops. The citrus sections present many highly specialized problems, including soil fertilizers, control of tree diseases, including gummosis, scaly bark, oak rot fungus; control of orchard insects and pests, irrigation, drainage, cover cropping, pruning, rejuvenation of old trees, bud selection and numerous other phases. The Farm Bureau is endeavoring to meet these problems every day by educational meetings, field demonstrations and personal visits to the farm.

In the southern farming section a wide range of conditions and problems confronts the farmer, the most important of which are alkali reclamation, drainage, irrigation, moisture conservation, soil and crop tests, seed selection and weed eradication. Like other counties in this portion of the state, Orange County presents agricultural problems of more or less local character. Projects which are proposed for general California conditions are not in main applicable to our local conditions. For example, our climatic and moisture conditions do not favor the growing of wheat; stock raising is carried on in a very limited way; sheep and hogs have not found much favor because of the scarcity of feed, as well as higher returns brought by other crops. On the other hand, any project relating to the increase of citrus yields, bean or beet crops, have received the heartiest reception.

The Farm Bureau and the Farm Advisor are endeavoring to cooperate with all the farm industries of the county, bringing to their attention the latest information on the various projects involved. This is being done by means of practical field demonstrations, showing the application of methods, or results brought about by scientific application. Excursions have been a popular means of bringing the Orange County farmer in touch with the best agricultural practices. The Farm Bureau has conducted several excursions to the Citrus Experiment Station at Riverside, as well as local county excursions pointing out the best practices of practical farmers.

Another educational feature of the Farm Bureau work is the publication of a Farm Bureau Weekly, which is incorporated in the largest paper in the county. During the first year, the Farm Bureau issued a standard sized Farm Bureau Monthly, which reached only the membership of the Farm Bureau. In order to bring the purpose of this organization before a larger number of readers, the Board of Directors proposed a plan of supplying agricultural news items, Farm Bureau write-ups and other material of special interest to the farmers of the county, to the management of the Santa Ana Register, which has the largest circulation of the county, approximately 6,000 subscribers. By incorporating the Farm Bureau news in this paper each Wednesday of the week, the Directors of the Farm Bureau feel that the Farm Bureau will get a much larger publicity for information which it can disseminate, which will be of greater influence throughout the county, resulting from the increased circulation.

From time to time the County Itinerants are called together by the Farm Advisor for the purpose of discussing the correlation of the various departments. These conferences include the County Horticultural Commissioner, County Librarian, County School Superintendent, Forest Supervisor, County Sealer of Weights and the Farm Advisor. The County Horticultural Commissioner and the County Farm Advisor have cooperated very closely with the extension of their work throughout the county, inasmuch as a large portion of the work of the Farm Advisor is with the horticultural interests of the county.

When the Pacific Telephone Company raised its rates in March and May, 1919, and also discontinued the free toll service between nearby towns, the Farm Bureau initiated a movement to organize a county-wide mutual telephone association, through which they hoped to lower the rates, get more satisfactory service, and give a county-wide free toll exchange. After considerable agitation through the Farm Centers of the county, committees were appointed representing each district to work out a plan of organization. They soon got the business men of the county interested in this movement and, together with the Associated Chambers of Commerce, the Farm Bureau has appointed an Executive Committee and retained attorneys, who have obtained a state charter and county franchise for the organization of a county mutual telephone association. The name of this organization is known as the "Farmers and Merchants Association." The committee has had to surmount many obstacles during the year in order to meet the opposition created by the telephone monopolists and the Railroad Commission, but it feels now that it has progressed far enough along to start actual construction and operation. According to present plans the first unit of the exchange will be constructed at Garden Grove. The Farm Center of Garden Grove is raising funds for the construction of this unit. It is expected that this will be extended over the entire county. The committees have worked out a feasible plan of finance, which may be paid out in monthly installments by the telephone users. When the organization and construction have been completed there will be approximately 10,000 phones in the system.

As was reported in the last annual report of the Farm Advisor, considerable effort had been made by the Farm Bureau in proposing legislation for the conservation of large quantities of water which are being annually wasted through the artesian belts of Orange County and other artesian sections of the state. The legislative committee of the Farm Bureau compiled a bill, with the assistance of its attorneys, which was presented by the assemblyman of this district, referred to the conservation committee of both the House and the Senate, and brought on the legislative floors several times during the session of the last legislature. The Farm Bureau sent delegations to Sacramento to work in the interests of this conservation law, Assembly Bill No. 6, but were met with a strong lobby from the opposing elements, backed by the wealthy gun clubs of the state. The bill met with a defeat of forty-two to twenty-five. This defeat, however, has only increased the determination of the Farm Bureau members of this county to see the same law through at the next legislature, and experience during the past year will give them better preparation for a continued fight. It is expected that this will be one of the issues taken up by the legislative committee of the State Federation of Farm Bureaus, as it is one of paramount importance in the arid regions of this state where water is of such high value and importance.

A movement is on foot at the present time by agricultural interests of the southern counties for the conservation of winter precipitation and the protection of the watersheds from which the irrigation water from our rivers and the underground strata originate. The Farm Bureau is lending its moral and financial assistance with the other organizations of the county in bringing about a practical plan of conserving and storing the winter waters by means of retaining dams and reforestation. This is one of the vital issues before the county at the present time.

Realizing the need of better transportation facilities, and the great demand that the future will make on eastern shipments, the farmers of the county, including the membership of the Farm Bureau, have assisted materially in passing the recent County Bond Issue for the purpose of developing Newport Harbor, the water shipping point of Orange County. Citrus associations and other marketing associations of the county are planning an immense development in eastern shipments of fruits, walnuts, beans and other products. With the development of the local harbor, direct steamer shipments can be made from this county to eastern points through the Panama Canal.

Considerable educational work through the Farm Centers of the fruit sections has been given for the purpose of acquainting the producer with the requirements of the new standardization fruit law which specifies the quality of all fruits as to color, ripeness, blemishes, size, etc. This law was created for the purpose of putting a better quality of fruit on the market, and protecting the consumer. The grower is given a standard to go by, and in most cases he will get a better price for his product, although there will be more waste than under the old system. However, this waste may be utilized for by-products.

During the year a systematic Rodent Control campaign was carried on by the Horticultural Commissioner, cooperating with the Farm Centers located in the general farming and grain sections. Considerable publicity work was carried on by the Farm Bureau, and quantities of poison sold through this office. As a result the squirrel pest has been greatly decreased. The campaign has been very efficient and many thousands of dollars' worth of crops saved as a result.

There are now about ten boys' clubs in the county under the direct supervision of Smith-Lever Agricultural teachers of the high schools. Several more clubs are contemplated for the coming year. These clubs are located at Huntington Beach and Fullerton. During the past year the Huntington Beach club boys have been raising pure-bred hogs very successfully. In some instances they have taken the lead in hog raising in the neighborhood. The Fullerton clubs have just been organized, and it is expected that they will take up pure-bred hog raising and home gardens. Two boys were sent to the State Conference of Agricultural Clubs at Davis in October. We have found that parents have become interested in Farm Bureau work through the boys who participated in agricultural club work. By extension of agricultural club work in the county it is hoped to influence a larger Farm Bureau membership. The club boys, during the year, have participated in a number of agricultural exhibits, showing the products of their work. The future for the club work in Orange County looks very bright.

The Farm Advisor has assisted seventy-two boys in growing home gardens. A Home Garden Campaign was started through the schools in the county in the early part of this year. The agricultural teachers in charge have asked the direct cooperation of the Farm Advisor. Seventy-two gardens were carried through the year. In some cases the boys or girls keeping these gardens realized fair profits, which have encouraged the work more than any other feature in its connection. Another Home Garden Campaign is being outlined by the Farm Advisor and the agricultural teachers in the county for the ensuing year.

During the year the Farm Bureau has participated in two fairs, the Orange County Fair at Huntington Beach and the Southern California Fair at Riverside. At both of these fairs, booths were maintained by the Farm Bureau, giving information concerning the agricultural extension work in the county and offering information to the many farmers calling at the booth. This feature has proven to be not only of educational value to the farmer, but also has meant considerable publicity for the Farm Bureau. The Directors have approved of making this a permanent, annual event.

A large area of the agricultural lands of the southern and western part of the county is subject to the rise of alkaline salts and high water table. The Farm Bureau has pointed out the best methods of meeting this situation through the installation of drainage systems. Numerous Center meetings have been devoted to the discussion of drainage, special meetings have been called, committees appointed, and as a result four districts are in process of organization, namely: Buena Park, Cypress, Buaro and Garden Grove. The Farm Advisor has called upon the Division of Soil Technology of the University for information and assistance in the organization of these districts, to which this department very nicely responded. The acreages involved in the above districts are as follows: Buena Park, 8,000 acres; Cypress, 4,000 acres; Buaro, 1,000 acres; Garden Grove, 4,000 acres.

Orange County is one of the pioneers in the state for drainage work, there being already six or seven drainage districts in operation. With the intensive use of irrigation waters over the large areas in this county, the need of drainage would become more and more imperative. Investigational data taken in several districts of the county show that the surface water table is gradually rising, and as a consequence the alkaline salts are accumulating in great quantities year by year. In order to establish a permanent form of agriculture in the irrigated districts, the Farm Bureau is endeavoring to emphasize the use of drains for the carrying off of excessive waters and carrying away the alkaline salts in solution. Drainage has been one of the strong projects of the Farm Bureau, which is justifying its existence and showing the farmer the benefits which might be derived from such an organization. It is the accomplishment of practical projects of this kind that will bring the Farm Bureau closer to the practical farmer.

With the rising values of land in the Huntington Beach Mesa District, the farmers and property owners there have come to see the need of more intensive farming operations, but in order to bring this about they see the necessity of a better irrigation system and more water. At their request the Farm Bureau has called several meetings for the purpose of getting the sentiments of the people on the formation of an Irrigation District. A splendid source of water has been located in the near vicinity, the water rights of which have been filed on by a Farm Bureau Committee. The district is in the process of organization. There has been considerable opposition to the expense involved in the construction of an efficient distributing system, but it will be only a matter of time, after a number of educational meetings, when the farmer of this district will come to realize that a nominal expenditure per acre for the development of water on his land will pay interest in large returns, which he is not now enjoying. This district comprises approximately 3,000 acres. There is a supply of 500 miner's inches that can be used for distributing over this system. The approximate cost of construction will be about $100 per acre.

Although the grain industry is small in Orange County, there is some hazard from fire during the dry season. There are about 20,000 acres of barley and wheat, not to mention the thousands of acres of grazing land, that need fire protection. The Farm Bureau is trying to emphasize the importance of diminishing this hazard by providing efficient rural fire fighting apparatus and establishing them at strategic points.

Besides the regular monthly Center meetings held at each Center, other special courses of meetings are planned for the edification of certain special subjects. In February, 1919, the Farm Bureau cooperated with the State Department of Education in staging a tractor school which operated three weeks. The first two weeks were devoted to class and shop instruction, the last week to field operations. An attendance of 250 enrolled. A citrus and walnut growers' institute was arranged for December, to occupy a week, and was held at the Fullerton Union high school.

The Farm Advisor calls upon experts from the various government and state institutions to meet the demands of the growers of these specialized crops. During the year 213 meetings and demonstrations were held, at which 11,573 persons attended. Men from the College of Agriculture and Department of Agriculture assisted in seventy-three of these meetings.

Seeing is believing. Never was this truer than in its application to Farm Bureau work. The success of agricultural extension is in proportion to the number of practical field demonstrations which carry the message home to the farmer. With this in view the Farm Advisor planned and conducted eighty-nine field demonstrations during the past year. Five thousand seven hundred sixty-four farmers came to these field meetings. As the work progresses these meetings are becoming more popular, as is shown by the larger average attendance at demonstrations this year than last. Among the subjects taken up during the year were:

Eight cover crop demonstration plots were located in the citrus belt, covering 275 acres. Five meetings were held with an attendance of 129. These plots show the effect of cover crops on the physical condition of the soil, the relation of time of seeding, amount of seed and amount of water used, to the yield.

The Bureau of Plant Industry has given assistance in diseases of the potato and tomato. Demonstrations, showing the nature of various diseases, especially the Mosaic, Rhizactonia and other fungus diseases in both crops have been held. The potato industry is very small in the county, but tomato growing for seed is reaching large proportions.

Fusarium in peppers has been shown to be a soil disease requiring rotation of crops. This disease is becoming more serious each year. The pepper acreage is growing—about 6,000 acres this year.

Bean seed selection is one of our most important projects. Growers in the past have given too little attention to the quality and pedigree of the seed from which they expect large returns. The attention of the farmer is being brought to the need of better seed, and selection from vigorous, prolific plants.

A cow testing department of the Bureau has been organized. There are fourteen members with 502 cows. The cow tester visits and tests each herd once a month. The County Agent is planning a series of dairymen's meetings to bring about a closer relationship between the dairies of the county and encourage the industry as much as possible. The expansion of the dairy industry is one of the solutions of the fertilizer problems in the citrus belt. The time is coming when the farmer will consider the stock farm a necessary adjunct to fruit growing more than he appreciates now.

Five commercial poultry plants have been located for demonstration purposes in the county to cooperate with the Poultry Department of the University in keeping data as to egg production, feeds, etc. During the year there have been thirteen culling demonstrations. There are 11,000 birds included in the five demonstration plants. The poultry industry in the county is growing and is deserving of considerable attention in the way of flock improvement. The farmers are showing considerable interest in these culling demonstrations, and as a result we expect to improve the average flock considerably. Three poultry disease demonstrations were held at which an expert from the Pathological Department of the State College of Agriculture demonstrated the treatment for chicken pox.

As has been explained in a former paragraph, drainage is one of the most important projects before the Farm Bureau. Eight drainage demonstrations have been held and four special meetings. The area in the four drainage districts under way of organization is 18,000 acres. The Farm Advisor has continually emphasized the necessity and advantage of drainage in reclaiming alkaline salts, the only practical means of properly carrying away the salts from the land. About one-fourth of the farm visits made by the Farm Advisor have been in relation to the problem of reclaiming alkaline soils.

The economical use of water and obtaining the maximum duty of irrigation water is receiving considerable attention from the farmer in Orange County. Water is the limiting factor in the production of crops here. It is largely pumped and brought in through the expensive canal system, and therefore it behooves the farmers to arrange it so as to obtain its maximum duty, because of the high value of this water. In many cases the Farm Advisor has tested soils for moisture and found that either too much or too little had been used, owing to the wrong method of irrigation, or the time allowed for irrigation. The use of a soil auger has been advised in every orchard visited, to determine the depth of moisture, penetration, and the length of time for each application. Four soil moisture demonstrations were held during the year, at which the use of the soil auger, various methods of water application, and the time used in running the water in furrows or checks were exemplified.

With the aid of the Farm Account Expert from the University, 102 books have been started by the Farm Accountant or the Farm Advisor personally. It was found that most of the farmers of the county are employing one method or another of keeping books, but in most cases their systems are more complicated than the one suggested by the University. Eight Farm Account Demonstration meetings were held during the year, at which the farmer was instructed in the value of bookkeeping and the simplicity of the method recommended by the University. The Farm Advisor expects to place at least fifty books more in the county during the next two months.

It is becoming a fact now that bud selection in trees is as important as cow testing in a dairy. The trees have to be bred up as well as stock, in order to obtain the best returns. The Farm Bureau has been alert to this necessity and has been guiding the orchardist along that line. Three orchards have been located by the Farm Advisor for the purpose of showing the value of bud selection, marking trees, and tree performance records. The citrus men of the county, especially, are much concerned in this project. In going over the county, we can pick out one orchard after another in which the trees are not bringing the desired returns. Although every care has been given them in orchard management they do not respond. Such trees in most cases have been developed from buds taken from non-bearing stock. The Farm Bureau expects to cooperate with the Plant Physiologist of the Department of Agriculture through the coming year and bring before the farmers of the county all records and data that may be furnished by the plots conducted by the Department.

Among the most popular demonstrations that have been conducted by the Farm Advisor during the year are the pruning demonstrations, inasmuch as a large portion of the county is devoted to horticultural interests. Six citrus pruning demonstrations, nine deciduous pruning demonstrations, and one walnut demonstration were held during the year. At some of these demonstrations members of the Pomological Department and the Citrus Experiment Station assisted. In the deciduous work the long system of pruning has been advocated over the old system of heading back. Demonstration trees have been located in four orchards of the county, where the comparison between the two systems may be observed.

Two demonstrations were held showing the effect of arsenical poisoning in the control of the morning glory. These demonstrations have not given satisfactory results. The application of liquid arsenical poisoning has not proven to give any better results than a very deep cultivation. However, we have been able to show the farmer that he may use the poisoning as a substitute for cultivation under our conditions here, but that he must not allow the growing plant to develop above the surface of the ground. If he would substitute spraying for cultivation, he must do the same with absolute regularity so as to finally choke the life out of the weed in question.

The new liquid gas method of fumigation is revolutionizing the fumigation methods of the county. The Farm Bureau has been instrumental in disseminating the latest information, both chemical and field methods, to the citrus growers of the county. The members of the Experiment Station Staff and United States Department of Agriculture, having this work in charge, have cooperated fully with the Farm Bureau during the year in promoting this new system. Two special fumigation meetings were held at which the new method of applying the gas was shown.

The walnut growers of the county are facing a very serious pest in the codling moth, inasmuch as fifty per cent of the fruit of some groves has been infested. The Experiment Station has been working on a dust spray for the purpose of controlling the walnut worm. Six demonstrations were held during the year, showing the method of mixing and applying the arsenical dust spray for this purpose.

A very destructive pest infesting the beet and garden truck fields of the county is the soil nematode. The Farm Bureau is conducting a demonstration plot in the sugar beet section in which substitute crops are being planted for the purpose of demonstrating their resistance to the nematode, and also their adaptability to the soil and climatic conditions of the county. With the cooperation of the Bureau of Plant Industry, it is hoped to work out a satisfactory system of rotation by which the nematode infestation may be overcome.

A very satisfactory tractor demonstration was held in connection with the annual meeting of the Farm Bureau. Ten tractors were on the ground, showing many desirable features, and also demonstrating their class of work. Two thousand two hundred people visited this tractor show. The Farm Advisor is also arranging three special meetings at which repairing and the upkeep of the farm tractor will be discussed by University experts.

During the last days of the war, last fall and winter, the Farm Bureau appealed to the barley growers of the county to plant a larger acreage to wheat. The farmers responded nobly. Instead of the average planting of 700 acres in the county as usual, they came forth with 4,400 acres, an increase of 600 per cent. The use of Defiance wheat has been urged, as it is quite rust resistant. The valley in which our wheat is raised is very subject to rust disease. The yield per acre in Orange County was very encouraging this year, in spite of the dry season generally experienced.

The Citrus Experiment Station has made a survey of irrigation waters in Orange County for the purpose of determining the prevalence and degree of alkalinity both in well waters and rivers from which waters are taken. The Farm Advisor gave considerable time to collecting samples and getting the farmers and water companies in general to take advantage of this survey. Some injurious water was located through this analysis, and farmers warned not to use same in large quantities for irrigation purposes.

The high values of land in the county make it practically impossible for the farmer to borrow to the extent that he may need help. He is limited to a $10,000 loan on a valuation not to exceed $400 per acre. This amount should be greatly increased, at least on citrus and walnut property. The Farm Advisor has assisted in placing six loans with the Farm Loan Bank during the year.

The following is a numerical recapitulation of the Farm Advisor's activities during 1919: Miles traveled by auto, 13,380; miles traveled by railroad, 1,495; office calls on agent, 1,362; letters written, 1,230; circulars and notices, 12,649; farm visits, 1,101; meetings and demonstrations, 213; total attendance, 11,573; telephone calls, 1,195.

The Directors of the Orange County Farm Bureau have been the staunch support of the County Agent in his work. Whatever success has been accomplished by the Farm Bureau has been due to their unqualified cooperation and determined efforts. Credit is also due the splendid cooperation of the Extension and Station Staff of the College of Agriculture, and also the Department of Agriculture.

CHAPTER XXXV

POPULATION AND VALUATIONS

The question about the growth of a community is always an interesting one for the inhabitants thereof. Hence various methods have been devised, and are in vogue in all communities, for estimating population at other times than when a federal census is pending. Such estimates are based on the school census, on the registration of voters, or on the names in a directory. Provision also has been made in the state law for a special census to be taken at intervals under control of the board of supervisors. To show the unreliability of such estimates, and even of a special census, let us give a few recent examples, as follows:

Just prior to the harbor bond election, June 10, 1919, the county clerk published the number of voters registered in each precinct in the county. Applying the usual rule for estimating population from the registration, of two and a half people to each voter, the number of inhabitants in each incorporated city in the county would appear to be as follows:

Population of Cities

Names of Cities	Registration	Population
Anaheim	1,998	4,995
Brea	432	1,080
Fullerton	1,602	4,005
Huntington Beach	745	1,863
Newport Beach	557	1,393
Orange	2,310	5,775
Santa Ana	7,224	18,060
Seal Beach	286	715
Stanton.	161	403

If the total number of voters in the county, as registered by party affiliations, were multiplied by two and a half, the product would make the population of the county appear to be as follows:

Population of County

Names of Parties	1919	1918
Republican	12,169	11,715
Progressive	144	141
Democratic	5,679	5,477
Prohibition	1,702	1,680
Socialist	511	500
Decline to state	2,861	2,565
Total Registration	23,066	22,078
Population of County.....	57,665	55,195

The opportunity to compare an estimate of population with an actual count of the same is quite rare, for when the people have the count they do not need the estimate. There are, however, two instances in which an indirect comparison may be made, without any intention to flatter or disparage either place. In 1916 a special census of the township of Santa Ana, which is of immense area, disclosed only 16,602 people in the whole township; now three years later the estimate based on registration gives the city itself a population of 18,060. In the same year, 1916, a special census of the city of Anaheim showed a population of 5,163; now three years later the estimate based on registration gives the city covering the same territory, a population of only 4,995. While the city of Santa

Ana has undoubtedly made a good growth in the past three years, it is hard to believe that she made the giant strides indicated by the foregoing figures at a time when the whole country was hampered by the restrictions of war. On the other hand it is absolutely impossible to believe that the city of Anaheim, without disaster of any kind and with all the evidences of prosperity, has actually lost 168 in population during the same three years. These two examples, similar in length of time between the count and the estimate and in the method of making the estimate, will suffice to illustrate, by the opposite results obtained, the uncertainty of estimates of population.

Since the foregoing discussion of estimates of population was written, a census of Anaheim township has been taken, under the authority of the board of supervisors, which credits that township with a population of 9,241. Then, as if to disparage Anaheim's special census and the estimates of both cities, along came the federal census about August 12, 1920, with a population of 6,936 for Anaheim township, instead of 9,241 reported in the special census, and 5,526 for the city of Anaheim, instead of 4,995 given in the estimate on registration, and with a population of 15,485 for the city of Santa Ana, instead of 18,060 given in the estimate on registration.

Most people have heard the old chestnut about the farmer who could count all his pigs except a little black one that wouldn't stand still long enough to be counted. It seems as though the counting of the people living in a given territory would be a comparatively easy task; so it would be, if the censustaker could always find everybody at home when he calls. There are certain data about each person, required in the enumeration, that he alone can give with any degree of accuracy; hence the censustaker must often make a second or third visit before he can secure a personal interview with some of the people. The work of census taking is not so pleasant and profitable as to attract many applicants, for the Government had difficulty in getting enough to fill the positions. However, the field work has been completed and, while the results are not up to the expectations of most people, yet they show a consistent growth all along the line in Orange County.

The population of the county, and of each of the nine incorporated cities, as given by each federal census back to the organization of the county, or at least as far back as each city's record goes, is as follows:

County and Cities	1920	1910	1900	1890
Orange County	61,375	34,436	19,696	13,589
Anaheim	5,526	2,628	1,456	1,273
Brea	1,037
Fullerton	4,415	1,725
Huntington Beach	1,687	815
Newport Beach	898	445
Orange	4,884	2,920	1,216	866
Santa Ana	15,485	8,429	4,933	3,628
Seal Beach	669
Stanton	695

The population of each of the eighteen townships, as given by each federal census back to the organization of the county, or at least as far back as each township's record goes, is as follows:

Townships	1920	1910	1900	1890
Anaheim	6,936	4,051	2,261	2,917
Brea	2,515
Buena Park	947	1,441	995
Fullerton	5,037	4,984	1,719
Huntington Beach	3,363	1,058
Laguna Beach	363
La Habra	1,911
Los Alamitos	620	499	253

Newport Beach	1,300
Orange	8,134	5,430	3,293	2,721

Santa Ana	17,777	11,501	6,680	4,220

Stanton	695
Tustin	1,681
Westminster	4,181	4,023	3,300	1,854
Yorba	563	477	290

Such are the plain figures of the federal census of Orange County and its subdivisions, without comparisons, percentages or qualifications of any kind. Each person can make his own comparisons or percentages, according to the point he wishes to make; but they should not be made in any invidious spirit, for, as Admiral Schley said of the naval victory at Santiago de Cuba, "There's glory enough in it for us all."

"Comparisons are odious," because they are too often made with improper motives, to crow over or sneer at a competitor, without taking into account the real reason for his getting ahead or falling behind in the race. There is, however, a legitimate use of comparison in argument, "to point a moral or adorn a tale." For instance, the comparison of the growth of Anaheim with that of Orange, while they were typical "wet" and "dry" cities respectively, with practically the same area and other similar conditions, was a fair argument against the influence of the saloon upon the growth of a city. Orange, starting behind the "Mother Colony," caught up with and passed her in 1910, and would doubtless have continued in the lead, had the conditions remained the same; but Anaheim, discarding her saloons and securing a sugar factory, together with the development of the oil industry in her vicinity, outstripped Orange in the 1920 census. In like manner the growth of Orange County might be compared with that of Riverside County, its nearest competitor; but the conditions of the two counties are not the same, and the comparison would serve no good purpose.

Perhaps the best way to exhibit the material resources of the county and to show how they have been developed by the people, is to present the valuations of the property in the county and in its principal subdivisions, as fixed by the county assessor for the purpose of taxation.

The present constitution of California, adopted in 1879, started out with the plan of requiring all property, with very few exceptions, to pay taxes for the support of the government. To this end, and to equalize the burden of state taxation pro rata among the counties, it was required that "all taxable property must be assessed at its full cash value." Biennially the legislature adopted one or more amendments to the constitution exempting large blocks of property from taxation. The county assessors throughout the state, in spite of efforts of the state board of equalization to hold assessments up to the constitutional requirement, gradually lowered them to protect their constituents against paying an undue proportion of the state taxes.

An amendment to the state constitution, authorizing the separation of state and local taxation, was adopted by the legislature of 1909, having been under consideration since 1905. This measure does away with the necessity for the same valuations among the counties on account of state taxes, since such taxes have been shifted thereby from taxpayers generally to public service and other corporations. On the other hand, it is immaterial whether assessments are high or low within a single county or district for local taxation, since, if they are high, the tax rate will be low, or vice versa, to raise the necessary amount of money; but, of course, individual holdings within the county or district must be similarly assessed according to the quantity, quality and other conditions of such holdings.

Each county assessor, at least each conscientious, faithful one, being thus practically released from the obligation to assess property at its full cash value, tries to find a happy medium that will produce the necessary amount of taxes without too high a rate and that will appear to all reasonable taxpayers to be fair and just. Hence independent action among the counties must produce variable results as to per cent, even if all could agree on the basis of "full cash value"; but it is safe to say that property is generally assessed away below its market value in all the counties of the state. For instance, the Los Angeles papers, in announcing the amount of the 1920 assessment of their county, claimed that said amount was only forty-two per cent of the real value of the property thus assessed.

Following are the official valuations of the property of Orange County and its principal subdivisions, exclusive of operative property, which consists of public service and other corporations and is reserved for state taxation. What per cent of the full cash value of the property these valuations represent, deponent saith not; but they answer very well as a basis for local taxation.

The foregoing tables of population and valuations tell a wonderful story of Orange County's growth and development in the past thirty years. Only where many and varied natural resources abound and where the people are industrious and enterprising could such progress be made. The tables also show that the population and wealth are widely distributed over the county, thereby maintaining the ideal state of a maximum of producers and a minimum of parasites, which condition made France so prosperous before being devastated by war. The people, as a rule, believe in the eternal verities and practice the old-fashioned virtues that make them dependable and good citizens in every way. They, almost without exception, own their homes and other property free of encumbrance, and figuratively fulfill the prophecy of Micah, when he foretold the glory, peace and victory of the church, as follows:

"But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid; for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it."

CHAPTER XXXVI

ANECDOTES AND INCIDENTS

About the year 1894, while the supervisors were discussing the burden of the law library upon the litigants, one of the members got the title twisted into "the lie lawbray"; and so it clung to him to the end of the discussion, in spite of his efforts to correct the lapsus linguae. In like manner, on another occasion, an old gentleman appeared before the board and offered to sell the county a piece of land in which it could bury its "indignant dead." "You mean indigent dead," suggested a supervisor. "No, I mean indignant dead," was the reply; so no further attempt was made at correcting the mispronunciation.

When the Orange County fruit growers had become very much alarmed at the havoc the red scale (a new parasite at that time) was making in the San Gabriel orchards, and questions of quarantine and other methods of protection were under discussion, an aspirant for the position of horticultural commissioner met a member of the board on the street with the peremptory prediction, "Mr. Supervisor, them bugs must go." Suffice it to say that "them bugs" have largely gone, not because of the pronouncement against them, but because of the intelligent, persistent fight against them by the fruit growers—they have been "gassed."

As the supervisors, composing the third board, were making up their lists of trial jurors, in compliance with the orders of the judge of the Superior Court, the member from the Fifth District quietly remarked that it would not do to include any Populists among those selected. "Why not?" asked the member from the Second District, who, though a Democrat, was populistically inclined. "Because," the Fifth member replied, "the law requires persons selected for jury duty to have ordinary intelligence." It is needless to add that this sally provoked a hearty laugh, in which the Second member joined.

Early in the history of Orange County the Bolsa drainage ditch was constructed under the control of the supervisors, as described in the chapter on the celery industry. The two principal objectors to the work were F. R. Hazard and J. L. Holly. They fought the improvement at every step and took their case to the Supreme Court, but all in vain. A few years ago the former supervisor from the Fourth District was introduced to Mrs. Holly at a meeting of the Orange County Veterans' Association and received a rather equivocal greeting. "Armor!" she exclaimed, "I used to think you were the very devil." He replied: "Doubtless you have heard that the devil is not so black as he has been painted. Besides, the development of that section of the county has more than justified the construction of the Bolsa ditch." "Oh, well!" she said, "It's all over now and we'll not quarrel further about it; but it was pretty tough at the time."

Tim Carroll, the inventor of the beet dump and pioneer nurseryman of Anaheim, went before the board of supervisors, sitting as a board of equalization, to get the assessment, which Jake Ross had put upon his nursery stock, reduced. He said his stock consisted of old stubs of palm, pampas grass and left-over trees that were not worth the cost of clearing the ground. The assessor pointed out that there were enough salable trees in the nursery to justify the assessment without taking account of the worthless stock; so the board refused to make any reduction. In taking his leave, the redoubtable Tim expressed his opinion of the personnel of the board by remarking, "The whole foive of ye haven't sinse enough to make one dacent supervisor."

When the supervisors were considering a certain date to which they might adjourn, one of the members objected because that was the date set for President Harrison's visit to Orange County. "What interest can you, a Democrat, have in a Republican president's visit?" a bystander asked. "He's my president," was the dignified answer. The rebuke in those three words silenced all levity and imparted a lesson in good citizenship without preaching. In a republican or representative form of government, the will, or choice, of the majority must be acquiesced in by the minority, in order to avoid factional strife. On the other hand the officer, thus chosen, should sedulously represent the whole people within his jurisdiction. The president, for instance, should so conduct his administration that every citizen, without regard to party affiliation, would instinctively regard him as "my president," and not clannishly as the head of a political party.

In a conversation with the writer over another subject, James McFadden casually mentioned the following incident as a reason why he thought he might have some influence with the editor of the Los Angeles Times in shaping the attitude of the paper toward that subject. Shortly after the Times was started in Los Angeles and had taken its stand against the closed shop, Mr. McFadden met Colonel Otis, its founder and editor, at the seashore and noticed that he seemed quite despondent. On being asked for the reason, Colonel Otis said that the Typographical Union had prejudiced and intimidated the money market against his undertaking so that he could not borrow a dollar and he must have money to keep going until the patronage would meet the expenses. Mr. McFadden immediately offered to loan him the money and the offer was gladly accepted. Thus did a citizen of what is now Orange County help to establish the Los Angeles Times and foster it until able to go alone. Long since has the paper justified the wisdom of its founder, not only in its own marvelous growth, but also in the stupendous growth of its home city, which it has sturdily defended for nearly forty years against the blighting influence of the closed shop. Because of the city's open shop policy, millions of dollars have come to Los Angeles from the East for investment and other millions have left San Francisco and moved thither. Where large amounts of capital are invested in the industries, there thousands of workmen find employment and thus increase the population of the community as well as utilize the capital invested therein. If "he who causes two blades of grass to grow where one grew before is a public benefactor," much more is he who helps to establish institutions and maintain policies that oppose the domination of one class over another but encourage cooperation and helpfulness among all classes, "and on earth peace, good will toward men."

During the term of the second board of supervisors, the people of Anaheim got up a Fourth of July celebration and invited the board of supervisors to participate in the parade, which at that early date would consist entirely of carriages and other vehicles drawn by horses. When the marshal, who was superintending the loading of vehicles and getting them into line, looked for the barouche that was designed for the supervisors, he found that it had been appropriated by some other dignitaries, so he bundled the supervisors into the first conveyance that came to hand. After the parade had taken up its line of march, an urchin called out from the sidewalk, "Oh, look at that bunch of stiffs in the undertaker's runabout!" Immediately Supervisor Schorn had the driver stop the team, and the whole line of march, while he scrambled to the ground and disappeared among the pedestrians.

A county free library was established by the board of supervisors on December 9, 1919.

For about fifteen years the Pacific States (formerly the Sunset) Telephone Company fought the Home Telephone Company to prevent it from entering Orange County, or from increasing its business after it had entered. Finally, with the consent of the Railroad Commission, it succeeded in merging the two companies, that is, in absorbing the Home Company. The Railroad Commission also permitted the Pacific Company to raise its rates and to cut out the free switching between exchanges. When, however, the Federal Government took over the wires and granted the same privileges to the telephone company, the state commission withdrew its consent and tried to maintain its control; but the courts ruled against it. While these questions were pending, the telephone company added twenty-five cents to each phone rate, making it $1.75 per month for a residence phone and $2.75 for a business phone. This increase probably netted the company not less than $1,800 per month, or $21,600 per year, in this county alone, without including the gain from the Home subscribers at the basic rates of $1.50 for residence and $2.50 for business phones. Such an increase of rates and subscribers ought to have satisfied the company; but no sooner was the Federal Government's control of the wires established than the company added another quarter to the residence rate and a whole dollar to the business rate, making them respectively $2.00 and $3.75, under the plea that such were the Government's orders and the company could not do otherwise. Many individuals ordered their phones out and others exercised their constitutional right "to freely assemble together to consult for the common good." After much consultation they decided to form a mutual telephone company, to be operated without profit, and applied to the secretary of state for a charter. Meanwhile lists were circulated and signed by more than half the company's subscribers ordering their phones out, some unconditionally and others when the new company was ready to give them service. The charter was refused under the advice of the attorney-general, on the ground that the new company is not a stock company, as he understands the law requires such a company to be. A state charter was finally secured, however, and the first unit of the exchange is to be constructed at Garden Grove.

The forming of districts for various purposes enables communities to secure some of the benefits of city government without taking over the whole responsibility. For instance, in going over the supervisors' minutes, the number of districts, other than school districts, was found to be approximately as follows, viz.: Five drainage districts, one sanitary district, seven lighting districts, one irrigation district, three library districts and seven protection districts. Where considerable money is needed to carry out the purpose for which a district was organized it is generally obtained by bonding the district. Take the irrigation district in the foregoing list as an example. The Newport Mesa Irrigation District contains nearly 700 acres of land on the Newport mesa between the boulevard and the bluffs overlooking the Santa Ana River. This tract was dependent on a neighboring water system for irrigating water up to the season of 1919. Being unable to get water any longer from that source, the land owners were in a quandary as to how to save their trees and grow their crops, when Stephen Townsend of Long Beach came to their relief. He advised them to form a district and while they were doing so he put in a complete water system for them, consisting of a well, engine and pump near the river and steel pipelines to deliver the water all over the tract. When the district was formed, the people voted to issue $50,000 bonds with which to reimburse Mr. Townsend and thereby become owners of their water system. These bonds sold under competitive bids at a premium of $1,578 to the Lumberman's Trust Company of San Francisco.

A small district was formed November 4, 1919, called the Fullerton Irrigation District, and a full set of officers elected.

CHAPTER XXXVII

SOIL, CLIMATE AND WATER

Following is the summary of the soil survey of the Anaheim Area of California, made by government engineers in 1916, but just published in 1919 by the U. S. Department of Agriculture:

The soil survey of the Anaheim area covers the most important agricultural part of Orange County, California, with smaller parts of adjoining counties. The area lies southeast of Los Angeles and fronts on the Pacific Ocean. It is bounded on the north and east by hilly sections that are largely too rough and broken for agricultural use. It is joined on the north by the Pasadena area and on the west by the Los Angeles area, which are covered by other soil surveys.

The Anaheim area embraces three physiographic divisions—the inclosing broken hills on the north and east, remnants of somewhat elevated old valley surfaces or marine terraces, which lie along the base of the hills or border the ocean front and, as the most extensive division, broad, rather smooth and gently sloping alluvial fans.

Elevations range from sea level in some coastal sections to a maximum of 1,600 feet in the hill portions. A large part of the area lies below 100 feet and most of it below 200 feet in elevation.

The Santa Ana River crosses the main part of the area, and the San Gabriel River crosses the western section. These streams directly drain only a small part of the area, owing to their built-up position, which makes the entrance of lateral streams difficult. Santiago Creek drains a part of the survey and flows into the Santa Ana River, but the greater part of the run-off from the surrounding hills and main valley slopes is carried largely by minor independent streams.

The area is thickly populated, and agriculture is by far the most important industry. According to the census reports the area in 1910 had a population of something less than 40,000, but the population has greatly increased in recent years. About sixty per cent of the population reside in the cities or towns, less than one-half living under strictly rural conditions. Santa Ana, with a population of 8,429 in 1910, is the largest city. There are a number of other cities and towns in the area ranging from several hundred to about 3,000 inhabitants.

Transportation facilities are good.

The area is well supplied with schools, telephones, and other modern conveniences.

The climate is very pleasant and favorable to the production of a wide range of agricultural products. The average annual rainfall ranges from ten to fifteen inches in different parts of the survey, while the mean annual temperature averages about 64 degrees Fahrenheit. Danger from frost influences the distribution of citrus and other fruits, the higher land being least susceptible to damage. A growing season of about ten months is available for sensitive crops, while the hardy crops can be grown throughout the year.

The rainfall is confined to the winter months, and this has an important bearing on agricultural practices and renders irrigation necessary for many fruits and field crops which make their greatest growth during the summer season.

The agriculture of the area is highly developed. Most of the products are highly specialized and are grown for export rather than for local consumption. Chief among the products are oranges, lemons, and walnuts, with some deciduous fruits. Beans are an important field crop, and large quantities of sugar beets are utilized by local factories. Grain and grain hay cover large acreages. Subsidiary crops and industries, such as truck crops, dairying, and poultry raising, are locally important. The region is one of high average land prices.

The soils of the Anaheim area fall mainly in three general groups—residual soils, old valley filling or coastal plain soils, and recent alluvial soils.

The first group includes those soils derived in place by the weathering and disintegration of consolidated rocks, and usually occupies rolling or mountainous areas. Tillable areas are used largely for grain and hay production. The residual soils are inextensive. They are classed with the Altamont and the Diablo series.

The soils derived from old valley filling or coastal plain deposits are relatively extensive. They are grouped in the Ramona, Montezuma, and Antioch series. These series are intermediate in elevation between the recent alluvial soils and the residual soils. The Montezuma and Antioch soils are not important agriculturally. They are irrigated to only a small extent, being used principally for dry-farm crops, mainly beans and grain. The Ramona soils are irrigated in many places, and large plantings of citrus fruits have been made. Most of the orchards are still young.

The recent-alluvial soils are the most important, both in extent and agricultural use. These soils are in places subject to overflow or accumulation of alkali, but, on the whole, are very valuable farming types, having a smooth surface, a deep, friable soil, and subsoil conditions favoring deep-rooted crops. The facilities for irrigation are good. These soils are grouped in the Hanford, Yolo, Dublin, and Chino series.

Several groups of miscellaneous material also are mapped, one of which, muck and peat, consisting of cumulose deposits, is productive when drained. The other miscellaneous types, tidal marsh, coastal beach and dunesand, riverwash, and rough, broken and stony land are practically all nonagricultural.

Irrigation is an important factor in the agriculture of the area, as most of the fruits and many other crops require it. In 1910 there were 2,215 irrigated farms, or about seventy per cent of the total number in Orange County. The recent alluvial soils are most extensively irrigated, although important parts of the old valley filling and coastal plain soils also are watered.

Parts of this survey are affected by a high water table and consequent injurious accumulations of alkali. Most of the alkali land is tilled and used mainly for the production of sugar beets. Considerable effort has been made to reclaim the alkali lands and make them more productive.

While the technical classification of the soils of Orange County, as given in the foregoing survey, may not be of much practical benefit to the tillers of said soils, the general information furnished therewith about them and other characteristics of the county is worth while to all who have not observed the facts and undergone the experiences for themselves. The soils of the county, composed of particles of air-and-water-slaked rocks washed down from the mountains, are of infinite variety and limitless depth without any hardpan intervening. The writer has removed pepper roots from a well twenty feet distant from the tree whose roots penetrated the brick curb thirty feet below the surface. He also has traced alfalfa roots to a depth of twenty-one feet. Forty-five years ago "Prophet Potts" declared such soils were absolutely inexhaustible; but now we know better. The soils, when first precipitated on the mesas and lowlands as disintegrated rocks, had no humus, or vegetable mold in them; but the growth and decay of vegetation, once started and continued for ages, has supplied this ingredient to the top soil for a depth of several feet. Now, as this humus is being exhausted, the farmers and orchardists find it necessary to supply cover crops, straws and other vegetable matter to be turned into humus. Thus, with a good foundation to build on, the soil of Orange County can be kept inexhaustible by supplying it with the proper plant food when needed.

Climate is "the temperature and meteorological conditions of a country." Temperature is "the state of a body with respect to sensible heat." Meteorology is "the science of the atmosphere and its various phenomena." The atmosphere is "the aeriform fluid surrounding the earth." Hence, for all practical purposes, climate is the temperature of the air of a country. As an illustration of the volatile equalization of temperature, it has been stated that the entrance of a person into a room would immediately raise the temperature of every object in the room. Along the same line and assisting in the equalization of temperature, is the principle of the diffusion of gases, whereby different portions of air from various sources quietly combine and form a compound of mean or average temperature and of less harmful character than either of them might be, if laden with some foul gas from which the other is free. The writer has frequently ridden, after sundown, through a strip of air warmer than the rest of the air through which he was traveling. This air was being warmed by heat radiating from a strip of warmer soil and had not yet mingled with the surrounding air. When this radiating heat is great and from a large area of territory, the heated air above such territory rises and the cooler air rushes in, thereby creating wind, which hastens the equalization of the temperature and the purification of the atmosphere. The latitude of Orange County under a southern sky, its distance from the mountains, snow-capped in winter, and its proximity to the mild Pacific Ocean, the character of its soil for absorbing and radiating the heat of the sun, the direction of its prevailing winds and many other conditions, all tend to modify the extremes of temperature and give to this county an equable climate. Doctor Coyle, moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly at Los Angeles several years ago, turned a neat compliment upon Southern California when he said it was "the land where three hundred and sixty-five days of each year were sunshiny and the rest were unusual."

The chapter on Orange County's Water Supply gives the rainfall of the entire basin of the Santa Ana River for thirty years up to 1900. Following is a table of the rainfall of Orange County from July 1, 1900 to July 1, 1920.

Average annual rainfall for twenty years from 1900 to 1920, 13.81 inches.

Average annual rainfall for fifty years from 1870 to 1920, 13.84 inches.

In the former period, prior to 1900, the average annual rainfall at Orange was 13.87 inches, or six hundredths of an inch more than that of the latter period, since 1900; but it is remarkable that the two averages should come so near together. It shows that, whatever variation there may be in the rainfall from year to year, it averages up like the manna did for the children of Israel: "He that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack." However, much better use has been made of the rainfall in the latter period than in the former. Large quantities of flood waters have been diverted from the streams near their source each winter and run on debris cones and waste land to fill the underground gravel strata and drain later into the streams lower down, or be pumped from the gravel basins for summer irrigation. The number of pumping plants in the county has increased from 509 in 1910 to 1,285 in 1920. In all probability the capacity of the individual pumping plants has increased as well as the number, for the county assessor valued the 1,285 plants at $3,855,000, an average of $3,000 apiece. The effect of this increase in pumping plants is seen in the increase of irrigated land in the county. According to a preliminary report by the Bureau of the Census, there are 86,060 acres of land in Orange County under irrigation. In 1910 the number of irrigated acres was 55,060, which subtracted from the present acreage shows a gain of 31,000 acres, or fifty-six per cent, in the ten years. But in 1910 the number of pumping plants was 509, which subtracted from the present number shows a gain of 776 plants, or 152 per cent, in the same ten years. That is, there has been a greater per cent of gain in pumping plants than in irrigated land; which would prove that the increase in pumping plants was a sufficient cause for the increase in irrigated land.

A number of citizens of San Bernardino, Riverside and Orange counties, realizing that more can be done towards conserving the winter flood waters of the Santa Ana River and preventing damage therefrom to riparian lands near the coast, undertook to form a conservancy district of the entire basin of the stream; but the "Conservancy Act of California" was found to be of doubtful constitutionality and otherwise objectionable. The committee, which had been appointed to devise a plan for the formation of the district, accordingly submitted the question of the sufficiency of the act to Loyal C. Kelley, T. W. Duckworth and L. A. West, district attorneys, respectively, of San Bernardino, Riverside and Orange counties. The opinion of these officials was to the effect that the boards of supervisors have no authority, either singly or collectively, to appropriate and expend money outside of their respective counties for flood control, and that the Conservancy Act of 1919 is unconstitutional, "because of the suffrage qualifications therein contained and because of the basis of assessment therein set forth." Whether these objections will be overcome by future legislation remains to be seen. Meantime the good work of the Tri-Counties Reforestation Committee, with federal and state aid supplemented by the water companies, can continue to protect the watershed of the stream from destructive fires and to store its flood waters in the debris cones and gravel beds for summer irrigation. And the wells and pumping plants, which have multiplied more than two and a half times in the last decade, will continue to increase in number and usefulness.

Thus with the three great requisites for success in agriculture and horticulture, viz.: Fertile soil, equable climate and abundant water, Orange County is forging ahead with giant strides, as note the increase in annual productions from $12,294,694, reported by the county statistician in 1910, to $77,152,500, reported by the Santa Ana Chamber of Commerce in 1919.

BIOGRAPHICAL

W. H. Spurgeon

BIOGRAPHICAL

WILLIAM H. SPURGEON.—The family represented by William H. Spurgeon, the founder of Santa Ana, is of English extraction, and has been identified with America for several generations. His father, Granville Spurgeon, a native of Bourbon County, Ky., engaged in agricultural pursuits in Henry County, that state, for some years and from there removed to Bartholomew County, Ind., in 1830, and became a pioneer farmer of the Hoosier state. Ten years later he took his family to Clark County, Mo., and there, too, undertook the development of a farm from raw prairie. Admirably qualified by nature for the task of pioneering, he led a busy life in the midst of frontier surroundings that would have daunted a less adventurous spirit. In 1864, he decided to come to California, and accompanied by his family, he crossed the plains in a prairie schooner drawn by mules. After a long, tedious journey they reached Solano County, and near what is now Cordelia, settled and remained until his death, which occurred in 1867, a short time after the death of his wife, Lavinia (Sibley) Spurgeon, a native of Prince Edward County, Va., and of Scotch lineage.

It was during the residence of the family in Henry County, Ky., that their son, William H., was born on October 10, 1829. When a babe in arms he was taken to Indiana, and thence in 1840 accompanied his family to Missouri, where he was reared and received a practical common school education. At the age of sixteen he became a clerk in a country store at Alexandria, where he was employed for several years. Shortly after the discovery of gold in California he determined to seek his fortune here, coming by way of New Orleans and the Isthmus of Panama. He spent four years in California, working in the gold mines, and met with financial success; he also served in the Rogue River Indian War. In 1856 he returned by way of Panama to New York City, and thence to Missouri, becoming connected with a mercantile business at Athens, where he remained for some time.

The second journey made by Mr. Spurgeon to California was in company with his father and other members of his family across the plains in 1864. In 1867 he went to Los Angeles, and during his brief stay there his wife, Martha (Moreland) Spurgeon, a native of Kentucky, died. Soon afterward he returned again to Clark County, Mo., and from there, in 1869, came to what is now Santa Ana. Upon his arrival he purchased seventy-six acres of the Santiago de Santa Ana grant, which originally contained 62,000 acres. Immediately after buying this property he proceeded to lay out the present town of Santa Ana, employing for this purpose Mr. Wright, a well-known surveyor and civil engineer. The name the town bears was given it by Mr. Spurgeon in honor of the old Spanish grant. When he located here there were but few trees in the entire valley and the country was covered with wild mustard so high that he could not look over it from horseback, and in order to view the valley that contained his purchase he climbed one of the sycamore trees. The town of Tustin had just been started and the Los Angeles and San Diego stage road lay through the town and about three miles from Mr. Spurgeon's land. In order to get the stage to come through his purchase and to get a post office established he cut a road through the mustard at his own expense. He then built a small building of redwood on what is now the southwest corner of Fourth and Broadway, and in this conducted a general store, the first in Santa Ana, and it is said that all the goods contained therein at the opening could have been hauled away in a wheel barrow. As the population grew and the needs of the community became greater he added to his stock until he carried a large variety of general merchandise, and for eighteen years conducted a successful business, during which time he became widely known throughout this section as a reliable merchant and progressive citizen.

Mr. Spurgeon put down the first artesian well in this section, which yielded an ample supply of water at 300-feet and supplied the town for some time, thus establishing the first water works here. In order to induce settlers to locate at first he would give one lot to anyone buying one, and in that way sold a lot at the corner of Fourth and Main streets for fifteen dollars, and to induce the man to accept the bargain, he threw in another one of equal size adjoining. To show the wonderful growth of Santa Ana, this property has increased in value until it is now held at approximately $85,000.

During his life as a merchant Mr. Spurgeon acted as agent at Santa Ana for the Wells Fargo Express Company, and also filled the office of postmaster. After the organization of Santa Ana as a city he was chosen a member of the first board of trustees and served as president of same. Scarcely an enterprise was organized for the benefit of Santa Ana with which his name was not identified, either directly or indirectly. For twenty-five years he held the lot where the courthouse stands for its present use, refusing many offers for it for other purposes. He donated the lot for the Spurgeon Memorial Methodist Church South. It was his privilege to see the city, started by his foresight and built up by the energy of such men as he, take its place among the representative cities of Southern California. How much of the credit due for this result is due to his wise judgment would be difficult to state, but it is a recognized fact that Santa Ana owes to no citizen more than it does to Mr. Spurgeon. He was always an advocate of good schools and every movement for the social and moral betterment of the community met with his cooperation.

Realizing the necessity for the town to possess favorable banking facilities, Mr. Spurgeon turned his attention to the establishment of a bank and, with others, incorporated the First National Bank of Santa Ana, of which institution he was chosen president, and during the term of his service the bank secured the solid financial basis upon which its subsequent prosperity has been built. He promoted the Santa Ana Gas Company, which he served as president, was a stockholder and director of the Santa Ana Gas and Electric Company, which succeeded to the business of the former company, and he was financially interested in the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company for five years, and for three years served as its president, and also as a members of the board of directors. As a home place he owned twenty acres of land at the east end of Fourth Street, part of which he sold to the Southern Pacific and to the Santa Fe for depot and yard purposes. Realizing the value of transportation facilities he used all his influence to get the roads to extend their lines to Santa Ana. He later owned a tract of thirty, and also one of ten acres which he, himself, planted to walnuts.

Mr. Spurgeon was always a staunch Democrat, and was chosen by his party to various positions of trust and honor. He served as a member of the state assembly, representing his district of Los Angeles County, this being before Orange County was organized. He served one term as supervisor before the partition of Orange County, and after the organization of the county was again elected supervisor, serving as chairman of the board. He was an active member of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association, and also of the Chamber of Commerce of Santa Ana.

Mr. Spurgeon's farsightedness and keen perception is seen when supervisor of Los Angeles County. In the early days he was not slow to see that this end of the county was neglected and did not get the aid nor public improvement it was entitled to, so it was then the idea came to him that the proper way to get what was due in this end of the county was county division and a separate county, and in that case he saw that Santa Ana would no doubt be the county seat, and so strong was his desire in that direction and so certain was he of it, he kept the block now occupied by the court house for that very purpose, and would not consent to sell it to any one, although he had some splendid offers for it. His ambition was finally realized—Santa Ana as the county seat and his choice of block selected as the court house site was no longer a dream but became a reality, thus fulfilling his ambition.

Mr. Spurgeon's second marriage occurred in Santa Ana on April 14, 1872, uniting him and Miss Jennie English, a native of New Madrid County, Mo., who came to this part of California from Santa Cruz County in 1869 with her parents. Her father, Robert English, first crossed the plains in 1850 from Missouri, and after some time spent in California, returned to his home. From there he subsequently moved with his family to Texas, from which place, in 1861, they crossed the plains from Red River to California by ox team, settling at El Monte. While on their tedious journey they were joined from time to time by different immigrants until their train numbered sixty wagons. They had several skirmishes with the Indians, but suffered no losses. Both Mr. and Mrs. English died in Santa Ana. Mr. and Mrs. Spurgeon became the parents of five children: Grace, the wife of R. L. Bisby of Santa Ana; Lottie and Mary deceased; William H., Jr., is prominent in the furniture business in Santa Ana, and Robert Granville resides at Long Beach, having served in the U. S. Navy in the World War.

On February 24, 1909, Mr. Spurgeon incorporated his property under the title of the W. H. Spurgeon Realty Company, the members of his family being associated with him as directors of the corporation, and he himself being president until his death on June 20, 1915. During the last years of his life the company built the W. H. Spurgeon Block on the corner of Fourth and Sycamore streets, the largest and most pretentious building in the city, a fitting monument to its founder. Mrs. Spurgeon survives her husband and continues to make her home in the city she has seen built up from a stubble field and in the development of which she has taken a woman's part, aiding and encouraging her husband in his ambition to see it a beautiful city with modern public improvements, with its paved streets, as well as being one of the principals in making it the seat of government of the county, a desire that was very keen and dear to them both. Her children are looking after the large affairs left by her husband, and by their love and devotion do all they can to shield her from worry and care.

The life of Mr. Spurgeon illustrates the possibilities which Southern California offers men of energy and judgment, where the opportunities for wise investments and large returns are even greater than they were in the early days. The record of Santa Ana's founder, who started with less than $1,000, is an example that is worthy of emulation and one that will encourage many another young man in his struggle toward success. In October, 1909, during the carnival of the Parade of Products held in Santa Ana, Mr. Spurgeon was presented with a memorial—a beautiful piece of art work done in colors with a pen, setting forth his identification with the county's interests. By a happy coincidence it was the eightieth year of Mr. Spurgeon's birth, the fortieth year of the founding of Santa Ana and the twentieth year of the organization of Orange County.

NOAH PALMER.—The passing away in January, 1916, of Noah Palmer, at the age of ninety-six, closed a career whose value and service to the community, indeed to the whole of Orange County, would be difficult to measure. Intimately associated with practically every enterprise that concerned the early development of Santa Ana, it is perhaps in his especial ability as a financier that he was most closely identified with the great progress made in this section of Orange County. Possessed in an unusual measure of keenness and discernment of mind, he was always quick to grasp advantages, albeit he was of a conservative temperament, so that, although his judgment was quick and decisive, he was never led into developments of a speculative character. A pioneer of '49, it was his privilege to witness such a transformation throughout the commonwealth of California as can never again take place within the confines of the United States, so marvelous has been the change that has been wrought in those years.

The Empire State was Mr. Palmer's native home, his birth having occurred September 3, 1820, at Lowville, Lewis County, N. Y. His parents were Ephraim and Hannah (Phelps) Palmer, natives of New York, and there they spent all their days. Ephraim Palmer came of a long and honored line of English ancestry, his forbears being of the Quaker faith, and he lived a well-rounded out life, reaching the age of eighty-eight years; the mother passed away in early womanhood, when Noah was but seven years of age. An older sister lived in Jefferson County, N. Y., and there Noah went to live after his mother's death. He remained there until he was eighteen years old, receiving a good education in the local schools of the vicinity. He then began life on his own account as a school teacher, continuing in this profession for ten years, first in New York, until 1840, when he went to Indiana. In 1849, when the news of the discovery of gold in California went like wildfire over the country, even to the backwoods hamlets, Noah Palmer, like thousands of other young men, was fired with an ambition to seek his fortune in this new Eldorado. Joining the Isaac Owen missionary train he set out on the long journey, and for six long, weary months they slowly wended their way across the plains and desert, a journey that was fraught not alone with hardship but with many dangers. The hard work of mining, at Hangtown, now Placerville, however, proved too much for Mr. Palmer, so he went to San Jose and began farming, later removing to Santa Clara, where he continued ranching for many years. In 1852 he returned East and with his wife and little daughter started back to California by way of the Isthmus of Panama, making the rough trip across the Isthmus on mule back, there being no railroad in those early days. The family established their home in Santa Clara County, and for a number of years Mr. Palmer was quite active in political life, being a leader in Republican circles. For four years he served as tax collector of Santa Clara County, and represented his district in the state legislature for one term.

In August, 1873, Mr. Palmer came to Santa Ana, then only a small hamlet. There was little to attract one at that time, as there had been but little improvement of the surrounding country, and this offered but scant promise of the possibilities that eventually were unfolded. With that keen foresight that was ever a dominating characteristic, Mr. Palmer felt that success awaited the pioneer here who had patience and perseverance, coupled with energy. He returned to Santa Clara, and on December 1, of that same year, he closed a deal for 1765 acres, comprising a part of the old Santiago de Santa Ana grant, originally a tract of 62,000 acres. On his return to this locality he was accompanied by a number of his friends in Santa Clara, and to them he disposed of 1065 acres, giving them their choice of location. He retained 700 acres, and this he put under cultivation and produced some of the best crops ever seen in this section. This land was all within the corporate limits of Santa Ana, now all subdivided into town lots except forty-five acres. His friends built on their various properties, and also farmed with success for years.

In 1882 Mr. Palmer began his active interest in the banking field, for which his abilities especially fitted him. With W. S. Bartlett, Daniel Halladay and others he organized the Commercial Bank of Santa Ana, with Mr. Halladay the first president. After a very few years Mr. Palmer succeeded to that office, and held it until April 23, 1910, when he retired. He was one of the organizers of the Bank of Orange and served as its president until the bank was sold. He was also a director of the Bank of Tustin and of the Orange County Savings Bank—now the Orange County Trust and Savings Bank. He was active in the promotion of the Santa Ana, Orange and Tustin Railway and was the first president of the company. In each of these developments he was enabled to further the material progress of the county by stabilizing the financial foundation of the locality through his wise oversight, and by aiding those who were in need of capital to carry on the agricultural and horticultural development that has brought undreamed-of wealth to the county.

While a school teacher in Franklin County, Ind., Mr. Palmer was married in March, 1843, to Miss Susan Evans, born January 28, 1824, in that county. She passed away on October 28, 1903, after a wedded life of over sixty years, in which there had been more than the usual share of eventful interest. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Palmer, two of whom are living: Emma Palmer, Mrs. George J. Mosbaugh, who is the mother of a son by a former marriage—H. Percy Thelan of Santa Ana; and Miss Lottie E. Palmer. Mrs. Almira A. Hewitt, the eldest daughter, died in March, 1912, leaving three children, Fred P., William L., and a daughter, Mrs. Susy Deuel. Mrs. Mosbaugh and Miss Lottie E. Palmer are residents of Santa Ana, and through their loving ministrations the latter years of Mr. Palmer's well-spent life were surrounded with every care and comfort.

WILLIAM N. TEDFORD.—Coming to Newport Valley, then in Los Angeles County, in 1868, William N. Tedford was the first settler of the Valley, as he and his family were the only Americans here at that time. Following him were Isaac Williams, Jacob Ross, Thomas Smith and Thomas Cozad, all of whose names were associated with the pioneer days of this section.

Of Scotch-Irish extraction, the first representative of the Tedford family in this country was an early settler of Virginia, members of the family subsequently settling in Tennessee. This state was the birthplace of John Tedford, the father of our subject, and he continued the westward march of the family, removing to Randolph County, Mo. While a resident of Tennessee he had married Miss Catherine Hannah, and there William N. Tedford was born on August 16, 1826. At the age of five he accompanied his parents to Randolph County, Mo., where he grew to manhood. Here he was married, May 19, 1852, choosing for his companion Miss Nancy Jane Baker, the daughter of Isaac and Jane (McCullough) Baker, natives, respectively, of Kentucky and Tennessee.

In 1864, twelve years after their marriage, and after five of their children were born, emulating the pioneer spirit of his forbears, Mr. Tedford, with his wife and family, started on the long journey across the plains with ox teams, reaching Solano County, Cal., in September of that year. Remaining there for two years, they removed to Monterey County, where they engaged in farming for another two years. In 1868 they came to what is now Orange County, settling on sixty acres of raw land in Newport Valley which Mr. Tedford had purchased. Although the country was wild and barren, they set to work to improve the land and make a home, and it was their privilege to see the surrounding territory transformed from its uninhabited, desolate state to prosperous ranches and orchards. It is safe to say that none of the old settlers of Orange County rejoiced in its development more sincerely than did Mr. Tedford, who had been so closely associated with its earliest days, and who did his share in helping to make it the garden spot of the country.

The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Tedford: Walter B.; Edward; Mrs. Emma J. Maxwell, now deceased; Thomas F.; Mrs. Katie M. Felton; Mrs. Maggie L. Young; Charles L.; Mattie Susan, wife of Rev. C. R. Gray; George

Charles C. Chapman

I., and Harry A., now deceased. The five eldest were born in Missouri, the younger children all being native sons and daughters of California. In 1899 Mr. Tedford sold his ranch to his son-in-law, E. W. Felton, and purchased a residence at Spurgeon and Third streets, Santa Ana, and here he made his home until his death, on November 9, 1905, Mrs. Tedford surviving him until 1919. Always a Democrat in his political sympathies, Mr. Tedford took an active part in the affairs of his party, and among other offices of trust he served as supervisor of Orange County for four years.

CHARLES C. CHAPMAN.—Genealogical records give the year 1650 as the date of the founding of the Chapman family in America by the arrival in the new world of three brothers from England, who became the progenitors of a numerous race that, taking root in Massachusetts, spread its branches throughout the growing colonies of the Central West. No representative of this family was more worthy than Sidney Smith Chapman, who was born in Ashtabula County, Ohio, in 1827. He followed the westward tide of emigration at an early age, settling in Illinois when he was a youth of eighteen and embarking in the building business. While he never achieved wealth he was singularly fortunate in gaining that which is far more enduring—the sincere regard of friends and the affectionate admiration of business associates. Into the building of houses he put the same integrity and the same patient industry that he put into the building of his fine personal character and his deep Christian faith.

After a long period of labor as a builder in Macomb, Ill., Sidney S. Chapman removed to Vermont, same state, in 1868 and later followed his trade in Chicago, where he and his first wife were charter members of the West Side Christian Church. During the World's Fair his health failed and in October of 1893 he passed from earth. His life, as it was ordered, contained not only happiness, but also sorrow and disappointment. Whatever came to him he bore with simple dignity and quiet courage, seldom giving utterance to any words save those of hope. As a workman he was not content with the mere completion of a task, but strove to finish each contract with greater skill than he had displayed in previous efforts. He was a firm supporter of prohibition, and politically a Republican. To his descendants he left the heritage of a life that was a model of uprightness and simple devotion to duty.

In 1848 S. S. Chapman married Rebecca Jane Clarke, eldest daughter of David and Eliza (Russell) Clarke, both natives of Kentucky, where the daughter also was born. The family of Mr. Chapman by this marriage numbered ten children, seven of whom attained years of maturity and five are now living, viz.: Charles C., whose name introduces this narrative; Christopher C., an orange grower near Yorba Linda; Samuel James, who is engaged in the real estate business in Los Angeles; Dolla, Mrs. W. C. Harris, whose husband is a well known builder and successful architect of Los Angeles; and Louella, Mrs. J. Charles Thamer, of Placentia, Cal. The eldest son, Col. Frank M., died in Covina, this state in 1909. Emma E., Mrs. L. W. B. Johnson, died in Illinois in 1888, leaving a son and daughter. The wife and mother passed away at the family home in Chicago January 2, 1874, and later her youngest sister became the wife of S. S. Chapman, their union resulting in the birth of three children, Ira, Earl and Nina. After the death of her husband the widow remained in Chicago for several years, but subsequently removed to Los Angeles, where she died.

During the residence of the family in Macomb, Ill., Charles C. Chapman was born July 2, 1853, and in that city his education was secured, but he owes more to self-culture than to text-books, more to determination and will-power than to youthful opportunities. His first employment was that of messenger boy and he recalls carrying the message that announced the assassination of President Lincoln. Later he clerked in a store and in 1869 joined his father at Vermont, Ill., where he learned the trade of bricklayer. On the 19th of December, 1871, he went to Chicago and immediately secured employment, first working as a bricklayer and in 1873 superintending the erection of several buildings, after which he engaged in the mercantile business. During 1876-77 he engaged in canvassing in the interests of a local historical work in his native county and during 1878 he embarked in a similar enterprise for himself at Galesburg, Ill., whence the office in 1880 was moved to Chicago. The business was first conducted under his own name and after his brother, Frank M., became a partner, the firm name was changed to Chapman Brothers and later to the Chapman Publishing Company.

As the business of the firm increased the plant was enlarged until it had embraced extensive quarters and a large equipment. In addition to the management of a printing and publishing business the firm erected numerous buildings, including business structures, apartments, hotels and more than twenty substantial residences. During the World's Fair they conducted the Vendome Hotel for the accommodation of many of the leading capitalists and business men of the country. The financial panic of that year caused very heavy losses to the firm.

At Austin, Tex., October 23, 1884, Mr. Chapman married Miss Lizzie Pearson, who was born near Galesburg, Ill., September 13, 1861, being a daughter of Dr. C. S. and Nancy (Wallace) Pearson. Two children blessed the union, namely: Ethel Marguerite, born June 10, 1886, now the wife of Dr. William Harold Wickett of Fullerton, and Charles Stanley, January 7, 1889. During January of 1894 Mr. Chapman went to Texas, hoping that the southern climate might benefit his wife, who was ill with pulmonary trouble. Later in the same year he came to California with the same hope, but here, as elsewhere, he was doomed to disappointment. While the family were occupying their beautiful home on the corner of Adams and Figueroa streets, Los Angeles, Mrs. Chapman passed away September 19, 1894. Noble traits of heart and mind made Mrs. Chapman preeminent in family and church circles, while her accomplishments fitted her to grace the most aristocratic social functions. Her charming personal appearance, lovable nature and graceful manner won the affectionate regard of a host of friends. Earth held so much of joy in an ideal home happiness that she could not covet the boon death proffered, yet she accepted it with the fortitude that characterized her sweet Christian resignation to intense suffering through a long illness.

The present wife of Mr. Chapman was Miss Clara Irvin, daughter of S. M. and Lucy A. Irvin, and a native of Iowa, but from childhood a resident of Los Angeles until her marriage September 3, 1898. They have one child, Irvin Clarke. Mr. and Mrs. Chapman have traveled extensively, both in this country and abroad. Both are members of the Christian Church, with which Mr. Chapman united at the age of sixteen, and in which he has held all the important official positions. For years he was a member of the Cook County Sunday-school board, a member of the general board, Y. M. C. A. of Chicago, also an organizer of the board of city missions of the Christian churches of Chicago. His identification with these various activities was severed upon his removal from Chicago, but he has been equally active in the West. He has been for nearly a score of years president of the Christian Missionary Society of Southern California, and has taken part in the dedication of forty churches, being the speaker and making the appeal for money, and in a special, as well as a general, way assisted many churches. He is a director of the Christian Board of Publication of St. Louis. The largest of his philanthropic enterprises are the building of a hospital at Nantungchow, China, and his contribution to the California School of Christianity of Los Angeles. For years he has served as a member of the state executive committee of the Y. M. C. A., in 1914 was president of the state convention, and in April, 1915, was elected chairman of the state executive committee. He has been reelected annually since. He has served as president of the State Sunday School Association, and in 1911 was elected to represent Southern California on the International Executive Committee, and was vice-chairman of the Committee. In 1914 he was reelected to both positions, and continues to serve on the Committee. In 1903 he was appointed by Governor Pardee a trustee of the State Normal School at San Diego, was reappointed by him, and later by Governor Gillett, and still later by Governor Johnson, resigning after a service of ten years. In 1907 he was elected a trustee of Pomona College, serving until 1915. Upon the organization of the California School of Christianity, he was chosen a trustee and president of the board.

Since coming to California Mr. Chapman has devoted much attention to building up the Santa Ysabel rancho near Fullerton, which, under his supervision, has been developed into one of the most valuable orange properties in the state. The Old Mission brand, under which name the fruit is packed, has a reputation second to none in the best markets of the country, and prices commanded have been the record prices for California oranges since 1897. He also has other valuable orange ranches in the neighborhood of Fullerton.

In politics Mr. Chapman is a Republican. He has served as a member of the state central committee, and in 1912 made an unsuccessful race for nomination for state senator. He was elected one of the first trustees of Fullerton, served as chairman of the board, and was reelected for a second term. He is a director of the Commercial National Bank of Los Angeles and of the Farmers and Merchants National Bank of Fullerton. He is interested in mining and in the oil business, and has large realty holdings in Los Angeles and elsewhere. The most important of these is the Charles C. Chapman Building, a thirteen-story office building, in Los Angeles.

Mr. Chapman has been closely identified with the irrigation interests that lie at the foundation of success in fruit culture. He served as director and president of the Anaheim Union Water Company for several years. He has made the fruit industry a success, has encouraged others to greater efforts in the same business, and has proved a power for good in the development of horticulture in Southern California. He has borne his share in public affairs, in religious work and in social circles, as well as in his chosen occupation of grower and shipper of fruit. Activities so far-reaching, aspirations so broad and influences so philanthropic have given his name prominence, while he has become endeared to thousands of citizens through his humanitarian views, his progressive tendencies, his gentle courtesy and his unceasing interest in important moral, educational, religious and political questions.

DANIEL HALLADAY.—Among the honored pioneers of Southern California who have contributed largely to the growth and advancement of this section of the state through their excellent business judgment and public-spirited service, the name of Daniel Halladay ranks high. Coming to Santa Ana in 1880, Mr. Halladay at once actively identified himself with the development of the locality, interesting himself to some extent in agriculture, but it was in the world of finance that his greatest accomplishments were achieved.

The lineage of the Halladay family dates back for several generations in the history of New England, and its representatives were always in the forefront of the progressive life of their communities. A native of Vermont, Daniel Halladay was born in Marlboro, November 24, 1826. His parents were David and Nancy (Carpenter) Halladay, both natives of the same state. Daniel Halladay's early days were spent at his birthplace, but when he was twelve years of age his parents removed to Springfield, Mass., later settling at Ware, in that state, and in these places Daniel received his education in the public schools. Always of a mechanical bent, at the age of nineteen years he apprenticed himself to learn the machinist's trade, continuing as an apprentice and journeyman for six years. During the latter half of this period he was foreman in the American Machine Works at Springfield, Mass., and the machine works of Seth Adams & Company, in South Boston, Mass. After closing his work with the last-named firm he returned to his former position with the American Machine Works at Springfield, and while there he had charge of the construction of the caloric engine invented by John Ericsson, well known to history as the designer of the famous Monitor. During the World's Fair in London in 1851, it was a part of the American exhibit in the Crystal Palace, Mr. Halladay superintending its erection and exhibition there.

Returning to the United States, Mr. Halladay became a partner in a machine manufacturing concern at Ellington, Conn., but the connection lasted but a short time. Mr. Halladay then going to South Coventry, Conn., where he engaged in the manufacture of machinery under the firm name of the Halladay Wind Mill Company, the greater part of the machines turned out being of his own invention. The company's plant was removed to Batavia, Ill., in 1863, and here the business of the plant grew to a large volume, so that when Mr. Halladay decided to retire from it in order to come to California, he was able to dispose of it at a handsome figure.

Locating at Santa Ana in 1880, Mr. Halladay entered at once into the upbuilding of the county, his clear vision making plain to him its great possibilities. Two years later, in 1882, when the Commercial Bank of Santa Ana was established, he was made its president, and this was the beginning of many years of service in the banking field, in which his wisdom, integrity and wide grasp had a large part in putting it on its present sound, progressive, yet conservative basis. After serving as the bank's president for a number of years he was made vice-president, always keeping a guiding hand on the affairs of the institution. He was also one of the incorporators of the Bank of Orange, serving on its directorate until it changed hands; at one time he was a director of the Orange County Savings Bank. All of these institutions benefited greatly by Mr. Halladay's wise counsel, as was evidenced by their constant growth, both in number of depositors and amounts of deposits, and his sound judgment has left its impress on their policies to the present day. Interested in every project that made for the material progress of the community, Mr. Halladay entered enthusiastically into the plans for furnishing Santa Ana with illuminating gas, being one of the incorporators and directors of the Santa Ana Gas Company. He was also instrumental in the promotion of the Santa Ana, Orange & Tustin Street Railway, and was one of its directors throughout the existence of the company.

Mr. Halladay's marriage, which occurred in Ludlow, Mass., May 3, 1849, united him with Miss Susan M. Spooner, born at Belchertown, Mass., and, like her husband, a descendant of an old New England family. She passed away on December 26, 1908, at Santa Ana. One child was born to them, a son who died in infancy. Mrs. Halladay was a charter member of the Presbyterian Church at Santa Ana and very active in its circles. Mr. Halladay spent the last few years of his life in retirement from active duties, although he always maintained a wide interest in the affairs of the community and nation, being particularly concerned in the cause of temperance.

of which he was ever a staunch advocate. His death occurred on March 1, 1916, at his home on East First Street, being survived by his adopted daughter, Mrs. Susie M. Rutherford.

THEODORE RIMPAU, FREDERICK C. RIMPAU.—The wealth of pioneer achievement and tradition featuring the glowing chapters of California history one is reminded of in the life-story of Theodore Rimpau, long the oldest citizen in point of years of residence in Orange County. He was born in Hamburg, Germany, on September 28, 1826, the son of Johanas and Matilda (Henneburg) Rimpau, natives of Germany. He enjoyed, on account of his parents' social and financial circumstances, the advantages of a superior education, and unlike many who were destined for such a career as he later followed, he studied French, German and Latin, and later pursued a practical business course. After putting in several years with a wholesale business concern at Hamburg, he decided to seek his fortune in the New World, and came to the United States in 1848.

Leaving the Fatherland about the time of the great political upheaval striving for some of the very objects recently attained in Germany, Mr. Rimpau landed in New York, and was soon employed by a leading wholesale house; and it was while he was there, getting accustomed to the freer ways of the young Republic, that the news of the discovery of gold in California was heralded throughout the country. He took passage for San Francisco, via Panama, and from the Isthmus came on the first steamship that sailed for what was then called Yerba Buena. Immediately upon his arrival, he joined the hurrying throngs seeking the "yellow metal," and for a short time was fairly successful, but like many another who catered to the wants of the hazardous miner, he found the best way to riches through the avenue of trade.

Mr. Rimpau soon formed a partnership for general merchandising in San Francisco; and as he prospered, he branched out to the South. He opened another store in Los Angeles, in 1850, to which he gave all of his attention when he had been burned out twice in the Bay City; his partners, Schwerin and Garbe, returned to South America, where they had formerly lived. In December, 1850, Mr. Rimpau was married to Miss Francisca Avila, the daughter of Francisco and Encarnacion (Sepulveda) Avila, and a native of the City of the Angels. She died at Anaheim in 1903, the mother of seventeen children, seven still living: Frederick, of this review; Sophie and Marie L., all of Anaheim; Frank T., of Alhambra; James A., Benjamin A. and John L., of Los Angeles.

In 1851, Mr. Rimpau closed his well-known Los Angeles store and started in the stock business on a tract of 800 acres of land owned by his wife, and originally a Spanish grant that had been in the Avila family for nearly 100 years, and part of which is still owned by the family; and there, on what is now within the corporate limits of Los Angeles, Mr. Rimpau followed stock raising until in the early '60's, when he moved to the San Joaquin ranch. For two years there were awful droughts throughout the state, and after his cattle died, he continued in the sheep business until 1876, when another drought came, and his son, Adolph, to save the herds, drove them to Salt Lake City.

Coming to Anaheim in 1865, Mr. Rimpau rented property for two years, after which he bought and planted twenty acres of land, where he later resided. He set out grapes, and manufactured wine; and this business he continued with success until 1886, when disease destroyed all the vines. Then he planted orchards and walnuts. He foresaw that the wine trade, for various reasons, was doomed, and as early as 1878 he established the dry-goods store which, as a flourishing concern, he turned over to his sons, Adolph and Frederick, ten years later. He sold half of his 800 acres of ranch and became a stockholder in the water company at Anaheim.

Few men in this colony of intelligent and industrious Germans were more respected in their time than Theodore Rimpau; and the local chronicler dwells with peculiar pleasure on some of the personal incidents in his private life. His marriage ceremony, for example, was performed by Father Sanchez, one of the pioneer padres who traveled El Camino Real, or the King's Highway, from San Francisco to San Diego on foot. Mr. Rimpau lived so long and so happily with his good native wife that his friends could boast he was the first foreigner hereabouts to marry a California maiden and to celebrate with her a golden wedding. At one time he had three vessels engaged in coast trade, plying between San Francisco and San Pedro, but they were all destroyed by fire within a year. He died at Anaheim on October 3, 1913, aged eighty-seven years.

FREDERICK RIMPAU was born in Los Angeles on March 13, 1855, the house being still owned by the Rimpau family, and growing up in Anaheim, to which town his folks had removed, he attended the grammar school there. From his twenty-second until his forty-second year he clerked in stores in Los Angeles and Arizona, and for fifteen years he was a partner with his brother Adolph in the dry-goods store at Anaheim. Selling out, he went into the real estate and insurance field, and today gives his attention especially to the latter. He is a director of the Anaheim National Bank.

On November 4, 1885, Mr. Rimpau married Miss Nellie Smythe of Anaheim, a native daughter, whose parents are John S. and Josefa (Yorba) Smythe. They attend the Catholic Church.

Mr. Rimpau belongs to the Fraternal Brotherhood, and years ago, for three years he was a member of the California National Guard, from which he was honorably discharged. He is an active participator in all civic movements, and deeply interested in Orange County and its smiling future.

WILLIAM HENRY CROWTHER.—Throughout a long and useful life that left its impress upon various lines of activity, William H. Crowther won and maintained the confidence of a large circle of associates, through his progressiveness and sterling traits of character. Coming of a long line of English antecedents, Mr. Crowther was himself a native of England, where he was born on October 4, 1837, in Yorkshire. His parents, John and Tamar (Bartel) Crowther, both natives of that part of England, passed their entire lives there.

The country schools of Yorkshire furnished William Crowther his early education, and this he supplemented with a course at the mechanical schools at Leeds. In 1857, at the age of twenty years, he immigrated to America, settling in Massachusetts, and here he followed the trade of blacksmithing and wagonmaking for several years, becoming a very proficient workman. Seeking another field for his activities, Mr. Crowther started on the long journey to the Pacific Coast by the way of the Isthmus of Panama, reaching San Francisco in January, 1864. Spending six months at Sacramento at his trade, he then located at Santa Clara, and there he engaged in business for himself for a number of years, manufacturing wagons, plows and a large line of agricultural implements.

Coming to Los Angeles County in 1872, Mr. Crowther located at Anaheim, and there engaged in blacksmithing for some time, but seeing the great possibilities in the development of the agricultural and horticultural interests of this part of the country, he purchased 136 acres of land at Placentia in 1875. It was a raw, unpromising piece of land, used as a sheep range, and Mr. Crowther realized thoroughly the hard work that would be required before he could hope for even fair returns. Particularly did he see the necessity of irrigation, if settlers were to be attracted to this locality. He therefore entered actively into the development of waterways, and was one of the originators of the means of irrigation provided by the Anaheim Union Water Company. For many years one of its directors, and for several terms president of the company, he was of invaluable assistance in the conduct of its affairs; also did blacksmithing for the company during the first year and a half of its existence.

In the meantime Mr. Crowther was also busily engaged in the development of his own ranch. Eighty acres were planted to English walnuts and about fifty acres to oranges and deciduous fruits, and through his unremitting care and intelligent cultivation it became one of the best-known ranches of the district, its abundant yield bringing in a handsome income. Since so many years of his life had been spent in a line of work far removed from horticulture, more than ever was credit due to Mr. Crowther for the outstanding success he made in this new field. In his passing away on December 16, 1916, the community lost one of its staunchest citizens, and one who could always be counted upon to give of his time and influence to every good work. The ranch property is now equally divided between his sons, Walter H. Crowther, of 202 Wilshire Avenue, Fullerton; Edward W. Crowther of Placentia, and his daughter Ruby, now Mrs. Albert Hitchen, of Beverly Hills, Los Angeles.

Mr. Crowther's marriage united him with Miss Margaret Sproul, a native of Scotland, and they became the parents of four children: Sarah, who died aged forty years; Walter H., Edward W. and Ruby. Prominent in the ranks of the Masons, Mr. Crowther belonged to the Blue Lodge at Anaheim and to the Chapter and Commandery at Santa Ana, and the Shrine of Los Angeles. A loyal Republican, he took a deep interest in the affairs of his party, taking an active part in county and state affairs, and holding local offices of importance. He also gave his services generously toward securing improved educational facilities, being clerk of the Placentia school district, of which he was one of the organizers.

JOSEPH EDWARD PLEASANTS.—Comparatively few of the men now identified with Orange County preceded Joseph Edward Pleasants in establishing associations with this locality, as he took up his residence here in 1861. He is one of the few remaining 'forty-niners in California. Among the first to bring stands of bees to this part of the country, for many years noted for its fine sage and orange honey, Mr. Pleasants has long occupied an authoritative place in that industry, being the first bee inspector of the county, a post that he has held continuously since 1902, and at the present time he is president of the California State Bee Keepers' Association.

Missouri was Mr. Pleasants' native state, and there he was born in St. Charles County, March 30, 1839. His parents were James M. and Lydia (Mason) Pleasants, natives of Kentucky and Virginia, and both were of English ancestry. The mother passed away in 1848, and the following year the father, with his two eldest sons, joined an ox-team train consisting of thirty-two wagons for the long journey across the plains. There were about 120 people in the party, Mr. Pleasants being the youngest child in the company. The trip was a long, trying one, about twenty of the travelers succumbing to the cholera en route, and six weary months passed by before they reached their destination on the Feather River. The father engaged in mining for about a year and a half, later going to the Sacramento Valley, where he engaged in farming in what is now Solano County, Pleasants Valley, where he located, being named for him.

In 1856 J. E. Pleasants came to Southern California, where he made his home with the Wolfskill family, studying under H. D. Barrows, whom Mr. Wolfskill had employed as a teacher for his family, the children of the neighborhood sharing in his instruction, according to the generous custom of the times. Mr. Barrows, who was a New Englander, and well trained in the pedagogical world of his native place, was prominently identified with the educational affairs of Los Angeles for many years, serving on the school board for a number of terms. Coming to what is now Orange County in 1861 to look after some interests of Mr. Wolfskill here, Mr. Pleasants later purchased land, and he has since made this his home, a period of practically sixty years. While engaging in general farming, he was especially interested in raising fine cattle and horses, and he raised many thoroughbred shorthorns, selling them to the Irvine Company. Among the first to become interested in the bee industry, he owned at one time over 400 stands, and this brought him a handsome income. One year he took thirty tons of honey from his apiary. He gave much time to the study of bees and particularly of the diseases that affect them in this climate, and it is safe to say that there is no one in Southern California who has done as much to advance this profitable industry. He was chosen to take charge of the California bee exhibit at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition in New Orleans, 1884. When the office of bee inspector was created in 1902, Mr. Pleasants was unanimously made its first incumbent and he continues to serve up to the present time. In 1888 Madame Modjeska bought his ranch of 200 acres and he then bought 400 acres of land, his present place, which he devoted to the raising of thoroughbred stock.

Mr. Pleasants' first marriage united him with Miss M. Refugio Carpenter, her mother being a native Californian. She passed away in 1888, and two years later Mr. Pleasants married Miss Adalina Brown, likewise a native of this state, born at Petaluma, Sonoma County, but grew up and received her education in Los Angeles; she is a daughter of Milton and Clarissa (Wing) Brown, natives of Kentucky and Illinois, respectively. They crossed the plains to Oregon in 1852 and two years later came down the coast to Sonoma County, and soon afterwards came to Los Angeles where they were pioneer ranchers. After his wife died Milton Brown made his home with Mr. and Mrs. Pleasants until a few days before his death at the hospital in Santa Ana in 1917, aged ninety-five years, six months. Mrs. Pleasants after reaching womanhood taught school for several years. She is intensely interested in early California history of which she has been a student and reader and is well informed and an interesting conversationalist.

A member of the Bee Keepers' Club of Orange County and an active member of the State and National Bee Keepers' Associations, at the annual meeting in Los Angeles, February, 1920, Mr. Pleasants was elected president of the California State Bee Keepers' Association, a fitting honor to his years of study and research in bee culture. Mr. Pleasants has always taken a prominent part in the activities of these organizations, promoting in every possible way the furtherance of this industry. He has been a valued contributor to the various journals published in its interest in the United States and furnished the data for the chapter devoted to the subject appearing in this history. Now one of the oldest settlers in this county, he is living in comparative retirement at his home in Silverado precinct, and blessed with an exceptional memory, he can recall many interesting reminiscences of the early days of Orange County. Occupying a high place in the esteem of his fellow citizens, Mr. Pleasants can look back upon a long, influential and well-spent life.

GEORGE W. FORD.—Coming to Orange County in 1876, George W. Ford is known throughout Southern California as an authority in walnut growing, having made a special study of this industry and securing results not equalled by any other grower in the county. A native of Illinois, he was born in the neighborhood of Centralia on October 21, 1848, a son of John and Louisa (Youngblood) Ford, both descendants of old Southern families, who had settled in Illinois when it was a territory. In 1897 they came to California and resided here during the remainder of their lives. They were the parents of ten children, nine of whom grew to maturity.

The oldest child of the family, George W. Ford, was reared on a farm and was educated in the common schools of that time, attending about two months during the winter, and the remainder of the time after he was old enough to work, was spent in helping on his father's farm. From the time he was a lad of fifteen, Mr. Ford was filled with a desire to see California, having read an article in a paper, written from Anaheim Landing, and he made up his mind then to visit this section some time in the future. When he was a little older he worked for a time in a country store, also helping on the farms in the vicinity of his home, and one season while working in the harvest field he was overcome by the heat. His health began to fail and in March, 1875, he decided to come to California, on the advice of a friend, who had been in this state and knew the conditions to be found here by one seeking health. Arriving in San Francisco with less than ten dollars, this small sum had dwindled almost to the vanishing point before he secured employment, but he was fortunate in completely regaining his health.

In February, 1876, Mr. Ford came to Los Angeles County, first working on a ranch and then securing employment in a nursery, where he obtained his first experience in that line. Having saved up a little money he decided to invest it in real estate, and secured five acres of land at Santa Ana, and upon this small tract he started the nursery business that was destined to become one of the largest in the state. From time to time he added to his holdings, in 1884 buying a tract of twenty-three and a quarter acres. At the time of the purchase it was but little better than a sheep pasture, but the extension of the city limits made it a valuable property. As the county settled up, his business increased in proportion and at one time he employed twenty men and did a business of over $30,000 a year. He made many of his own importations and sold in carload lots, shipping walnut trees all over California and to Australia, as well as many other fruit and ornamental trees, plants and shrubs. He was one of the first to bring the soft-shelled walnut to this part of the state, and in 1885 he originated the Ford improved soft-shell walnut and continued year after year to improve the grade. In the cultivation of walnut groves he also made valuable contribution through his many and extensive experiments. He was one of the first growers to learn that the best results were obtained by allowing the orchards to remain unplowed, as he found that a "plow hardpan" is formed by cultivating, and also that it breaks off the small shoots sent up by the roots to draw nourishment from the air. He also found that his yield was much increased by planting the trees much farther apart than was the custom, thinning them out until they were at least sixty feet apart.

Mr. Ford continued his nursery business until 1898, when he disposed of it at a good profit. In 1892 he erected his present home and spent much time in beautifying the grounds, having the greatest variety of ornamental trees and shrubs of any home in the county, among them being some extremely fine camphor trees. A stockholder in the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, Mr. Ford worked in 1877 on the first ditch started by that company.

Always a lover of fine horses, Mr. Ford was for a number of years engaged in raising some fine racing stock, breeding some of the fastest horses ever sent out of the state. His horses were raced all over the Pacific circuit, and in the early days he did his own driving and won many races. In 1900 he bought the Orange County Fair Association race track, and for several years maintained it as a training and race course. It was considered one of the fastest mile tracks in California, and it was here that Silkwood, one of the best trotting horses of his day, made his record of 2:07.

Coming here when Santa Ana was but a small, struggling village, Mr. Ford has seen it grow to be one of the most prosperous towns in Southern California, and in this development he has had no small part. Mr. Ford's marriage occurred in Los Angeles, when he was united with Miss Mary Teague, who was born on a farm adjoining the Ford homestead in Illinois, and came to California in 1878. They continue to reside on their old home place, once a pasture, but now in the heart of the residence district of Santa Ana.

DAVID HEWES.—In the annals of Southern California none of its citizens occupy a more distinctive place than the late David Hewes, whose name is indelibly associated with the great, progressive movements of the state, over a period dating from 1850 to his demise in July, 1915. A man of affairs, a successful financier and a Christian gentleman, his life was ever a power for good and an influence toward the highest ideals of manhood. His long and useful life of ninety-three years was replete with varied experiences that would furnish a volume of material for the biographer, rich in interest, but only the outstanding points of his career can be touched upon here.

Born in Lynnfield, Essex County, Mass., May 16, 1822, David Hewes was the representative of one of the old families of that state, tracing his ancestry back seven generations to the patriot, David Hewes. The death of his father when he was but five years old, with the rather rigid discipline of the New England home, early gave him a sense of responsibility, and the habits of industry that formed the foundation of his success in life. From the age of fourteen he supported himself and earned enough to secure his early education in West Reading Academy and Phillips Academy, and later he was enabled to enter Yale College. Meanwhile he had added his savings to the small inheritance left him from his father's estate and during his second year at Yale he invested his capital in galvanized iron houses which he shipped to California. Leaving his studies he started on the long trip to the Pacific Coast, via the Isthmus of Panama, arriving at San Francisco in February, 1850. While he had not expected to remain in the West, the wonderful possibilities opening up at this period made him decide to cast his lot with this new and untried land. Going to Sacramento he opened up a general merchandise store and from the first was successful, but in 1852, at the height of his prosperity, the city was practically wiped out by a conflagration, followed in January of the next year by a disastrous flood, so that Mr. Hewes left there practically empty-handed.

Realizing the possibilities of San Francisco as the future metropolis of the Pacific Coast, Mr. Hewes decided to locate there. At that time the beginning of the city's growth made necessary the leveling of the hills and the grading and filling of the streets and here he saw an immediate opportunity, though his limited capital made it necessary for him to begin operations on a very limited scale. It was not long, however, until he increased his business and he was soon engaged in the prodigious task of reclaiming the harbor, filling in blocks that are now in the heart of the city's commercial center. To the present generation it is almost inconceivable that the shore line once extended to Montgomery Street, all this section being made land. It was most fitting that Mr. Hewes was called the "maker of San Francisco" since it was through his initiative and energy that the task was undertaken and accomplished.

While not actively connected with the building of the first transcontinental railroad, Mr. Hewes was one of the most enthusiastic supporters of the project and it was he who furnished the golden spike that marked the completion of the road. It was also he who planned the connection of the railroad company's wires with that of the Western Union, by which the taps of the silver hammer driving the golden spike were transmitted to San Francisco, thus signalling the accomplishment of this long-awaited event. Many other activities occupied Mr. Hewes' attention in the following years, before his removal to Southern California, where he entered upon one of his greatest achievements—the development of the famous Hewes ranch near El Modena, in Orange County, which he gave the name of Anapama, "a place of rest." Originally a sheep ranch, and comprising over 800 acres, Mr. Hewes spared neither time nor expenditure in its development. A large part of its acreage was converted into a vineyard, but when Orange County was visited by the blight, it went the way of all the other vineyards. Nothing daunted, Mr. Hewes at once set about to restore the ranch by planting citrus fruit and it became one of California's noted orange groves, remaining a part of the Hewes estate after Mr. Hewes' death, until January, 1920, when it was sold for $1,000,000. The famous Hewes Park, one of the beauty spots of the Southland, was Mr. Hewes especial pride, involving an expenditure of many thousands of dollars. Formerly a barren hill top, this knoll is now a beautiful flower garden, through which are many walks and drives, its lovely terraces ornamented with rare trees and shrubs. From its summit may be seen Catalina Island, the Sierra Madre and Santa Ana Mountains, with the snow-covered summit of "Old Baldy" in the distance.

Business alone, however, did not occupy all of Mr. Hewes' time and thought, despite the great enterprises in which he was always concerned. A lover of art, he spent much time during his European trips at the art centers, and his magnificent collection of pictures, statuary and frescoes was ultimately presented to the Leland Stanford University. A trustee of Mills College for many years, he gave generously to that institution, one of his gifts being the chime of ten bells that hangs in the belfry, and his benefactions to other schools and churches were legion. The owner of large holdings in San Francisco, when the earthquake and fire of 1906 destroyed his building at Sixth and Market streets, although he was at that time in his eighty-fourth year, he at once made plans for rebuilding, the fifteen-story structure erected on the old site costing half a million dollars, and it is considered one of the best constructed buildings in that city.

Mr. Hewes' first marriage, which occurred in 1875, united him with Mrs. Matilda C. Gray, and following this they spent two and a half years in Europe. It was on their return to America that Mrs. Hewes' delicate health made it advisable to seek the more balmy climate of Southern California, and they established their residence at Tustin, Mrs. Hewes passing away there in 1887. Mr. Hewes was again married in 1889 to Miss Anna Lathrop, a sister of Mrs. Leland Stanford, the next eighteen months being spent in Europe, Egypt, Palestine and other parts of the Orient. Mr. Hewes was again bereaved of his companion in 1892, Mrs. Hewes' death occurring in August of that year.

A man of remarkable energy, until he was past ninety Mr. Hewes continued to drive his own horses and went about the crowded streets of Los Angeles and San Francisco unattended, looking after his many interests. With a rich heritage of the best New England stock, he reflected in his character the unpretentious honesty and unswerving integrity of his forbears. His is a career that will never pass from the memory of those who have known him, for its influence will live for all time in the lives of those who have felt the impress of his upright manhood.

ALBERT S. BRADFORD.—No one who has recently visited the attractive and instructive orange shows held at San Bernardino will fail to have been greatly impressed by the Orange County exhibits, arranged by Albert S. Bradford, president of the Placentia National Bank, each under his scientific and artistic touch for the past ten years of differing and striking arrangement. He was born at Shapleigh, York County, Maine, on August 18, 1860, the son of William Bradford, a namesake and descendant of the famous William Bradford, who came out on the Mayflower and later was governor of Massachusetts. A. S. Bradford's father married Miss Lucy Thompson, also a member of a Revolutionary family who stood by Washington and his laudable aspirations through the thick and thin of the war, or until independence had been attained.

Albert S. Bradford was reared on a district farm where he had plenty to do every summer, although he enjoyed the usual school advantages of the rural districts in Maine during the winter; but, concluding that such a life would afford him little opportunity for the future, he ran away from home at the age of fourteen and started to paddle his own canoe in the larger, if stranger world. Arriving in Boston, he secured employment in a market garden where garden truck was raised under glass, for which labor he received six dollars a month and his board. He remained there for a number of years; but he did something more than earn a living; he kept his eyes and ears open, he studied hot-bed culture and horticulture, and by conscientious application laid a broad and deep foundation of knowledge and practical experience of great value to him in later years. In 1881, he even started a business of his own in the outskirts of Boston. A venture of another kind, that of managing a summer resort, at Colchester on Lake Champlain, Vt., merely proved beyond question what he was best fitted for. When, therefore, he established himself at Stoneham, Mass., and began to cultivate garden produce, he was able to give it his undivided attention and effort.

About the time of the great boom in California, that is, in 1887, Mr. Bradford came to the Coast, stopping for a while at San Diego and then coming to Santa Ana, at that time in Los Angeles County, just in time to take a prominent part in the formation of Orange County in 1889. At first, he was foreman of the Daniel Halladay ranch; but in 1890 he located in what is now the Placentia district and acquired twenty acres of land on Palm Avenue—the Tesoro ranch—to which he added later, so that now he owns some fifty-five acres, all set out to Valencia and Navel oranges, under his expert direction brought to a high state of cultivation. Besides this, Mr. Bradford has other citrus land holdings, including oil-producing property.

He helped to organize the Southern California Fruit Exchange, and was a director in the same, although for a number of years he was an independent fruit packer and owned his own packing house. Later he sold this to R. T. Davies, and he now packs through him. For fifteen years he was a director of the Anaheim Union Water Company, and chairman of the ditch committee, and he helped to organize the First National Bank and the American Savings Bank of Anaheim, and is still a director in both.

Mr. Bradford's place in California history is pleasantly assured through his distinction as the founder of the town of Placentia. He bought sixty acres of land for the townsite from Richard Melrose of Anaheim in 1910, laid out the town and secured the right-of-way for the Santa Fe Railroad to build its line; and Placentia is now a busy, thriving town, with paved streets, modern business blocks and attractive homes, situated in the heart of the richest orange and oil section of Orange County. It has a modern, up-to-date grammar school and its own private water system for domestic service. The Placentia Domestic Water Works has one well 150 feet deep, and another 187 feet, with a modern pumping plant. Two large iron tanks hold 52,000 gallons, and a small tank contains 1,800 gallons, for the use of the packing houses. The largest street main is a six-inch pipe, and there are now 228 water meters installed. There are eight fire hydrants, and the town has a twenty-horsepower electric motor. It will be seen, therefore, that with clear, pure water, the water system of Placentia compares favorably with that of any other place in the county.

The Placentia National Bank of which Mr. Bradford is president was organized by him in 1911, and occupies a modern brick building of its own—some evidence of its almost phenomenal success from the start. He was organizer of Placentia Savings Bank and president of it and is also a director in the Standard Bond and Mortgage Company of Los Angeles, president of the Republican Petroleum Corporation, and director in the Orange County Automobile Association. He is chairman of the County Board of Foresters, and vice-president and director in the Southern Counties Gas Company, all of them representative business associations. Since 1909 he has had charge, as has been said, of the Orange County exhibit at the annual orange show held in San Bernardino each February, and for ten seasons has made a new and novel design.

Mr. Bradford has been married three times. The first Mrs. Bradford was Miss Fannie R. Mead before her marriage, and she was a native of Winchester, Mass., and the daughter of Captain H. Mead. The latter commanded the U. S. Gunboat Monadnock during the siege of Fort Fisher, in the Civil War, and continuing to follow the high seas, he met a tragic death in the burning of his steamer off Cape Hatteras. Four children blessed the union: Elsie G., the only daughter, grew up to graduate from the Fullerton high school, and died on March 17, 1908. Hartwell A. and Percy L. became mainstays to their parents; but the mother, who passed away on January 9, 1910, did not see the patriotic service of the younger child, Warren M. Bradford, who served in France in the World War, as first lieutenant of the Twenty-third U. S. Engineers. His was the strenuous life of the able-bodied, idealistic and enthusiastic soldier, who never was willing to do the minimum possible, and it is not surprising that he was in several of the most important and famous drives. The blow to Mr. Bradford in the death of his devoted companion threatened to unnerve and incapacitate him; but through the endeavor to overcome the ill effects, he accomplished the great work of providing for the Santa Fe cut-off from Richfield to Fullerton, through Placentia, and also for the founding of the latter town. Hartwell A. Bradford graduated from the Colorado School of Mines, and has made a name for himself as a mining expert in both the United States and Mexico. Percival Loring Bradford was graduated from the Armour Institute of Chicago, as an electrical engineer; while Warren is a musician with proficiency on the piano and cornet. The second Mrs. Bradford was Ellen R. Mead who died November 23, 1918. The present Mrs. Bradford was Mrs. Winifred Wade Bryan, born in Missouri, the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Wade.

Mr. Bradford is one of the most prominent Masons in California, having been made a Mason in Anaheim Lodge No. 207, F. & A. M., of which he was master three years. He was exalted to the Royal Arch degree in Santa Ana Chapter and was an organizer of Fullerton Chapter No. 90, R. A. M., and for three years was its high priest, although he did the work for five years. He is a member of the Grand Chapter of California and was deputy grand lecturer of the Nineteenth district. He is also a member of Santa Ana Council No. 14, R. & S. M. Mr. Bradford was knighted in Santa Ana Commandery No. 36, Knights Templar, and afterwards became a charter member of Fullerton Commandery. He is a member of Los Angeles Consistory, S. R., and also a life member of Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., Los Angeles. Always a believer in protection and nationalism for Americans he is decidedly a Republican and has always been active and prominent in matters of political moment to the county and state.

STROTHER S. BALL—During his forty years of continuous residence in Orange County, Strother S. Ball has witnessed the marvelous development of agriculture and citrus culture in the county, as well as the growth of villages into up-to-date cities. He was born January 29, 1848, in Gentry County, Mo., the son of Hezekiah R. and Ellen (Stephens) Ball, the former a native of Kentucky. Mr. and Mrs. Hezekiah Ball were the parents of eight children, five of whom are living.

In 1865, after the Civil War, the family migrated, by the ox-team route, to Arizona. The indomitable spirit of the pioneer possessed this hardy family to such a degree that they determined to migrate still farther westward until the Golden State was reached. In 1866 the family arrived in San Bernardino, where they remained until 1880, when they located in what is now Orange County.

P. J. Harris.

In 1881 Hezekiah Ball purchased 200 acres of land at the small price of fifteen dollars an acre. Here he followed general farming until his passing away in 1909. The land was subsequently divided and disposed of, Strother Ball receiving his share of the estate. Mr. Ball occupies an established place in the community where he has so long been a resident, and stands high in the estimation of a large circle of friends.

RICHARD T. HARRIS.—A public official who made an enviable record that will long speak for both his high sense of integrity and his sagacity was the late Richard T. Harris, the first sheriff and tax collector, and the third treasurer of Orange County. He was born in Richmond, Va., on February 15, 1859, the son of John and Grace Harris, now deceased, who were both natives of Cornwall, England, where they were also married. They located, on first coming to America, in Richmond, Va., but, attracted by the exciting news of the discovery of gold in California, came out to California in 1860 and located in Grass Valley, Nevada County. For a while Mr. Harris followed mining there, and then he came to Healdsburg, Sonoma County, and from there to Santa Clara County. In the Centennial year of 1876, Mr. Harris settled in the Garden Grove district, which was then in Los Angeles County, and there followed farming.

On reaching young manhood, Richard T. Harris entered the mercantile field, conducting a general merchandise store at Westminster. When Orange County was formed, he was one of those distinguished by his foresight and his helpful participation in the hard work of the project, and naturally he was elected—by a majority of 1,700—the first sheriff and tax collector. Later he was elected county treasurer. In each of these offices he served a term and became one of the best-known men in the county. He was also interested in ranching and devoted considerable of his time to growing walnuts, oranges and celery. Politically he was a staunch Republican.

On July 3, 1888, at Westminster, Mr. Harris was married to Miss Maria S. Larter, a native of Ontario, Canada, the family home being only six miles from Niagara Falls. She was the daughter of Robert and Mary J. (Hansler) Larter, born in Norwich, England, and Canada, respectively. Mrs. Harris accompanied her parents to Westminster in 1876, her father being one of the pioneer farmers there, and this was his home until his death. His widow survives, making her home at Westminster. Mr. and Mrs. Harris were the parents of one daughter, Geraldine May, who passed away at the age of nine years. Mrs. Harris is a cultured and refined woman, well-read and well-traveled, and this, coupled with a retentive memory, makes her a very interesting conversationalist. She is also endowed with much business acumen, which stands her in good stead in the management of the large affairs left her by her husband, a stewardship of which she is giving a good account.

Mr. Harris was a director in the Santa Ana Cooperative Sugar Company, and took a live interest in the establishment of this plant which has done so much to build up the county. He also served for a time as assistant postmaster at Westminster, and also started the telephone company there. During the early history of the oil industry in Southern California, he was one of the prime movers in the organization of the Fidelity Oil Company, and operated in the Whittier field. His ventures were successful and he retired from that line with a considerable fortune. On his demise, on November 28, 1911, the local newspaper said of him: "A man of business affairs, he was progressive, and had been active in the promotion of several enterprises that have benefited this city and county. That he was highly esteemed and enjoyed the confidence of the public is evidenced by the fact that he held county office at two different times."

DANIEL KRAEMER.—Among the famous pathfinders bringing civilization and progress to this promising corner of the Golden State, and the first white settler to pitch a tent in the Placentia district in Orange County, and the first white family to settle outside of the willow fence inclosing the Anaheim settlement, Daniel Kraemer, who passed to his eternal reward in 1882, deserves the lasting recognition of a reverential posterity. Born at St. John, one of the most picturesquely-situated mountain resorts in the Swabian Alps, Bavaria, not far from the renowned castle of Lichtenstein, on November 17, 1816, he came to America at the age of twenty-six, and located near Belleville, in St. Clair County, Ill., where he took up farming. He also married there, and in that prosperous section of the Middle West his nine children were born.

Two tedious trips were made between his Illinois home and Southern California before he made this section his permanent home; for he first came West in 1865, bought his land, and returned to Illinois. The following year he came here again, but once more found it necessary to return East. On his third trip, in 1867, he brought his family with him. To make the journey at that time meant to take the railway from St. Louis to New York, thence by boat to the Isthmus of Panama, after that by steamer to San Francisco, and next by boat to San Pedro, from which port the tourists took wagons overland to the ranch.

When he first came here, in 1865, Mr. Kraemer purchased a portion of the original Mexican grant known as the San Juan Cajon de Santa Ana Rancho, his particular part being designated the Peor Es Nada Rancho, named from a Mexican village then near by, and meaning in Spanish, "Worse than nothing." Its English name, however, was "The Cajon Ranch." This strip of land comprised 3,900 acres, and its original boundaries were what is now Placentia Avenue on the west, the J. K. Tuffree Ranch on the north, the Richfield territory on the east, and the Santa Ana River on the south. Cattle and horses at first roamed freely there, but later the sheep herds crowded them out, so that really the latter made way for the farmer and the horticulturist.

This great ranch remained intact until the death of its owner in 1882, and since that time most of its acreage has been sold, so that the once princely domain constitutes a large portion of the present Placentia district. On his first trip here, Mr. Kraemer found a ditch, the Ontiveros, which ran eastward from the house he bought through what is now the district of Richfield, and then through Yorba, the intake being close to the old Trinidad Yorba house; and returning from the East in 1867, he discovered that the flow from this ditch, his only irrigation supply, was being seriously interfered with. He then built a ditch of his own to the Santa Ana River, which intersected the Ontiveros ditch, one and a half miles east of his home, and this was the first individual canal to be built in this section. He was also one of the projectors of the Cajon Canal, built in 1875, which carries water through all of the Placentia district, through Fullerton and Orangethorpe, and much of Anaheim.

Mr. Kraemer showed his appreciation of popular education in helping to organize the Cajon School district, in 1874, the first district in this section, and donated an acre of ground for school purposes. Five years later, this district was renamed the Placentia. He brought both the first mowing and the first sewing machine here, and before he laid aside his earthly labors, on February 6, 1882, he had splendidly improved between 400 and 500 acres of his vast estate.

When Daniel Kraemer married, he took for his wife Miss Magdalena E. Schrag, a native of Battenberg, Germany, and of Swiss parentage; a most valuable helpmate, who died on January 3, 1889. One of their daughters, Elizabeth, died on November 18, 1875. The other children are: Henry Kraemer of Placentia; Mrs. Barbara Parker of Anaheim; D. J. Kraemer of Brownsville, Texas; Samuel Kraemer, also of Placentia; Mrs. Emma M. Grimshaw of Anaheim; she has a daughter, M. Alice Grimshaw, a teacher in the Anaheim public schools; Edward M. Kraemer of Olive; Mrs. Mary K. Miller of Anaheim, and Benjamin, living on the original Kraemer home place at Placentia. A son of Mrs. Miller, Edward L. Miller, is a graduate from Occidental College, and when the World War called for his services, he enlisted. He served twenty-two months with the now historic One Hundred Seventeenth Engineer Corps, was in six important drives, and six times went "over the top."

MRS. MARY ORILLA KELLOGG.—It seems eminently fitting that the names of the early pioneers of California should be perpetuated in such a manner that their labors, in the days of trials and hardships, may remain an inspiration and encouragement to the toilers of today. Great honor is due the names of those courageous men and women who braved the perils of the overland trail in their untiring efforts to blaze a path and establish a civilization for the generations to come. In California and Orange County, the names of Benjamin Franklin and Mary Orilla Kellogg stand out prominently.

By those who knew him during his active life, Mr. Kellogg is recalled as a man who contributed not a little to the permanent growth of the localities in which he elected to reside. No one knew better than he the terrors of the overland trail or more dearly won his right to be numbered among the most courageous of the western pioneers. He was born in Morgan County, Ill., April 31, 1822, and was the youngest of six children. A descendant of a prominent New England family, his father, Elisha, was born in Massachusetts, and settled in Genesee County, N. Y., where he was judge and sheriff. Upon removing to Morgan County, Ill., he built the first house in the county and did farming and stock raising on a large scale. Later he moved to Jo Daviess County, and there he died in 1844. He married Elizabeth Derrick, who was born in Connecticut, and died in Jo Daviess County, Ill.

In his youth, B. F. Kellogg received but a limited education and was brought up to farm labor of the severest kind. In 1844 himself and brother Erwin went to the Rocky Mountains in search of a silver mine, but, failing in their quest, secured a Government contract and built Fort Laramie. They met with many uncanny and dangerous adventures, which, however, did not diminish their enthusiasm for the West. Two years later found them en route to the Pacific Coast as members of the Donner party, but few of whom ever reached their destination. The brothers parted from the original party at Donner Lake, and proceeded with others upon what proved to be a terrible and hauntingly gruesome journey. At one time, while searching for the silver mine near Fort Laramie, they were attacked by Pawnee Indians, stripped of their clothes and robbed of all they had with them. So reduced were they that they had to eat walnuts and raw frogs. The brothers were at one time separated from each other, and during this time, B. F. Kellogg, in lieu of any kind of food, and on the verge of starvation, scratched the hair from his buffalo coat and ate the hide. In time he was found by his brother, who had gone in search of help, in an almost dying condition, and was succored by some friendly Indians whom they chanced to meet.

Arriving in Napa Valley, Mr. Kellogg enlisted in General Fremont's army and served six months, and was honorably discharged in April, 1847. He was also a veteran of the Mexican War. He engaged in mining with varying success, then turned his attention to farming in Napa Valley, and later in the vicinity of St. Helena. On September 5, 1864, at White Sulphur Springs, he married Mary Orilla Lillie, who was born in Fulton County, Ill., on July 15, 1832, a daughter of Luther and Orilla (Morgan) Lillie, natives of Connecticut. Her paternal grandfather, David Lillie, was also born in Connecticut, and settled first in New York, then in Ohio, and later in Indiana. In 1831 he located in Fulton County, Ill., of which he was a pioneer, and where he died at the age of eighty-two years. He served as a soldier in the Revolutionary War and the Black Hawk War. Luther Lillie was a farmer in New York, Ohio and Illinois, and was also a millwright and machinist, and had shops in the different places in which he lived. He settled in Illinois in 1831 at a time when the Indians were numerous and troublesome. He died in 1837 and his wife passed away in 1833, the mother of fourteen children. One son, Leonard G., came to California in 1850 and died in Napa Valley, and two daughters, Mrs. Rosana Evey and Mrs. Emeline Butler, came West in 1854 and 1855, respectively.

Mrs. Kellogg was reared in Illinois and attended school in a little log school-house with slab benches, and later in a frame building. When she was twenty months of age her mother died, and when she was seven her father passed away, and she went to live with a family named Breed. From the first she was obliged to work hard between the rising and the setting of the sun, so that school was a luxury and leisure an unheard-of commodity. In 1853 she undertook to accompany her brother, Leonard G., his wife and their five children, and her sister, Mrs. Butler, to California. The experiences while crossing the plains are vividly recalled by Mrs. Kellogg at this day, and contained much of interest and adventure. The ox-teams were outfitted at Farmington, Ill., and they crossed the Mississippi at Burlington on May 3, 1853, thence took the Platte route and the Green River route to Humboldt and the Southern pass route to Sacramento and Napa Valley. In the Napa Valley the brother built and operated a grist mill, and here Mrs. Kellogg lived until her marriage in 1854.

On May 21, 1869, Mr. and Mrs. Kellogg brought their family of eight children to Anaheim, in the vicinity of which Mr. Kellogg bought 640 acres of land from the Stearns Rancho Company. This land was improved from the rough, built up with residences and barns, and fitted with wells and fences, and rendered generally habitable. While these improvements were being made the family lived in a tent. There were no houses between their place and Los Angeles, nor were there any towns to the south of them. Disaster followed in the wake of all this industry, for the grasshoppers and wild horses played havoc with the crops for three succeeding years. In time Mr. Kellogg became prosperous, and a prominent factor in the general growth of this locality. He gave each of his sons a tract of forty acres of land which they improved. Politically he was a Republican, and while in Napa County served as coroner and as school trustee. In Orange County, then Los Angeles County, he donated three acres of land for a schoolhouse and was one of the trustees for many years. The death of Mr. Kellogg, December 16, 1890, witnessed the passing of a thoroughly good man, and one who knew the value of opportunity and how to use it.

After her husband's death, Mrs. Kellogg, with the aid of her sons, kept alive the interests of the home, and she now retains but eighteen acres of the original homestead, and this is planted to walnuts and oranges. She has divided the portion of land left to her equally among her daughters. She is a Republican in politics, and in earlier years was a member of the W. R. C. and W. C. T. U., and is a member of the Christian Church. In that calm and splendid way known only to the pioneer women who have suffered much and endured patiently, she has reared to years of usefulness nine children, to any one of whom their mother is the embodiment of all that is true, gracious and approachable in women. H. Clay is a graduate of Wilson College and is a surveyor and civil engineer at Santa Ana; Mary E. became the wife of Byron O. Clark and lives at Paradise, Butte County; Erwin F. is deceased; Louisa

J. is Mrs. L. A. Evans of Orange County; Leonard G. is in Guatemala; Edward L. is ranching at Van Nuys; Lillie M. married William Dunlap and is deceased; Clara E. became Mrs. Carl F. Raab and is deceased, and Carrie A. married Richard N. Bird of Los Angeles.

A splendid type of pioneer woman, Mrs. Kellogg met the trials and hardships of the early years with patience and fortitude, and now in her eighty-ninth year, still retains a remarkable degree of vitality for one of her years, and is still greatly interested in the development of the county where she has lived for over half a century. She has living thirty-three grandchildren and twenty-five great-grandchildren to call her blessed.

DR. WILLIAM FREEMAN.—Among the distinguished representatives of the medical profession in Orange County whose influence for scientific progress is still felt although, as the result of years of unremitting application to his work he has been retired for nearly six years, is William Freeman, M. D., a native of Medina County, Ohio, where he was born on January 6, 1841. He attended the public schools of his home district, but when seventeen removed to DeKalb County, Ind., and continued his studies in the Auburn Academy. Having been commissioned by the school authorities to teach, he took charge of a school the next year; but in 1861, at the second call by the Federal Government for soldiers he enlisted on September 5, and joined Company H, Thirtieth Indiana Volunteer Infantry. He campaigned in Kentucky and Tennessee, as a part of the Army of the Cumberland, and saw stirring action in more than one important battle or engagement. These included the battle of Shiloh, Stone River, in which he received a gunshot wound through the right hand, and the battle of Chickamauga, where he was permanently disabled by a shot through the body. He was laid up for a while in a Chattanooga hospital, from which he was transferred to Murfreesboro, where he was compelled to stay for several months. At length he was taken home by his father on a stretcher, and on his recovering to a degree, he was made sergeant of sanitary police at Totten Field Hospital in Louisville. At the expiration of his term of enlistment, he was returned to Indianapolis and honorably discharged. To such men as Dr. Freeman, the Union owes its preservation today.

Before he enlisted, our subject had commenced the study of medicine, and on once more regaining his civic freedom, he went back to Auburn, Ind., and again took up the subject under Dr. A. H. Larimore, a noted practitioner. When he was ready for a course of lectures, he went to the Cincinnati College of Medicine, and after the usual severe tests, he joined the graduating class of '67. Then he opened an office at Vevay, Ind., and later practiced at Madison, in the same state. Ambitious to still further perfect himself, he pursued post-graduate work at Indianapolis, and once more resumed practice, first at Vevay and then at Madison.

Still suffering from the wounds he had received in the service of his country, and broken in health from overwork, Dr. Freeman left the Middle West in 1894 and sought relief in less frigid California. For two years he rested at San Diego, and when he had practically restored his health, he came to Orange County. He was attracted to Fullerton in particular, and there for eighteen years he enjoyed a highly remunerative practice. A man of foresight, anticipating the needs of the community, Dr. Freeman was one of the early promoters of the Fullerton Hospital, which became also an excellent training school for nurses. He invested in city property, and so showed his confidence in the future of Fullerton, and built a cosy residence, at the same time that he improved seven acres to oranges on Orangethorpe Avenue. Dr. Freeman removed to near Anaheim and bought eleven and a half acres on Santa Ana Street, where he set out oranges, there being some walnut trees on the place, and soon demonstrated his ability to succeed as a rancher. He remained there eighteen months then returned to Fullerton and bought twenty and a half acres adjoining his original seven; this he also set to oranges and kept it until 1918 when he sold it. In Fullerton, where he is a pioneer, Dr. Freeman had been health officer, administering his responsibility so well that no contagious disease was ever allowed to spread during the four years he served as first city health officer. He was one of the organizers of the Chamber of Commerce. In Anaheim he lent his experience and counsel in the direction of improved sanitation and greater assurance for public health. When in Indiana, he served his fellow-citizens for a couple of terms in the state legislature, and was also one of the directors of the Indiana State Reform School, and these experiences enabled him to be the more serviceable when he assumed citizenship in California. He was also for seven years on the Indiana Board of Pension Examiners.

By his first marriage, Dr. Freeman became the father of four children—A. W. Freeman, an oil man of Oklahoma; J. A. Freeman, a produce dealer of Santa Barbara; W. A. Freeman, manager of the Mission Produce Company, at Santa Maria; and

Lewis F. Moulton

Mrs. Fred Shaw of El Centro. At Whittier, he married his second wife, Miss Belle McFadden, a native of Illinois, who was reared in Mercer County in that state. Both Doctor and Mrs. Freeman are members of the Eastern Star, and the Doctor belongs to Fullerton Lodge, No. 339, F. & A. M. He is also a member of Malvern Hill Post, G. A. R., and was chief mustering officer under Colonel Merrill, when he was department commander. He is hale and hearty, and looks back with pleasure to the arduous days in Indiana, when for twenty-five years he attended to his practice while riding horseback, often on wide circuits. Dr. Freeman belongs to the Christian Church.

LEWIS FENNO MOULTON.—The steady increase in population and the tendency toward intensive cultivation of the land have had much to do with the dividing up of the great ranches of the early Spanish grants into small tracts. Noteworthy among the few large tracts that still remain intact is the great Moulton ranch of 22,000 acres which lies southwest of El Toro. Lewis Fenno Moulton, its original proprietor and owner, still directs its affairs with the ability and energy that have always characterized his undertakings.

Prominent in the early colonial affairs of New England, the Moulton family has contributed many representatives who occupied important posts in the stirring political and military affairs of that day. One of the bravest of these was Gen. Jeremiah Moulton, who served with distinction in the Revolutionary War, and was one of the most zealous of the colonies' defenders. Sharing in this patriotic spirit were other members of the family, Samuel Farrar, who participated in the Battle of Concord, and Samuel Fenno, whose name is associated with the events that led up to the Boston tea party. In the second war with the Mother Country, Jotham Moulton, the son of Gen. Jeremiah Moulton, displayed the same spirit as his forbears, taking an active part in the conflict. Jotham Moulton, a physician by profession, married Lucy Farrar, and for many years they made their home in Bucksport, Maine. Among their children was J. Tilden Moulton, the father of Lewis F., who was born in Maine in 1808. After graduating from Bowdoin College and Harvard Law School, and practicing his profession in Cherryfield, Maine, for several years, he removed to Chicago, Ill., where for many years he occupied a place of distinction in its legal circles. In addition to his large practice he served as a master in chancery of the United States Court at Chicago, and was as well known in its journalistic circles, being one of the first editors of the Chicago Tribune. His high professional standing brought him into contact with all the great men of that day and locality, and among the friendships he prized most was that of Abraham Lincoln, who was one of his classmates in law college. During his residence in the East he had been united in marriage with Miss Charlotte Harding Fenno, a native of Massachusetts, but who was reared and educated in Connecticut.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Tilden Moulton were the parents of two children: Irving F., for many years vice-president and cashier of the Bank of California, but now retired, residing at San Francisco, and Lewis Fenno, the subject of this sketch. He was born at Chicago on January 17, 1854, and spent the first years of his life in the parental home there, one of his early and cherished memories being of Abraham Lincoln, who frequently came to the Moulton home. Unlike his father, his inclination did not lie in the way of training for a professional career, and as soon as he had completed the grammar school course he set about to earn his own living, the father's death when Lewis was but a young lad also making it expedient for him to learn to make his way in the world. His first work was packing shingles on Chicago wharfs, and later, after the death of the father, the family removed to Boston, Mass., and here he was employed by a storekeeper to run errands, earning a dollar and a half per week. At the age of fifteen he began working on the old Daniel Webster farm near Marshfield, Mass., remaining there for three years.

Feeling that the Far West offered greater opportunities Mr. Moulton started on the long trip to California in 1874, making the journey by way of the Isthmus of Panama. Locating at once at Santa Ana, then Los Angeles County, but now Orange County, he began work on the San Joaquin ranch near Santa Ana, and subsequently went into the sheep raising business with C. E. French, continuing in this for several years. Going to San Francisco he established a wholesale slaughter house there, but this did not prove a financial success, so he returned after a short time to Orange County. He soon was able to start afresh, and it was but a short time until he was on the road to prosperity. His first purchase, about 1895, was a tract of 19,500 acres adjoining the San Joaquin ranch and extending to the ocean, and this has been increased by subsequent purchase until the ranch now comprises 22,000 acres. Mr. Moulton is extensively engaged in raising beef cattle for the market, mostly high-grade Durham Shorthorn cattle; so he is very naturally a member of the California Cattle Growers Association. The acreage not required for pasturage is devoted to raising barley, wheat, beans and hay, Mr. Moulton leasing it to tenants for this purpose, from ten to fifteen farmers usually being engaged on the place.

Every department of the business is systematically organized and conducted, the greater part of it under the personal supervision of Mr. Moulton, whose ability as a business head and executive has been one of the chief factors in the eminent success that he has made. A well-appointed office is maintained on the ranch, and there are two commodious residences, one of which is occupied by Mr. Moulton, while the other is the home of Mrs. M. E. Daguerre, who owns a third interest in the ranch, her husband, Jean Pierre Daguerre, having been Mr. Moulton's partner before his decease. Excellent barns and outbuildings, well-kept lawns and drives add to the attractiveness of the ranch, which is always kept up to the highest state of cultivation. While the responsibility entailed by the details of this extensive business absorbs the greater part of Mr. Moulton's time, he has always been active in his support of the Republican party, and is known throughout the county as one of its most generous and large-hearted citizens in his many benefactions.

MRS. MINERVA J. FLIPPEN.—A liberal-minded, interesting native daughter, especially proud of the fact that her father was a forty-niner, is Mrs. Minerva J. Flippen, the widow of a well-known Californian, esteemed by all his associates. She is the daughter of Nathan Stanley Danner, who was born on the Catawba River, in North Carolina, in 1822, and the granddaughter of John Danner, who moved from North Carolina to Missouri, and settled as a farmer near Springfield. There his wife died; and in 1857 he crossed the great plains in an ox team train, and died in 1871 in Merced County in his eighty-fourth year. The Danners are of German extraction, the progenitor of the name in America, John Danner, coming to North Carolina before the Revolutionary War. Nathan S. Danner came across the plains from Missouri to California in 1849 as a gold-seeker, and mined in Marysville and the Sierra Mountains, down into Mariposa County, where he also had a store; and he was so successful that in 1852 he returned East by way of Panama, to Missouri. There he was married that year to Miss Minerva Pearce, who was born in Tennessee in 1835, the daughter of Edmund Pearce, of English descent, and in the year 1857 he again came to California, once more traveling by way of Panama, and located on the Tuolumne River, in Stanislaus County, where he engaged in farming and the raising of cattle. The flood of 1862 washed away his house, cattle and farm implements, and even the farm became lost in the bed of the Tuolumne River; whereupon he moved to the Merced River, in 1863. He first settled on an island, but the flood of 1867 covered it, and again he lost his crops; but he took his family away in a boat, and moved to Hopeton, six miles from Snelling. Here he farmed until October, 1872, when he and his family removed to Kern County, near Linns Valley, forty miles northeast of Bakersfield, where he followed stock raising; he improved a farm near Woody, and at Blue Mountain he opened the mine that is still being exploited. He set out big trees and otherwise improved the place, and went in for stock raising, although, since there were bear, deer and antelope in profusion, they had plenty of profitable hunting. Later he moved north into Tulare County, and owned a place on White River, where he resided until he died, in 1892. Mrs. Danner spent her last days with Mrs. Flippen, and died in 1911, aged seventy-four years. She had four children; John resides in Porterville; Minerva J., Mrs. Flippen, is the subject of our interesting sketch; Jefferson lives at Willows, Cal., and Lee J. Danner is also a resident of Orange. Of these, John Danner was born in Missouri, and the others are natives of California.

Minerva J. Danner was educated in the public schools of Merced County, particularly in the district of Woody; and there she was married on May 10, 1876, to Thomas M. Flippen, a native of Virginia, who came to California when seventeen, accompanying his father, Archer Flippen. The latter had had a tobacco factory and three plantations in Virginia, all of which were destroyed by the Civil War; but he recuperated somewhat in taking up stock raising in California, near Woody. Mr. Flippen also engaged in the sheep raising business in Fresno County, then began raising stock in Linns Valley after his marriage; but in February, 1891, he traded his ranch for land in Orange County. The first ranch that he owned here was located near Olive, and there he went in for general farming. He set out walnuts, apricots and peaches, and three years later made a trade for the present Flippen place of twenty acres on East Chapman Avenue. He improved it in many ways, taking out the old trees and setting out Valencia oranges; and as he developed the valuable property, he became an active member of the Santiago Orange Growers Association, in which he also became a director. His lamented death, on May 19, 1913, at the age of sixty-two years, cut short a very useful career, of benefit to himself as well as to others. He was a director in the First National Bank of Orange, and a stockholder in the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Santa Ana. He was also a director in the Orange County Mutual Farmers Insurance Company. He was made a Mason in the Bakersfield Lodge during the eighties.

C. D. Ball

Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Flippen. Marion S. is an orange grower of this vicinity, as are also Wade H. and Lucian, while Jeffie is in the California Art Craft School at Berkeley, and Virginia, the youngest, is a student at Stanford. Florence, next to the youngest, is a graduate of Occidental College, and the wife of Donald Smiley of El Modena. Since Mr. Flippen's death, Mrs. Flippen has continued to run the ranch and to look after the business, assisted by her children. She is a member of the Presbyterian Church and participates actively in the work of the several ladies' societies affiliated with that excellent congregational organization.

CHARLES DEXTER BALL, M.D.—Closely identified with Santa Ana and Orange County since 1887, Charles Dexter Ball, M.D., is recognized as one of its successful physicians as well as one of the staunch upbuilders of Santa Ana. He comes from English forbears, and his lineage is traced back to Wiltshire, England, and it was from that place that six Ball brothers came to America in 1635 on the ship Planter. Benjamin Ball, a grandson of one of these brothers, settled in Framingham, Mass., in 1703. His grandson, Dr. Silas Ball, was a surgeon in the American Army during the Revolutionary War.

Dr. C. D. Ball's father was Seth F. Ball, grandson of the Revolutionary surgeon, and he was born in Leverett, Mass., in 1822, and died in Santa Ana in 1900. He was twice married, his first wife being Arvilla Field, who died in 1884, and he was later married to Mary E. Rogers, who survives him. Two children were born of his first marriage, Charles Dexter Ball of this review, and a daughter who died in infancy. The mother was a descendant of Zachariah Field, one of the grantees of the state of Connecticut, and of Benjamin Waite, preacher, guide and Indian fighter, who was killed in the Deerfield massacre in 1704. The French and Indian wars of New England presented no more daring and picturesque character than Benjamin Waite. Seth F. Ball came to California in 1854 and remained for four years, after which he removed to Canada. He resided there until 1894, and then returned to California and settled in Santa Ana, where his last years were spent.

Charles Dexter Ball was born in Stanstead, Quebec, October 5, 1859. He received his literary education at Stanstead Academy and the Wesleyan College of Stanstead; later he studied medicine at Bishops College in Montreal, completing his course and receiving his degree of M.D. in 1884. He began the practice of his profession in his native city, but it became necessary for him to seek a milder climate, and he accordingly came to Southern California and settled in Santa Ana in September, 1887. This was before Orange County had been formed, and the territory was a part of Los Angeles County, and ever since that date he has been actively engaged in the practice of his profession here, and is now the second oldest practitioner in point of residence in Santa Ana. In 1912 Dr. Ball received the ad eundem degree from McGill University, Canada. He has been closely identified with the movements that have made Orange County one of the best-known counties in the State, if not in the United States.

Dr. Ball assisted in organizing the Orange County Medical Association in 1889, and later served as its president; he was also a charter member of the Southern California Medical Society, organized in 1888, and has filled the office of president; he also holds membership in the American Medical Association. He has seen Santa Ana grow from a small village into one of the leading small cities of the state, and has been owner of valuable realty holdings from time to time.

In 1883 Dr. Ball married Lizzie S. Bates, and she died in August, 1888. On October 24 of the following year, in San Leandro, Cal., he married Emma L. Rankin, born in Richmond, Canada, on June 3, 1861, a daughter of Zera Rankin, of Scotch descent, and a prominent business man of Richmond. Mrs. Ball's mother died when she was a babe of two months. In 1886 she came to California, and in 1888 she was graduated from the Oakland high school. Of this happy marriage four children have been born: Charles F. Ball, now first assistant chief engineer of the Holt Manufacturing Company at Peoria, Ill. He married on April 26, 1917, Miss Margaret G. Weeks, and they have a daughter, Margaret Elizabeth, born October 2, 1918; Dexter R. Ball is interning at the University Hospital in San Francisco; John D. Ball is a senior in the medical department of the University of California at San Francisco. He married Isabel Jayne on June 28, 1919; and Emma Arvilla Ball makes her home with her parents in Santa Ana. All of the children are graduates of the University of California, at Berkeley.

Dr. Ball has always been a Republican and has taken an interesting part in political affairs of the state and nation, being elected a delegate to the Republican National Convention in Chicago in 1920 by a large majority. He has been president of the Abstract and Title Guaranty Company for thirty-five years, is a director of the First National Bank of Santa Ana; president of the Santa Ana library board since 1895; president of the Orange County Historical Society; a member of the Sons of the American Revolution, California Chapter; prominent in the Odd Fellows and Masons, holding membership in the various bodies of the latter in Santa Ana, and the Shrine in Los Angeles. He served in Los Angeles throughout the entire war as the medical member and referee of the Southern California District Exemption Board No. 1, giving of his best efforts to help win the war. He and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Public spirited and progressive, Dr. Ball has always been a leader in all enterprises for the upbuilding of Santa Ana and has done all that was possible to advance the social and moral welfare of its citizens. He has built up an extensive practice and is well known in the medical circles of the entire state as an able and high-minded practitioner and citizen.

CHARLES PARKMAN TAFT.—The ninth generation of the Taft family in America is represented by Charles Parkman Taft, of Orange County, Cal., and he was born in Mount Vernon, Ohio, July 11, 1856. His father, Henry Cheney Taft, was a native of Uxbridge, Mass., and of Scotch descent, who married Hannah Sophia Parkman of Westboro, Mass. She represented the fifth generation of the Parkman family in America and was of English extraction. The various members of the Taft and Parkman families in this country have been prominently identified with the making of American history as statesmen, scientists and scholars, many of them attaining to places of prominence in the various localities in which they have lived and labored.

Charles P. Taft is a thorough American, is a graduate from Racine College, Racine, Wis., class of '77, and after leaving college he taught school for two and one-half years, then came to California and spent a year looking about the state for a desirable place of residence. He then settled in Los Angeles County with his parents, on the ranch where he now lives, and has participated in the wonderful development of what is now Orange County. Here he has twenty-three acres of land that he has developed from its primitive condition, and is carrying on experimental work in the propagation of semi-tropical fruits, meeting with very good results in his labors as thus far developed. He has done some valuable work in originating new varieties of loquats, avocados and feijoas, demonstrating that these varieties can be grown successfully as a commercial proposition. He considers his experiments are still in their infancy and is still deeply engrossed in his experimental work. The leader in his list is the well-known variety of the "Taft Avocado," which has proven to be a commercial success, and is being widely planted throughout Southern California.

The numerous varieties of the loquat that he has perfected are listed under the names of the Premier, the Early Red, which is ready for market in February and continues until the middle of June; the Champagne, the best of all; the Advance, and the Tanaka, of Japanese origin, are the strains he has improved.

Mr. Taft was united in marriage on July 17, 1888, with Miss Jennie McMullan, of Oakland, and she has shared with her husband the esteem of all those who have the pleasure of knowing them. Of an unassuming nature, Mr. Taft has carried on his experimental work quietly at his ranch. Though engrossed with his labors he has never failed to assist all worthy movements for the building up of his adopted county by giving of his time and means to those ends.

ISAAC R. WILLIAMS.—As one who contributed generously to the development of Orange County, Isaac R. Williams was well-known and universally honored as one of its pioneer settlers, and his passing away, after a brief and sudden illness, on March 23, 1906, removed from the community one of its staunchest citizens, and one who had furthered every good cause during his long years of residence here.

Pennsylvania was Mr. Williams' native state, and there he was born on June 20, 1854, in Schuylkill County. His parents were Daniel and Jane (Rosser) Williams, both natives of Wales, who came to this country with their families at an early date and settled in Pennsylvania. Daniel Williams made the long journey to California in 1856, coming via the Isthmus of Panama, and after spending some time in San Francisco he engaged in gold mining in Nevada County. In 1858 his family joined him, and in 1869 they removed to what is now Orange County, where he settled on a ranch, and there made his home until his death in 1889, Mrs. Williams passing away the following year.

As he was but four years old when the family came to California, and but fifteen when they came to Orange County, Isaac R. Williams had but little recollection of any other state. At the time he came here the county was but sparsely settled and ranching was yet in its infancy, and it was Mr. Williams' privilege not only to see the wonderful development of the ensuing years, but to take an important part in bringing these changes about. He early acquired a thorough knowledge of farming, and also was interested in stock raising. His first purchase was a tract of twenty acres at Buena Park, and for some time he was successfully engaged in dairying there. He increased his holdings from time to time in this district, and in after years devoted quite a large acreage to raising sugar beets, also raising cabbage and hay in large quantities, and he continued actively on his ranch until a short time before his demise. While Mr. Williams was a leading worker in the Republican party, he was in no sense a seeker for political preferment, but as a recognition of his capability he was four times appointed road overseer of his district, an office that he filled with much credit to himself and to the satisfaction of all.

In 1874 Mr. Williams was united in marriage with Miss Catherine Hunter, whose parents were John and Mary (Downing) Hunter, and they were for a number of years residents of Canada. Mr. Hunter was the postmaster and the proprietor of a general merchandise store at Bobcaygeon, and was also interested in the milling business there. Mrs. Williams' family were of Scotch and Irish descent, and many of her near relatives were prominent in the professions of law and medicine, her own father being a highly educated man. Mrs. Williams, who was the eldest of a family of four children, came to Orange County in 1871, where her father was engaged in ranching near Fullerton until his death. Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Williams were the parents of three children: Annie Jane is the widow of William Goldie, and they were the parents of two children—Mrs. Clark of Fullerton, and Margaret of Buena Park; John Walter married Miss Viola West of Fullerton and they have two children—George and Velma. He acts as manager for his mother's ranch and resides in a comfortable home on the property. He is popular in the ranks of the Fraternal Brotherhood and is one of the enterprising farmers of the Buena Park district, as is his brother, Daniel R., who assists him in the management of the place. The latter married Miss Grace Lucas, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Lucas, and they are the parents of a son, Daniel R., Jr. They are planting a considerable acreage of the estate to citrus fruit, adding largely to its future value in this way, and besides the ninety-two acres of the home place they rent land in the vicinity, and thus carry on their ranching operations on a large scale.

NAPOLEON BONAPARTE HELMS.—An old resident of Orange County whose life has been fraught with interesting events is Napoleon Bonaparte Helms, who was born in Missouri on April 15, 1844, the son of Huston and Nancy Helms, natives respectively of Indiana and Missouri. A pair of twins was granted these worthy parents, and our subject was one, his brother, Lafayette, who died in May, 1919, being the other.

While yet a young man, Napoleon was to be found in Texas following the enterprise, in which so many young men of that day engaged, of stock raising. The Far West, however, soon proved more alluring to him; and when the opportunity was offered him to join a company of some fifty persons then being organized in Texas, each with the same ambition, namely, to reach California and the Land of Gold, he did so, and started on the venturesome trip. They trusted in the courage of their hearts and the strength of their arms, and believed that they would reach the desired-for haven, and perhaps that was why little out of the ordinary occurred on their journey of four months by ox-team, until they reached San Bernardino in November, 1859. There Mr. Helms made his home, working at various pursuits, and taking up farming by way of preference when he could.

In 1867 Mr. Helms returned to Texas and with two uncles bought a herd of 1,800 steers to drive to California on speculation. Cattle at that time cost about five to eight dollars a head, and it was predicted that the Medlin Train, so-called because of the name of the leader, would realize a handsome profit on the deal. Everything went well until they got about 120 miles from El Paso, in the Guadalupe Mountains, when they were attacked by the Indians; and while they were overpowered to some extent, they lost only their cattle and all their horses. There were only sixteen men against eighty Indians, and they fought them two days. The ox-teams and their lives were saved by hard fighting, and in October, 1868, they reached California.

At San Bernardino, in 1869, Mr. Helms married Miss Elizabeth Long, one of the attractive ladies then in this western country, and three children were born to them: William L., Isabelle T., wife of William Prichard, of Laguna, and Rosie Jane, wife of Joseph Glines, of Oakdale. Six years later, in 1875, Mr. Helms came to Los Angeles, now Orange County, and located at Santa Ana, at that time a very small town with only one store for the accommodation of the few pioneers; and here, for twenty-nine years, he followed well drilling. Mrs. Helms passed away in October, 1914, at the age of sixty-five, beloved by all who knew her.

Now Mr. Helms owns a trim little ranch of five acres, highly cultivated and maintained in a manner such as would do anyone credit, upon which he conducts general farming and where he is visited by his many friends; and there, too, he discusses national politics, with the enthusiastic bias of a Jeffersonian Democrat, but also as an American citizen who will always put the welfare of his community ahead of party triumphs, and who, therefore, never permits partisanship to affect him in his attitude toward strictly local measures and movements.

JOSIAH C. JOPLIN.—Among the men who have built up a reputation that is worthy of emulation and who have had the best interests of Orange County at heart is Josiah C. Joplin. He was born near Liberty, what is now Bedford City, Bedford County, Va., a son of James W. and Emily (Booth) Joplin, both natives of that state. The father, who was of Scotch extraction and a farmer by occupation, was born November 14, 1807, and died in Kentucky in 1900 at the venerable age of ninety-three. The years between these dates were filled with hard toil and the endurance of trials that are incident to life in a frontier country. The family was first represented in the United States by Rafe Jopling who, with two brothers, James and Thomas Jopling, emigrated from Scotland in the eighteenth century and settled in Virginia. Rafe Jopling espoused the cause of his adopted country and sacrificed his life in the Revolutionary War. James Jopling, the paternal grandfather of Josiah C., was a nephew of this soldier and a planter in Virginia. The family originally spelled their name with the final g, one of the family. Dr. Josiah, for whom the subject of this review was named, being the first to use the present spelling, dropping the g. James W. Joplin was united in marriage in Virginia with Emily Booth, who was born there on June 4, 1816, and died in the same state August 2, 1869. Nine children were born to them: Thomas M., James Benjamin, Jesse, William, Josiah C., Ferdinand, Mrs. Betty Martin, Otho and Charles. The latter was accidentally drowned at Memphis, Tenn.

Born in Bedford County, in the Old Dominion State, September 15, 1844, Josiah C. Joplin was reared on a farm and received the training accorded to children in the pioneer days. However, he had some educational advantages, though limited, in the private schools of that vicinity. He always improved such opportunities as were presented to him and by careful and extensive reading became a well informed man. Six of the Joplin brothers served in the Confederate Army during the Civil War, Josiah C. enlisting in March, 1862, in Company A, Second Virginia Cavalry. They were first in Colonel Ashby's command, in Stonewall Jackson's Valley campaign, until Colonel Ashby was killed at Port Republic. After arriving at Richmond, his regiment became a part of the First Brigade, under Gen. J. E. B. Stewart, and was in the engagement at Meadow Bridge, Va., when General Stewart was killed. He served under Generals Beauregard and Robert E. Lee, participating in the battles of Antietam, Gettysburg, Richmond, and the Wilderness and others of equal importance. During his service he was slightly wounded in three different battles.

After the war was over Mr. Joplin returned to Franklin County, Va., where the family had moved during hostilities. He remained there but a short time and then went to Mississippi and Arkansas, spending three years in these states. He eventually returned to Virginia, and spent three years there in agricultural pursuits. While there he was united in marriage with Rebecca C. Boyd, a native of Virginia, born June 18, 1845, a daughter of Andrew Boyd. Her uncle, Hon. W. W. Boyd, was a member of Congress when Virginia seceded and he withdrew and joined the Confederacy and became a member of the Confederate Senate. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Joplin: Andrew Boyd, John Booth, James A., William P., Joe and Otho, deceased. Four of the boys are located in this county, and James A. is at Parker, Arizona.

In 1876 Mr. Joplin decided to remove his family to California and it was here that he found the land of "golden opportunity," for he found health and an opportunity to rear his children under a wider scope than he had found in the eastern country. He came direct to the present limits of Orange County, but then Los Angeles County, and has made this his home ever since. At the time of his arrival it was but sparsely populated and the thriving cities and towns of the present were but in their infancy. He located a 160-acre homestead in Belle Canyon, residing there seventeen years as a possessory claim before it was surveyed so he could file his homestead claim. He also purchased 320 acres from two settlers adjoining him and 286 acres from the Southern Pacific Railroad, and this he put under cultivation, engaging principally in stock raising and bee culture.

It can be truthfully said that no man has been more interested in the development of the county than Mr. Joplin, and through participation in every progressive movement he became well acquainted with every well-known citizen within its boundaries. He has willingly given of his time and means to promote the welfare of the entire county, and no man has ever been more loyal to its citizens, for he has always guarded well every trust reposed in him. One of the most important projects fostered by Mr. Joplin and which did much to advance the interests of the county was his connection with the World's Fair in Chicago in 1893. He personally collected an exhibit of the products of this county and his management of the exhibit there won for him much praise. So successful was he in this undertaking that he was chosen to superintend the exhibit of the county at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition at St. Louis, Mo. Mr. Wiggins, who was the superintendent of exhibits from the seven southern counties of California, gives him credit for being the first to make a success of chemically processing fruits for exhibits. Mrs. Joplin prepared a special exhibit of domestic canned fruit, for which she received a medal and diploma at the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago.

Politically, Mr. Joplin has always adhered to the principles of the Democratic party, and although Orange County usually has been strongly Republican, he has served several consecutive terms as county treasurer. He was first elected in 1898, from January 1, 1899 to January 1, 1903, then he was again elected county treasurer in 1906 and has been reelected every four years, or in 1910, 1914 and 1918. The last two times he was elected at the primaries. When requests were made through the legislators to the State Legislature for an increase in salary, Mr. Joplin refused to ask for an increase, saying that the county was paying him enough. No wonder that he stands high with all parties.

Mrs. Joplin by her many charitable deeds, kindness and modesty greatly endeared herself to the people of Santa Ana and Orange County, because she always stood for truth, uprightness and a high standard of morals, and never failed to give substantial encouragement to all movements in that direction; thus she was universally mourned by everyone when she passed away on March 20, 1911. She was a faithful wife and mother, having always been the greatest help and encouragement to her husband in his ambitions and naturally very proud of his success and the political honors he had received. With the same high standard and principles in view she trained and reared her children to be God-fearing, law-abiding and useful citizens, and her great regret at passing was that she could no longer see to the ministering of comforts to them, and before her death she wrote and left a letter addressed to her children, admonishing them to live right and useful lives and follow the example of their father, who had gained such a high place in the estimation of the public. She had been ill for several years and knew that the end was coming, so in her loving and thoughtful way she made a distribution of her keepsakes and household furniture and dishes, giving each one the things she knew they liked and that she wished them to have.

Always active in the interests of education, Mr. Joplin was instrumental in the organization of the Trabuco and Olive school districts. He took an active part in the founding of Orange County and his Trabuco precinct obtained the banner, because all votes were for county division and the organization of Orange County, and not one vote against it. One of the organizers of the Humane Society of Orange County in about 1900, Mr. Joplin has been its president ever since and very active in its work. He was one of the organizers and president of the first Fish and Game Protective Association of Orange County, and was one of the promoters of the Santa Ana Chamber of Commerce, serving as director for several years. He is prominent in the ranks of the Odd Fellows and was one of four organizers of the Orange County Veteran Odd Fellows Association, serving as its first president, and takes an active interest in the Orange County Historical Society. Some years ago Mr. Joplin sold his large ranch and since then has bought two small ranches, comprising a little over 300 acres of land in Belle Canyon, and these he devotes to stock raising and horticulture.

WILLIAM H. BROOKS—A very interesting pioneer who has the distinction of being the first white man to live at Laguna Beach, also of now being the very oldest living resident of this place, his first habitation being a cabin located back of where the present postoffice now stands, is William H. Brooks, rancher and mail carrier. He was born in Ellis County, Texas, on September 9, 1855, the youngest son and child of Spencer Brooks, who was born in New York in 1823, went to Illinois a young man and there married Miss Sylvia Heminsway, a native of Vermont, where she was born in 1828, and who had gone out to Illinois in her youth. The family went to Texas and remained there two years, and not liking the country returned to Illinois and Winnebago County, where Mr. Brooks was a stockman and farmer. There he died in 1857, but his widow came west to California and died at Laguna at the age of eighty-four years. One of the sons, Oliver S. Brooks, enlisted for service in the Civil War when he was sixteen, served three years, and he died at Laguna in 1897.

William H. Brooks spent his boyhood and youth on the open plains of Kansas and Colorado, became an expert with the rifle, and knew Wild Bill, Buffalo Bill and all of the scouts of those early days. In 1875 he had left home at Burlington, Kans., and arrived in Los Angeles when the now flourishing city was but a Mexican adobe village with nothing to presage its future greatness. The family had moved out to western Kansas in 1861, and they operated a stage station on the overland stage route to California. Those were the days when the country was infested with Indians and many a time this young lad stood guard with the men of the station to protect the people from the red men, and he also experienced many narrow escapes with his life. After these early experiences it was but natural that he should want to come to the Far West in search of a permanent location.

Arriving in Los Angeles County, Mr. Brooks went to Downey, at that time one of the most flourishing and wide-open towns in the Southland, and here he engaged in ranching. It was that same year that he wandered down to Laguna Beach on a hunting trip, and seeing the advantageous location for ranching he took up a government claim of what is now the town site of Laguna Beach, and was joined some few months later by his brother, the late "Nate" Brooks. Some time later Mr. Brooks sold his holdings here to an uncle by marriage, Henry Goff, for the paltry sum of fifty dollars cash. At the time of the boom in the Southland Mr. Goff sold off much of the land in lots and small acreage. As Mr. Brooks took notice of the rapid trend of affairs towards the development of the place he began to buy back property as he could until he became owner of considerable town property. As the beach city grew apace he has sold off much of his holdings at very advantageous prices and invested in alfalfa land in Antelope Valley.

In 1882 Mr. Brooks had finished his apprenticeship as a blacksmith under Hank Stow, of Anaheim, and established a shop of his own in Los Angeles, and for years he was the smith employed by the I. W. Hellman Street Railway Company when horses were used to draw the cars. His next shop was in Santa Ana, then at Laguna Beach, later at Calabasas and then Bakersfield. Mr. Brooks built the hotel and store at Laguna, but this was burned down in 1895, and it was then he went to Bakersfield. He served as constable of Laguna for twelve years, was deputy sheriff for two years, and postmaster for three years, and during his time he witnessed many interesting incidents that relieved the monotony of life at the little village. After being away for some years he returned in 1912 and took up his residence at Laguna, and since 1914 he has been mail carrier there. Since 1919 he has been interested in ranching in Antelope Valley, where he and his sons own valuable land.

On July 4, 1878, at Downey, W. H. Brooks was married to Miss Annie Clapp, born at San Jose, a daughter of Frank Clapp, a planter of Kentucky, where he was born. Her mother was Ruth Condit before her marriage. The family located in Alameda County, Cal., in 1856; Mr. Clapp died in Santa Ana in 1897, and the widow died there in 1907. An uncle, Frank Hartley, was one of the officers who captured the bandit, Vasquez. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Brooks: Josephine is the wife of Maston Smith, of Corona, by whom she has two children, William and George. By her first union with Harry Kelly she had seven children, six now living, and three of these daughters are living and married and have five children. The next younger than Josephine is Robert F., who is married, but has no children; Walter R. married Miss Stevens, but they have no children; Clarence H. married Miss Thrall and they have two children, Eleanor and William; Roy, the youngest son, is not married. All of the sons live and farm in Antelope Valley. Mrs. Brooks is known to her intimates as "Aunt Annie," and she has the honor of giving the name to Arch Beach, the attractive strand to the south of Laguna. Both Mr. and Mrs. Brooks are highly esteemed by all who know them in Orange County.

MRS. HATTIE W. ROSS.—A highly-honored representative of a pioneer family of Santa Ana is Mrs. Hattie W. Ross, the rancher and landowner, whose home at 1429 North Baker Street is always the center of warm-hearted hospitality. She was born at New Madrid, Mo., the daughter of Frederick W. and Virginia Maulsby, who were cotton planters, owning between 7,000 and 8,000 acres of choice Missouri land. Mr. Maulsby received his early education in the Southern Missouri Academy, and later was clerk of New Madrid County, Missouri.

Miss Maulsby came to Santa Ana with a sister, Mrs. Kate Doyle, now of El Monte, arriving at Santa Ana in September, 1885. She thus saw both Orange and Santa Ana develop from their infancy. When the plaza in Orange was laid out she assisted in the entertainment. On August 18, 1886, at the old Doyle home near Santa Ana, she was married to U. J. Ross, oldest child of Josiah and Sarah Ross, who grew up in Santa Ana, but was born in Watsonville. He is now foreman for the Hammond Lumber Company in Los Angeles. Mr. and Mrs. Josiah Ross came across the plains in an ox-team train in 1865 and settled in the Salinas Valley for a short time, coming down to Los Angeles County and settling in what is now Orange County a year later. Then there was for the most part only Mexican and Spanish settlers here, and considerable trouble was had with the natives. The early settlers' grain would be endangered by the Mexican ponies, which were allowed to graze at random, and it was necessary to kill many of these ponies before the Spanish element took any measures to keep their animals off the land they had sold to the early settlers. Josiah Ross came across the country in prairie schooners, and if anyone "had a story to tell," he certainly did. The wild mustard grew so tall that even when one stood on the driving board of the prairie schooner it was impossible to see over the fields. When dried, the mustard was used by the Ross family in place of firewood. Mrs. Eva Sweetster, sister-in-law of Mrs. Ross, was the first girl born in Santa Ana.

Josiah Ross purchased 275 acres of land at one dollar an acre, and a part of this tract is now the home place of Mrs. Hattie Ross. The rest of the land is still owned by Josiah Ross' descendants. Mrs. Ross is the owner of an eight-acre grove interset with walnuts and apricots. Her house was built on this ranch in 1907.

Four sons honor Mrs. Ross: Ernest F. is at home; Raymond married Miss Cora Huntington of Santa Ana; Melvin is married to Miss Cora Hazelwood, a Nebraska girl, and they live at Pasadena; and Carroll B. lives at home, a graduate of the Santa Ana high school and an employe of the Hammond Lumber Company of Santa Ana. Ernest Ross hauled the first and last loads of gravel to build the beet sugar factory at Delhi, and he was given a gold locket by the company. Raymond Ross was in the United States Navy during the late war, and did valiant service as a gunner on the U. S. S. "Dakota."

GRANVILLE SPURGEON.—Prominent among the names worthy to be perpetuated in the annals of Orange County, and particularly in the development of the city of Santa Ana, is that of the late Granville Spurgeon, whose sterling life and character will ever leave its impress on the community in whose upbuilding he was so loyally interested for many years.

The Spurgeon family traces its lineage back to England, the early representatives of the family settling in Virginia. The grandfather of our subject removed from the Old Dominion State to Bourbon County, Ky., during the days of Daniel Boone and other early pioneers, and here Granville Spurgeon, Sr., was born and reared. When he reached young manhood he was married to Lovina Sibley, who was born in Prince Edward County, Va., and who was directly descended from an influential English family. Removing to Columbus, Ind., in 1830, Mr. Spurgeon engaged in farming near there, for about ten years, when the family located in Clark County, Mo. After several years spent in agricultural pursuits there they removed to Alexandria, Mo., where Mr. Spurgeon engaged in the mercantile business and took a prominent part in the affairs of the community. It was during this period that Granville Spurgeon, Jr., the subject of this sketch, was born, on August 19, 1843, at Louisville, Ky., the family being on a visit there at the time.

Granville Spurgeon was educated in the private and public schools of Missouri, and also had the advantage of a course in a business college in that state. In 1849 his father had made the trip overland to California, and engaged in mining for eighteen months. As the years went by he again felt the call of the West, and in 1864 he again set out on the long journey, this time accompanied by his family, five months being spent in crossing the plains. They settled in Solano County, Cal., and here both parents passed away. Granville Spurgeon remained in Solano County for two years, then with his brother Benjamin and a sister he went to Watsonville, Santa Cruz County. In November, 1867, these two brothers joined their older brother, William H. Spurgeon, in Los Angeles County, taking up land between Compton and Los Angeles. William H. left them the following year, purchasing a tract of seventy-six acres belonging to the old Santiago de Santa Ana Grant, and here he laid out the town of Santa Ana. On the death of Benjamin Spurgeon in 1870, Granville Spurgeon joined his brother William H., entering into partnership with him, and from that date until his death, which occurred August 7, 1901, he was continuously identified with the development of Santa Ana, taking a prominent part in every undertaking and enterprise that gave this community its well-grounded, substantial start and enabled it to take its place as one of the representative cities of Southern California, so that the name of Spurgeon will ever be indissolubly associated with its history.

With his brother, W. H., Granville Spurgeon conducted the first mercantile establishment in Santa Ana, and for many years this was the leading establishment of the town. Later he established a thriving fire insurance business, continuing in this for a number of years, finally disposing of it at a good profit on account of his health. In later years he purchased a tract of 100 acres of peat land, devoting this to the production of celery. This was at the period when celery growing was at its height in Orange County, and Mr. Spurgeon was most successful in raising some of the finest celery ever grown here. During his early years here he acted as agent for the Wells Fargo Express Company, and later was appointed postmaster of Santa Ana, an office he filled for a number of years with the utmost satisfaction to the community. In fraternal circles Mr. Spurgeon was prominent in the ranks of the Odd Fellows, the Encampment and the Rebekahs, serving for sixteen years as treasurer of the subordinate lodge. While a believer in the principles of the Democratic party, he was essentially too broadminded to be swayed by mere partisanship, especially in local politics. At the time of his death, in 1901, he was one of the oldest residents of Santa Ana, and in his passing this city lost one of her stanch upbuilders and one who occupied a distinctive place in her development. Commencing life without means, Mr. Spurgeon's habits of thrift and industry, coupled with good business judgment, enabled him to amass a competency, and his life presents a record well worthy of emulation.

Mrs. Spurgeon, who before her marriage was Miss Frederica Reinhold, is a native of Milwaukee, Wis., where she received an excellent education. Coming to California in 1875 on a pleasure trip she met Mr. Spurgeon, at that time a leading merchant of Santa Ana, this acquaintance leading to their marriage the following year. They took up their residence in the house at Sixth and Main streets that Mr. Spurgeon had erected for his bride, and this remained the family home during his lifetime. After his death Mrs. Spurgeon disposed of the property and purchased her present home on North Broadway. Now among the oldest settlers of Santa Ana, Mrs. Spurgeon well remembers the early days of this now prosperous city, when what is now the finest residential section was a wilderness of wild mustard, and bearing little promise of the beautiful shady streets, attractive homes and well-kept lawns of today. A continuous resident of this city for forty-five years, with the exception of a year spent at Manitou, Colo., for Mr. Spurgeon's health, Mrs. Spurgeon has always taken the deepest interest in the welfare of the community, and, like her late husband, has shown a public spiritedness that has meant much to the advancement of the social and moral good of the whole neighborhood.

Of the two adopted daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Spurgeon, May S. is the wife of R. H. Ballard, president and general manager of the Southern California Edison Company, and they reside in Los Angeles. They have one daughter, Harriet, who is attending Vassar College. Helen S. is training for a professional nurse at the Good Samaritan Hospital, Los Angeles.

JUSTIN M. COPELAND.—Among the well-known educators who deserve the gratitude of posterity may well be mentioned, and in foremost place, the late Justin M. Copeland, a native of New Hampshire, where he was born on St. Patrick's Day, 1835. His father, the Rev. David Copeland, was a Methodist minister and became a pioneer clergyman in Southern Wisconsin. Justin M. began his education at Kent's Hill Seminary, Maine, later attended the Middletown College, in Middlesex County, Conn., and finished at Lawrence University, Appleton, Wis., to which town his parents had moved in 1857. When fifteen years of age he commenced his teaching in Maine, where he taught a term of school in Winthrop; then he taught in Connecticut, later in Wisconsin and then moved to Odell, Ill., where he taught for two years. On his return to Wisconsin he served for several years as an instructor at Fond Du Lac, next going to Kansas, where he purchased a farm near Derby which he worked in summer, while he taught in winter. In 1876 he went south to Key West, Fla., and there conducted a school for two years, when he returned to his ranch near Derby, Kans.

In May, 1881, he came west to California and settled in Old Newport, now Greenville, and for two years he taught the district school. He also taught in other places in Orange County, among them Villa Park, Trabuco, Aliso Canyon, New Hope and Newport, and only when his eyesight failed him, and he could no longer do justice to the work, did Mr. Copeland give up a work very dear to his heart and in which he had been so signally successful—a wonderful career, having taught over forty years.

On September 7, 1860, in Chicago, at the home of the bride's brother, Henry French, Mr. Copeland was married to Miss Mary E. French, a native of South Chesterville, Franklin County, Maine, who was born March 20, 1836, the daughter of Isaac and Eliza (Brown) French, worthy Yankee farmer folk of good old Maine. Four brothers of the French family came from England to Massachusetts in 1620, in a ship of the Mayflower party, and later some of the brothers went to New Hampshire and then to Maine. Mrs. Copeland's Great-grandfather French came from New Hampshire to Maine, and her grandfather, Joseph A., and two brothers were among the founders of South Chesterville, Maine. Mrs. Copeland had two brothers in the Civil War, Captain Henry French, and Joseph French, who was in a Maine regiment of cavalry and who now lives on the old Joseph French place. She attended Kent's Hill Seminary, and when a young lady came west to Chicago, where she resided with a sister and a brother. She had made the acquaintance of Justin M. Copeland while the Rev.

David Copeland was on that circuit and the acquaintance continued and resulted in their marriage.

On retiring from the pedagogical field, Mr. Copeland purchased 100 acres of land in Orange County, which he disposed of to advantage during the early days of the great boom; and later he purchased twenty acres handsomely set out as an orange grove at Riverside, which has since proven very valuable ranch property. This ranch is now in charge of their only child, Joseph Eugene, who is a graduate of the University of Southern California, and married Miss Carrie Wilson, daughter of J. A. Wilson of Santa Ana. Mrs. Copeland is also the owner of a walnut grove on Grand Avenue, Santa Ana. In March, 1915, at the ripe old age of eighty, Mr. Copeland passed to his eternal reward, rich in the esteem and affection of those who best knew him. Mr. and Mrs. Copeland were firm believers in cooperation, hence they were members of both the local Citrus Association and the Santa Ana Walnut Growers Association, since their organization.

Mrs. Copeland belongs, as did her exemplary husband, to the First Presbyterian Church of Santa Ana, in whose religious and social work she participates as best she can for one of her age. Public-spirited to a remarkable degree, she also took a very active part in the work of the Red Cross during the recent war, and at the age of eighty-two knit not less than 150 pairs of socks for the soldiers.

THOMAS J. WILLIAMS.—A native of Wales, Thomas J. Williams, one of Orange County's honored pioneer ranchers, brought with him to this country the sturdy characteristics of his Welsh forbears, the Williams family being men of powerful physique and long-lived, some of them living past the century mark. Mr. Williams was born at Carmorden, Glamorganshire, Wales, April 23, 1852, the son of John and Martha (Binon) Williams; the father was a farmer as was the paternal grandfather, John Williams, who lived to be 104 years old. Mrs. Martha Williams' father, Thomas Binon, was a carpenter of Glamorganshire, Wales, and also lived to be 104 years old. There were two sons and six daughters in the Williams family, Thomas J. being the sixth in order of birth, and the only one in America. He had only fair educational advantages, as there were no public schools in their locality, and every family had to pay tuition for each of their children, so in the case of large families, schooling was something of a luxury, and, too, his schoolhouse was seven miles away.

In early youth, Thomas J. Williams was apprenticed for four years to learn the blacksmith's trade, receiving as payment his board and clothes. His training in this work was very thorough, and included plow work and horseshoeing. During the haying and harvesting season he worked on the farms of the neighborhood, one year swinging the scythe and cradle for sixty-seven days straight. In those days their agricultural implements were very primitive, and the first threshing machine Mr. Williams ever saw he owned and operated—a flail—and the first mowing machine he was familiar with was wielded in the sweat of his brow in the form of a Welsh scythe.

On December 25, 1870, Mr. Williams was united in marriage with Elizabeth Williams, who was no kin, although of the same name. She was born in the same shire as her husband and educated in the subscription schools. Her parents were James and Mary (John) Williams and she was an only child. The father was a farmer in Wales and passed away in her early childhood. Her mother married a second time to David James and they came to San Bernardino in 1853, where they farmed for a number of years; Mr. James passed away at San Bernardino, and the mother spent her last years at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Thomas J. Williams, passing away at the age of ninety years.

In 1872, T. J. Williams decided to try his fortune in America, and accompanied by his wife and infant son, James, landed at Castle Garden, May 3, of that year. They went directly to Newark, Lincoln County, Ohio, and lived there for about five years, Mr. Williams working in the rolling mills there, making iron railroad rails. While in Newark, he became a naturalized citizen of the United States, and cast his first vote for Rutherford B. Hayes as president. In 1876, they came on to California, reaching San Bernardino December 26, remaining there until the following April, when they located in the New Hope district, now Orange County, then Los Angeles County, renting land belonging to the Rancho Los Bolsas. For six years he farmed on rented land, then purchased twenty acres of land, later investing in two more twenty-acre tracts, which comprises his present well-kept ranch of sixty acres. For four years he raised corn and hogs, but had to sell his meat as low as two and a half cents a pound. Later he engaged in dairying and general farming, growing alfalfa, barley, corn, beets, potatoes and chili peppers, and has set out an apple orchard of three and a half acres, besides a family orchard. He has put down two wells, one ten-inch and one seven-inch, and has two pumping plants run by electric power, producing 100 inches of water, sufficient to furnish ample irrigation for all his land. He also has a well, windmill and tank for domestic purposes.

Mr. and Mrs. Williams have had eight children: James, born in Wales, died in Newark, Ohio; John J., born in Newark, Ohio, died at San Pedro at the age of forty-two, leaving a widow; Mary Ann, now Mrs. Swindler of Anaheim, is the mother of four children; Thomas died at the age of nine years; Martha is the wife of Will Devenney, a rancher of Orange County; Elizabeth is the wife of Fred Mersel, an orange grower and rancher of Santa Ana; they have one child; George is in the U. S. Navy, having served in Asiatic waters and now in the Philippines; he married Miss Irene Lee of Santa Ana and they have one child living; Margaret married Henry Devenney, a rancher at Wasco, Kern County and they have one child.

In the early days, Mr. Williams was well acquainted with the McFadden brothers, John, Robert and James, those pioneers whose names will always be associated with the early development of Orange County. He was connected with the construction of their railroad, the Santa Ana & Newport, and also worked at loading and unloading their boats which ran between San Francisco and Newport. Always public spirited and progressive, Mr. Williams helped organize Orange County and has always been keenly interested in its development, and is now a promoter of the Santa Ana River Protection District. While a supporter of the Republican party, he is inclined to be liberal in local affairs, voting for the best men and measures. He served four years as constable of Westminster township. Mrs. Williams is a member of the Church of Latter Day Saints. Mr. Williams still looks after twenty acres of his land, which is devoted to apples and alfalfa, and rents out forty acres. He and his family stand high in the whole community, a tribute to their more than forty years of useful citizenship.

ROBERT EDWIN LARTER.—Numbered among the leading citizens of the Westminster district, Robert Edwin Larter has occupied a place of prominence for many years in the agricultural, commercial and financial interests of Orange County. A native of Canada, he was born in the Province of Ontario, ten miles west of Niagara Falls, September 7, 1861. His parents were Robert and Mary J. (Hansler) Larter, the latter a native of Canada; the father was born at Norwich, England, and came to Canada with his mother when a boy of fifteen. He was a millwright and cabinet maker, and later became interested in farming. He became prominent in the politics of his locality, being a man of excellent judgment, and served on the township and county councils of his Canadian home. In 1875 he made a trip to California, and while here he bought 160 acres of land; returning to Canada he remained there until the fall of 1876, when he came with his family to make California his permanent home. This was just after the completion of the Southern Pacific Railroad, and his land lay in what was then Los Angeles County, this being some years before the organization of Orange County. It was peat land, and was then a morass of willows, tules and blackberries, and it took much hard work to put it under cultivation, but it eventually became very productive. Robert Larter passed away in 1904; his widow survives him and resides at Westminster, having reached the age of eighty-four.

The first fifteen years of Ed. Larter's life were spent in Welland County, Ontario, his birthplace, and there he received his early education, attending the schools at Westminster after the family removed here. He early began to work, however, helping his father reclaim the swamp lands of their farm and breaking the virgin soil, and this practical experience he found to be of great value later in life when he took up farming on his own account. He purchased 120 acres of land and devoted it to general farming and dairying, in which he was very successful, also engaging in the celery industry when that business was at its height. Business acumen and wise investments have added to his capital and he now enjoys an affluence, the reward of industry and intelligence. Always public spirited, Mr. Larter has for years been prominent in the affairs of the community. A stanch Republican, he was chosen some years ago to represent that party on the board of supervisors, an office which he filled with great satisfaction to his constituency. He is now a member of the County Republican Central Committee, and prominent in all the councils of the party. He has always been interested in the cause of education and has given of his time to help raise the standard and equipment of the schools here, having served on the Huntington Beach Union High School Board. He was on the building committee of the Orange County Court House when that structure was under way and was prominent in the establishment of the Talbert Drainage District and the reestablishment of the Bolsa Drainage District. An authority on financial affairs in the locality, he is a director of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Santa Ana. In fraternal circles he is a charter member of Westminster Lodge No. 72, I. O. O. F.

Mr. Larter's marriage, in April, 1889, united him with Miss Pearl Kiefhaber, who was born in Indiana, but who came to Westminster with her parents when but a child. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Larter, two of whom passed away in infancy. Those living are Marie L., the wife of Orel C. Hare of Westminster, whose review appears elsewhere in this work; and Lutie, who is Mrs. Will McClintock, her husband being a rancher at Garden Grove.

HENRY OELKERS—In naming the pioneers of Orange County any list would be incomplete without special mention of Henry Oelkers, who for nearly forty years was identified with the wine industry of Anaheim. He was born near Hamburg, Germany, February 17, 1856, and received his education in that country.

In 1882 Henry Oelkers immigrated to America and settled at Anaheim, where he obtained employment with his uncle, William König, now deceased, who came to Anaheim from Germany in 1859. Mr. König purchased twenty acres on South Los Angeles Street, where the Southern Pacific Railway depot is located. Here he planted a vineyard, erected a winery and continued to manufacture wine for many years. The land has greatly increased in value and is now built up with residences and business blocks. William König was very public-spirited and always willing to support every worthy movement that had as its ultimate aim the upbuilding of the best interests of Anaheim. One of his most noted acts—one that expressed in a very substantial way his keen interest and pride in the civic affairs of Anaheim—was the donation of the site of the public library. Being an able and successful business man, possessed of sound judgment and executive ability, William König was recognized by his fellow citizens and duly elected to the important office of trustee of Anaheim, which he filled with great satisfaction to his townsmen and credit to himself. He passed away in 1911, mourned by a host of friends.

Henry Oelkers was associated with his uncle from 1882 to 1911, where he learned the business of winemaking and grape culture, eventually becoming the superintendent of his plant. In recent years he has been engaged in pruning and grafting and otherwise caring for orange and lemon groves, and is recognized as an expert in his line of work. During his nearly forty years of residence in Orange County he has witnessed marvelous changes—the development of the citrus industry, the growth of small villages into up-to-date and prosperous cities and the wonderful development of the oil fields.

In October, 1914, Henry Oelkers was united in marriage with Lisette Pohl, a native of Germany, but for a number of years a resident of Chicago. She had a son by a former marriage, who is now known as George Oelkers, now attending the Polytechnic High School in Los Angeles.

Fraternally, Henry Oelkers is a member of Anaheim Lodge No. 199, I. O. O. F.; Concordia Singing Society; charter member of Lincoln Hospital of Los Angeles, and religiously belongs to the Zion Evangelical Lutheran Church.

JOHN B. NICHOLS—Well known in Santa Ana as an attorney-at-law, John B. Nichols is a native of Fond du Lac County, Wis., and is the son of Thomas and Clarissa (Brown) Nichols, both deceased. Thomas Nichols was born in the State of New York and his wife was a native of Maine, their marriage being solemnized at Albion, Edwards County, Ill. The parents died when John B. was a small boy, and as a consequence he went to live with an uncle in Edwards County, Ill., for a few years, but ever since he was twelve years old he has made his own way in the world. He returned to his native state and worked out on farms near Fond du Lac and lived with an uncle there until he was about fifteen years old, then returned to Illinois. His elementary education was received in the rural school of his district during the winter time, as he was obliged to work on the farm during the other seasons of the year. He finished his high school course at the Albion high school, after which he attended the Southern Illinois State Normal University at Carbondale, from which he was graduated. Later he entered the University of Illinois at Champaign, working his way through this institution by teaching school, and after graduating he engaged in educational work in that state.

In 1897 Mr. Nichols came to Santa Ana, where he was principal of what is now the Roosevelt school three years, afterward becoming principal of the schools at Orange. From 1903 to 1907 he filled the post of superintendent of schools for Orange County, elected on the Republican ticket, and then moved to Oxnard, Ventura County, where he was principal of the Oxnard schools. Later Mr. Nichols went to Los Angeles County, where he accepted the position of principal of the Union high school at Compton, where he remained two years.

In the meantime Mr. Nichols had been improving his spare moments by reading law, having always cherished a desire to enter the legal profession. While living at Urbana, Ill., he took part of a course in law and finished his course in Los Angeles and was admitted to the bar in 1915, first practicing his profession in Los Angeles. On February 1, 1919, Mr. Nichols returned to Santa Ana, where he opened an office and has since prosecuted his profession in this city.

Mr. Nichols has been twice married; his first marriage was solemnized at Alton, Ill., when he was united with Miss Jane Marriott of that city. She passed away in 1903 at Santa Ana, leaving five children: Claude W.; Nora, Mrs. D. D. Dawson; Edith, Mrs. Lucien Wisser; Ruth, Mrs. C. O. Harbell, and William H. The second marriage of Mr. Nichols, in Orange, in 1908, united him with Miss Mary S. Schofield. In religious associations Mr. Nichols is a Methodist. In politics he is a Republican and fraternally is a Knights Templar Mason, affiliated with the Santa Ana lodges.

DOMINGO AND MARIA BASTANCHURY.—Among the pioneer settlers of what is now Orange County, the names of Domingo and Maria Bastanchury will never be forgotten, for they were liberal supporters of all movements that had for their object the betterment of local conditions and the upbuilding and development of the county. Of foreign birth, Domingo Bastanchury first saw the light of day at Aldudes, Basses-Pyrenees, France, in 1839, the son of Gracian Bastanchury. Domingo never had the opportunity to obtain an education, as he had to work hard from a very early age, but what he lacked in book knowledge he made up in business sagacity, and from humble sheep herder he rose to a position of prominence and wealth in his chosen home place. When a young man of twenty-one he left home and friends and came to America, for he knew that brighter opportunities awaited the man of energy and judgment than were to be found in his own home locality in the Pyrenees. His object in coming to California was to make his fortune, and he left on a sailing vessel that took six months to make the journey from his local port around Cape Horn to California. The ship encountered many storms and the passengers suffered many hardships, but they bore them all with fortitude and eventually landed in the land of their hopes—California.

Arriving here in 1860, Mr. Bastanchury worked as a sheep herder for wages. After several years in that capacity he gradually acquired a band of his own and as this increased he became independent; at one time he was the largest sheep owner in Los Angeles County, having from 15,000 to 20,000 head that were grazed all over the southern part of the state. During the dry years when feed was scarce he would take his flocks into the mountains and try to save them from starvation. At other times when the sale of wool was so slow on account of the tariff conditions that after it had been kept for two years it had to be sold for two cents per pound. What that meant to sheep men, no one but themselves knew. As the ranges were diminished in size by the ranchers who began to grow various kinds of crops the sheep men gradually went out of business and Mr. Bastanchury acquired large land holdings in what is now Orange County. He had 1,200 acres south of Fullerton and later had 6,000 acres northwest of that city. There still remains of the original acreage 3,300 acres. The family together have 3,000 acres planted to citrus fruits, the largest individual citrus grove in the world. All the development of the large tract has been accomplished within the past twenty years, as prior to 1910 it was grazing land or barley fields. This work was done by the Bastanchury brothers, Gaston A., Joseph F., and John B., who comprise the Bastanchury Ranch Company, now owners of most of the property.

Domingo Bastanchury was united in marriage in Los Angeles, on July 16, 1861, with Miss Maria Oxarart, who was born in 1848, in the same place as her husband, who came to California in 1873. Her parents were John and Martha Oxarart, farmers in Basses-Pyrenees, who raised grain, cattle and goats. The daughter obtained a limited education in her native home, but after coming to America she attended school a year to perfect her English. Mrs. Bastanchury shared with her husband all the trials and hardships incident to pioneer life on the plains of Southern California and while she was in the mountains with his sheep she was alone with her little family, her nearest neighbors being several miles away. She well remembers the country when there was no sign of the present town of Fullerton; all trading was done in Los Angeles or Anaheim. The whole country was devoted to grain raising and to the raising of stock, with the exception of the grape industry that was being developed about Anaheim. Then came the making of wine, one of the industries of note in the state at one time. There were only two houses between her home place and Los Angeles, and with the now hundreds of autos travel the main road between Los Angeles and Fullerton in the early days there would not be more than one team a week.

Mr. and Mrs. Bastanchury became the parents of four sons: Dominic J., who owns and lives on his 400 acres near La Habra which is planted to walnuts and citrus fruits; Gaston A., manager of the Bastanchury Ranch Company; Joseph F., and John B., all of whom reside on the ranch and assist in its care. It is marvelous to realize that when so much land is continually changing ownership that this large holding still intact and under the highest state of development, all accomplished by the young men who have grown up in Orange County. On July 21, 1909, Domingo Bastanchury passed away at his ranch home, the house having been erected by himself and his good wife in 1906, and was counted one of the show places of this section of Orange County. Mrs. Bastanchury makes her home on her 200 acres and is in the enjoyment of the best of health and enters heartily into all movements that mean progress and better living conditions in the county. Much of the prosperity now enjoyed by the family is due to the capable management and foresight of this pioneer woman who has been a witness of the wonderful transformation of the county and Southern California since she first settled here, a young girl. She believes in living and letting live and when she can aid any worthy enterprise for bettering local conditions she is ready and willing to do so. Now in the evening of her days she can look back upon a life well spent and forward without fear, for she has done her part to make the pathways of her descendants smoother than the paths she once trod and to prepare them for the tasks that lead to success.

D. EDSON SMITH.—A well-known pioneer, highly esteemed for his scholarship and long years of fruitful labors, is D. Edson Smith, of West Seventeenth Street, Santa Ana, whose accomplished wife is almost as favorably known for her art studies and work, particularly in experiments with architecture. He was born in Dorset, Bennington County, Vt., on January 11, 1839, and came westward with his parents when he was only a year old, residing successively in ten different states. He was a member of the first class to be graduated from the University of Iowa in 1858, and for a while taught school in Missouri, and next served as a teacher eighteen miles southwest of Syracuse, N. Y. He also taught in Pennsylvania, and at the close of the Civil War he was engaged by the Freedman's Bureau to instruct some of the freed slaves in Virginia and North Carolina.

In 1867 he settled in the Oneida Community in New York State, where the colony made iron and steel devices, and also silverware, and there he remained until 1881, when he came to California and purchased a home. He went back to New York for a year, but in 1883 he returned to the Coast and the Golden State.

For ten years he was secretary of the Pomological Society of Southern California, and he became well-known throughout the Southland as the editor of "Repute." He also edited work for the month department of the Rural Californian for three years, and then he published an article entitled, "Ten Acres Enough," in which he set forth the argument that in California ten acres handled properly was sufficient for any man to take good care of, and quite as sufficient for his prosperity. This article was widely copied, and gave Mr. Smith national fame. In 1901, Mr. Smith was sent to the Buffalo Exposition to represent the Rural Californian. A son of Mr. Smith having become manager of the Oneida Community silverware factory, with his headquarters at Niagara Falls, Mr. Smith spent some time with him during the Exposition visit.

The purchase made by Mr. Smith in 1881 included ten acres, which he developed so cleverly that it became known as the Model Ranch. Then he sold his land, and moved into town. The removal involved their building a new home, and Mrs. Smith, who had made a special study of architecture, particularly the antique, designed their dwelling and created a structure that was so notable as to attract wide attention. The first Mrs. Smith was Miss Sarah Frances King before her marriage, and a member of a long-honored family in the Empire State, and their one living son is Eugene Deming Smith, who is at present in San Francisco as manager of the office there for the Oneida Community. The present Mrs. Smith, to whom he was married in May, 1888, was Ellen Frances (Hutchins) Reid, the mother of Ransom Reid, who was for twenty years superintendent of the water works of Santa Ana.

The Smiths, of which our subject is such a worthy representative, date back to the Pilgrim Fathers and the famous Preserved Smith, who came from England and brought so much that was desirable to the New World. What enviable blood they transmitted to Mr. Smith, with all of noble and ennobling sentiment such as emanates from a sound body and a sound mind, may be judged when it is stated that now, in his eighty-second year, Mr. Smith is far more supple than the average man of thirty. He can stand on the edge of a brook, for example—and the writer of these lines has witnessed him in the operation—and so lower his head to sip the purling water: that he has no need of flattening out his body to get a drink, and having thoroughly studied the laws of nature, he affirms that any man can be young at eighty who eats and otherwise lives correctly.

Mr. Smith was a resident of this section when it was a part of Los Angeles County. He served as president of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company for a number of years, and was one of the organizers of the Southern California Apricot Growers Association.

GEORGE MCPHEE—Orange County is to be congratulated upon having its sealer of weights and measures, George McPhee, a man of true worth and unquestioned probity of character, one who has filled this important post for six years with credit to himself and to his constituency in the county. Mr. McPhee was born October 19, 1856, in Kent County, New Brunswick, the son of George and Roxie McPhee. The father was a millwright and George assisted him in the work until 1881, when he migrated farther westward in the great Dominion of Canada, stopping at Winnipeg, Manitoba, but subsequently locating at Birtle, where he conducted a hotel for six years.

In 1892 he arrived in California, locating at Elsinore, Riverside County, with his brother conducted a newspaper. Here he remained until 1896, when he came to Santa Ana and purchased an interest in the Santa Ana Blade, serving as the editor of this progressive publication for sixteen years. His wise, conservative, patriotic editorials and the high ideals of citizenship advocated by the Blade wielded such a potent influence in moulding public sentiment in the county that to his efforts can be attributed the effectual solution of many of the county's difficult problems. In 1911 Mr. McPhee was nominated by acclamation for city councilman; he made no campaign, but was elected by a splendid majority, and at his second election led the field in number of votes received. During his two terms of four years each as councilman, Mr. McPhee was a member of the committee on public buildings and city affairs. He was always greatly interested in every worthy movement that had as its aim then upbuilding and betterment of civic conditions in Santa Ana; during the years that he served as councilman many public buildings were erected, miles of street pavements constructed, an ornamental lighting system installed and the city grew by leaps and bounds.

In 1914 Mr. McPhee received the appointment of county sealer of weights and measures, and so efficiently has the work of this department been conducted that Orange County was recently complimented, by the state sealer of weights and measures, as being the banner county of the state in this line of work. The packing houses and factories of the county co-operate with Mr. McPhee in the prosecution of the work, which greatly aids him in the operation of his department. He believes in educating the public to the importance of this work and in conducting a campaign along this line.

In 1888 Mr. McPhee was united in marriage with Miss Martha Anderson, native of Ontario, Canada, and three children have been born to them: Barry, who is connected with the Edison Company of Santa Ana, married Miss Helen N. C. Ross is a prominent musician of Santa Ana and his marriage united him with Miss Grachen Denman, of Los Angeles; Muriel is married and resides in Seatons Wash. Fraternally Mr. McPhee is a member of Santa Ana Lodge No. 794, B. P. O. Elks; also of the Modern Woodman of America.

HERBERT A. FORD—A prominent citizen of Orange County, and one who has been a factor in both the mercantile life of Fullerton since its inception as a settlement, and who also developed a tract of land to oranges and walnuts which has since become one of the finest residence districts in the city, Herbert A. Ford was native of Michigan, born in Wright, that state, on May 12, 1859. His parents were David A. and Jane Ford, both born in New York State, the father, now ninety-two, living in Garvanza.

In 1884 Mr. Ford came from Dakota to what is now Orange County, first settling in Placentia, where he followed horticultural pursuits and worked as a ranch manager. When the town of Fullerton was started, in 1887, he located there and started the first store, with Mr. Howell as a partner for one year, under the firm name of Howell and Ford. Later he bought his partner out and continued the business alone. During that time he had purchased twenty acres of land on West Commonwealth Avenue, from the Pacific Land and Improvement Company, and also set out several orange and walnut groves in the Fullerton district on shares for this company.

The marriage of Mr. Ford in 1889 united him with Carrie E. McFadden, daughter of that honored pioneer, William M. McFadden, who is mentioned elsewhere in this history. Three sons blessed their union: Alvin L., dairy inspector of Kern County, married and has a son, Herbert Alvin; Maurice E., who saw service in France for eight and one-half months in the late war in the Three Hundred Sixteenth Division, at home; and Herbert A., a dentist of Fullerton; he was first lieutenant in the Denver Review Corps, U. S. A., stationed at a camp in Georgia.

Mrs. Ford is an active member of the First Methodist Church of Fullerton, a member of the W. C. T. U.; she is past matron of the Eastern Star, and a member of the Ebells Club and the Placentia Round Table, as well as prominent in Red Cross work during the war. Since the death of her husband, which occurred in 1894, Mrs. Ford has subdivided the original ranch of twenty acres, known as the Orchard Subdivision, and the property has all been sold off under her personal management and is now the choice residence district of Fullerton, many fine homes adorning the tract. Mrs. Ford completed a beautiful bungalow on a portion of the land which she retained, and there she makes her home, taking an active part in the social, church and club life of the community which she has seen grow from such small beginnings to its present rank as one of the most beautiful towns of Southern California.

MRS. PEDRILLA P. PFEIFFER.—For nearly half a century a resident of Orange County, Mrs. Pedrilla P. Pfeiffer, widow of the late John A. Pfeiffer, one of the county's most honored citizens, now makes her home at 127 North Grand Street, Orange, where, now in her seventy-ninth year, she maintains an active interest in the progress of the community.

Born February 13, 1842, at Shelbyville, Ill., Mrs. Pfeiffer was the daughter of Robert and Hannah (Way) Parrish, natives, respectively, of Virginia and Indiana. The father was a wagonmaker by trade, and for many years conducted a shop at Shelbyville, where he was a well-known citizen. He passed away when Mrs. Pfeiffer was but six years old. Of a family of six children, Mrs. Pfeiffer is the only one now living and the only one to take up residence in California. She grew up at Shelbyville, attended the public schools there, and at the age of twenty, on April 15, 1862, she was united in marriage with John A. Pfeiffer.

A native of Germany, Mr. Pfeiffer was born at Muehlhausen on January 25, 1837. His parents were farmers in moderate circumstances, but gave their son all the educational advantages possible, and he early developed ambitious tendencies, feeling that America offered greater opportunities. In 1850, at the age of eighteen, he took passage on a sailing vessel from Bremen, and after sixty-six days reached New York. Going on to St. Louis, Mo., he secured employment in a store, improving his spare moments by attending a business college, realizing how this additional training would help him to advance in business. Securing a position with the mercantile establishment of Gen. W. F. Thornton at Shelbyville in 1855, at the modest sum of $200 a year, his worth was soon recognized, and he was rapidly advanced to a position in the banking house of General Thornton, and was steadily advanced to a salary of $200 per month and the post of cashier, an office he filled with unqualified success for twenty-eight years. As a mark of the confidence reposed in him by his employer, upon the death of General Thornton, Mr. Pfeiffer was made administrator of his estate, without bond, and he settled up all the complicated details of this large business in a most satisfactory manner. At the breaking out of the Civil War he was running a mercantile business of his own, but he sold out and offered his services to his country. On account of partial disability he was placed as a sutler.

His health somewhat impaired by the heavy responsibilities of so many years. Mr. Pfeiffer and his family went to San Antonio, Texas; there he outfitted and traveled over the frontier for a time. Returning again to Illinois he resumed his position, but in September, 1881, brought his family to California. Settling in Villa Park precinct, then called Mountain View, he purchased thirty-two acres. At that early day both agriculture and horticulture were in their experimental stages, and it was not yet fully determined to what products the soil was best adapted. Many vineyards were being set out, however, and Mr. Pfeiffer set fourteen acres of his ranch with grapes. Like everyone, his vineyard suffered from blight, and he rented the ranch, moved to Highland and for two years ran a grocery store, during the building of the hospital. Returning to the ranch he planted vines a second time, but was unable to root out the disease, and gave up his efforts.

After this discouraging circumstance Mr. Pfeiffer disposed of his land and removed to Orange, where he erected two bungalows on North Grand Street, in one of which Mrs. Pfeiffer still resides. He was prominent in the ranks of the Odd Fellows, having been a charter member of the lodge at Orange and treasurer of it from the date of its organization for many years. He was also a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. In 1916 Mr. Pfeiffer suffered an attack of paralysis from which he never recovered, his death occurring on August 23 of that year. An upright, energetic citizen, Mr. Pfeiffer was loyal to every trust reposed in him and his memory will ever be cherished by the many friends who appreciated his sterling character.

Mr. and Mrs. Pfeiffer were the parents of six children; two passed away in infancy during their residence in Illinois; Henry O. died in San Diego at the age of twenty, and August died at Highland at the age of nineteen; Mollie Mable is the wife of Arthur S. Barker, a real estate dealer at Los Angeles; they have one son, Russell A. Barker, who served in the World War, seeing active duty in France; Mrs. Ada Meine is a bookkeeper for a Los Angeles firm. During their residence at Villa Park, Mr. and Mrs. Pfeiffer were active members of the Neighborhood Church there. Since coming to Orange Mrs. Pfeiffer has affiliated with the Christian Church at that place, having been reared in that faith. A Rebekah, she has been a faithful member of its ranks for many years in Orange.

MRS. ELIZABETH LAMB.—An extensive land owner, well endowed with this world's goods, and highly respected and loved for her many beautiful and sterling traits of character is Mrs. Elizabeth Lamb, widow of the late William D. Lamb, prominent pioneer citizen of Southern California. Her life has indeed been rich in varied experiences in that sort of interest and adventure that was the accompaniment of pioneer days, nor has it been unmingled with hardships, some of them being almost unbelievable.

Mrs. Lamb is a native of England, her birthplace being at Billings, Lancashire, June 24, 1850. Her parents were John R. and Sarah (Jolley) Holt, also of English birth. The father was a wheelwright and joiner and he followed this line of work for a number of years in his native land. They were the parents of nine children, and when Elizabeth was thirteen years of age she came to America with two sisters and a brother. They sailed from Liverpool in May, 1863, and even then Elizabeth's adventurous experiences began. After seven weeks of storm and calm they finally landed at Castle Garden, New York, coming across on the old condemned sailer "Antarctic" which was sunk on the return voyage. Their destination was Utah, and they made their way across the country as far as Omaha by train, thence to Salt Lake City by ox team, arriving there six months after their departure from Liverpool. Here they located, and later Elizabeth made the acquaintance of William D. Lamb, to whom she was married on October 12, 1868. Mr. Lamb was then only nineteen years of age, but his life had been filled with arduous experience, even at that time. Born in Onondaga County, N. Y., he was left motherless at the age of four, and lived for a time with an uncle near Grand Rapids, Mich. When he was eleven years old he set out to make his way alone, working his way through to Omaha on railroad grading work. When he was about fourteen years old his father came up from the South and the two crossed the plains in a Mormon freight train. At that time he had not even learned to read, for his life had been so full of toil that there had been no time for schooling, but after reaching Salt Lake City he managed, even in the midst of many duties, to learn the alphabet and acquire the rudiments of an education.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Lamb remained in Salt Lake City for a time, and there their eldest daughter, Mary, now Mrs. E. J. Levengood, was born. Then they decided to locate in California, and when they arrived here Mr. Lamb earned a living by chopping and hauling wood on what was later the Lucky Baldwin ranch, Mrs. Lamb and her little one making their home in their covered wagon. They then moved on to El Monte and tried farming there, but there was a long season of drought and all their corn and other produce was dried up. Their next move was to Azusa, where they lived in the canyon, afterwards named Lamb's Canyon for Mr. Lamb. Here two of their children were born, but they lost both of them and they were buried there. Mr. Lamb next bought a squatter's claim of 160 acres four miles from Huntington Beach, but in 1879, after they had lived there four years, litigation arose and he and other claimants to adjoining tracts were dispossessed, the Los Bolsas Company winning the suit. His next purchase was forty acres of the Stearns ranch at Newhope; here they settled, made many improvements and prospered. They subsequently added to their acreage, and Mrs. Lamb still owns the old home of 120 acres there. The next purchase was 220 acres at Garden Grove and, in 1892, he closed the deal for 720 acres of the Los Bolsas ranch at a very reasonable price, and here Mrs. Lamb now makes her home. At first they only ran cattle on these lands, but they have now been brought up to a high state of cultivation. They were always among the most progressive farmers of the community, as their place was always equipped with the latest inventions in farm machinery that could be obtained, and the example of their enterprise meant much for the progress and welfare of their neighborhood.

For several years Mr. Lamb was the resident manager of the Los Bolsas Land Company and other large ranches, and through his work much improvement was made on the tracts under his charge. He early saw the necessity for drainage and irrigation, and with several associates purchased a dredger, the first of its kind in this territory, and thus completely revolutionized the early methods of carrying on this work. In no instance, perhaps, is his perseverance and progressive spirit more plainly shown than in the fact that after he had embarked in business for himself he employed a man to keep his books, and paid him an extra salary for his personal instruction in reading, arithmetic and the general principles of business, this arrangement continuing for three years; after that he was able to superintend every detail of his extensive business interests for himself and with marked success. MR.

Lamb passed away in March, 1911, and is buried at Santa Ana. Like her husband, Mrs. Lamb had only the most limited opportunities to secure an education, but this was fully made up through the practical business experience and "hard knocks" of pioneer days. She has always been a woman of great business and executive ability, and ever shared with her husband the burdens and responsibilities of their great undertakings, and much of his success was due to her splendid judgment and management.

Mr. and Mrs. Lamb were the parents of nine children, five of whom are living: Mary, now Mrs. Edward J. Levengood of Pomona, was first married to William Hamner, by whom she had two children, Jessie M. and Anson; Wm. Anson and Vina died in childhood; Arthur, now deceased, married Mary Stephens and had one son, Leo Ford Lamb, who resides in Los Angeles; Walter D., a rancher near Santa Ana, married Gertrude DuBois, a daughter of Valentine DuBois of Santa Ana, and they have two children, Mrs. Velda May Squires and Kenneth; Laura is the wife of Gregory Harper, and they have two children, Ivan H. and Harold L.; Hugo J., a rancher near Huntington Beach, married Effie Stockton, and two children have been born to them, Lois and Alice; Earl A. is also engaged in ranching near Huntington Beach; he married Etta Bradley, and they are the parents of three children, Rachel E., Wm. G. and Alvan; Robert died at the age of four months.

Mrs. Lamb makes her home on her 720-acre ranch southeast of Huntington Beach, her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Gregory Harper, living with her, and she is active and interested in the management of her properties and extensive business interests. A woman of great force of character, withal kindly and considerate, she is greatly beloved by her family and a large circle of friends. A true type of the pioneer woman, her life is a record of accomplishment and good deeds that will leave their beneficent influence on the generations to come.

WILLIAM WENDT.—A distinguished American artist who has added lustre to the rapid development of art in California is William Wendt, who was born in a little village in the north of Germany on February 20, 1865, and came to America at the age of fifteen, when he took up his residence in Chicago. He attended the public schools, and became interested in commercial art, spending a number of years in the shops, together with Gardner Symons.

In 1893, Mr. Wendt contributed to the Chicago Society of Artists Exhibition, and was awarded his first recognition in the granting of the Yerkes prize. He maintained a studio at Chicago, and spent the following year sketching near San Jose, in California. Later, he made another trip to California, this time to Los Angeles, after which he returned to Chicago and planned with Mr. Symons a tour of Europe. With the exception of two terms of study in the evening classes of the Chicago Art Institute, Mr. Wendt is a self-taught artist.

Proceeding to Europe, Mr. Wendt spent fifteen months in the galleries of London and other English centers, and in painting scenes of rural life in England; making his headquarters at St. Ives, Cornwall. Leaving his companion still luxuriating in British art environment, Mr. Wendt returned to America, and with his foreign subjects made an unusual exhibition at the galleries of the Art Institute in Chicago. A second trip to Europe was extended to a survey of the galleries and art fields of Hamburg, Berlin, Munich and Amsterdam and Paris, returning to America in 1904 to devote himself to American landscape painting. Mr. Wendt contributed to the St. Louis Exposition in 1904, and received the silver medal; and the same year he was awarded the Kahn prize at Chicago. In 1897 he had been given the Young Fortnightly Prize, and in 1901 the bronze medal of the Buffalo Exposition. The next year he was given honorable mention at the exhibition of the Chicago Society of Artists.

In 1906, Mr. Wendt moved to Los Angeles, and for seven or eight years was president of the California Art Club. He exhibited at the Museum in Exposition Park, which museum later purchased his picture, "The Land of Heart's Desire."

For many years, Mr. Wendt has been associated with the art development at Laguna Beach, having painted in that locality for the last seventeen years, and in 1918 he erected a well-planned studio at Arch Beach about a mile south of Laguna Beach, on the Coast. The studio is more than a working place, it is a retreat from the humdrum of everyday activities, for Mr. Wendt feels he has found at Laguna the opportunity for seclusion sought for during many years, and he expects here to complete many of his dreamed-of pictures, and to accomplish the height of his ambition. Besides having been made an associate of the National Academy of Design, in 1913, Mr. Wendt is a member of the National Art Club of New York City, the Chicago Society of Artists, the California Art Club, and the Laguna Beach Art Association and Federation of Arts, Washington. In addition to the honors already referred to, Mr. Wendt received the fine arts prize of the Society of Western Artists in 1912, the silver medal of the Panama Exposition in 1915, the Wednesday Club Medal prize, St. Louis 1910, and the grand prize of the San Diego Exposition of the same year, the Kirchner prize, American Artists Exhibition, Art Institute of Chicago, 1913, and the Clarence A. Black prize of the California Art Club in 1916. He is represented in permanent collections of the Chicago Art Institute, the Friends of American Art, the Cliff Dwellers, the Union League of Chicago, the Athletic Club of Los Angeles, the Cincinnati Museum, the Art Association of Indianapolis, the National Arts Club, New York, and other museums and clubs.

In June, 1906, the same year in which Mr. Wendt became a resident of Los Angeles, he was married to the noted sculptor of Chicago, Julia M. Bracken; their home is at 2814 North Sichel Street, Los Angeles.

According to a writer in the Chicago Tribune, under date of May 16, 1920, the four favorite pictures in the Chicago Art Institute are, first, "The Song of the Lark," by Jules Breton; second, "The Silence of Night," by William Wendt; third, "The Flower Girl in Holland," by George Hitchcock; and fourth, "The Home of the Heron," by George Inness—usually rated the greatest of American landscape artists. "The Silence of the Night," which may perhaps rank as Wendt's masterpiece, was presented to the Chicago Art Institute by a number of the friends of that museum and school; another canvas by Mr. Wendt also hangs in this noted gallery, a landscape entitled "When All the World is Young," painted at Topango Canyon, California.

JAMES R. KELLY.—In the passing away of James R. Kelly on April 17, 1908, Orange County lost one of its staunch citizens whose labors for the development of this locality in striving to enhance its progress and develop its resources entitle him to a prominent rank among its early residents.

The lineage of the Kelly family is traced back to three brothers and a sister who were born in Ulster, in the north of Ireland, and who came to America between the years of 1720 and 1730, so that they have an honored history of nearly two centuries on this side of the Atlantic. One of the brothers, Col. John Kelly, was accompanied by his wife, who before her marriage was Margaret Armour, also a native of the Emerald Isle. The young couple became pioneers of Pennsylvania, settling in Bucks County as early as 1760, and there they remained all their lives. An ardent lover of liberty, John Kelly was ever devoted to the land of his adoption, and when the Revolutionary War broke out he at once offered his services and joined in the conflict. It is needless to say that he suffered many dangers and privations during that long siege, but he never wavered in his loyalty to the cause he had espoused and through his courage and patriotism he rose to the rank of colonel in the Continental Army.

Colonel and Mrs. John Kelly had a family of nine children, and one of their sons, John, who was for many years a resident of Juniata County, Pa., married Miss Rebecca Clarke, a native of Scotland, and their son, Moses Kelly, married Miss Elizabeth Patterson and reared a family of ten children in Juniata County, Pa. The seventh of their children was James R. Kelly, of this review, who was born near Mifflintown, Pa., June 28, 1835.

Educated in the public schools of Juniata County and trained to a practical knowledge of agriculture, James R. Kelly became one of the intelligent and prosperous farmers of his native county, where for years he devoted himself to his chosen occupation, save for the period of his service in the Civil War. Upon retiring from general farming he removed to Kansas and established a home at Lawrence, Douglas County. Three years later, in 1888, he came to Southern California and purchased a lot and built a home at 528 Walnut Street, Santa Ana, where he resided until his death. Immediately after his arrival he identified himself with the fruit-growing business and soon became familiar with every department of the leading industry of the locality. On his ranch he raised apricots, oranges and walnuts. It was his aim to grow only fruits of the choicest varieties, so that the products of his grove might command the highest prices in the Eastern markets.

Mr. Kelly's marriage on March 18, 1869, united him with Miss Jane Robinson, a native of Juniata County, Pa., and a daughter of George and Priscilla (Laird) Robinson, both of Scotch-Irish ancestry, but born and reared in Juniata County. Mr. and Mrs. Kelly were the parents of three sons: Frederick M., who was educated at the University of Michigan, is an assayer and chemist; he is one of the leading citizens of Needles, Cal., where he has been postmaster for many years. He married Miss Pearl Glenn of Springville, Iowa, a granddaughter of the first white child born in Chicago, and they are the parents of two sons, Robert Glenn and Fred; George Patterson Kelly, who was also educated at the University of Michigan, practiced law for a number of years in Chicago and while there married Miss Agnes K. Gavney of Aurora, Ill. George P. Kelly passed away in 1915 at Santa Ana and his wife died in 1919, leaving one son, James T.; R. Bayard, born at Juanita, Pa., March 13, 1880, attended the public schools of Santa Ana, took bookkeeping and telegraphy and was employed at Needles for eight years, then returned to Santa Ana and was a successful walnut grower of the Tustin district until selling in 1919. He was married in 1915 to Miss Magdalena Lauterbach, who was born at Buffalo, N. Y., but who has been a resident of California since 1904. They are the parents of one son, Robert. Mrs. James R. Kelly passed away at her home in Santa Ana, April 6, 1919, at the age of about eighty-three.

Like his forbear of Revolutionary days, James R. Kelly was intensely patriotic and any mention of his life work would be incomplete without recording his war service, which put to a severe test the qualities of courage, patience and endurance possessed by him to a remarkable degree. Soon after the outbreak of the Civil War Mr. Kelly offered his services to the Union and on July 25, 1861, he was accepted as a member of Company A, First Pennsylvania Reserve Cavalry, enlisting from Juniata County. This regiment was ordered to the front at once and became one of the most famous fighting units of the Federal Army. In the charge at Cedar Mountain Companies A, B, C and D went into action with 264 men and came out with only seventy-two able to report for duty. Mr. Kelly held the rank of first lieutenant in Company A and owing to the frequent absence of the captain was often called upon to command the company. In the battle of Shepherdstown, July 17, 1863, an exploding shell struck him, cutting an artery in his leg and leaving a painful wound. On another occasion he was slightly injured in battle. While in a cavalry skirmish at Samaria Church, Va., June 24, 1864, he was taken prisoner and confined in the famous Libby prison. Later he was transferred successively to Columbia, S. C., Macon, Ga., Belle Isle, Savannah, Ga., and Charleston, S. C., remaining in these prisons until the close of the war with the exception of two brief periods when escape had been rendered possible by the ingenuity of the prisoners. However, in both instances he was recaptured. It was characteristic of the man that he never complained in the midst of hardships that would have daunted any but the bravest of spirits. On the other hand, he was quick to note any humorous incidents that occurred and his cheerful disposition was a ray of sunshine to others in hours of trouble. When he was mustered out, April 25, 1865, he returned to his Pennsylvania home with the esteem of his superior officers and the friendship of his comrades. After the organization of the Grand Army of the Republic he identified himself with that work and never ceased to cherish affection for the "boys in blue." Politically he voted with the Republican party and during his residence in Pennsylvania he filled local offices. Early in life he had become a member of the Presbyterian denomination, and after coming to Santa Ana he officiated as an elder in the First Church, to whose philanthropies and missionary enterprises he was a generous contributor.

DR. JOHN McCLELLAN LACY.—Whenever the historian shall essay to tell the story of Santa Ana, he will find it a pleasureable duty to narrate again the career of Dr. John McClellan Lacy, the pioneer physician, who did so much in many ways for the welfare and advancement of the town. He was born at Huntsville, Ala., on Washington's Birthday, 1837, the son of Thomas H. and Mary E. Lacy, Southern planter folks who moved from Alabama to Arkansas, when John was eighteen years of age. And there, in 1861, Thomas Lacy died, the father of three boys and eight girls, worthy descendants of a family tracing its ancestry back to France. At that time, the name was de Lacy; but when the Huguenots came to America on account of religious persecution in France, this branch of the family, coming with them, changed the name to simple Lacy. Mrs. Lacy was a McClellan, and her mother's maiden name was Wallace; and she was able to trace her ancestry to Sir William Wallace of Scotland.

John McClellan Lacy attended the grammar school in Huntsville, Ala., and when old enough to do so, read medicine with Dr. William B. Welch in Arkansas. He later was graduated from the St. Louis Medical College, and still later took post-graduate work at the University of Nashville, Tenn.

When the Civil War broke out, Dr. Lacy volunteered for service in the Confederate Army as surgeon to an Arkansas regiment, and from 1861, he marched and fought for four long, hard years. He had farmed and shipped cotton, while reading medicine, and so was able to hold his own in the arduous campaigning.

After the war, Dr. Lacy practiced medicine in Arkansas and the Indian Territory, (later Oklahoma) and in 1879 came to California across the great plains. He made the journey in wagons, and was eight months on the road; and he and his party had many interesting experiences with the Indians, and other adventures by the way.

At Cane Hill, Ark., on April 3, 1861, Dr. Lacy married Miss Eliza P. Bean, daughter of Mark Bean, and his wife, Nancy J. He was a wealthy cotton planter and factory owner, and was honored by his fellow-citizens with election to the state legislature as a representative from Washington County. Several children blessed the fortunate union. Margaret M. is the eldest daughter; and the other children are Mary L., Mrs. William P. Vance; Maude L., Mrs. Newton Pierce; Lela, Mrs. J. E. Vaughan; Laura L., Mrs. J. W. Murray; and Mark B., who married Genevieve Waffle. Dr. Lacy's youngest brother was sheriff of Orange County for sixteen years.

A Democrat in matters of national politics, Dr. Lacy was a member of the city council. He belonged to the State and County Medical Societies, and served for a while as city health officer of Santa Ana. He belonged to the First Presbyterian Church, and was a Mason, having joined that order in 1860, and a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. When he died, on February 2, 1913, at Santa Ana, he was almost seventy-six years of age.

Old-time friends of the deceased bore the casket, and the Rev. J. A. Stevenson paid the departed such a tribute as he deserved. He said, in part: "The working days of the physician are restless days. He knows no hours that are his own. He is the servant of suffering humanity, morning, noon and night. No man knows the weary hours that are contributed by the men that are tired almost to death. But when the restless days and nights of Dr. Lacy's working time were gone he knew a harder restlessness in the times of his own sickness. The days were long, and the nights were longer, and pain and suffering were there. Then out of the restlessness of life, God called him to the rest of a blessed eternity. Dr. McLaren has made immortal the 'Doctor of the Old School.' But thank God we do not have to hasten to the distant fields of Scotland nor into the pages of literature to find the splendid hero. The cultured, kindly, unassuming, uncomplaining, self-forgetful Christian gentleman, Dr. Lacy, was an honor to the Church of Christ, a benediction to this community, and an adornment to the medical profession."

MRS. EROLINDA YORBA.—A distinguished, highly esteemed representative of one of the oldest and most historic families in California is Mrs. Erolinda Yorba, the well-to-do widow of Vicente Yorba, whose family settled along the Coast at a very early period. His parents were Bernardo and Felipa (Dominguez) Yorba, born in San Diego and Los Angeles, respectively. Bernardo Yorba was the holder of grants aggregating over 165,000 acres, given him by the King of Spain. These grants were La Sierra, in Riverside County, and Rancho San Antonio Cajon de Santa Ana, in Orange County; and just how historical the character of the founder of this family was, may be gathered from the reference to him by his contemporary, Harris Newmark, the Los Angeles pioneer, who says in his personal reminiscences, "Sixty Years in Southern California."

"Bernardo Yorba was another great landowner; and I am sure that, in the day of his glory, he might have traveled fifty to sixty miles in a straight line, touching none but his own possessions. His ranches, on one of which Pio Pico hid from Santiago Arguello, were delightfully located, where now stand such places as Anaheim, Orange, Santa Ana, Westminster, Garden Grove and other towns in Orange County—then a part of Los Angeles County." In McGroarty's Mission Play, one of the leading characters is Josefa Yorba, the grandmother of Vicente Yorba, who was selected because of her beautiful character and many deeds of kindness.

As early as 1835 Bernardo Yorba settled and built his home—a ninety-room adobe—at what is now the town of Yorba, and a part of the old building is still standing. In it was a crude jewelry shop, harness shop, saddlery, blacksmith shop and a general merchandise store; in other words, it was a miniature city, known all over Southern California. It was a more or less dreary section then, and these worthy pioneers improved the land and the surroundings at the cost of their own lives and health. For a long time the well-known Yorba adobe sheltered the growing family, but the enterprising father never lived to see all the transformations he and others associated with and guided by him brought about. Bernardo Yorba died on November 20, 1858, and thus followed to the grave his devoted wife and companion, who had passed away seven years before.

Vicente Yorba, one of the youngest of the family, was born at Yorba on February 3, 1844; and being early thrown upon his own resources, he in time amassed considerable property. He owned, for example, a fine ranch of forty-four acres on the north side of the Santa Ana River, and another ranch of 343 acres at Yorba. The old home ranch upon which Mr. Yorba passed away came to be noted for its walnuts, its vineyard and its alfalfa, and was especially famous for its productivity. The other property, on the south side of the river, was given up to general farming and the raising of walnuts. Upon Mr. Yorba's death, the family moved to this last-mentioned ranch, and there erected a large and modern residence, in which they have since resided. Although Mr. Yorba was very optimistic in his belief of a great future for Orange County, yet in his most optimistic moments he could not have dreamed of the wealth so soon to be brought from the depths under these lands; and on his original home place the Union Oil Company is now sinking wells for oil, and have been rewarded with an excellent showing.

Vicente Gorba

Erolinda C Yorba

On October 25, 1876, Vicente Yorba was married to Miss Erolinda Cota, a native of Los Angeles and the daughter of Francisco Cota, another well-known native, whose family owned the Spanish grant, Rancho de Bellona, what is now the site of Venice. Her mother was Martina Machado, and her grandmother a Sepulveda. She was educated in the parish schools of Los Angeles, and there received such an excellent training that, while prepared to manage her own business affairs, she was also enabled to maintain the refinement characteristic of the highest social breeding, and to preserve a striking and natural beauty of feature, form and demeanor, scarcely altered since Mr. Yorba died, on February 24, 1913, on the ranch to the north of the Santa Ana River, in his fifty-ninth year. Mrs. Yorba is a member of the Catholic Church at Yorba, and is the center of an admiring and devoted circle. To Mr. Yorba's public-spiritedness is largely due the establishing of the well-equipped school at Yorba, on which he was a trustee for many years until his death.

Six children blessed the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Yorba: Hortense M. is the wife of Porfirio Palomares, an extensive landowner of Pomona, now residing at Oxnard; Mantina L. is the wife of Lorenzo Pelanconi, and resides at Hollywood; Mary L. is the wife of Ignacio Vejar of Pomona; Ubenia Juanita married George Wents and lives with her mother; she has one child, Erolinda Dolores; Bernardo was in the Fortieth Heavy Coast Artillery, where he was assistant observer, and was in New York, on his way to France, when the armistice was signed, when he returned home and is now assisting his mother; he is married to Miss Edna Leep of Nebraska; Vicente Francisco married Lidella Walters of Placentia; they have one son, Vicente Samuel, and also reside on the Yorba ranch.

Since the death of Mr. Yorba, the family continue to reside on the ranch which is owned by Mr. Yorba and which they have greatly improved with an irrigation system and with Valencia orange orchards. Here they dwell together in harmony, each assisting and cooperating to the mutual advantage of all. With the mother at the head of affairs—an honor her children lovingly accord her—she is ably assisted by them and they in turn appreciate her confidence and shower on her their love and devotion, thus relieving her from much unnecessary worry and care.

JUDGE CHRISTIAN C. STONER.—An efficient, popular public official with a very interesting war record is Judge Christian C. Stoner, a native of Blair County, Pa., where he was born on December 27, 1844. He is the son of Jacob E. Stoner, a native of Lancaster County, Pa., who in 1849 removed to Noble County, Ind., where he was a pioneer farmer. In 1873 he pitched his tent in Cloud County, Kans., and there he continued to farm until he died, honored of all men. He had married Polly Cowen, a native of Blair County, and she also died in Kansas. They had six children, and the subject of our sketch was the fourth in the order of birth.

Reared in Noble County, Ind., on a farm, C. G. Stoner went to a log-cabin school house and sat on slab benches; later, he enjoyed more comfortable quarters in a frame school building, but left school to volunteer for service in the Civil War. In 1863 he entered Company B of the Eighty-eighth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and was mustered in at Kendallville, and sent to join Sherman's Army at Chattanooga. As a part of the Fourteenth Army Corps, he was with Sherman until the close of the war, and participated in the battles of Resac, Dallas, Dalton, Snake Creek Gap, Buzzard's Roost, Kennesaw Mountain, Peach Tree (where General McPherson fell), Jonesboro, Goldsboro, Bentonville and other notable places. He never received a scratch or wound, nor was he ever in a hospital; but of five relatives who enlisted when he did, he was the only one to return. A brother, David, was in the same regiment and was killed at the Battle of Bentonville, N. C. With his comrades he marched to Richmond and then on to Washington, D. C.; and there he took part in the Grand Review. At Louisville, Ky., in July, 1865, he was mustered out, and returned home.

After the war, Mr. Stoner went to the home school for a couple of years, and when there was a vacancy, he taught there. He remained for two years, and "brought order out of chaos"; then went to Wolf Lake high school, and after that taught for another two years. In 1873, he removed to Kansas, near Concordia, Cloud County, and took a homestead of 160 acres, where he engaged in farming.

Seven years later, the citizens of that district selected him to teach school, and for three years he trained the young idea how to shoot; was justice of the peace of Nelson township for fifteen years, and was probate judge of Cloud County for two terms, being elected in 1890 and reelected in 1892, and served until January, 1895. In 1896, he was elected a member of the Assembly of the Kansas State Legislature, and served there during 1896 and 1897. His legal knowledge enabled him to be particularly valuable to his constituency; for while he was probate judge only two cases he had decided were appealed, and in each of these instances the higher court sustained his decision.

About 1904 Judge Stoner removed to Lincoln County, Kans., and for five years owned and edited the Lincoln Sentinel. In 1909 he located in Orange County, Cal., and bought an orange grove near El Modena, which he managed for two years, then disposed of the property, and retired. He was a city trustee for six years, and during that period was chairman of the board, or acting mayor, for four years. The night his term was up, the Judge was appointed city recorder, in April, 1918, and he has held that responsible office ever since.

While in Indiana, in August, 1867, Judge Stoner was married to Miss Rachel A. Winebrenner, a native of that state, and by her he has had three children. Barbara Ellen is Mrs. Secrist of Long Beach; George, a graduate of Lincoln College, Kansas, took a course at the University of California and is now a teacher in the Orange high school; and Peter is a graduate of the State University at Berkeley and is a teacher in the high school at Pasadena. Judge Stoner is a member of Gordon Granger Post No. 138, and is at present the commander of the post. He was aide-de-camp on National Commander Somer's staff, in 1918. He belongs to the Christian Church, where he has been an elder for many years.

DAVID CLARENCE DRAKE.—An authority on citrus culture in California, and a prominent factor in the development of the industry in Orange County, is David Clarence Drake, whose advice, as that of a sensible man of original ideas, is often sought by growers. He comes of an interesting family, long associated with the history of Long Island, and has identified himself in an enviable way with the history of the Golden State.

He was born at Southampton, Suffolk County, N. Y., in 1864, the son of David R. Drake, who was born at Roxbury, Morris County, N. J., and reared on Long Island becoming a sea-captain, thereby maintaining an interesting tradition from the time of the English renowned explorer. For more than thirty years the master of a whaler, he sailed out of Sag Harbor, L. I., and also New Bedford, Mass., into the various oceans of the globe, touched at many foreign ports, and thus grew familiar with important places all over the world, and was indeed a well-traveled man. About fifty years ago, he quit the sea and retired to his home at Southampton. He had married Harriet Fithian, a native of that place and a member of an old Long Island family of Welsh descent, and three children had blessed their union. Two are still living, and our subject is the only one in California.

Brought up in quaint old Southampton, L. I., David C. Drake was educated at the grammar schools of that neighborhood, and also at the Southampton Academy, after which, for a couple of years, he attended the Franklin Literary Institute in Delaware County; then entered Eastman's Business College at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., from which he was graduated in 1882; the pleasure of his studies leading him to move west to the Pacific Coast, and to study for two years in the Van der Naillen School of Engineering at San Francisco, where he took a course in railroad engineering and surveying, and was duly graduated with honors.

On his return East and to Southampton, Mr. Drake married Miss Harriet Fordham, who had also been born in that town, of an old and prominent family; and he then engaged in the raising of fruit for the New York City market, and also for the summer trade at Little Newport, L. I. This essay in horticulture he continued until 1896, when he sold out, came west to California, and pitched his tent at Pomona. It was in truth but a temporary camp that he established, for he then traveled all over the state, and up and down the Coast, even into British Columbia, getting first-hand impressions of the great West; at the end of which varied enviable experience, he decided that Orange was most to his liking, and ever since he has been closely associated with the fortunes of the fast-developing place.

He purchased his three acres on East Chapman Avenue, Orange, and made all the necessary improvements, set it out to oranges, and built his handsome, comfortable residence, and made of the whole a beauty spot. He also bought thirty acres of raw land at the corner of Seventeenth Street and Holt Avenue, where he set out twenty acres of Valencia oranges and ten acres of lemons.

For many years Mr. Drake was a director in the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, and assisted in bringing that popular concern to its present state of high efficiency. In 1897 he joined the local organization of citrus ranchers, the Santiago Orange Growers Association, and in 1898 they built their first packing house in Orange—the parent association from which have sprung eleven different citrus associations in this vicinity, and resulted in the final formation of the Orange County Fruit Exchange. Mr. Drake, after having been a director in the Santiago Orange Growers Association, is now its president; and he is also president of the Orange County Fruit Exchange, which handled over five million dollars' worth of business in 1919. For six years Mr. Drake was trustee of the city of Orange, and all that period he was president of the board, or mayor of the town. He started, with his associates, the building of sewers, and bought the present sewer farm, and they were starting the improvement of streets and sidewalks when he resigned. In national politics, he is a staunch Republican. A member of the First Presbyterian Church at Orange, Mr. Drake has been an elder there for the past twenty years. He was made a Mason in Orange Grove Lodge, No. 293, F. & A. M., and belongs to the Fraternal Aid Union.

PETER HANSEN.—Horticultural enterprises have engaged the attention of Peter Hansen for a long period of successful activity, and by means of his skill in this field as well as his perseverance and industry, he has added another name to the list of prosperous fruit growers of the county and has furnished additional evidence as to the adaptability of the soil to such pursuits. He is now the only surviving member of the pioneers who settled in the Placentia district as early as 1867, a worthy representative of those hardy and intrepid settlers.

A native of Denmark, Mr. Hansen was born at Varde, Jylland, on Christmas Day, 1838. His parents were farmers, so from a lad he made himself useful about the farm, in the meantime receiving a good education in the excellent schools of Denmark. Being the next to the youngest of a family of five children, he remained at home and assisted his parents until he entered the Danish army and served the required two years' time, when he again followed farming until the breaking out of the Slesvig-Holstein War. He was called to the colors, and immediately responding, he became a member of a cavalry regiment of the Danish army and served as a corporal until the close of the war.

Immediately after his discharge, Mr. Hansen resolved to emigrate to the United States, so in the fall of 1865 we find him making the long journey via the Isthmus of Panama to San Francisco, where he was employed for two years. Having heard favorable reports from Anaheim and vicinity, he came by boat to San Pedro and on to Los Angeles. The present metropolis of the Pacific Coast was then a small hamlet built around the plaza, with only a few houses and one hotel. He came on to Anaheim, where he was employed by Tim Boege at teaming, hauling freight to Los Angeles and Anaheim Landing, the latter now being known as Seal Beach. In the meantime he invested his savings in 106 acres of raw land at Placentia, then Los Angeles County; it was virgin land in what was then a wilderness, for which he paid the small sum of fourteen dollars per acre. He cleared the land of brush and wild mustard and planted rye, wheat and barley. In those days game of all kinds was abundant, and the wild horses and cattle that roamed the plains caused Mr. Hansen much trouble, invading his ranch and destroying his crops. He purchased one of the first threshing machines used in his district, a stationary machine run by horsepower, drawn by eighteen horses, and the first year his crop yielded enough to pay for the machine, which he used all over the country threshing for others. He next set out his ranch to grapes and built one of the first wineries in the county, a brick structure 40 by 100 feet in size. After making wine for many years and selling it in casks to people who came from miles around to purchase it, he took out the vines and planted seedling and Washington Navel orange trees; later he budded his trees to Valencia oranges, his present orchard. To his brother Charles, who came from the East and worked for him on the ranch, Mr. Hansen gave fifty-three acres of the property. The brother died in 1903. In later years Mr. Hansen deeded a large part of his holdings to his children, retaining enough property to give him a competency for his retired years.

Mr. Hansen's wife, who before her marriage was Christine Jensen, was a native of Abenrade, Slesvig, their marriage being solemnized at Orangethorpe in 1874. An able helpmate and a loving wife and mother, her death on March 14, 1900, made an irreparable breach in the family circle. She left five children, as follows: Mattie is the wife of Arthur Edwards of Placentia, and the mother of two children, Gladys and Hugh; Anna married Horace Head of Santa Ana and they have two children, Melville and Iris; George, who lives at Placentia, is married and has four children, Christine, Ernest, Robert and George; Charles L. also lives at Placentia; Christine is the wife of Walter C. McFarland of Placentia and they are the parents of one child, Forest Walter. Mr. and Mrs. McFarland own and reside in the old Hansen home, over which Mrs. McFarland presides gracefully, showing her loving care and devotion to her aged father, who appreciates her ministrations to his comfort and happiness. Mr. McFarland served in the World War in the Three Hundred Sixty-third Infantry at Camp Lewis until he volunteered in the Signal Corps, Aviation Section, being stationed at Kelly Field, San Antonio, Texas, and at North Island, San Diego, Cal., until after the armistice, when he was honorably discharged, returning to the peaceful pursuit of farming. In early days Mr. Hansen was a school trustee at Placentia and was one of the twelve men who founded Balboa Beach, in which he has always been deeply interested, and where he owns a fine residence, to which his fondness for the ocean causes him to make frequent visits. He was also one of the founders of the Anaheim Union Water Company. Fraternally he was a member of the Anaheim Lodge of Odd Fellows. Accompanied by his daughter Christine, in 1902 he made a trip back to his native land, from whence he came a poor boy, but richly endowed with the natural characteristics that Dame Nature is pleased to reward—indomitable energy and a spirit undaunted by the difficulties encountered on the road to life that leads to success.

HUBERT ISAAC.—A most interesting pioneer, partly on account of his early history as a railway man and a miner before he came to California, is Hubert Isaac, distinguished to all who know him for his foresight and his strict integrity. He was born at Milwaukee, Wis., on February 26, 1856, the son of Francis Joseph and Anna (Schreiner) Isaac, natives of Aix-la-Chapelle; and grew up to do farm work. Going to Hancock, Mich., however, he joined a train crew, first as one of the operatives on a freight train, then as a baggageman, and then on a passenger train, on the Mineral Range Railway. For the next four and three-quarter years, he was employed in the Black Hills, weighing ore in the mining country, when he pushed on the California, via Cheyenne, Wyo., in 1879. He stopped at Los Angeles, but ran out to see El Modena, with friends, on a hunting trip.

He chanced to meet there David Hewes, the well known pioneer who has left behind him such a record for doing things, and as he needed some one to do carpenter work, he entered his employ. His first job was to build a corral enclosing a space of half an acre; and when this was satisfactorily finished, friendly relations were established and he continued to work for Mr. Hewes steadily for a year and a half. He was then under the direction of Henry Young, the first foreman of the great Hewes Ranch, on which ranch Mr. Isaac was also foreman twice. Later, he returned to Mr. Hewes' service, and was with him for twenty-seven years and nine months, so that it may safely be said that he was one of Mr. Hewes' most trusted employees.

Mr. Isaac bought eleven lots in El Modena before the "boom," and there he built thirteen houses, which he rents to others. Altogether, he owns forty-two lots, and is the largest taxpayer in El Modena. Personally, Mr. Isaac is known for his sympathetic nature, his keen insight into daily life, his sense of justice, and his desire to do right and to see that righteousness is done. In many respects, while ultra-conservative perhaps, he represents the dependable type of safe citizenship and financial endeavor, and enjoys, as he well merits, the esteem and confidence of his fellow-men.

RICHARD ROBINSON.—One of Orange County's oldest pioneers, Richard Robinson is living retired at Garden Grove, after a well-rounded life filled with many adventurous experiences, having reached the age of ninety-three years. Born in the township of Edwardsburg, Grenville County, Ontario, Canada, September 9, 1827, Mr. Robinson was the son of Isaac and Margaret (Moses) Robinson, both natives of Ireland, who soon after their marriage there in County Tyrone, came to Canada, and here all their nine children were born. Isaac Robinson was a shoemaker by trade, but followed farming to a great extent, owning a farm of 260 acres. He was killed by a horse when Richard was only sixteen years of age; the mother lived to be ninety-two years old. Richard early learned the shoemaking business and from the time he was sixteen years old he took his place in the world as a breadwinner for the family. He ran a shop on the home farm, often working in the fields all day and then at shoemaking until late at night. Necessarily his schooling was limited, both from his lack of time and from the scarcity of educational opportunities, as in those days they had only subscription schools, maintained by the people of the community, the teachers boarding 'round among the families.

When he reached the age of twenty-four, Mr. Robinson made up his mind to try his fortune in California, and accordingly sailed from New York on the "Fannie Major," which was bound for San Francisco around the Horn. While off the coast of Brazil they encountered a severe storm in which the top main mast of their vessel was broken off and they had to put in to San Salvador for repairs. While there Mr. Robinson saw slavery in its worst form and has yet vivid memories of some of the horrible conditions that accompanied it in that country. Proceeding on their journey they doubled Cape Horn and again encountered a terrific gale which lasted for several days and nights during which every sail was torn to shreds. Although it was the latter part of June, zero weather prevailed and every hour it seemed as if they would surely be swallowed up by the angry waves. After miraculously escaping from being dashed to pieces on the rocky coast of Patagonia, they finally reached Tocawanda, Chile, where they procured an entire new set of sails and then continued the journey to San Francisco, reaching there in September, 1852, after a voyage of five and one-half months.

From San Francisco Mr. Robinson went up to the mines on the Yuba River, later going on to Placerville, where he mined with considerable success, clearing up some money. Here he was married in March, 1854, to Miss Letty Bolton, the daughter of Richard and Lucretia (Redmond) Bolton, natives, respectively, of Ireland and Canada. She was also born in Canada, only about twelve miles from Mr. Robinson's birthplace, although they had never known each other until they met at Placerville. She had come across the plains in 1851 with the family of her brother-in-law, John Johnson. Later Mr. and Mrs. Robinson went up into British Columbia, where he mined for a time on the Fraser River, but did not meet with much success. In 1859, with his wife and child he went back to Canada to visit his old home, returning in 1862 to California, making the trip, both going and coming, by way of Panama. On reaching here he settled in Sonoma County with his wife and three children, twins having been born to them during their stay in Canada. Here Mr. Robinson purchased a farm of 230 acres five miles from Petaluma, and improved it, building a dairy barn that was at that time the finest in the county. Here he contracted tubercular trouble and, not being able to stand the heavy fogs, he sold out and bought a 200-acre farm in Colusa County, farming it for three years and completely recovering his health.

In 1884, Mr. Robinson removed to Garden Grove where he has since made his home. He purchased seventy-five acres of land here and farmed it for a number of years, but he disposed of all of it except five acres where the home stood many years; he has a remarkably good memory and keen mind for a man of his years and enjoys recalling the interesting events of his past life. Mrs. Robinson died on August 23, 1920, aged almost eighty-nine. Mr. and Mrs. Robinson had nine children, eight of whom grew to maturity: Isaac resides in Stockton and is deputy county treasurer and tax collector; Chester Allington lives at Ascot Park, Los Angeles, and has five sons, one of whom, Capt. Ralph Redmond Robinson, was with the Marines throughout the whole campaign in the late war. He was with the detachment of Marines that was a part of the famous Second Division and was in action at the Argonne, St. Mihiel and Champagne, where he saw terrific fighting. He is still serving with the Marines and is now stationed at Port au Prince, Hayti; Forest Wellington died at the age of thirty-three years, leaving one son, Chalmers, who is an oil man engaged in the Fullerton field; Mina Anna is the wife of Harvey V. Newsom, a rancher at Garden Grove, whose sketch appears elsewhere in this work; Frank Bolton resides in Los Angeles; his son, Ray Albert Robinson, who is a crack shot, became a captain in the war, training troops at Quantico, Va. He was aide-de-camp to General Butler and while stationed at Brest on General Butler's staff, he lived in Napoleon's old house there. He is still in the service at Quantico, Va.; Addie May is the wife of Capt. Joseph Newell, who is captain of the largest supply ship in the U. S. Navy; they reside at West Newbury, Mass.; Richard Byron has a ranch of forty acres near Galt; Porter died at the age of four years at Colusa; Alice Bertha, the youngest of the family, resides with her father.

A few years ago Mr. Robinson came near losing his life in a railway accident, and was laid up for a year. The accident happened while he was crossing the railroad tracks at Santa Ana, and by a curious coincidence he had just been on a jury in a case brought to recover damages for death and injury sustained to a family who had met with the accident at the same railway crossing in Santa Ana. For many years Mr. Robinson was a stanch Republican, casting his last vote on that ticket for James A. Garfield as President, but since that time he has been a consistent Prohibitionist. He was converted at the age of nineteen and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Garden Grove. Always on the side of that which made for the uplifting and improvement of the community, Mr. Robinson has ever stood high in the esteem and respect of a large circle of friends.

MRS. SUSAN BELT.—Of Southern lineage, but of uncompromising Union allegiance, Mrs. Susan Belt, an Orange County pioneer and widow of James H. Belt, is a woman possessed of great strength of character and executive force. Her husband, who came of a fine family, was born in Johnson County, Ark., in 1840. His grandfather, Middleton Belt, the founder of the American branch of the family, was a native of England who settled in Maryland and afterwards removed to Tennessee, where he settled and reared his family. The father of James H. Belt, Dotson Belt, was probably born in central Tennessee, and his mother, Miss Penelope Laster before her marriage, also was born there. The parents were planters, and James H. followed in the footsteps of his father and became a successful cotton grower. At the outbreak of the Civil War his sentiments were strongly with the Union, and perceiving that he would be conscripted he left home, taking his best horse, started for the Union lines, and with his handkerchief tied to the ramrod of his gun approached the picket line. He enlisted in Company L of the Fourteenth Kansas Cavalry and served until the close of the war. In the meantime the home folks, because of their Union sentiments, suffered terribly.

Mrs. Belt recalls some very exciting incidents that she underwent also during those trying times. She and her seventy-five-year-old father were making garden in the spring of 1863 when a band of bushwackers rode up and began shooting at them. Eight shots were fired at her father and little brother, and the father was killed by the bullets of the guerillas. Mrs. Belt's maiden name was Susan Brown, the daughter of Reuben and Martha (Hines) Brown, the father a native of Maine and mother born in Tennessee. Her parents settled in Missouri after their marriage and the father became a farmer and stockman. Mrs. Belt was born in Missouri, September 10, 1844, the youngest girl and the eighth child in order of birth in a family of ten children, and was three years old when her parents moved to Sebastian County, Ark. She received her education in the subscription schools of Arkansas, and July 31, 1863, was united in marriage with Mr. Belt. It was thought that the war was about over, but her husband had to go back to the lines and was in several battles after that. He was in the Western army and was honorably discharged after the close of the war. Mr. and Mrs. Belt moved on to eighty acres of land in Sebastian County, Ark., given them by Mr. Belt's father. He prospered while there, but suffering from the after effects of the measles, which he contracted in the army, and which as a result of taking cold settled in his eyes and on his lungs, came to California for his health during the seventies, accompanied by his family. They settled at Bakersfield where they were taken with chills and fever, and from there went into the mountains near Tehachapi and remained a year and a half. Recovering their health they came to Los Angeles County, and later settled in the vicinity of Santa Ana, where Mr. Belt bought twenty acres of raw land on the river. Mr. and Mrs. Belt became the parents of four sons, William, Joseph, Henry and Jasper, and four daughters, Emma, Cora, Bertha and Maude; of the eight children, five are living. She has one granddaughter, Fay L. Sutton.

Mrs. Belt is an interesting conversationalist; her reminiscences of early days, with their halo of romance and adventure, is an ever interesting topic of conversation. She has a large circle of friends by whom she is highly esteemed, and her comfortable home is noted for its good cheer and hospitality. In her political sentiments she is a staunch Republican, and a member of the Woman's Relief Corps, while Mr. Belt was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic.

CHARLES LORENZ.—In the early period of Anaheim's history, Charles Lorenz, now deceased, located in this now up-to-date city of Orange County, his advent being on October 22, 1859, soon after the town site was first laid out. He was born in 1814, in Crossen, Germany, but removed to Berlin while quite young. He learned the trade of a machinist, and so thoroughly did he master the intricacies of that line of work that he became an expert, and to him belongs the honor of having constructed the first locomotive in that section of Germany.

In 1845 Mr. Lorenz was united in marriage with Louisa Schidler, the ceremony being solemnized in Berlin. During the year 1850 he left Germany, intending to come to California, but after being on the sailing vessel about six months decided to land in South America, where he spent two and a half years in Valparaiso, Chile, and five and a half years in Concepcion. While there they learned to speak Spanish and this helped them after coming to California. His youngest daughter, now Mrs. Louisa E. Boege, was born in Valparaiso in 1852; the eldest daughter, Mrs. Elmina C. Dorr, was born in Berlin, Germany, in 1848. During the early part of 1859, Mr. Lorenz, accompanied by his wife and two daughters, sailed from Chile for California, landing at San Francisco, where they remained but a few months and, later stopped a short time at San Luis Obispo. In October of the same year he arrived in Anaheim, coming from San Pedro with a twelve-mule team, and he soon opened the first blacksmith shop in the new town. In March, 1860, he purchased twenty acres on South Lemon Street, where he planted a vineyard and made and sold wine. He helped organize the German Methodist Church and was an Odd Fellow. Later on Mr. Lorenz sold all but one acre of his land, and here his two daughters now reside. He lived to the advanced age of eighty-five, his death occurring in 1902, his wife having passed away in 1885.

His daughters, Mrs. Louis Dorr and Mrs. Henry A. Boege, are among the pioneer citizens of Anaheim, having come here over sixty years ago. At that time the country between Anaheim and San Juan Capistrano was a wilderness, as was the territory between here and Los Angeles.

LOUIS DORR, a native of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Germany, married Elmina Charlotte, the eldest daughter of Charles Lorenz. He left his native country when a young man to reside in England and afterwards went to Australia. In 1862 he arrived in Anaheim, where he was engaged as a bookkeeper; he also owned a vineyard and made wine. Mr. and Mrs. Dorr were the parents of seven children, five of whom are living: Louis, the oldest member of the family, is a forest ranger and resides near Palmdale; Charles is a miner at Tonopah, Nev.; Agnes and Dorothy are living at Los Angeles, where they conduct a cafeteria; and Arthur is a mining man and is in Mexico.

Mr. Dorr passed away in 1895. Mrs. Dorr lived in San Francisco and in Los Angeles for about fifteen years, then came back to Anaheim and has lived here ever since and has been a witness of the wonderful growth and development of the county.

HENRY A. BOEGE was united in marriage in 1871 with Louisa Emilie Lorenz, the youngest daughter of Charles Lorenz, the ceremony being performed at the Lutheran Church, Anaheim. He was a native of Schleswig-Holstein, Germany, and came to Anaheim when nineteen years of age. He opened a butcher shop and also did teaming and freighting. At one time he owned a vineyard west of Anaheim. Later on he superintended the ranch of his father-in-law and at one time was engaged in street work for the city of Anaheim. His death occurred in 1893. He was a member of the Odd Fellows Lodge.

JOSEPH P. desGRANGES.—Numbered among the oldest settlers of what is now Orange County and one of the few remaining pioneers of Fullerton, who has become a leader in horticultural circles and is regarded as an authority on the early history of Orange County, is Joseph P. des Granges, the rancher of East Chapman Avenue, Fullerton, whose philanthropic sympathies and patriotic sentiments have made him popular among all know him. He was born at St. Louis, Mo., on June 8, 1858, and with a brother came to Anaheim on May 1, 1873. Los Angeles was very primitive at that time, the United States Hotel being one of the very few brick buildings in the city.

The des Granges family are of old French-Huguenot stock. Early members of the family who, as the name indicates, were landowners of France, were obliged to flee for their lives from their native land at the time of the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. They first found refuge in Switzerland, but later settled in Prussia, where the family thrived in their new surroundings. Otto des Granges, the father of our subject, was a university man and a civil engineer by profession. Locating at St. Louis, Mo., he became extensively interested in manufacturing, establishing an iron manufacturing plant. His wife was in maidenhood Miss Josephine Harff.

As early as 1871 Otto des Granges came to San Francisco, soon afterwards coming down to what is now Fullerton, then in Los Angeles County. Here he purchased eighty acres of raw land, and with the help of his son improved it and brought it to a high state of cultivation, and here the parents resided until their demise, the father at the age of ninety, the mother surviving until 1914, when she passed away at the age of eighty-six. Of their family of four children, Joseph was the third in order of birth, and he was fortunate in receiving a good schooling during the residence of the family in St. Louis, Mo., before their migration to California.

Joseph was only fourteen years of age when he began to assist his father in the development of their California ranch, and very naturally he learned a good deal for a boy of his age. The land was in its primitive state, covered with sunflowers and mustard of an unusual height, and they truly found here in the West a wild, open country, with plenty of elbow room. They raised barley and other grains, and later established a system of irrigation. That the best obtainable in irrigating facilities were eventually theirs may be inferred when it is known that Joseph des Granges was instrumental in having Anaheim equipped with the modern electric light system when Los Angeles was the only other city in this locality so favored. The first light plant which he constructed was a great success, and this was followed by others. Mr. des Granges also built and established a grist mill at Anaheim, in fact, he conducted a feed mill and store there for about ten years, and thus early played an important part in the mercantile world.

Having continued his ranching ventures, Mr. des Granges owns at present twenty acres of the original tract, set out to Valencia oranges and walnuts, and he markets his oranges through the Placentia Orange Growers Association. This year he also picked some four and a half tons of the finest Japanese persimmons in the county from young trees just coming into bearing. He exhibited them at the University of California Fruit Exhibition and received the second prize.

On March 23, 1904, Mr. des Granges was married to Miss Genevra Estabrooks, the daughter of George Melvin and Eliza B. (Paige) Estabrooks, born in New Brunswick and Maine, respectively. The father was an expert millwright in the construction of water-power mills, and he removed to Stillwater, Minn., where he followed his trade; both he and his wife passed away there. Of their three children, Mrs. des Granges was the youngest; after her graduation from the Stillwater high school she engaged in teaching in the public schools, as well as teaching music. In 1900 she came to Fullerton, where she has since made her home. A cultured and refined woman, she presides gracefully over her husband's home, where they entertain their many friends and dispense a true, old-time California hospitality. One child has blessed this union, Josephine, who attends the Fullerton high school. By a former marriage, Mr. des Granges has a son, Harry E., who has a battery and ignition works at Los Gatos.

Mr. des Granges has seen many changes since coming to this region in 1873. In fact the most optimistic resident of those days could not have conceived the wonderful transformation that has taken place, with the increase in land values from fifteen and twenty dollars an acre to $5,000 to $6,000. It is to men like Mr. des Granges, who were not afraid to venture and work, that Orange County owes much of its present development and greatness, so in this section he is indeed a pioneer of pioneers.

CHARLES O. RUST.—A "captain of industry" who contributed something definite and important to the development of the commercial interests of Southern California, is the late Charles O. Rust, who was vice-president of the Wickersheim Implement Company of Fullerton, who resided on his ranch at 619 North Palm Street, Anaheim. He was born at Crescent City, then in Mendocino, now in Del Norte County, Cal., on November 26, 1858, the son of Carl F. Rust, who had married Miss Sophia Horn, like himself a native of Germany. His father came to California in pioneer days and located in that part of Mendocino County, where he busied himself transporting on the backs of burros those supplies so much needed by miners, and which had to be brought from Crescent City. Later he was in the general merchandise business in that town, and only in 1861 succeeded in getting south to locate in Anaheim. He was one of the original colonists and purchased forty acres of land on North Palm Street, where he had a vineyard set out and as soon as they began bearing he located on his ranch in 1861, and began the making of wine from his vineyard, but he was not allowed to long enjoy the fruits of his labors for in 1868 he passed to his eternal reward. He was a tanner by trade, and had the repute of having established the first tannery in Los Angeles, now Orange County, setting it up on his home ranch. He bought the hides from the Spanish, had ten vats sunk into the ground, and from the neighboring mountains brought the oak bark for tanning. Two children were born to this worthy couple—one being Chas. O., our subject, and the other a daughter, now Mrs. A. S. Browning, of Los Angeles, who was born on the old ranch at Anaheim.

Educated in the schools at Anaheim, the first teacher Charles had was Professor Kuelp, although afterward he went to a school in Anaheim taught by the late J. M. Guinn, the historian. He finished his studies in Los Angeles and San Francisco, and in 1878 returned to the ranch at Anaheim. During his forty years' residence there he made much of the best wine and brandy for which Orange County was noted. After the grape disease killed the vines he set the ranch out to oranges and walnuts. The greater part of the twenty acres is now in full-bearing Valencia oranges and walnuts, all of which trees were planted by him. The mammoth sycamore trees on the place, however, were set out by his father, and are today a beautiful memorial of the old pioneer. Mr. Rust owned other valuable real estate in the county, including a fine orange grove of twenty acres one mile west of Fullerton and he also owned valuable property in Los Angeles. He helped to organize the Anaheim Citrus Fruit Association, and served on its board of directors. He was also a director in the Orange Growers Exchange of Orange County and as stated above was vice-president of the Wickersheim Implement Company.

When Mr. Rust married, he chose for his wife, Miss Kate Snedaker, a native of Iowa, born near Guthrie Center. Her father was Samuel Blair Snedaker, who was born near Great Bend, Pa., in 1811, descended from old Knickerbocker stock, the ancestors having immigrated from Holland to New York in 1632, locating in what is now Flatbush, Brooklyn. Some of the ancestors on the Snedaker side were in the Colonial and Revolutionary wars, while Samuel B. Snedaker's mother was a native of England. He was reared on farms at Clyde and Lyons, N. Y. After his first wife died he removed to Cincinnati, Ohio, where he became captain of a packet boat running on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers to New Orleans. In New Orleans he was married a second time, being united with Miss Ann Neary, who was born in the north of Ireland. He prospered and became a man of large affairs; among other property he owned a tobacco plantation. Selling this and his other interests before the Civil War he moved to Iowa and became a pioneer farmer at Guthrie Center. Desirous to migrate still further west, in 1862, he brought his family across the plains in a train of seven wagons. In spite of the Indian troubles they reached California safely and he was for a time engaged in the hotel business at San Andreas, Calaveras County. In 1865 his wife died, leaving four children. He finally located in San Francisco, where he was engaged in the furniture business until he retired, coming to Anaheim in 1881, where he spent his last days in the home of his daughter, Mrs. Rust, passing away in 1897. Mrs. Rust was the youngest child and received her education in San Francisco. After graduating from the Rincon school she was engaged in teaching in Calaveras County for two years, until 1881, when she came to Anaheim with her father and sister and here she met and married Mr. Rust. Their union was blessed with two children. Percy was educated at Belmont Military Academy and is married to Ruth J. Hauser; they have two children, Ruth Jacquelin and Chas. Warren. Elsa is a graduate of Marlborough School, Los Angeles, and Columbia University, New York, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Science degree from the latter institution.

The family are members of the Episcopal Church. For twenty years Mr. Rust was a trustee of the town of Anaheim, and for most of the time served as mayor, or chairman of the board and during his service marked the beginning of public improvement in Anaheim, which has resulted in making it the beautiful and modern city it is today. He also served for many years on the school board; was a director of the Anaheim Union Water Company; a member of the Board of Trade of Anaheim, and also of the Mother Colony Club. He was a charter member of Anaheim Lodge No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks. Politically he was a staunch Republican. He passed away in Oakland, where he and Mrs. Rust had gone for the cool climate of summer, on October 7, 1920, mourned by his family and friends. In his death Orange County and Anaheim lost one of its best citizens and upbuilders. Since his death Mrs. Rust resides at the old home and aided by her children looks after the affairs left by her husband.

JOSEPH P. MOODY.—The ranch and residence of Joseph P. Moody are situated one mile west and north of Cypress, in Orange County, Cal. Mr. Moody is one of the well-known and highly respected stock and poultry men in his section, and has been engaged in the poultry business since 1914. His thirty-one acre ranch is well tilled and highly productive, and his poultry stock consists of about 700 single-comb White Leghorns of the best laying strain. His poultry house, 118x20 feet, has a cement floor and is up to date in every way; he pumps his water and grinds his feed by electricity. Twenty-three acres of his ranch are in alfalfa and a good family orchard. He has resided in Orange County and on his present ranch since 1896, and has been an active and progressive rancher from the first, buying his land when it was in almost a wholly unimproved state and bringing it up to its present state of productiveness.

Mr. Moody was born in Carthage, Ohio, November 20, 1848, and is the son of Henry and Nancy Moody, natives of Kentucky and Ohio, respectively. The father crossed the plains with others in the memorable year of '49, making the journey overland without serious mishap in about five months. In 1850 he returned to his family in Ohio, and in 1852 made his second trip to California, this time by water via the Isthmus, and accompanied by his wife and two children. When within one day of landing at San Francisco his wife died and was buried at sea, June 5, 1852. He again engaged in the occupation of mining, as he had done upon his previous visit to the state, and continued the occupation several years. In course of time he married Mrs. Murphy, by whom he had two children; Stephen H. and Mary, who is now Mrs. Brewster. He died in 1894.

Joseph P. Moody was three and a half years old when his mother died at sea, and he was reared by Mrs. Catherine Alderman of Grass Valley, Nevada County, Cal., a most worthy woman. Because of surrounding conditions Joseph's early education was somewhat neglected, nevertheless he acquired a practical training for business purposes, and is a self-made man both from a business and educational standpoint. While his younger life was spent in agricultural pursuits he did little manual labor, always taking up some pursuit in which he had the oversight and direction of others. He engaged extensively in the sheep-raising industry, having as many as 2,500 sheep in one flock, and in ranching near Paso Robles, San Luis Obispo County.

His marriage in Elmira, N. Y., in 1872, united his destiny with that of Miss Martha McClary of that city, and of their union ten children were born, namely: Charles E., William H., Lottie J., Mary E., Arthur J., Joseph E., Grace J., Earl J., Harriet N. and Clara M. Joseph E. is a minister in the Christian Church, and has been a successful missionary in India for five years. Mrs. Moody died, aged forty-four in September, 1892, and Mr. Moody again entered the state of matrimony in August 30, 1893, being united with Miss Elizabeth Alderman. A daughter, Catherine G. by name, was born of this union. Mrs. Moody is a native of Grass Valley, Cal. She was born on May 23, 1852, and is the daughter of Samuel and Catherine Alderman, early California pioneers who came to the state about the time that Mr. Moody came, and ran a dairy ranch in Nevada County. Of the nine children in the Alderman paternal home, seven are living. In their church associations Mr. Moody and his family are members of the Christian Church.

RICHARD W. JONES.—Closely connected with the commercial, political, horticultural and humanitarian undertakings of Orange County for the past thirty-six years, Richard W. Jones is one of the "old-timers" who has seen the wonderful transformation of Southern California from a sparsely settled section to a district that is not equalled by any in the entire state. A native of Wales, he was born at Carnavonshire, on October 30, 1854, the son of John and Mary Jones, both natives of that country and where the last days of their lives were spent. Orphaned early in life, his mother dying when he was but one year old and his father four years later, the lad was reared by his grandparents until he was eleven, when he was thrown upon his own resources. He worked upon farms in his native land until he was seventeen years of age, when he went to Liverpool, and then, in 1878, decided to try his fortune in America. Arriving here he went to Columbia County, Wis., and there followed farming for six years, coming to California and to what is now Orange County in 1884. One year later he became a foreman on the David Hewes ranch at El Modena and after he had demonstrated his ability to look after such a large property and bring it to a high state of development, he was made manager, remaining on the place for twenty years and having a great deal to do with its early improvement and development as the years passed. He had the entire confidence of Mr. Hewes, who approved his methods of planting, harvesting and marketing the products of the great ranch. This ranch was once a sheep range of 800 acres, which Mr. Hewes bought in 1880 for from $20 to $30 per acre, and then set about to make it one of the beauty spots of the state by spending thousands of dollars on Hewes Park and in carrying on the most up-to-date methods of ranching. It is conceded by those who know that Mr. Jones was the genius who perfected the plans and superintended the work and gave the impetus to its popularity.

While employed by Mr. Hewes, Mr. Jones had bought a ranch of thirty acres in El Modena precinct and begun its development; this land he added to until he now owns forty-six acres, thirty of which is fully improved and brings in handsome returns. On his ranch he erected an attractive house, the green foliage of the foothills forming a picturesque background for its white exterior, making a beautiful setting for the residence. The land lies in a sheltered cove, in what is known as the "frostless belt," making it one of the best locations for a citrus grove in this section of the county. Here, with the aid of his son, Marion E., he is carrying on horticultural pursuits that bring in handsome yearly returns and enables him to enjoy life to its full.

On June 20, 1895, at McPherson, R. W. Jones was united in marriage with Miss Clara J. McPherson, a member of a Scotch family tracing their lineage in America back to the sixteenth century. Her father, William Gregg McPherson, migrated from Illinois to California in 1859, crossing the plains, with ox teams, and after his arrival he engaged in mining near Downieville, meeting with more than ordinary success. He then returned to Chicago and married his first wife, Miss Harriet Crowell, and four children were born of that union: Edwin H., William Gregg, Clara J., Mrs. Jones, and Frederick; Mrs. Jones now being the only survivor.

Returning to California Mr. McPherson lived at San Jose, and there his daughter was born, and while there he found the most profitable employment he could find was teaching school. From San Jose he moved to Westminster in 1871, in order that his growing family might have the advantages of school and church in the new Presbyterian colony. In 1873 he bought forty acres at McPherson, named in honor of the colony of McPherson relatives, of whom there were over fifty at one time, and while he was developing his property he employed his talents as a teacher and thus endeared himself to many of the young men and women of the locality who received instruction from him. During his residence at McPherson he was the magnet that drew many emigrants from the East to California, and not a few settled here in Orange County. He was a man of much public spirit, desirous of doing good in order that good might be accomplished. He passed to his reward in 1908, deeply mourned by all who had known him. Mrs. Jones' mother died in 1876.

A native daughter of the Golden State, Mrs. Jones is deeply interested in all movements for its upbuilding, is a woman of unusual attainments, and has been a true helpmate to her husband in the highest sense. She is one of the foremost women of the county, has given freely of her time and talents to uplift work and humanitarian movements, and her influence and kindly deeds have been known far beyond the confines of her home environment. She was a leader in club circles, and in church and charitable enterprises is known throughout Orange County, and in fact the entire state of California. She is president of Orange County Sunday School Association, and one of the officers of the Los Angeles Presbyterial, and has been a delegate to the national conventions.

W. M. McFadden

Mr. and Mrs. Jones have been active in the many cooperative enterprises that have had such a direct bearing on the rapid growth of this district, and have ever lent a helping hand to every project designed to assist and enhance the public welfare. They became the parents of two children, only one of whom, Marion E., reached maturity. He is married to Elva May, and they reside upon the home ranch and assist in its management. For thirteen years Mr. Jones served as a trustee of the Orange Union High School; for twelve years he was a director in the John T. Carpenter Water Company; and he is a director in the Orange County Mutual Insurance Company, the National Bank of Orange, the McPherson Heights Citrus Association and the Orange County Fruit Exchange. In political matters he is a Republican and believes in progressive movements for the salvation of the country, for ours is an age of advancement along every line of endeavor.

WILLIAM M. McFADDEN.—The name of William M. McFadden is worthy of enrollment among the very early settlers of Orange County who foresaw its great possibilities and put their shoulder to the wheel to develop the opportunities by which they were surrounded. A pioneer of California who came hither by way of Panama, and for twenty years an educator in its schools, he was one of that sturdy band of men who pushed westward to aid in the development of our wonderful state and at the same time to find greater opportunities for themselves than were to be had in the more populous East; and in enduring the privations to be found in a newer civilization, and each doing his bit to build up whatever portion of the state they cast their lot with, these men have builded even better than they knew, and California today stands ready with all praise for their unselfish strivings.

William M. McFadden was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., on February 19, 1842, and was a graduate of the West Pittsburgh high school and the Curry Normal Institute, as well as the Beaver Academy, at Beaver, Pa., and later, the commercial department of Wellborn College at Louisville, Ky. During much of this time, he paid his own tuition, with money which he had earned through teaching school, and this circumstance alone affords a key to at least one side, and a very important one at that, of his mental and moral make-up as a prospective pioneer and pathmaker.

In 1863, the young school teacher came to California, and for four and a half years he taught in the Alameda County district schools. Then, in 1868, he came to Southern California, and continued teaching in Los Angeles County, living for eleven years at what was then called North Anaheim, now Placentia, while he kept school at what was known as Upper Santa Ana. During a portion of that time he served as superintendent of schools of Los Angeles County, where he was also a member of the board of education for two years, the second year serving as president of the board; and later he was president of the high school board of Fullerton, and superintendent of construction of the first high school building in the county, erected in Fullerton.

In January, 1869, Mr. McFadden became interested in horticulture, and purchased ninety-two acres from the Stearns Rancho Company, which he set out to oranges and walnuts; later, as the trees began to bear, shipping yearly about twenty-three carloads of oranges and two carloads of walnuts. He was one of the first to raise oranges and walnuts here after the development of water, and was rather naturally one of the originators of the Fullerton Walnut Growers Association, which in turn levied upon him for its president for years. He was the second man to grow oranges in the Placentia district, and one of five shippers who organized the Southern California Orange Exchange. When he started his orange culture in the Placentia district, Mr. McFadden secured oranges from Mexico, and the seeds of these were planted in seed beds and watered from well water; the plants were then budded to Australian Navels and later to Washington Navels.

Among other important development projects, Mr. McFadden was one of the original promoters of the Anaheim Union Water Company, the other man associated with him being R. H. Gilman, J. W. Shanklin, Wm. Crowthers, J. B. Pierce, P. Hansen, and Henry Hetebrink. The building of this ditch was an important event in Mr. McFadden's life-work, and has been a decided factor in the further development of the county, for these pioneer irrigation projects laid the foundation for the present intensive cultivation everywhere to be seen throughout the county. In this company Mr. McFadden served as president, and was also for years a director; and he was one of the organizers, secretary and director of the Cajon Irrigation Company, later merged into the Anaheim Union Water Company. He was intensely interested in every project that had for its aim the development of the county; and as an enthusiastic advocate of popular education, he built with his own money the first school house at Placentia, in what was then called the El Cajon district, and served on the school board for years.

Mr. McFadden was a delegate to the Democratic National Convention at Kansas City when Bryan was nominated, and he was also a member of the notification committee—a reasonable honor, considering that he was one of the prime movers in organizing Orange County, as he became among its most philanthropic citizens.

At Alameda, in 1866, Mr. McFadden was married to Miss Sarah Jane Earl, who had come to California via Panama when she was eighteen, and had already taught school for two years. She had eight children, all but one of whom were born in the Placentia district in Los Angeles County. Those still living are Carrie E., now Mrs. Herbert A. Ford, Clarence, Thomas, Ralph and Robert. Will E. died in 1912, aged thirty-nine, leaving a wife and a daughter. The others, a boy and a girl, died in 1875. This relation of the birth of the children to Placentia district is of more interest when it is recalled that it was Mrs. McFadden who gave it the name of Placentia, in which district she came to be a charter member of the Placentia Round Table, the woman's club. This organization erected the first woman's club house in all Orange County. She was very active in all forward movements, and participated eagerly in whatever contributed to the upbuilding of society as well as the building up of the nearby places; and she lived to witness much of the wonderful development of Southern California. She died on August 18, 1908, at Fullerton, six years after Mr. McFadden, on July 21 and in the same town, had passed away, honored in particular by the Masons, whose ancient fraternity he had joined as a member of the San Francisco lodge, later demitting to Anaheim Lodge; he instituted and was the first master of Fullerton Lodge. He was also a member of the Chapter and Commandery in Santa Ana. Mrs. McFadden was the first matron of the Eastern Star Chapter at Fullerton.

MRS. MARIE EUGENIA DAGUERRE.—The beautiful family life of France perhaps find its fullest expression in that picturesque mountain district, known as the Basses-Pyrenees, and in this wonderful, healthful climate the children are reared with exceptional care, and especially is the highest standard of morals established, and thus the honor of the family altar is kept sacred. Here in this corner of Sunny France, not far from the border of Spain, was the birthplace of Mrs. Marie Eugenia Daguerre, the owner of a third interest in the great Moulton ranch at El Toro. Born at St. Pierre de Yrube, near the famous old fortified city of Bayonne, Mrs. Daguerre before her marriage was Maria Eugenia Duguët, her parents being Baptista and Elizabeth (Uris-buru) Duguët, who were farmers for many years in that part of France. The fourth of a family of six children, Mrs. Daguerre is the only one living and the only one to come to America. She was educated in the convent at St. Pierre de Yrube, and in 1874 sailed from Havre with the Amestoy family, landing at New York. They continued on to San Francisco and then to San Pedro by boat, reaching Los Angeles, June 24, 1874, and located on a large ranch at Rosecranz, now Gardena. Here Mrs. Daguerre continued to make her home with the Amestoy family until her marriage, at the Amestoy residence, to Jean Pierre Daguerre on October 7, 1886.

Mr. Daguerre was also a native of Basses-Pyrenees, Hasparren having been his birthplace, and he came over on the same boat as Mrs. Daguerre, being eighteen years of age at the time. Here he was employed with the Amestoy family in the care of their stock, so became thoroughly experienced in this work, continuing with them for eight years, when he resigned to begin stock raising on his own account. Making his way to San Juan Capistrano he formed a partnership with Don Marco Forster as sheep growers. After his marriage Mr. Daguerre and his wife went to El Toro, where he continued actively in the sheep business for several years. After dissolving partnership with Don Marco Forster, Mr. Daguerre formed a partnership with Mr. Lewis F. Moulton on his extensive ranch of 22,000 acres, the business being conducted under the name of Lewis F. Moulton and Company. The partners met with phenomenal success, and after the death of Mr. Daguerre on May 5, 1911, Mrs. Daguerre, who had been a true helpmate in sharing the business responsibilities of her husband, continued in the partnership, and still owns a third interest in the ranch. The Moulton ranch is one of the largest and most profitable in Southern California, and upwards of fifteen tenants are engaged in raising beans, grain and hay on its extensive acreage. In addition the Moulton Company is engaged in raising beef cattle on an immense scale, their herd of high-grade Durhams being one of the finest in the county.

Mr. and Mrs. Daguerre were blessed with six children, the two younger of whom passed away in infancy. Domingo Joseph, who after the death of his father assisted Mr. Moulton and took an active part in the affairs of the company, was a well liked and popular young man displaying splendid traits of character and much ability, when his promising career was cut short by influenza, January 11, 1919, at the age of thirty-one; the three daughters are Juanita, Grace and Josephine.

Mrs. Daguerre resides in her comfortable residence on the Moulton ranch with her three loving daughters, who shower on her their affectionate care and devotion, and assist her in the management of the large interests left by her husband, thus doing all they can to shield her from unnecessary worry and care. While far from her native land, Mrs. Daguerre has never had cause to regret her choice in establishing a home in this beautiful Southland, whose resources rival that of any other country. The family take an active part in civic matters and are strong protectionists and Republicans. They are liberal and enterprising and give their aid to all matters that have for their aim the upbuilding of the county and the enhancing of the comfort and happiness of its citizens.

MRS. WYRAM L. KNOWLTON.—More than one romantic chapter in the history of California is recalled by the records of Mrs. Wyrarn L. Knowlton and her interesting family. She was born in Yorba, Los Angeles County, in 1859, the daughter of Ramon H. and Concepcion (Bustamente) Aguilar, and was named Nicanora. Her father was a native of Spain, born in 1801, and the son of Jose M. and Dolores (Villaviciencio) Aguilar, who left his native land when Ramon was a baby and settled on a grant of land in Lower California. The father of Jose M. was tailor to the King of Spain and he was given a large grant of land in Lower California for his fidelity, and this was in turn handed down to his children at his death, Jose M. being given the Guadalupe grant as his portion. The ancestors of the family were among those who assisted the padres in founding the early missions and they later returned to Spain, but eventually settled in Lower California, from which place members of the family migrated to California and helped to lay the foundation for our present commonwealth. Jose M. Aguilar was a man of wealth, as it was counted in those days, and he spent liberally of his means to uplift the native Indians, an ambition that was always uppermost in his soul. He died when Ramon H. was a small child.

Ramon Aguilar lived in Lower California until 1827, when he migrated to California and here he was married to a native daughter of the West, and by her had fifteen children, all born in California, and nine of them grew to years of maturity. Those still living are Mrs. Nicanora Knowlton, Mrs. T. A. Darling, Mrs. Edward Crowe, R. F. Aguilar and Mrs. Herman Fesenfeldt.

Nicanora Aguilar was united in marriage in 1896, in Orange County, with Wyrarn L. Knowlton, a native of Wisconsin, born at Castle Rock on December 4, 1853. He was educated in Wisconsin and lived in Iowa for some years and migrated to California in 1889. He became the owner of considerable land in Orange County, which he sold off from time to time, having improved it in the modern manner of the period, only retaining ten acres, the home place of the widow today. This couple had one daughter, Laura, a graduate of the Anaheim high school and now the wife of Paul V. Dominguez. Mrs. Knowlton busies herself with the care and improvement of the ten acres she owns, assisted in the operation of the place by her daughter. Mr. Knowlton was a member of the Fraternal Brotherhood and was a liberal supporter of all movements for the upbuilding of his adopted county, and was held in high esteem by all who had the pleasure of knowing him. His widow and daughter are equally liberal and have a wide circle of friends.

WYLLYS W. PERKINS.—An able, efficient man of business, who was never known to be afraid of hard work, is Wyllys W. Perkins, the retired rancher, residing at 806 Spurgeon Avenue, Santa Ana, whose financial success began the day when he formed a partnership with his brother, Charles H. Perkins, formerly a wholesaler in New York state. He was born in Oconomowoc, Waukesha County, Wis., on May 23, 1860, the son of Charles H. Perkins, a native of Windsor, Conn., where he married Miss Elizabeth Hinsdale. They came out to Wisconsin in the early forties, and while Mr. Perkins farmed, he and his good wife also kept a general merchandise store at Oconomowoc. Wyllys is the youngest of seven children in the family, and when five years old was brought by his parents to the vicinity of Grand Rapids, Kent County, Mich., where his folks went in for farming and the raising of fruit. He attended the common schools of Kent County, and under the wholesome conditions even then prevalent in Michigan, received an excellent preparation for the battle of life.

When fifteen years of age, Mr. Perkins left Michigan to join an older brother, Clarence, at Burlington, Kan., and for two years he was with him on a stock farm at Strawn. He worked on the ranch during the summers, and in winter time went to school nearby. After two years of outdoor life, however, he returned to his home in Michigan and entered the Commercial College at Grand Rapids, where he took a two years' business course. On coming west again to Kansas, he went to work for a short time for the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad Company, when he again shifted, this time to La Junta, Colo., at which place he was given a responsible post with the Atchinson, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad. He had charge of coal bins until he found it possible to make still another move—to California—when he fired a locomotive at Eureka, in Humboldt County, on the Boner & Jones logging railroad.

At the end of a year he went to San Luis Obispo and was with the narrow-gauge San Luis Obispo and Port Harford Railway, where he fired for six or eight months; and then he went to Mojave and secured a position with the P. I. Railway, now a part of the Santa Fe system. He was next promoted to be an engineer on a switch engine in the Southern Pacific yards in Los Angeles, and switched for that company for eight months. Later he became a locomotive engineer for the Los Angeles & Pacific Railway, and for a couple of years ran a passenger train from Los Angeles to Santa Monica. After that he went to the Santa Fe Railroad and for seven years ran both passenger and freight engines, mostly between Winslow and Williams, in Arizona, but also as far as Albuquerque, N. M.

During this time, at Grand Rapids, in 1884, Mr. Perkins was married to Miss Clara Lee of that city, and for a while he made his home at Winslow, although he started housekeeping at Mojave. He first became fireman at the roundhouse, and ran a general merchandise store in connection with his railroad work at Mojave. He followed railroading until 1894, when the great A. R. U. strike occurred, and he was discharged for refusing to run the engine of a striker.

He then came to Orange County and spent six or seven months looking around, so that he made no mistake when he finally settled at El Modena, where in 1895 he purchased ten acres of unimproved land. His brother, Charles H. Perkins, now eighty years old, and residing at 911 Spurgeon Avenue, Santa Ana, was then extensively engaged as a dealer in wholesale fruits in New York, and bought California fruit and honey; and while visiting California on business he came to El Modena to see his brother and the ten-acre ranch, and there proposed a partnership to be known as the Perkins Bros. They bought more land, and soon had 160 well-improved acres, in the El Modena precinct. They also acquired a ranch at McFarland, in Kern County; but they traded it for more land in Orange County.

For several years, also, Mr. Perkins was in the seed and nursery business, growing rose bushes on a commercial scale; and later Perkins Bros. specialized first in flower seeds, and then exclusively in rose bushes. They produced and shipped as high as five or six car loads a year, and this enterprise proved decidedly profitable. In 1917 the firm dissolved, and since then Mr. Perkins has sold so much of what he once had that he has left only two ranches, both in the El Modena district, the one of thirty-one, the other of ten acres, and has retired to live in Santa Ana. Mr. Perkins helped organize, and is still a stockholder in the Villa Park Orchards Association.

Eight children blessed the union of Mr. Perkins and his wife. Elizabeth, the eldest, lives at home; Frank died in Arizona when he was five years old; Winnifred and Wyllys, W. Jr., are twins—Winnifred is the wife of William Thomas, a mechanical engineer, residing at Los Angeles, and Wyllys is married and lives, as a rancher and an orange-grower, at McPherson. Dixie, a trained nurse with an enviable record for service in France during the late war, keeps house for her father. Arthur and Archie are also twins; the former is in the Agricultural College at Corvallis, Ore., and Archie attends the high school at Santa Ana. And Clara is in the grammar school of the same city. Mrs. Perkins died March 19, 1906, and he married a second wife, Miss Fannie Parker, of Grinnell, Iowa, who also died—on December 10, 1919.

Mr. and Mrs. Perkins were active in building up the Community Church established at Villa Park under the auspices of the Congregational denomination, and since his removal to Santa Ana, he and his household have supported and attended the Congregational Church at Santa Ana. He is prominent in the Orange Lodge of Odd Fellows, where he is a past grand, and with a frank, sincere, winning disposition, is influential in many ways, and often in times of emergency, for good among his fellow-men.

ROBERT HENRY ENGLISH.—A native of Ireland, the years of whose young manhood were spent in Canada, but whose residence in the United States covered a period of more than forty-five years, is Robert Henry English, one of Orange County's stanch pioneer citizens, who had a large part in the early development of this locality, coming here, as he did, when the country was practically a wilderness. He was born in County Carlow, Ireland, about twenty miles from Dublin, in 1850, the son of Thomas and Esther (Agar) English. The father, who was a farmer, was born in the same county, but was of English ancestry, the mother also being a native of Ireland. In 1860 the family came to Canada, settling near Woodstock, Ontario, and there Thomas English engaged in farming.

Robert H. English grew up on his father's farm, learning to help with the farm work while he attended the public schools of the vicinity. When he reached the age of sixteen he entered the employ of the firm of Oswald & Patterson, machinists and foundrymen, at Woodstock. Being apt at mechanics he soon became an efficient machinist and foundryman, and also learned to be a capable steam engineer, running the stationary engine in the plant of Oswald & Patterson the last year or two he was in their employ. He remained a trusted employee of this firm for nearly eight years, during which time he was united in marriage with Miss Matilda Meadows.

In 1873 Mr. English moved with his family to Platte County, Nebr., and was there during the terrible "grasshopper years" of 1873-4-5, when these pests were so numerous that they actually darkened the sun. Mr. English's crops were entirely eaten up and it was then that his knowledge of machinery stood him to good advantage. He purchased a steam thresher and began operating it, and was thus able to earn a living, even in the face of the severe financial loss the failure of his crops had caused. He was determined to seek a better country, however, so with his family he came to California, reaching Los Angeles February 23, 1875. They soon came down to what is now Orange County and Mr. English purchased land and began at once to make improvements. Always with a decided penchant for doing things on a big scale, he continued to buy land and at one time owned five different ranches, aggregating 388 acres. For several years he farmed 2,500 acres of land on the Bolsa Chico and the mesa at Huntington Beach to barley. On much of the land purchased by Mr. English reclamation work was necessary, and he spent much time and labor in bringing his holdings up to a high state of cultivation.

While Mr. English's interests were largely in the field of agriculture, he also engaged in other lines of work that have contributed to the development of the material progress of Orange County. In 1886 he engaged with Grant Brothers as a subcontractor and helped on the grading of the Santa Fe Railway as far south as the San Joaquin Ranch, now the property of James Irvine. He also continued to operate steam threshing outfits in Orange County from the time of his arrival here until 1912. In that year he went to Santa Ana and for four years was street superintendent there; during his incumbency the city of Santa Ana put in seventeen and a half miles of gravel and oil streets and eleven and a half miles of macadamized streets.

Mr. and Mrs. English became the parents of five children: William H. resides in Santa Ana; Susan M. is the widow of the late Frank J. Johnson and lives at Los Angeles; Ida May is the wife of Duncan E. Sova of Los Angeles; Fred J. and John T. are twins. The former is a prosperous ranchman in Bolsa precinct; he married Miss Ida May Hickey of Perris, Cal., and they have one son—Frederick Gerald. John T. married Miss May Jacobsen of Orange and they are the parents of two children—Harold R. and Ella Marie. Mrs. Robert H. English passed away December 27, 1916, and Mr. English survived her until October 6, 1920, when he died at the residence of his son Fred. Mrs. English was a member of the Episcopal Church, as were the parents of Mr. English, but he embraced the doctrine of the Baptists. In political matters he was an independent, preferring always to consider the qualifications of the candidate and the principles at stake, rather than adhering to strict party lines. Fraternally he was a member of the Maccabees and the Fraternal Aid Association.

SAMUEL B. EVERETT.—For nearly half a century Samuel B. Everett has been identified with the agricultural interests of Orange County, in the vicinity of Westminster, having located there December 1, 1875. He is a worthy descendant of an honored New England family and is justly proud of being a grandson of Eleazer Everett, the young patriot who served his country during the Revolutionary War. Eleazer Everett was stationed at Boston Harbor, afterwards at Providence, R. I., and when he received his honorable discharge from Captain Heath's company on April 8, 1778, after three distinct enlistments, he was but nineteen years of age. He was among those that witnessed the death of the noted British spy, Major Andre, in 1780.

Samuel B. Everett was born in Francistown, N. H., November 10, 1840, the son of Williard and Frances S. (Dodge) Everett. The family moved to what is now Metamora, Ill., in 1843, becoming pioneers of Woodford County, and there carved out their future from the virgin soil. Both Mr. and Mrs. Everett were school teachers and took such pride and pains in the careful and thorough instruction of their young son, that he received a more liberal and extensive education than most young men of his day. During the dark days of the Civil War, when the disruption of the Union, for which his grandfather, Eleazer Everett, had fought, was threatened, the patriotic young grandson determined that the Union must be preserved at all costs, and proved that he was a worthy descendant of his illustrious grandfather by joining Company G, Fourth Illinois Cavalry, serving for two years and ten months in the Western department of the army, during which time he was in many engagements with the enemy, but escaping without a scratch.

On September 3, 1867, in Oberlin, Ohio, Samuel B. Everett was united in marriage with Miss Clara Spees, a native of Ohio, and a teacher in Natchez, Miss., where they met. Three children were born to them: Arthur taught school in Southern California for twenty-two years; he married and became the father of three daughters and two sons, his death occurring in 1916 through an accident; Clara E. and Clarence B., twins, both died in infancy. Mr. Everett lived in Livingston County, Ill., about eighteen months after his marriage, then removed to Fremont County, Iowa, and thence to Ida County in that state, where Mrs. Everett passed away. In 1874 Mr. Everett returned to Woodford County, Ill., and there on September 13, his second marriage occurred, when he was united with Miss Sarah Lamson. She was a native of New Hampshire, born there on May 1, 1841, and in 1854 came to Metamora, Ill., with her parents, William and Sarah (Starrett) Lamson. The father, who was a glass worker in New Hampshire, engaged in the brokerage business after coming to Illinois and there accumulated a competency. He removed to California in 1877, and both he and his wife passed away here.

Two children were born of Mr. Everett's second marriage, William and Justin, both now deceased, named after their mother's brothers who served throughout the Civil War. They resided in Iowa for a year after their marriage, coming to California in 1875, William Bradford Lamson, Mrs. Everett's brother, a four-year veteran of the Civil War, having come to this state in 1873. They first located at Westminster, but in 1876 they went to live on a forty-acre ranch, where they followed general farming for a number of years, during which time Mr. Everett was interested in the dairy business, having at one time twenty-five head of dairy stock. After disposing of his ranch Mr. Everett moved to his present place in 1884, an inheritance from his wife's father of fifty acres, where he has continued general farming. They have sold off from time to time until they have the original home place of five acres.

Mr. Everett is an honored member of Sedgwick Post, No. 17, G. A. R., while his wife is a member of the Women's Relief Corps. In religious matters Mr. Everett is a member of the Seventh Day Adventist Church and was the first elder of the church at Garden Grove; Mrs. Everett is a Presbyterian.

LINN L. SHAW—The steady growth and the increased prosperity of Orange County is directly the result of the early settlers in this locality, who have spent the better part of their lives in developing its latent resources and in building up a community which socially and economically ranks with any in the state and has during the years attracted the better class of citizenry to help in the further advancement of this ideal home community. Prominent among these pioneer citizens is Linn L. Shaw, of the realty firm of Shaw & Russell, who for nearly thirty-five years has been identified with the progress of Santa Ana.

Descending from sturdy New England stock, Linn L. Shaw was born at Marshalltown, Iowa, July 29, 1866, his parents being Chancy and Mary (Morrison) Shaw, both of whom were natives of Maine. Attending the grammar and high schools of Marshalltown until the age of fourteen, Mr. Shaw left the schoolroom to learn the printer's trade, apprenticing himself to a local paper in his home city. Continuing there until he had become proficient in his chosen work, in 1883 he went to Plankington, S. D., and later was at Mitchell and Sioux Falls, in that state, spending in all about three years there. Returning to his Iowa home in 1886, he found quite a number of its residents preparing to go to California, as that was the beginning of the great boom periods of the Golden State. An opportunity offered to secure free transportation to the coast by accompanying a shipment of fine horses of several prominent citizens of Marshalltown who were removing here, and Mr. Shaw at once availed himself of this chance. Arriving at Los Angeles he worked for a few weeks on the Los Angeles papers, but hearing of the new town of Santa Ana he decided to try his fortune there, and locating there in December, 1886, he has since made it his home. Clerking for a time in the music store of A. L. Pellegrin, he was soon offered a position on the Pacific Weekly Blade. The next year, when the Daily Blade was started by A. J. Waterhouse, who had been one of the founders of the Weekly Blade, Mr. Shaw was made city editor of the daily paper, a position he held until the dissolution of this journal in 1889.

Mr. Shaw's next connection with the printing business was as proprietor of a printing plant, which he afterward disposed of, retaining the position of foreman until 1893, when he purchased a half interest in the Orange County Herald, conducting this as a daily and weekly until 1903, with E. S. Wallace as a partner. In the meantime, in August, 1902, Mr. Shaw was appointed postmaster of Santa Ana, and the increasing duties of this office was one of the prime reasons for the disposal of the Herald, which was absorbed by the Blade. Conscientious and efficient in the discharge of this important office, Mr. Shaw served as postmaster until 1913, directing the postal affairs of the district with judicious economy, yet keeping the service up to a high standard.

Mr. and Mrs. P. Friante

In 1917 Mr. Shaw formed a partnership with Roy Russell in the real estate business, and this firm has taken a prominent place among the realty dealers of this vicinity, dealing in high-grade properties and handling a large volume of business. Mr. Shaw's long residence here and his consequent familiarity and thorough understanding of soils and land values of Orange County, combined with his enviable reputation for square dealing, give him a deserved prestige in the realty world.

On February 5, 1889, Mr. Shaw was married to Miss Hope E. Grouard, the daughter of Benjamin F. and Dr. Louisa (Hardy) Grouard, pioneer residents of Santa Ana, whose decease occurred many years ago. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Shaw: Faith, Ted, Marjorie and Carol.

A staunch Republican, Mr. Shaw has always been deeply interested in politics, and a familiar figure, not only in local affairs, but political councils of the state, at one time holding the office of vice-president of the State League of Republican Clubs. A leader in fraternal circles, Mr. Shaw has twice been master of the Santa Ana Lodge of Masons, a charter member of the Elks, the first council commander of the Woodmen of the World and a member of the Maccabees.

PATRICIO YRIARTE.—For many years one of the largest sheep raisers in Orange County, Patricio Yriarte, spent the later years of his life on his large ranch in the vicinity of Brea. Born in Spain, in the Pyrenees region, on March 17, 1861, he received his education in the schools of his home neighborhood, remaining in his native land until young manhood, when he decided to seek his fortune in America. Reaching New Orleans April 2, 1885, Mr. Yriarte came across country to Los Angeles later the same year.

Settling in what is now Orange County he became a sheep raiser and for a number of years he ran large bands, grazing them on the land that is now Yorba, Yorba Linda and the San Joaquin ranch. As the country began to be more thickly settled and the grazing area reduced, Mr. Yriarte decided to give up this business in 1897. He then leased land in the neighborhood of the present home and farmed it to hay and grain. In 1905 he purchased his ranch of 160 acres southeast of Brea; here he conducted extensive ranching operations, raising corn, grain, hay and domestic stock. Besides his own holdings he also rented large acreages, at one time have 1,200 acres under cultivation. He took up his permanent residence on his Brea ranch in 1905 and here he resided for the remainder of his life.

On May 6, 1883, Mr. Yriarte was married to Miss Pascuala Arrese, who like himself was a native of Spain, born May 19, 1861, and reared in the same locality, and receiving her education there before her migration to America. Mr. and Mrs. Yriarte were the parents of five children: Felix, who is with the Union Oil Company at Brea, married Celestina Lorea, who was also born in Spain and who came to America and made her home on the Yriarte ranch until her marriage; they are the parents of four children—Mary, Jose, Pauline and Margaret; Agustin is the manager of the Yriarte estate and makes his home on the ranch; his wife is Lorenza Lorea, who made the trip alone from her native Spain, arriving here December 18, 1909, and making her home on the Yriarte ranch until her marriage to Agustin on October 4, 1916; three children have come to bless their home: Julian, who is with the Standard Oil Company at Whittier, married Miss Inez Dolly, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dolly of Whittier; Ysabel resides on the home ranch with her brother Agustin; Mary makes her home with her brother Felix at Brea. Agustin and Julian Yriarte are members of the B. P. O. Elks, the former at Anaheim and the latter at Whittier and of the Knights of Pythias at Brea.

In 1904 Mr. and Mrs. Patricio Yriarte, with four of their children, made an extended trip abroad, visiting their old home in the Pyrenees of Spain and spending ten months on the trip. On returning home they took up their residence on their ranch and here Mrs. Yriarte passed away on March 17, 1915, on her husband's fifty-fourth birthday, the death of Mr. Yriarte occurring but a few weeks later, on April 19, 1915. In 1910 Mr. Yriarte erected the Yriarte Building in Anaheim, on Center Street, next to the Valencia Hotel. On November 24, 1905, Mr. Yriarte became an American citizen, having received his final papers that year. During his many years of residence in Orange County he was loyal to all movements that had for their aim the betterment of conditions in general and the advancement of moral and social conditions.

After the death of Mr. Yriarte the 160-acre ranch was apportioned equally among the children, but it is still known as the Yriarte ranch, being left in one body of land. Sixty acres of the ranch, owned by the sons, is now devoted to citrus fruit, having been set out by Julian and Agustin Yriarte. The whole acreage is kept up to a high state of productivity and is one of the valuable properties of the Brea district.

WALTER M. PARKER.—Prominent among those whose memory will long be kept green, both by those who knew him personally, and could themselves appreciate his rare worth, and also by those who are always ready to honor the pioneer and path breaker to whom posterity is necessarily indebted for many blessings, was the late Walter M. Parker, a native of Stockton, N. Y., where he was born on May 7, 1844. His father, Leonard Parker, also now deceased, was a native of Hamburg, Erie County, N. Y., where he first saw the light on March 1, 1818. He married Catherine Kennedy, who was born in Montgomery County, N. Y., on October 22, 1820. Leonard Parker passed away on April 3, 1902, and his wife died twelve years before, on the fifteenth of October. They were married at Stockton, N. Y., on September 16, 1838, and came with their family to Anaheim in 1871, Mr. Parker taking up the work of a vineyardist. Still later he cultivated oranges, owning a sixty-acre ranch; whereas they had raised cattle and sheep in earlier days. They had ten children.

Walter Parker went to the public schools, and when he was old enough, became a veterinary surgeon. After coming to Orange County, he set up a regular practice, and in that scientifically interesting and humane field continued for many years, accomplishing no end of good in the relief of the dumb animal, and getting to be very well known beyond the confines even of the county. He also owned a fruit ranch of forty acres, made raisins, and built the first raisin drier in Orange County. He was best known, however, as a veterinary surgeon. Later he located at Iowa Park, Tex., where he engaged in the raising of cattle; and there he died on May 14, 1908.

He had been in the Civil War as a member of the Seventeenth Illinois Cavalry, and at Richland, now Orange, then in Los Angeles County, on June 28, 1873, he was married to Miss Barbara Kraemer, a native of St. Claire County, Ill., and the daughter of Daniel Kraemer. She has always been the center of a circle of devoted, admiring friends, and is as popular today with her stories of experience with the Indians, who were friendly, in the early days of Anaheim. One daughter, Miss Elenora A. Parker, is a teacher in the Anaheim public schools.

ELIJAH P. JUSTICE.—A pioneer not alone of Orange County, but of the state of California, Elijah P. Justice, one of the county's most honored old settlers, is now living retired with his excellent wife, who has proved such a capable and courageous helpmate, on the Justice ranch near Westminster. Despite the fact that he has reached his eighty-second birthday, Mr. Justice possesses a truly remarkable memory and can recall names, dates and incidents, and describe with graphic detail the perilous happenings of his journey across the plains. A native of the Hoosier State, Mr. Justice was born in Pulaski County, Ind., November 10, 1838, and there he spent the days of his early boyhood. In 1853, when a lad of fifteen, he went to Texas with his father, remaining there for four years, then starting across the plains with ox teams for California. At that time there were many warring bands of Indians scattered over the plains, and time and again they were set upon by these marauders. They lost practically all of their cattle and barely escaped with their lives. In addition they encountered innumerable other hardships, and it was with a great sense of thankfulness that they finally reached the settlement at San Bernardino. Later Mr. Justice became a freighter, and for these rough and hardy plainsmen even the Redskins had respect, for the freighters feared nothing and took no chances in being surprised by the Indians. Mr. Justice recalls vividly how at a certain place in Arizona a number of freighters encountered a band of hostile Redskins, and the battle that followed was a victory for the freighters, who counted seventy-two braves killed by their bullets.

A native daughter of California, Mrs. Justice, too, has passed through many of the strenuous experiences that were typical of the pioneer days of the state. She was before her marriage to Mr. Justice Miss Martha Adeline Cotman, and she was born November 24, 1853, in San Diego County, near the San Luis Rey Mission. Her parents were John and Mary (Bohna) Cotman, natives, respectively, of Louisiana and Arkansas. Mr. Cotman came to the state in 1852, later meeting an accidental death. Mrs. Justice was the eldest of the Cotman children, and her mother's second marriage, which did not prove a happy one, made her childhood full of hardship, and she had very few opportunities for education or other advantages. She made the acquaintance of Mr. Justice at Azusa and was married to him on September 26, 1869, when she was not yet sixteen years old. Throughout all the years of their early struggles, when there were many hardships and days of toil, she has ever been ready to aid and encourage, and much of the prosperity that they have attained is due to her wise habits of thrift and conservation. Generous and hospitable, she has rounded out more than a half century of wedded life, and is much beloved by a large circle of children and grandchildren. Ten children have been born to Mr. and Mrs Justice: Clara is the wife of P. L. Glines of Covina, and is the mother of four children; Martha is the wife of George Yost, a raisin grower near Fresno, and has three boys; Laura is the wife of Roy Richards, an employee of the Salt Lake Railroad; they have two children and reside at Long Beach; Oliver P. married Miss Lulu Fisher and is a freighter and farmer at Merced; they lost their only child through an accident; Leona died at the age of eighteen months; Wiley Wells is employed on the Irvine ranch; Jesse A. was killed in an automobile accident January 1, 1918; Roy C. is employed on the Emery ranch as an engineer and machinist; Rhoda V. is the wife of George Taylor, a machinist; they have four children, and reside at Huntington Beach; the youngest is Benjamin Franklin. Mr. and Mrs. Justice have one great-grandchild.

After reaching San Bernardino at the end of his journey across the plains, Mr. Justice remained there for about two years, locating in the vicinity of Azusa in the fall of 1859. The outlook there was far from encouraging, as the plain was covered with cactus and sage brush, but Mr. Justice obtained title to a tract of land there and started in to cultivate it, but his water rights were illegally cut off. Being unable to get the matter adjusted satisfactorily, he deemed it best to dispose of the land, and he removed to El Monte, renting land there which he devoted to stock raising and general farming for four years. In 1882 he disposed of everything but his cattle, which he drove to what is now Orange County, locating in the vicinity of Westminster, and here he has since made his home. There were very few settlers here at that early day, the place being almost a wilderness, but with true wisdom and foresight Mr. Justice perceived that the soil could be made to yield abundantly if given the proper cultivation. His first purchase was a tract of forty acres, at that time covered with tules and willows, for which he paid only twenty dollars an acre, the same land now being valued at more than $500 an acre. At the time he bought the land it was so wet that he lost many of his cattle, the ground being too soft to bear the weight of the animals. It took much hard labor to drain this land and bring it under cultivation, but Mr. Justice's judgment has been amply rewarded in the years of abundant returns he has received. It is to men and women of the stamp of Mr. and Mrs. Justice that Orange County owes a great debt for the transformation that has come about through their faith in its possibilities and the willingness to work to bring about these results.

RALPH A. PATTERSON, FRANK E. PATTERSON.—For the past forty years partners in the ranching business, and later as house movers, Ralph A. and Frank E. Patterson have for fifteen years lived on their well-kept ranch of thirty-five acres one mile east of Bolsa, and four miles west of Santa Ana. Of sturdy Eastern lineage on both sides, their parents were William A. Patterson, a native of Newark, N. J., and Sarah Jane Crowell, whose forbears were among the old families of New Hampshire. The town of Paterson, N. J., was named for William A. Patterson's grandfather, who was a silk manufacturer there, there being a slight change in the spelling of the family name. William A. Patterson came to Ogle County, Ill., when a young man, and engaged in farming, and there he met and married Miss Sarah Jane Crowell, whose parents had moved there from New Hampshire. During the Civil War, he enlisted in the Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteer Infantry and served with distinction in the Union Army. At the Battle of Gettysburg the great siege gun, "Monitor," exploded, and a piece of the gun struck him in the left leg and he was crippled for life.

After the war was over, Mr. Patterson and his family moved to Nodaway County, Mo., and there carried on farming, specializing in the raising of broom corn and the manufacture of brooms, in which they made a good success. As is well known, certain localities in Missouri continued even for several years after the war to be divided in sentiment and allegiance to the Union. The Patterson boys were often singled out as the subjects for derision and revenge, and the Copperheads would seek to plague them by calling them "Yanks," which the Patterson boys usually ignored, but when the term began to be prefaced by opprobrious epithets, they decided that it was time for a battle royal, and it is related that the Patterson boys never came out second best in one of these encounters, and, incidentally, the whole locality began to have a wholesome respect for "Yankee" principles, as inculcated by the massive fists of the Patterson boys. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. William A. Patterson in Ogle County, Ill., and two in Nodaway County, Mo.: Charles, a light-house keeper in Oregon, died July 18, 1919, at the age of sixty-three, leaving four children; Frank E., born March 21, 1859, is a partner of R. A. Patterson; Ralph Austin, of this review, born September 1, 1861. Watts Turner died at Bolsa, where he was a rancher, leaving a widow and two stepchildren; William H. M. died at Santa Ana, leaving a widow and two sons.

The Patterson family came to California from Nodaway County, Mo., in 1881, and settled at Westminster. Ralph A. soon began ranching on his own account, locating at Carlsbad, in San Diego County, where he was extensively engaged in grain farming for twenty years. He then sold his holdings there, consisting of 480 acres, and came back to Bolsa precinct and bought his present place of thirty-five acres, which he and his brother Frank have farmed ever since. They have put down a ten-inch well, 214 feet deep, and have installed a pumping plant with an eight-horsepower engine, which furnishes fifty inches of water for irrigation and domestic purposes, also another four-inch well, pumped by a windmill. A comfortable residence and barns have been erected, and a house moving shop, this having been a side line with them for a number of years, doing business in Orange County on the west side of the river. The farm is largely devoted to garden truck, specializing in sweet potatoes, melons and carrots. For twenty years he was employed at threshing in Riverside, Orange, San Bernardino and San Diego counties, and gained a wide acquaintance thereby.

Ralph A. Patterson was married first in 1888 to Miss Lydia Dumphy, who passed away in 1890, her infant son, her mother and herself all dying within a few hours of the gripe. Mr. Patterson's second marriage united him with Miss Mamie Payne of San Diego; she died in 1901, at the birth of her second child, the infant also living but a few hours. Her eldest child, George A., is a student at the Santa Ana high school. Mr. Patterson's present wife, before her marriage was Miss Hallie M. Fillmore, and she is the daughter of William and Eliza Fillmore; she is the mother of five children: Charles T., William E., Hattie Jane, Hazel, deceased, and Lloyd Fillmore. Frank Patterson has never married, but makes his home with his brother, with whom he has been associated in business for forty years. Both brothers are steadfast and consistent Republicans.

MRS. ZORAIDA B. TRAVIS.—An estimable and exceedingly worthy representative of one of Orange County's most distinguished families, herself a descendant of aristocratic Catalonian Spanish ancestors, is Mrs. Zoraida B. Travis, a daughter of Prudencio Yorba and a granddaughter of Bernardo Yorba. His father was Antonio Yorba, a soldier under Commander Fages who landed at Monterey, lived for a while at the Monterey Mission, visited Yerba Buena, and finally came south to the Santiago Creek, and in time obtained title to the rich grant, "El Cañon de San Antonia de Santa Ana de los Yorbas."

Bernardo Yorba received a grant from the King of Spain embracing about 180,000 acres, extending from nearly the present site of Riverside west to the ocean. As early as 1835 he located his home on the north side of the Santa Ana River in Santa Ana Canyon, and there built his commodious residence, famous in those days for its liberal hospitality. It was a very large adobe building, containing ninety rooms, and many were the activities carried on beneath its widespread roof. The various members of the Yorba family were highly intelligent and highly esteemed; the most celebrated for her many charities and kindness was the great-grandmother, Josefa Yorba, a much-loved woman, who in McGroarty's Mission Play was selected as one of the leading characters. In 1887, the period when so much attention was directed to California and its realty, the Supreme Court of the United States confirmed title to the Yorba lands, Bernardo Yorba having passed away in 1858, while his devoted wife had passed to the Great Beyond seven years before.

Prudencio Yorba was a son of Bernardo Yorba by his marriage to Felipa Dominguez. He was born at the old adobe homestead, June 11, 1832, where he grew up, and from a boy learned how to farm and raise stock successfully. His schooling was obtained at the school at San Pedro. He was married August 4, 1851, to Dolores Ontiveros, who was born on the Coyote ranch in the La Habra Valley, August 4, 1833. Her father, Juan P. Ontiveros, was a native son, born in what is now Orange County, and he married Martina Ozuna, born in San Diego, who also came of a very old and prominent family. They farmed here for many years until they removed to Santa Maria, Santa Barbara County, where Mr. Ontiveros purchased the Tepesquet ranch and there engaged in ranching until his death. An extensive and successful sheep raiser, Prudencio Yorba became the owner of a large ranch in the vicinity of Yorba, where he resided until his death on July 3, 1885, his widow surviving him until November 24, 1894, having devoted her life to her family.

Of the twelve children born to this worthy couple, eight are still living, among whom Mrs. Zoraida Travis is one of the youngest. She was born on her father's farm near Yorba and as a girl received an excellent education, attending St. Catherine's Convent at San Bernardino, where she completed her studies. On October 20, 1898, she was married to J. Coleman Travis, the ceremony occurring at her old home. Mr. Travis was a native of Alabama, where he was born on August 8, 1853, at Gainesville, near obile. Impelled to leave the South on account of the disastrous effects of the Civil war, the Travis family came to California via the Isthmus of Panama, arriving in Los Angeles on Washington's Birthday, 1869. His parents, Amos and Eliza Ann (Coleman) Travis, were natives of Georgia and Alabama, respectively, and came of prominent northern families. For a time they resided in Los Angeles and engaged in orange culture on Eighth Street, between San Pedro and Alameda streets. In 1871, however, the family moved to Santa Ana, and a short distance north of the present site of Orange, where Travis laid out the famous tract of about 800 acres.

For a number of years, J. Coleman Travis was superintendent of the plant of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, and in this capacity he played an important part in the building up of the plant and in the construction of its canals and ditches. Mr. Travis also became the owner of a ranch of sixty acres on Tustin Street, near Orange, which they developed and set to oranges, going through the discouraging days when the fruit was ruined by pests, before the experts were able to control them. While living there their five children were born, four of whom are living, J. Coleman, Jr., Kate, Zoraida and Amos. Later Mr. Travis sold the greater part of this ranch and purchased the Esperanza ranch of 249 acres, a part of the old Prudencio Yorba place. Mrs. Travis' father having named the ranch Esperanza for a daughter who had passed away just before he moved onto this ranch from his old home. Then they located at Santa Monica, where they resided until 1917, coming then to the Esperanza ranch. Mr. Travis began developing this property, but was not permitted to carry out his plans, for this estimable man died on June 19, 1919, his body being interred at Fairview Cemetery, Orange. He was a man of pleasing manner and very affable and was endeared to every one, and particularly to his family, to whom he was a devoted husband and a loving father. He was fond of outdoor sports and insisted on his family enjoying many outings, and also on his children learning to swim and to be proficient in other athletic sports. He was especially fond of hunting and fishing and was a member of the Orange County Fox Hunting Club, excelling as a rider and marksman. Mr. Travis was always very interested in the building up of Orange County. He was deputy assessor of this district when it was still Los Angeles County, and he took a prominent part in the county division and the organization of Orange County in 1889. It is to men of J. Coleman Travis' type that much of Orange County's present greatness and development is due, because with other early settlers he gave generously of his time and means to all objects that had for their aim the improvement of the county and enhancing the comfort of the people; and thus those early pioneers paved the way for the opportunities and pleasures of the present-day citizen.

Mrs. Travis continues to reside on the Esperanza ranch, looking after her affairs and the training and education of her children. She has an abundance to do and her time is well taken up, for she still owns the 344-acre ranch that she originally inherited from her father's estate, a part of the old Bernardo Yorba ranch. So it is indeed fortunate for herself and her family that she was endowed by nature with good judgment, enabling her to manage and develop her property and enjoy her inheritance. A cultured woman, with a taste and appreciation for the beautiful which finds expression in her home, Mrs. Travis, in her graceful, charming manner, dispenses an old-time California hospitality, and her ranch home continues to be a center for social gatherings and family reunions.

GOTTFRIED KLOTH.—Among the many naturalized German-American citizens at Orange, Gottfried Kloth is worthy of special mention. He is a retired rancher and cement worker who, in 1920, sold his interests to his son-in-law, Benjamin Dierker, to retire from the more active duties of life. Mr. Kloth was born in Trettin, Germany, December 15, 1850, a son of Christian Kloth, who owned a farm of 300 acres in that country, and there married Fraulein Mana Dreyer, and they were the parents of four children who grew to maturity. Christian Kloth was married three times, and was the father of twenty-three children.

Gottfried Kloth is the oldest child by the second wife, and has one own brother and two own sisters. He grew to maturity in his native land, received a good education, and was confirmed in the German church. His marriage occurred in his native land in 1873, and united him with Huldah Trettin, also born in Germany. He is the owner of an eleven-acre farm, which he disposed of before coming to America with his wife and four children. They sailed from Bremen on the Steamship "Sillare" of the Hamburg American line, and landed at New York, in May, 1880, going at once to Young America, Minn., the place of their destination. Here Mr. Kloth purchased an eighty-acre farm; reaped two crops off of it, and came to California in 1882. Fred Ruck and the Borchards, of Orange, relatives of his wife, caused them to consider Orange as a future home. Mr. Kloth worked at the cement business at Orange for twenty-three years, in the employ of the Santa Ana Water Company and the El Modena Water Company, manufacturing cement pipe and cement ditches. He purchased a ten-acre ranch near Olive, operated it several years, then disposed of it, and in 1910 bought the ten-acre place he sold in 1920. The oldest trees on the last place are sixteen years old, and the youngest ones are seven years old. He planted all the trees on the place except three acres, which were six years old when he bought the place.

Mr. and Mrs. Kloth's four children were all born in Germany: Emma became the wife of Joe Derson, and they were ranchers at La Habra. She died in 1908 and left a child, Leona, whom Mr. and Mrs. Kloth reared, and legally adopted, April 2, 1920. She was two years and two months old when her mother died, and is now fourteen years of age. Lena is the wife of Henry Franzen of Riverside, a hardware merchant, and they have three children; Rosella married Benjamin F. Dierker, a rancher at Orange, whose sketch appears elsewhere in this work; they have four children, two boys and two girls; Herman is single and farmed the home place for his father.

Gottfried Kloth has helped build three Lutheran church edifices at Orange, the last one erected at a cost of more than $42,000, and he advocates the cause of temperance and is a consistent Christian. He and his good wife have been hard workers and deserve a rest after such arduous and useful lives. Much credit is due Mr. Kloth for the success which he has won by a life of industry and integrity.

JAMES S. RICE.—Back to an enviable ancestral record, James S. Rice of Tustin, one of Orange County's early citizens, can trace his lineage. Of English descent, the first representative of the family settled in Massachusetts, and here Harvey Rice, the father of James S., was born at Conway, on June 11, 1800. After his graduation from Williams College, well-known as the alma mater of President Garfield, when a young man of twenty-four, he decided to try his fortune at Cleveland, Ohio, then a little frontier town of only 400 inhabitants. Reaching there without funds or friends, he began his career there as a teacher, being one of the pioneers of that profession in that vicinity. With true foresight he invested his first earnings in real estate, and when, in later years, this land increased in value it made him a wealthy man. He took up the practice of law and became one of the leading lights of his profession during his long career. He was a leader among the public-spirited citizens of his day, and several of Cleveland's most noted monuments were promoted through his influence, among them the Perry monument and that of Geo. Moses Cleveland, the founder of the city. His early work as a teacher always gave him an added interest in educational matters, and he was ever at the forefront in every movement that made for progress in those lines. He was the author of the original common-school law of Ohio, a law that has been copied in many states. As a recognition of this service and his many years of disinterested work on boards of education and boards of charity, a life-size bronze statue of him was erected in Wade Park at Cleveland, largely paid for by pennies from the school children of the state. In the early fifties he represented his district in the state senate and made for himself a high place among the legislators of that period. Educator, legislator, historian, he passed away at the age of ninety-one years, full of honors. Mrs. Rice, who was Maria Fitch, a daughter of Col. James Fitch of Putney, Vt., died in Cleveland, aged seventy-seven.

Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Rice were the parents of five children, and of these, James S., the subject of this review, was next to the youngest. He was born at Cleveland, Ohio, October 31, 1846, and was educated in the schools of Cleveland and at the Western Reserve College at Hudson, Ohio. He completed the classical course and, in accordance with his father's wishes, was looking forward to a legal career, but decided to enter business instead. In company with an elder brother, already established in the house furnishing business, he remained a partner for eleven years, until in 1874, in search of health and a warmer climate, he made a trip to California to visit his brother-in-law, James Irvine, the original owner of the San Joaquin Rancho in Orange County. He remained here for three months, and then returned to Cleveland. He was so well pleased with what he saw of the Golden State, however, that he decided to return, reaching here on January 18, 1877. He went into the stock business with James Irvine, raising cattle and hogs on the San Joaquin Rancho, but that year was extremely dry and they had no feed for their stock, the sheep dying by the thousand. He was then living at the old San Joaquin ranch house at the head of Newport Bay, the first plastered house in Los Angeles County, remaining there six months. He next purchased some land of Peter Potts at Tustin, and started an orange grove, and later he bought a tract of fifty acres north of Tustin, part of which he still owns. He paid fifty dollars an acre for this land, and set it to Muscatel grapes, from which he averaged $200 an acre for several years. During the boom of 1886-1887 in this vicinity, he sold quite a portion of his land, some of it at the rate of $4,000 an acre. Land values, of course, receded after this abnormal inflation, and Mr. Rice was compelled to take back some of it. He erected a fine three-story residence on his property, and now has a twelve-acre orange grove that has been brought up to the highest state of cultivation and productivity.

Mr. Rice's marriage, which occurred in Cleveland, Ohio, united him with Miss Coralinn Barlow, the daughter of Gen. Merrill Barlow, an eminent lawyer of that place, who was quartermaster general of Ohio during the Civil War period. A brother of Mrs. Rice is Hon. Charles A. Barlow, of Bakersfield, who has been one of the most prominent figures in the oil development of Kern County. Mrs. Rice was an exceptionally talented woman, a singer of note, having had an excellent musical education, and her gracious hospitality made their home the social center of a large coterie of friends, among them Madame Modjeska. She occupied an individual place in the community, to which her death, in November, 1919, came as a distinct loss. Mr. and Mrs. Rice were the parents of four children: James Willis, a rancher at Tustin, married Miss Rubel Martin, and they have two children; Merrill and Harvey are both deceased; the youngest son, Percy F., is an inventor.

In politics Mr. Rice has always been a staunch adherent of the Democratic party and prominent in the local affairs of the organization. He is now chairman of the Democratic County Central Committee.

WILLIAM THOMAS BROWN.—An early pioneer in the commercial world of Orange County, enjoying the distinction of having been the first president of the Fullerton Chamber of Commerce, and a pioneer advocate of the most enthusiastic sort of good roads, able to boast with pride that he actively participated in giving Fullerton her fine thoroughfares, renowned as among the best in all the state, William Thomas Brown, a native of Georgia, represents very ably the handsome contribution made from time to time by the South toward the development of the Southland in California. As president and general manager of the Brown and Dauser Company, Mr. Brown is not only a force in the lumber field, but influential at all times, and in the right way and most needed places.

He was born at Macon, Ga., on September 18, 1852, the son of Dr. William A. Brown, a physician and surgeon who practiced for years in Georgia and first came to California ten years after the arrival of our subject here. Dr. Brown married Miss Salina J. Jenkins, a native of North Carolina and she became the mother of seven children, among whom William Thomas was the fourth oldest child. He was educated in private schools in Winchester, Texas, and for three years was in a drug store in that state. Coming to California in 1873, Mr. Brown spent the first ten years as agent and operator for the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, and then for a year he was secretary of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company at Orange. In 1881 he purchased a ranch of twenty-one and a half acres on North Main Street, half-way between Orange and Santa Ana, where he spent a couple of years farming, and then he entered the lumber field, becoming interested in the Anaheim yard of the J. M. Griffith Lumber Company. He assumed the management, a position he filled with success for a period of sixteen years, and it is self-evident that he not only mastered the business there, but also had much to do with giving the development of the lumber business in general in Orange County the right turn and the needed impetus.

In 1899 Mr. Brown incorporated the Brown and Dauser Company and purchased the T. S. Grimshaw lumber yard in Fullerton, and here he has since been in business. In about 1904 he purchased Mr. Dauser's interest and devotes all of his time to the management of the business, being president and manager of the company. It is the oldest yard in Fullerton and has a fine planing mill; and it demands the services of fifteen men. Besides the Fullerton yard, the Brown and Dauser Company have two other lumber yards—one at La Habra, the other at Brea. As a live member of the Fullerton Board of Trade, Mr. Brown may look back upon the community in which he has become a commanding figure with mingled feelings. When he was the first agent for the Southern Pacific at Santa Ana, the station was in an old caboose. The next spring the new depot was completed and he was agent at Santa Ana from December, 1877, until March, 1881.

When Fullerton began the agitation for good roads it required much effort and time to persuade many of the taxpayers that better and the best roads were the greatest of assets and after the bonds were voted Mr. Brown was appointed a member of the commission that had charge of the construction, and that finally gave Fullerton pavements such as many larger municipalities do not boast of. He has always been a Democrat in national political affairs, but a Democrat who willingly threw aside his partisanship in the consideration of local affairs. Mr. Brown still continues his interest in horticulture, for he not only owns his original ranch on North Main Street, but owns two other ranches devoted to citrus culture.

On April 17, 1878, Mr. Brown was married at Wilmington, Cal., to Miss Isabella Campbell, a daughter of William and Katherine Campbell. She was born at London, Canada, where she was reared and educated, coming to California in 1875. She passed away in 1893, leaving six children: Lottie M. is the wife of Dr. H. C. Stinchfield of Los Angeles; Catherine B. is Mrs. C. L. McGill of La Habra; Mabel G. is Mrs. Butler, also of La Habra; the second, fifth and sixth of the children are Albert W., W. Grant and Helen Brown, the latter living at home. Mr. Brown was married a second time, the ceremony taking place at Anaheim, on October 9, 1895, uniting him with Alice Beazley, a native of Australia, born at Sidney of English parents. Her mother died when she was a little girl and she came to California in 1870 with her father, Rev. Theophilus Beazley, a minister in the Presbyterian Church.

Fraternally Mr. Brown was made a Mason in Wilmington Lodge, F. & A. M., in 1875, but is now a member of Fullerton Lodge No. 339, F. & A. M., and with his wife is a member of the Order of Eastern Star. He is also a member of the Knights of the Maccabees in Anaheim. Intensely interested in the growth and development of Orange County, he has always been a member of the local civic bodies and for six years was the representative from Fullerton in the Associated Chambers of Commerce of Orange County.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK, TUSTIN.—The history of the finance and the financial institutions of a community are an index to its growth and development as a whole, and the First National Bank of Tustin, Cal., has been conspicuously successful since its establishment, February 5, 1912. Organized with a capital of $25,000, its volume of business grew from its inception to a marked degree, and judicious management increased its capital to $50,000, with deposits amounting to $286,887.96. W. C. Crawford was the first president of the institution and C. J. Cranston its first cashier. Its present officers are: C. E. Utt, president; John Dunstan, vice-president; C. A. Vance, cashier; W. S. Leinberger, assistant cashier; directors: C. E. Utt, John Dunstan, Sherman Stevens, V. V. Tubbs, I. L. Marchant, C. A. Miller and C. A. Vance.

C. A. Vance, cashier of the bank, has displayed his perfect knowledge of the banking business in the creditable manner in which he has filled his important position. He is a native of Kansas, and in 1912, having disposed of a bank in his native state, removed to Chula Vista, Cal., where he organized the Chula Vista State Bank. He sold this bank in August, 1916, and January 1, 1917, located at Tustin.

William S. Leinberger, assistant cashier of the bank, is a native of Nebraska, and was born in 1883. He is the son of L. F. and Kate Leinberger, natives of Pennsylvania and Ohio, respectively. He was reared and educated in the public schools of his native state, and in 1910, at the age of seventeen, migrated to California, first locating at Alhambra, Cal., graduating from the business college there, later teaching bookkeeping there for a year. He then was with the Alhambra Savings Bank until he took his present position as assistant cashier in the Tustin First National Bank.

JOHN O. FORSTER.—Prominent among the ranchers, business man and political leaders of San Juan Capistrano must be mentioned John O. Forster, who was born at Los Flores, San Diego County, on August 14, 1873, the son of Don Marco Forster, who married Guadalupe Abila, a daughter of Don Juan Abila, once the owner of the San Miguel Ranch. Don Marco's father was the famous John Forster, or Don Juan, who was born in England, migrated to California during the Spanish regime, and married Ysidora Pico, a sister of Pio Pico, the last governor of California under the Spanish regime. Don Marco was born in Los Angeles in 1839, and became one of the largest landholders in Orange County, owning 15,000 acres of very choice hill, pasture and grain land. Before the Eastern settlers came, father and son carried on a very extensive business in the raising of cattle, sheep and horses, allowed to roam over their vast estate, and they had as many as 5,000 head of horses and five times that number of head of cattle. Fences were then unknown, and cattle and horses ran wild. Santa Margarita Ranch, as the property was designated, included many thousands of acres of rich land, and was one of the choicest and most productive of the old-time estates. Pio Pico also owned a large estate near Capistrano, some of which, joined to a part of the Forster property, made more than a handsome holding.

Don Marco Forster died in 1904, the father of six children, among whom John O. was the third in the order of birth. The others were Marco H., Frank A.—a partner in various enterprises with our subject—George H., Ysidora, the wife of Cornelio Echenique, and Lucana, later Mrs. Thomas McFadden of Fullerton. When Don Marco passed away, John O. Forster was made an executor.

Romantic was the career of the founder of this virile family. Don Juan Forster, who was a captain of one of the fine old sailing vessels of early days, married into a long-established and wealthy Spanish family, and so later came to control one of the most noted principalities of pre-pioneer days; and equally romantic has been the history of Don Juan's renowned ranch. The ranch really included three old Spanish grants, the Santa Margarita, the Mission Viejo, at San Juan Capistrano, and the Trabuco, each with its own romantic history. The two first-mentioned originally belonged to the Picos; but in the forties John Forster, having captured the heart of Don Pico's sister, secured the ranches also. John Forster became esteemed and powerful as Don Juan; and on his death left such a heritage that it would have required in the days of no irrigation a small fortune to manage, and manage successfully. As it was, his heirs assumed indebtedness to keep the property; and when much of it was heavily mortgaged, it passed into the hands first of Charles Crocker, then of James Flood, and finally of Richard O'Neill.

J. D. West

John O. Forster attended the public schools at San Juan Capistrano, and later studied at St. Vincent and Santa Clara colleges. Then he went to work on his father's ranch, caring for his cattle, and after that, for four years was proprietor of a general merchandise store and was postmaster at San Juan Capistrano. In that old historic town, too, he was married in 1900 to Miss Mae Marshall, a native of Virginia City, then residing at Reno, Nev., a lady who has proven the most helpful of life-mates. Mr. Forster has become the prime mover in the San Juan Capistrano Walnut Association, and he is also interested in the Capistrano Water Company. He belongs to the Mission Church, and for eighteen years has been a member of the board of trustees having charge of the grammar school. In 1901 he erected his comfortable home, amid some seventy acres of walnuts.

Frank A. Forster, John's brother, who was born at Los Flores on December 7, 1871, is in partnership with John and other members of the family, the children of the long-honored pioneers thus preserving a pleasant tradition of early days. With common interests and generous sympathies, these thoroughly representative Californians are able to accomplish enough to give new force to the old adage, "In union there is strength," and to renew the assurance that property and wealth need not and ought not to be a bone of contention, but rather a source of felicitation among near of kin.

HON. Z. B. WEST.—Orange County has never failed to appreciate the worthiest of its judiciary, and distinguished among these who have deserved the highest esteem and confidence may be mentioned Hon. Zephaniah B. West, the efficient and popular judge of Department One of the Superior Court, at Santa Ana. He was born in Wayne County, Ill., on March 1, 1852, and first came to the Golden State in the great "boom" year for Southern California, in 1887. His father was Samuel West and he married Miss Margaret A. Hoover. To this union there were born nine children, five boys and four girls. They settled and did yeoman work in pioneering in Southern Illinois, encountering every hardship incident to making a farm and a home in a new and unsubdued wilderness country, such as that was at that time. They were very poor and upon the subject of our sketch—he being the eldest of the children—the burden of assisting in supporting the family fell very heavily, but ever mindful of his duty as a faithful son, he manfully remained with his parents and shared their burdens and hardships until he was twenty-one years of age; then launched out in pursuit of an education for which he had longed and thirsted; and without aid from any one, even to the extent of one cent, he pressed on and by self-denial, with indomitable energy, optimistic courage and the greatest sacrifice, completed the education he so much desired and began his professional career which has moved onward to higher and more worthy attainments and to his present important and influential position.

Mr. West graduated in 1876 from the National Normal University of Lebanon, Ohio, upon the completion of the full teacher's course prescribed by that splendid institution with the degree of B.S., and three years later from the Central Normal College of Danville, Indiana, with the degree of A.B. He then read law in Illinois and was admitted to the bar, upon examination before the Supreme Court of that state, in 1885. He was thus well grounded in legal subjects before he left his native state to push out into the world.

Coming to California, he settled at Santa Ana and here opened a law office for general practice; was city attorney for seven years, and conducted the legal proceedings by which the Santa Ana Water Works were installed—Santa Ana being the second city to take such action under the municipal law as it then stood. He was chairman of the Board of Education of Santa Ana for four years, and served five years on the State Normal School Board, and was acting in that capacity when the Normal School at San Diego was erected. He was also appointed by the Board of Supervisors district attorney of Orange County, to fill a vacancy for two years, and at the general election in 1902, when he had well established a wide reputation for clear thinking and honest, fearless dealing, he was elected judge of the Superior Court years, and has since succeeded himself each consecutive six years; so when he has his present term he will have served in that high office twenty-four years. In addition to his undergraduate work, the real foundation laid for much of this public life was Judge West's experience as an Eastern pedagogue. He was superintendent of schools of the city of Fairfield, Ill., for two years, and county school superintendent of Wayne County, Ill., for five years, and was engaged in school work altogether for fourteen years—a part of this time before he had graduated from college.

At Fairfield, Ill., on May 20, 1885, Mr. West, who is of English and Scotch-Irish descent, married Miss Elizabeth E. Wright, a daughter of Stephen and Emma Wright, English ancestry; and their fortunate union has been further blessed by the birth of children: Lulu A. West married R. Victor Langford, and Z. Bertrand West, Jr., married Miss Linna Yarnell. The other children are Marguerite E., Frank Gordon and Fred C. West. Judge West is a member of the First Baptist Church of Santa Ana, and is superintendent of the Sunday school for almost twenty-eight years. He is a valued and influential member and also of the Men's Club of that Church.

The Judge is a staunch, broad-minded Republican, and has unbounded confidence in the principles of that great party. He has been initiated into three branches of Masonry, knows the mysteries of two branches of the Odd Fellowship, is a Maccabee member of the Fraternal Brotherhood. This interesting career, so typical of an American progressive manhood, is of double appeal, for it reveals the many-sidedness of Judge West and easily explains his broad sympathies and his ability—so widely appreciated by both the legal fraternity and the public in general—to enter into almost every phase of social, business and political life, and so render justice far more surely than has been possible had he not run the gamut.

WILLIAM J. EDWARDS.—A resident of Orange County for more than forty years, William J. Edwards has contributed a large share to the development of the Westminster district, where he continues to make his home. Born in Derinda, Jo Daviess County, Ill., April 22, 1858, Mr. Edwards grew up there on his father's 150-acre farm, attending the schools of the neighborhood. His parents were Samson and Diana (Rogers) Edwards, of whom mention is made on another page in this history.

Coming to California in 1874, John H. and William J. Edwards rented a tract of 160 acres of land in the Westminster district, which they farmed in partnership, but in 1880 on a large scale in raising grain, potatoes and live stock. After five years the partnership was dissolved, William J. carrying on the ranching alone and meeting with great success, later renting 160 acres from his father, which he farmed for ten years, then bought it. He had purchased his present place of forty acres in 1896 and gave it to his three older children, but in 1914 and 1915 bought it back. He is now the owner of the original Edwards homestead of forty acres, which he purchased in 1896. He also has owned and improved three other ranches in the Westminster district: Wintersburg precincts, and had 1,280 acres of land in Arizona, near Casa Grande, property at Seal Beach. In 1914 he erected his attractive bungalow on the Santa Monica Huntington Beach Boulevard, which he has named "The Tortoise Shell."

In 1878, William J. Edwards was married to Miss Ella Johnson of Garden Grove, born in Solano County, the daughter of Irvin and Elizabeth Johnson, who came there from Missouri. She passed away in 1891, leaving five children: Ernest, a rancher near Bishop, Inyo County, is married and has five children; Elizabeth is the wife of Glenn L. Baker, a rancher in Tulare County, and she is the mother of six children; Harry James resides in Hemet, and has two children; Frances is the wife of J. W. Stufflebeem, a rancher at Visalia, and they have one child; Bessie Ellen is the wife of George Harris of Lemon Cove, and she has one child by her first marriage with James Harvey. Mr. Edwards' second marriage, which occurred in 1892, united him with Miss Nettie Kelley, born in Nebraska, the daughter of John and Mary J. Kelley, both now deceased. Six children have been born to them: Eugene J. is a rancher near Wintersburg and has one child; Cecil is the wife of Benjamin Craig of Phoenix, Ariz., and has two children; Sylvia is the wife of Albert G. Kettler, a rancher of Buena Park; Ben Samson, Rufus and Nettie Adelaide are at home.

In his later years, Mr. Edwards has been interested in the citrus and walnut industry and now has twenty acres devoted to orchard, his Valencia grove now being four years old. Although always a very busy man, with many business interests, he has allowed himself to become so absorbed in business cares as to forget that a reasonable amount of recreation is a necessity in everyone's life. A number of years ago he had a wagon fitted up especially for camping trips, with sleeping and cooking facilities ingeniously arranged. With his family he has taken many camping trips in the region, one trip several years ago being through the Yosemite Valley. Mr. Edwards has had the wagon mounted on a Ford chassis so that it is now more of service than ever, especially for long trips, and during the early part of the year 1920 he drove it on a long camping trip in the mountains. Mr. Edwards is a member of the Westminster Drainage District and of the Lima Bean Growers' Association of Smeltzer. An independent, both in religious and political matters, he has lived a consistent, upright life, following his own creed of justice and honesty in all his dealings with his fellowmen. He helped to make the division of Orange from Los Angeles County, and has lived here all those years.

H. Clay Kellogg

HIRAM CLAY KELLOGG.—Perhaps no one does more to help in the development of a new country and particularly to benefit future generations than the efficient civil engineer, and for this reason the name of H. Clay Kellogg of Santa Ana, is indelibly associated with Orange County. His works will live as monuments after he has passed hence. From the earliest days of the county up to the present time, and not alone in this section is his work known, but throughout the state and beyond its confines he has long been recognized as one of the most able men in his profession. The favorite saying of the famous educator, Horace Mann, "We should be ashamed to die until we have done something to help the world," is one of the favorite maxims of H. Clay Kellogg. A native son of California, he was born near St. Helena, Napa County, on Admission Day, September 9, 1855, the eldest son and child of Benjamin Franklin and Mary Orilla (Lillie) Kellogg, both descendants of old New England families who were among the pioneer settlers of Illinois. A sketch of the family is given on another page of this history.

Even in his early years Mr. Kellogg manifested a decided inclination towards the profession of civil engineer, and he was fortunate in being privileged to obtain the necessary education and training to perfect himself in his chosen calling. In 1879 he was graduated from Wilson College (now extinct) at Wilmington, Cal. During the time he attended this institution, through the friendship of Captain Smith, the engineer in charge of this section of the Coast Survey, Mr. Kellogg was fortunate in being employed to work out the triangulations of the survey of the Wilmington and San Pedro harbors and was furnished the necessary instruments for that purpose. After completing his course in the college he did not engage in his profession for about four years as he had taken contracts to set out vineyards at Anaheim, Placentia and Pasadena, this being the period when the grape industry was at its height in Southern California.

Mr. Kellogg's first important contract was the laying out of the town of Elsinore, in Riverside County, in 1883. The following year he was made chief engineer of the Anaheim Union Water Company, just organized, and ever since that date he has been employed as engineer or consulting engineer for the company. He held a like position with the Anaheim Irrigation system until the district was declared invalid. In 1885 he was chosen to fill the office of deputy county surveyor of Los Angeles County. In 1888 he surveyed and built the railroad running from the center of San Bernardino, through Colton to Riverside and operated it for eight months. This is now a part of the Southern Pacific system. In 1886-87 he laid out South Riverside, now Corona, remaining as engineer of its water system until 1900. In 1894 he was selected for the important post of constructing engineer of the dam at Gila Bend, Ariz., where he remained until the completion of the work.

Upon his return to Orange County, which section of the state has been his home since the year 1869, he was elected county surveyor, serving until January, 1899, when he was elected city engineer of Santa Ana. The work before him was the development of the sewer system of the city, a task that he was most competent to undertake and which he completed to the satisfaction of everyone. In 1900 he went to Honolulu, where he was engaged as chief engineer by the Wahiawa Water Company, and built two immense reservoirs by damming up both forks of the Kaukonahua River, running each side of the Wahiawa Colony; he also constructed a canal from the mountains to irrigate the colony and as an adjunct to the reservoirs, one of these having a capacity of 2,500,000,000 gallons. The waters of these reservoirs irrigate the lands of the Wahiawa Agricultural Company, being carried by a canal seven miles in length. In 1905 he was employed as consulting engineer to make a report on, and revise the plans of the Naunna dam above Honolulu and this dam has been constructed on his plans.

Upon the organization of the holding company for the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company and the Anaheim Union Water Company, known as the Santa Ana River Development Company, to look after the water supply and protect the water rights, Mr. Kellogg was employed as engineer, and still holds that important post. His duties are to measure the water each year from the source to the intake of the canals near the county line in Orange County and make such necessary investigations for lawsuits which occur in the protection of their rights, and in this field he is recognized as an authority and always called upon for expert testimony. In 1906, when the Newbert Protection District was organized to control the water of the Santa Ana River from Santa Ana to the ocean, a distance of ten and one-half miles, he was appointed engineer and holds that position. In 1910, after a period of twenty years, he returned to Corona, designed for and built the storm drains and sewer system for the city, two previous attempts having failed.

Mr. Kellogg has constructed many miles of paving and built bridges in various cities and counties in Southern California, and has built up a clientele second to none by any other engineer in the state. With a decided talent for architecture, he designed an attractive residence at 122 Orange Street, Santa Ana, which has been his home for a number of years. During the year 1918-19 he constructed a beautiful mausoleum, 200, of concrete, marble and bronze, at Oakland, Cal., a credit to Mr. Kellogg as an artist, and had he not chosen the profession of engineering, he doubtless could have achieved fame and success in the architectural field.

Mr. Kellogg has been twice married; his first union was with Miss Victoria Schulz, native of Iowa. She passed away in 1891, leaving a daughter, Victoria Sibyl, who was educated from the Westlake School for Girls in Los Angeles. She is the wife of John H. Michelsen, born in Los Angeles, a mechanic who works in steel, but with a strong penchant for raising poultry. They have two bright children, Ralph Copeland and Charlotte Augusta. Mr. and Mrs. Michelsen reside in Orange County. In 1895, at Portland, Ore., Mr. Kellogg was married to Miss Helen V. Kellogg, a native of Wisconsin, who spent her early life in North Dakota, and is a graduate of the high normal schools and of the State University of North Dakota, a talented lady who presides over the family home and is an invaluable helpmate to her gifted husband. This union has been blessed with four children—Helen, Hiram Clay, Jr., Leonard and Oahu Rose.

In fraternal circles Mr. Kellogg is a Mason, having been made a member of the Santa Ana Lodge, No. 241, F. & A. M.; and he belongs to the Chapter; the Council, where he has been illustrious master; the Commandery, in which he is a past eminent commander, and is a member of the Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., in Los Angeles. For years he was prominent in the Native Sons of the Golden West, serving as president of the Invincible Parlor, and also held the office of deputy district grand master for fourteen years, and is now among the oldest of the Native Sons of California. He has always been prominent in the affairs of the Technical Society of Civil Engineers of the Pacific Coast. Notwithstanding the busy life he has led, H. Clay Kellogg has never neglected his duties as a citizen of the county, but has given of his time and means to further those projects that have had as their aim the betterment of social and civic conditions and in all such work he has had the active cooperation of his family and they have a wide circle of friends wherever known.

JOHN H. EDWARDS.—Now living retired at Santa Ana, John H. Edwards occupies a distinct place among the honored pioneer ranchers of Orange County, as close to half a century he has been identified with its progress, and through his aggressiveness and energy liberally contributing to every enterprise, not only of his own neighborhood, but of the whole country round about.

While the greater part of his life has been passed in California, Mr. Edwards is a native of Wisconsin, and there he was born near Hazel Green on October 16, 1857.

His parents were Samson and Diana (Rogers) Edwards, honored residents of Orange County for many years, a sketch of their lives being found elsewhere in this history. During the early boyhood of Mr. Edwards, his parents removed to Jones County, Ill., and there he remained until early manhood. Then, in 1874, he came to California with his father, Samson Edwards, and located near Westminster in Orange County, and there they rented a ranch, which they cultivated together until 1882.

He was twenty-one years of age. He then entered into a partnership with his father, William J. Edwards, and for a number of years they were engaged in ranch-leasing land which they devoted to corn, barley, potatoes and live stock. They maintained a dairy and conducted a meat business, running wagons over a wide range of territory, and as they were energetic and progressive, they soon became prominent in the agricultural development of the Westminster section.

In 1882 Mr. Edwards purchased a ranch of his own near Westminster, and he made his home until his removal to Santa Ana. His original purchase was a tract of forty acres, and this he added to until he owned 270 acres of valuable land. In connection with his ranching Mr. Edwards conducted a thriving butcher business for a number of years. In 1907 he rented the land to his two eldest sons, who have given the ranch their careful attention, keeping it up to the same high state of cultivation. Despite his busy life in the early days of development of Orange County,

Rector, St. Joseph,
Santa Ana.

Mr. Edwards was always keenly alive to the need for betterment of conditions in his community, and to any measure that was of present or future value to the county. As one of the directors of the Smeltzer branch of the Home Telephone Company, he was instrumental in the establishment of the telephone system connecting his neighborhood with the larger centers of the country. He was also a director of the Bolsa Tile Factory, whose products were a much-needed factor in the development and improvement of large tracts of land in Orange County.

Mr. Edwards' marriage, which was solemnized at Los Angeles, united him with Miss Julia A. Penhall, a native daughter of California, whose father, Uriah Penhall, was a pioneer of the Golden State, coming here in the early days and engaging in mining. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Edwards: Reuben W., Lloyd E., Daisy M., wife of O. J. Day of Westminster, Mildred N. and Glen W.

MONSIGNOR HENRY EUMMELEN.—If California the Golden, famed to the wide, wide world, is noted for anything besides its matchless climate and all the advantages to health and human happiness arising from that priceless blessing, it is that the great commonwealth is an empire of favored homes, a place where one may find peace and contentment, in an environment of uplift and hope, if one is disposed to be contented, happy and prosperous anywhere. For this second blessing—an advanced and assured state of society—Californians are indebted to various agencies long and strenuously at work; chief among which have been the untiring ministrations of the scholarly and faithful clergy, working unselfishly year in and year out to make the world a better place to live in, and California, perhaps, the choicest corner of all.

Eminent among these leaders of church work who have thus dedicated themselves and all that they control or direct to the public good, and often to the good of a public not always exactly in accord with them, may well be mentioned the Very Reverend Monsignor Henry Eummelen, distinguished years ago as the youngest Monsignor in the United States or Canada, and now a natural leader among the prelates of Santa Ana, who was born in the city of Lutterade, province of Limburg, Holland, on December 8, 1862—a day doubtless serenely quiet in staid old Netherlands, but a date memorable for the beginning of General Grant's operations against Vicksburg, which riveted anew the attention of the Old World on America. His father was John Mathias Eummelen, who had married Miss Maria Elizabeth Demacker; and being God-fearing folk, and having noted the early aspiration of their first-born to consecrate himself to the service of the Almighty, they afforded him every opportunity to prepare for the priesthood. For a while he attended the Jesuit College at Sittaert; Holland, but after four years, when he was just sixteen, he came to this country with his parents.

At Teutopolis, Ill., he resumed his studies, and remained for another four years at the Franciscan College, and then, for a year, he taught school. When he matriculated again, it was at the seminary at Mount Angel, Marion County, Ore., but since the Benedictines were not prepared to take secular students, he went to Vancouver, Wash., on the application of Bishop Junger, and taught at the college there for two semesters. He then went to New Westminster, B. C., where he joined Bishop Durieu in missionary work among the nine different tribes of Indians.

Impelled by the desire to resume his studies and reach his goal, Mr. Eummelen went for a while to the Ottawa University; and, as his parents had removed from Nebraska to California, he came to Bishop Mora, the first Bishop of Monterey and Los Angeles, who sent him to Santa Barbara to finish his theology under the famous Very Reverend Father Bergmeyer. When the latter gave up teaching, Mr. Eummelen came south to Los Angeles and taught languages at St. Vincent's, at the same time that he pursued his theological studies; and on the removal of his parents to Kansas, he accompanied them, to look after their affairs. Bishop Fink, of Leavenworth, was only too glad to welcome him to his diocese, and asked him to become a priest under his jurisdiction.

Our subject was thus ordained to the priesthood in Leavenworth on February 28, 1890, by Bishop L. M. Fink, and said his first mass in the Sacred Heart Church at Newbury, Kans., on the second of March following, in the presence of his parents and other relatives, and his first charge was that of assistant at the Cathedral. Subsequently he had to attend different missions in eastern Kansas, as a result of which the arduous pioneer work of those early days proved altogether too much for his, or the average man's, strength. His health broke down, and he was advised by his physicians to move west again to the Pacific Coast.

Knowing Bishop Durieu of Vancouver personally, he went to him and there, as the only secular priest in the diocese, he labored for nine years, and during that time he made it possible to enlarge the Church of the Holy Rosary, which has since become the Pro-Cathedral, and he erected the parochial school and St. Paul's Hospital. Not being able, however, to live any longer in that climate, he came to Southern California and took up his abode in San Diego, where he spent three years in the dreariness effort to recuperate his health; and, again feeling stronger, he volunteered his services to Bishop Conaty of Los Angeles. The Bishop sent him to the Imperial Valley, and there, during three years of hardships in a pioneer country, he built no less than four churches. He was then sent to National City, and there erected a church; and he also caused one to be built at Otay. As far back as 1896, at the time of the patronal feast of the Church of Our Lady of the Holy Rosary, Bishop Durieu, on October 3, had Pope Leo XIII, in recognition of Father Eummelen's worth, ability and eminent services, appoint him a Monsignor, and the year previous he had been made an Honorary Canon of the Holy House of Loretto; and with all the years of added experience, accomplishment, prestige and influence, the Monsignor was given his present charge, in 1913—the important parish of St. Joseph's Church at Santa Ana.

On March 2, 1915, occurred the silver jubilee of Monsignor, or plain Father Eummelen, as he prefers to be called, and never, perhaps, has Orange County so honored itself in a similar way as in the proper celebration of the event—a celebration that took on more significance on account of the history of the flourishing parish. The first Catholic Church of Santa Ana was built and dedicated in 1887, and it was then called the Church of Our Lady of the Rosary. It was ministered to at first by priests from Anaheim, but later it had its own pastors—notably the Rev. Fathers Byrne, Grogan and Remhardt. In 1896 the little Church was completely destroyed by fire. The congregation rebuilt at once, and the new church was dedicated the same year. After the burning of the first church, the congregation was again attended from Anaheim, until July, 1903.

After successive pastorates by the Rev. Father Joseph O'Reilly, the Rev. Father John Reynolds and the Rev. Fathers F. X. Becker and P. Stoeters (under whom the old debt hanging over the church was paid off), Monsignor Eummelen took charge in April, 1913, of St. Joseph's congregation, and he not only enlarged the church, but also the parochial residence. Now, after its enlargement and restoration, the church's interior presents a fine appearance. The furniture, though not ostentatious, is very pleasing, and contributes to the devotional spirit characterizing the place, and among the useful adornments are beautiful "Stations of the Cross" of very large proportions, painted in oil on canvas, and real works of art. This artistic work was done in the church building itself by the young Belgian artist, M. Ravenstein, who received his education in the art schools of Germany and France.

He also built the schoolhouse and established the parochial school. He is now completing a large addition to the school, which will give an additional seating capacity for seventy-five pupils. The school and high school are under the supervision of the Sisters of St. Joseph of Eureka, Cal. Preparing for future growth he has purchased a block of five acres of land one block north of the present site, on which he plans to build a new church at a cost of $100,000, then the present church and school buildings will be devoted exclusively to the use of the Mexican population of the parish.

During the eight years Monsignor Eummelen has been in charge, eight girls from the parish have joined the Sisterhood and two of the young men have become ecclesiastics, and the Knights of Columbus and kindred church societies are in a very flourishing condition. The school has been brought to a high standard and is not alone patronized by members of the congregation but by children from families of other denominations, who appreciate its high moral standard. It is visited by the county superintendent of schools, who gives it the highest commendations. He has been very active in the building up of churches and congregations in California, and in this diocese he has built eight different churches. Monsignor Eummelen also takes an active part in civic affairs as well as in the growth and development of the county. Every worthy movement that has for its aim the improvement or upbuilding of the county receives his hearty cooperation and support. During the late war he took part in the different drives for Liberty Bonds and other war funds, and was one of the four-minute speakers. He also organized the Catholic Homeseekers Information Bureau of the United States, with headquarters in Los Angeles. Fraternally, he is a member of the Knights of Columbus and the Santa Ana Lodge of Elks.

On the occasion of the Jubilee referred to, a poem, by Clarice C. Keefe, entitled "Pastor Fidelis," was dedicated to the jubilarian, and there were religious ceremonies at St. Joseph's Church, which began at 10 o'clock in the morning with solemn high mass. The procession proceeded from the rectory, led by the acolytes with their lighted candles, while three little girls dressed in white, carried before the jubilarian a white velvet cushion, upon which reposed a silver wreath of the symbolic wheat and grapes, and the Monsignor entered the church of which he had been the beloved pastor for two years, attended by the Right Reverend Bishop Conaty and the other clergy. The wreath was the gift of Father Eummelen's sister, Sister Mary Elizabeth of the Franciscan Convent in Chicago, who with his niece, Sister Mary Stanislaus of Tucson, were privileged to be present at the Mass. The two small nieces of Father Eummelen, Gertrude Wiedenhoff and Marie Rudolph, and little Catherine Mallen had the honor of carrying the wreath. When the three little maidens presented the wreath they made a pretty poetical address.

Immediately upon entering the sanctuary, the Bishop began the ceremony of blessing the church, whose present beauty bears witness to the energy and generosity of its rector. Following the blessing, solemn high mass was sung by Father Eummelen, assisted by the Rev. C. M. Raile as deacon, and the Rev. Father Golden as sub-deacon. Rev. Frank Conaty was master of ceremonies. The Right Reverend Bishop was attended by the Rev. Father Burelbach and the Rev. Father Hummert as deacons of honor. Father Theophilus, O. F. M., of St. Joseph's Church, Los Angeles, a boyhood friend and schoolmate of the jubilarian, preached the sermon, which so eloquently portrayed Father Eummelen's career during the past twenty-five years. The Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Conaty, Bishop of Monterey and Los Angeles, followed with another sermon, and then the litany of the saints was chanted by the clergy, the music being under the direction of Father Fahey. Before the congregation left the Church, a committee of men of St. Joseph's Society, consisting of J. M. Maag, J. W. Hageman and Henry Cochems, stepped to the railing and presented the Monsignor with a well-filled purse as a slight token of appreciation from the parish. A banquet followed, with toasts by L. M. Doyle, Mayor Ey, Father Fahey, Father Burelbach, Father Theophilus, Father Dubbel, Dr. Jos. Sarsfield Glass, then pastor of St. Vincent's, Los Angeles, and now Bishop of Salt Lake, Father Neusius, Bishop Conaty, Judge Thomas of the superior court, Father Campbell, and the guest of honor, Monsignor Eummelen himself. The receipt of many telegrams added to the pleasure of the event.

LEWIS AINSWORTH.—A prominent business man of Orange, whose healthy influence was felt far beyond the confines of both county and state, was the late Lewis Ainsworth, who passed away on March 22, 1914, in the eighty-fifth year of his age. He was born at Woodbury, Vt., in 1829, and came to Jones County, Iowa, with his parents when he was sixteen years of age. They made the trip by way of the rivers and lakes to Illinois, and then continued to Iowa with the aid of teams. In the Hawkeye State they entered Government land; and with from four to six yoke of oxen hitched to a plow broke the prairie and improved their farm. Under this Iowan environment the lad Lewis grew up.

In the stirring year of 1849 Lewis Ainsworth crossed the great plains, with other Argonauts, in an ox-team train, and having arrived safely in California, mined for a couple of years. Then, in 1852, he returned East by way of Panama, and on April 24, 1852, was married to Miss Persis Bartholomew, a native of La Moyle, Vt. She came with her parents to Illinois when she was seven years of age, and located at Buffalo Grove, now Paola, and two years later the family moved to the neighborhood of Monticello, Jones County, Iowa. She was the daughter of Daniel Bartholomew, who died in Iowa, and Augusta (Simmons) Bartholomew, who passed away in Napa Valley, Cal. Mrs. Ainsworth received a good education in the schools of Vermont, Illinois and Iowa, and so was a real helpmate to her husband.

The same day of their marriage, Lewis Ainsworth and his bride started across the plains with a horse team and wagon, on a trip which had been recommended for her health; and although she left home an invalid, she could walk and was quite well before the end of the journey. They remained at Jacksonville, Ore., for two years, and then, in 1856, returned to Iowa by way of Panama. They took the steamer John L. Stevens from San Francisco to the Isthmus, and the George Law from the Isthmus to New York; this ship sank on her next trip, with a loss of 365 persons.

Mr. Ainsworth remained on his Iowa farm of 640 acres until 1859, when he again came to California and brought his wife and two children, traveling via Panama. He spent ten years at Weaverville, in Trinity County, where he was engaged in mining and in the wood and timber business, and in 1869 returned to Iowa by the newly-established railway lines. Once more he took up agriculture on his Iowa farm, but in 1877 he sold the farm, and moved to Glasco, in Cloud County, Kans., and there bought several sections of land for the growing of corn and raising of cattle and hogs, which he shipped to the Kansas City markets. In 1888 he removed to Salem, Ore., where he remained until 1889, when they returned to Kansas; and there, with his sons, he started the Ainsworth Bank and ran it until 1900, while he continued to reside there and to prosecute other business interests.

Mr. Ainsworth had been coming in winter time to Southern California, and in 1900 he moved to Orange, and bought a town home and a block of ground. Soon after that, with the aid of his children, he started the Ainsworth Lumber Company, and with the first planing mill there, they made a quick and lasting success. He built the Ainsworth building, was also a stockholder in the First National Bank of Orange, and in the Orange Savings Bank, and was both a builder up and an upbuilder of the city and county. Although never a church member, he was a true Christian, and for over forty years had been an Odd Fellow.

Mrs. Ainsworth, now eighty-four years of age, has survived her husband, and is widely esteemed by all who know her. She is a member of the Christian Church and the Gordon Granger Post, W. R. C., and she continues to reside at the old home on East Chapman Avenue, where her devoted children lighten her labors and shield her from care. Mr. Ainsworth had made thirteen and a half round trips between California and Iowa, and Mrs. Ainsworth made eight and a half trips. For many years she has had the commendable hobby of clipping items of particular interest from the newspapers and pasting them into scrap books, and in this way she made two large books of the Spanish-American War. She has also made fourteen of the World War, besides nine volumes of soldier-boy letters; she began her scrap-book making in 1877, making one every year, excepting years of war, and has made over sixty books in all, and it is probable has never had a rival in California. The three children of Mr. and Mrs. Ainsworth are: Frank L., Mitt O. and Mrs. Ina Butler, all residing in Orange.

GEORGE J. MOSBAUGH.—Among the most interesting personalities of Orange County must be mentioned that of George J. Mosbaugh, for some time secretary of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, and later president of the Commercial Bank of Santa Ana. He was born in a log house on a farm near Cicero, Hamilton County, Ind., on May 17, 1840, and was reared on his father's farm. His father was Conrad Mosbaugh, born in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, where he grew up and learned the weaver's trade. He was also married there, on September 1, 1836, to Anna Maria Brehm, and together, the following year, they started for America. They were accompanied by Grandfather Joseph Mosbaugh, or Mosbach, and his entire family. In 1837 they bought land and settled in Hamilton County, Indiana, where they made a clearing and built a log house, with its mud and stick chimney, from the native hardwood timber, affording them a rude but hospitable home. Joseph Mosbach was born at Offstein, Hesse-Darmstadt, in 1775, and was a farmer by occupation. He married Justina Rasph, who was born in 1781, and they had seven children, and all came to America in 1837. The name was originally written Mosbach, but about 1848 an uncle named Franz began to write it Mosbaugh, on account of the various mispronunciations given the name by English-speaking people. Thereafter, the rest of the kin followed his example. Excepting said uncle, Franz, who was a shoemaker, all the Mosbaughs followed farming.

George Mosbaugh attended the district schools in the pioneer days of Indiana, became a teacher, later a soldier in the Civil War, and after the close of the war resumed his studies at Boyd's Business College at Louisville, Ky., and later studied at the State University of Indiana. After graduating there, he became the proprietor of a commercial college at Terre Haute, Ind., known as the Terre Haute Business College, and still later became proprietor of the Bloomington, Ill., Business College. But, before entering upon his career as professor in business colleges, his first experience was as a teacher in the district schools in Hamilton County, Ind. He was thus engaged in 1862 when he enlisted in the Fifty-first Indiana Volunteer Regiment under Colonel Streight, but did not enter the service for the reason that the recruiting failed to raise the necessary quota of men, and the recruiting officer and himself enlisted as privates in another Indiana regiment. Mr. Mosbaugh then went back to his public school and finished his term of teaching, and after that became a student at Bryant's Business College in Indianapolis, Ind. He was engaged in a mercantile establishment in Indianapolis when in May, 1864, he enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Thirty-third Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and he assisted in guarding the bridge across the Tennessee River, on the Nashville & Chattanooga Railway, and in doing picket duty at Bridgeport, Ala. He was honorably discharged by reason of the expiration of the term of his enlistment on September 5, 1864. After that he took up business college work and conducted the schools already mentioned.

While he was managing the business college at Bloomington, Mr. Mosbaugh went to Indianapolis, and on November 25, 1868, was married to Miss Melissa J. Harvey, a native of Indiana. She died at Santa Ana on October 9, 1896, leaving three children. Edwin H., who was for many years chief of the Redlands Fire Department, is now assistant chief of the department at Riverside; Maude M. is the wife of Dr. J. F. Galloway, the dentist, at San Pedro; and Marie is bookkeeper for a San Diego automobile and tire company.

Mr. Mosbaugh was married a second time, on May 16, 1900, when Mrs. Emma (Palmer) Thelan, the widow of the late Charles C. Thelan, became his wife. Mr. Thelan was a pioneer harness maker of Santa Ana, and they had one child, H. Percy Thelan, of Santa Ana. She was the daughter of Noah and Susan (Evans) Palmer, and was born in Santa Clara County, Cal. Mr. Palmer was a native of Lowville, N. Y., while Mrs. Palmer came from Indiana; and they were married at Laurel, Franklin County, Ind. Mr. Palmer came overland to California in 1849, leaving his wife in Indiana, and in 1852 he went back after her. For a while he mined gold at Placerville, and later he took up a government claim four miles out of Santa Clara, and became one of Santa Clara's early horticulturists. There were three children in Mr. and Mrs. Palmer's family: Almira, Mrs. R. E. Hewitt, came to Santa Ana in 1874, and she and her husband are both now deceased; Emma is the wife of Mr. Mosbaugh, and Lottie E. resides in Santa Ana. Mr. Palmer was very prominent in Santa Ana, where he died on January 10, 1916, preceded some years by his devoted wife, who had passed away on October 28, 1903. They were very highly honored people at Santa Ana, Santa Clara and everywhere else where they had lived, and Mr. Palmer was an excellent farmer, banker and street railroad builder, and was influential in political circles, being a staunch Republican.

Mr. Mosbaugh was engaged as bookkeeper for Lockhart and Company at Pittsburgh, Pa., for nine years, and became a partner in their business in 1873. Two years later he came out to California and settled at Orange, May, 1875, where he lived the first eight and a half years. During this time he developed one of the early orange orchards at Orange. In order to replenish his purse during the waiting time, he accepted the secretaryship of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, and at the time of the establishing of the Commercial Bank at Santa Ana, in 1882, he became its first bookkeeper, so that he is able to say, with a smile of satisfaction, "I began as janitor and bookkeeper, and came out as president." Since 1904, Mr. and Mrs. Mosbaugh have resided at their commodious residence at 636 North Broadway.

Mr. and Mrs. Mosbaugh attend the Presbyterian Church, and Mr. Mosbaugh is an active member of Sedgwick Post No. 17, G. A. R., in Santa Ana, and has been adjutant and quartermaster for a number of years. He is also a member of Santa Ana Lodge No. 241, F. & A. M.

A few years ago Mr. Mosbaugh prepared a family genealogy, of which he distributed gratuitously one hundred copies among near-of-kin and intimate friends, and in that work he placed the following preface:

"Aside from our duty and the gratitude we owe to our Creator, to whom do we owe our existence? Is it not to our ancestors, through whom God in His infinite wisdom has given us birth and life? It is wrong for us to say that we do not care for our ancestors. Besides giving us being, they have given us good government, churches, schools and colleges, and laid the foundation for the many blessings we are now enjoying. Let us then keep our family record with pride and reverence. This booklet is intended as a starting point. It is the hope of the writer that each person who receives one will continue to keep an accurate record of his or her family, and will pass it on to coming generations. Read the first seventeen verses of the first chapter of Matthew, and you will readily see that our forefathers in an early day kept a better family record than we are now keeping. Lastly, I desire hereby to express my earnest gratitude to all those who assisted me by furnishing names, dates or information for the completion of this booklet."

Mr. Mosbaugh has always been punctilious, prompt, and most conscientious in all his business affairs, and this in part explains his success in life; he has also been fond of poetry and other idealistic things, and this reflects his inner character. The following are among his favorite selections of poems:

"If with pleasure you are viewing any work a man is doing,
If you like him or you love him, tell him now;
Don't withhold your approbation 'till the parson makes oration,
And he lies with snowy lilies o'er his brow.
No matter how you shout about it, he won't really care about it;
He won't know how many tear-drops you have shed.
If you think some praise is due him, now's the time to slip it to him,
For he cannot read his tombstone when he's dead.

"More than fame, and more than money,
Is the comment, kind and sunny,
And the hearty, warm approval of a friend.
For it gives to life a savor, and it makes you stronger, braver,
And it gives you heart and spirit to the end;
If he craves your praise—bestow it; if you like him, let him know it—
Let the words of true encouragement be said.
Do not wait till life is over, and he's underneath the clover,
For he cannot read his tombstone when he's dead."

"I take it as I go along
That life must have its gloom,
That now and then the sound of song
Must fade from every room;
That every heart must know its woe,
Each door death's sable sign,
Care falls to everyone, and so
I strive to bear with mine.

"Misfortune is a part of life;
No one who journeys here
Can dodge the bitterness of strife
Or pass without a tear.
Love paves the way for us to mourn,
Our pleasures breed regret.
One day a sparkling joy is born,
The next—our eyes are wet.

"Each life is tinctured with a pain
Of sorrow and of care,
And now and then come clouds and rain,
Come hours of despair.
And yet the sunshine bursts anew,
And those who weep shall smile,
For joy is always breaking through
In just a little while."

GEORGE W. BUCHANAN.—A man who has really had much to do with the building up of the town of Orange is George W. Buchanan, since the spring of 1914 superintendent of city streets. He was born in Lafayette township, Medina County, Ohio, on February 13, 1863, the grandson of Samuel and Nancy (Wilson) Buchanan, natives, respectively, of Washington County, Pa., and Brooke County, Va., and representatives of fine old Southern stock. They had a son, George C. Buchanan, the father of our subject, who was born in Wellsburg, Va., and became a carpenter and builder, and also owned a farm in Lafayette township. On October 12, 1854, he was married to Miss Lydia Carlton, a native of Ohio, where she was born in 1835, the daughter of John and Catherine (Amon) Carlton. In 1864 he enlisted in the Civil War and served as a member of Company D, One Hundred Sixty-sixth Regiment, Ohio National Guard. In the fall of 1910 they came to California and spent over a year in Orange, the father dying in June, 1914, and the mother in July, 1914. The other child of their union is now Mrs. Ida F. Moody of Long Beach.

George W. Buchanan, the younger child, was educated in the grammar schools of his district, and at the Medina high school in Ohio. He then learned the carpenter trade under Henry Prouty, and followed that and farming until his marriage on May 24, 1885. This occurred at Lafayette Township, and his bride was Miss Susan E. Chamberlain, a native of that district, and the daughter of John Chamberlain, who was born in Greenfield, N. H., on June 25, 1829. His father was Abraham Chamberlain, a native of Vermont, where he was born in 1792, who had married Mary Clark, born in 1791, with whom, and their family, he migrated in an ox-cart from Greenfield to Westfield Township, Medina County, Ohio. As there were seven children in the fold, it was quite an undertaking. At Westfield Abraham Chamberlain purchased land in the solid timber and hewed out a farm. In 1856 John Chamberlain was married to Mary Devereaux, who was born in 1830 in Oswego County, N. Y., the daughter of John and Mehitabel (Craw) Devereaux. John Chamberlain and his wife were very successful farmers, and owned a farm of 280 acres in Lafayette Township, where they were highly respected.

Of the three children in the Chamberlain family, Susan E. is the only one living who completed her education in the Medina high school. She is not only a cultured woman, but she has been favored with much business acumen, so that she has proven a valuable helpmate to her husband. They farmed together on the old John Chamberlain place, improving the farm and meeting with such success that they had it almost entirely tilled when they sold it in 1904. The last three years of their life in Ohio they resided in their comfortable residence at the county seat, Medina.

In 1904 Mr. and Mrs. Buchanan came to sunnier California, and for ten months resided at Redlands. During this time they looked around carefully, and finally, after due deliberation, selected Orange as the best of all places for a home. Mr. Buchanan purchased lots and built his beautiful residence at 192 North Shaffer Street.

For a time Mr. Buchanan followed building, and was superintendent of the work of erecting the Carnegie Library at Orange; he was also the inspector in charge of the building of the first big reservoir for the Orange City Waterworks. In 1909 he was appointed a trustee of the city of Orange to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of R. C. Dalton, and for fifteen months served his fellow-citizens with singular ability and fidelity. He was chairman of the street committee at the time when the street improvements began in Orange, and later he provided the necessary data for the construction of a sewer three miles long, and watched over the building of this extensive work until it was all completed.

In May, 1914, Mr. Buchanan was appointed superintendent of streets, for which responsibility he was abundantly equipped, and since then he has had charge of all street building and improvement. He is also plumbing inspector, and inspector of electric wiring and sewer connections.

Two children came to add happiness to Mr. and Mrs. Buchanan, and to do honor to a long-honored family name. Stacy M., assistant teller in the First National Bank in Los Angeles, served his country in Company E, One Hundred Forty-third Field Artillery, Forty-third Division, which went overseas. Mildred became Mrs. Osman Pixley, and resides at Orange. The family attend the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Orange, where Mr. Buchanan is a member of the board of trustees. In national politics Mr. Buchanan is a standpat Republican. Fraternally, he is a member of the K. O. T. M., and Mrs. Buchanan is a member of the L. O. T. M.

FRANK L. AINSWORTH—A successful man of business and finance, whose positive moral influence is felt in notable movements for the betterment of the city or county, is Frank L. Ainsworth, former president of the board of trustees, or mayor, of Orange. He was born in Monticello, Jones County, Iowa, in 1858, the son of Lewis Ainsworth, who had married Miss Persis Bartholomew. When he was one year old, Frank L. was brought by his parents to California, by way of the Isthmus of Panama, and reared at Weaverville until he was eleven years old; but in 1869 the family returned to Iowa, this time traveling in one of the first transcontinental trains. He thus attended school in California and Iowa, and was for a while a student at the Monticello High School. In 1878 the Ainsworth family moved to Cloud County, Kans., and Mr. Ainsworth engaged in farming and stock raising near Glasco. Ten years later they all moved to Salem, Ore., and there, for two years, Frank was employed as teller in the Ladd & Bush Bank. In 1890 he resigned and returned to Kansas with the rest of the family; and with his father, brother and sister he started the Ainsworth Bank of Glasco, taking the position of cashier. When the bank was incorporated as the Glasco State Bank he continued as its cashier, until 1900.

In that year, at the dawn of the new century, Mr. Ainsworth followed the lure of California and located at Orange; and, wishing out-door work, in connection with his father and brother-in-law, F. W. Butler, he established a lumber business. They opened up in 1902, constructed the first planing mill, started the first lumber yard at Orange, and soon did a very flourishing business. The firm name was the Ainsworth & Butler Lumber Company, which later became the Ainsworth Lumber and Milling Company, and it stood for reliability in every particular. In 1903 M. O. Ainsworth, a brother, bought out Butler's interests in the business. In 1914 the Ainsworths sold out their lumber interests, and since then Frank L. has been engaged in ranching. He is the owner of an orange and a walnut orchard near Santa Ana, and is a stockholder in and vice-president and director of the National Bank of Orange; is also a stockholder in the Orange Savings Bank and in the First National Bank of Santa Ana.

While in Kansas Mr. Ainsworth was married to Miss Emma Hostetler, a native of Pennsylvania, whose parents were early settlers of the Garden of the West. They have three children living. Allie is now Mrs. Gearhart, of Los Angeles; Mae has become Mrs. Burkett, of Orange, and Marjorie is at home.

Mr. and Mrs. Ainsworth and family have a fine residence on East Chapman Avenue. They attend the First Christian Church of Orange, in which for years Mr. Ainsworth has been prominent as an elder; was superintendent of the Sunday school for fifteen years, and has been a member of the Southern California Missionary Board. He joined the Odd Fellows lodge at Glasco, Kans., and is still a member there. Mr. Ainsworth is a Republican in matters of national politics, and a member of the Republican Central Committee of Orange County; he was a trustee of the city of Orange for four years, the last two years being president of the board of trustees. He is intensely interested in every enterprise for the improvement and growth of Orange County, and Orange and Orange County may well be congratulated upon such citizens as Frank L. Ainsworth, public-spirited to the core.

CONWAY GRIFFITH.—A much-loved and admired artist of the present gifted colony at Laguna Beach is the pioneer, Conway Griffith, who is fond of God's great outdoors, and while on the range in New Mexico in his early days, got to know the West as it really is. He was born in Clark County, at Springfield, Ohio, the son of C. W. Griffith, who was a manufacturer in that city. He had married Miss Catherine Conway, a native daughter of Virginia, who maintained the tradition of her family by living to the ripe old age of seventy-four.

As a boy, Conway was devoted to art, and in time he was an instructor for years in the School of Design at Cincinnati, teaching a special method of painting on china. He had the first establishment in America where the china ware was baked in a specially-built kiln. His health was poor, however, so he decided to strike out for the West. With a chum he spent a number of years in Mexico and Colorado, and became heavily interested in ranches and cattle. He accomplished something more than to ride the range, however, for he profited by the opportunity there, and at Denver, to study landscape painting. He was also in old Mexico for eighteen months, and there invested in stock. When he sold out, it was to celebrate the regaining of his health.

In 1898 he made a short visit to California, stopping at Riverside and Colton, but did not stay, however, until 1904, when he came to Los Angeles from New Mexico. He had always been fond of marine painting, hence he soon set up his studio at Catalina, where he remained for four years, off and on, returning frequently to the mainland, and sketching to his heart's content. Since the spring of 1906, however, Mr. Griffith has been established at Laguna Beach, finding, as others have, that this locality has charms and advantages nowhere else hereabouts to be enjoyed. On account of his long residence here, Mr. Griffith is recognized as the pioneer artist of Laguna Beach; but he also makes annual trips to the mountains and desert for the purpose of sketching.

Mr. Griffith's brother, A. H. Griffith—at whose home the mother made her home until her death—is a noted art critic of Detroit, so that our subject seems to have come to his own talents very naturally. As a self-taught artist, he has an individual interpretation which is much appreciated by the admirers of his work. He is a regular contributor to the art exhibits at Los Angeles and San Francisco, and is a member of the California Art Association, and a charter member of the Laguna Beach Art Association. He also belongs to the Laguna Beach Chamber of Commerce, and in national political affairs is a Republican.

SIMEON TUCKER.—One of the substantial citizens of the community whose increasing interests in Mexican lands has by no means diminished his enthusiasm for Orange County and its future prospects, is Simeon Tucker, who was born in Stockton, Jo Daviess County, Ill., on June 1, 1847. His father was F. L. Tucker, a native of Green Mountain, N. Y., who settled in Illinois about 1835, and was a pioneer merchant at Stockton, when he had the post office on his farm, and he had to haul things to and from Galena. In 1859 or 1860 the elder Tucker set out across the plains for California; and arriving in Tuolumne County, he tried his fortune at mining. And there he died, in March, 1884, esteemed by those who knew him in his rugged Americanism. He had married Miss Marcia Hunt, a native of the Nutmeg State, but she died in Illinois. She was the mother of six children, among whom Simeon, the youngest, is now the only one living.

Brought up at Stockton, Simeon attended the Illinois district school, and for some years assisted his father on the farm and in the store. In January, 1874, having come out to California, he worked on a fruit ranch at Shaw's Flat, at thirty dollars a month, after which he peddled fruit. In 1875 he came to Westminster, then in Los Angeles, now in Orange County, and buying a ranch he engaged in general farming, raising hogs and hominy.

When he sold out, at the end of five years, Mr. Tucker came to Anaheim, and in 1881 bought a place in the same district, but one mile below. He put in a vineyard, and two years later it died. Then he set out St. Michael and Mediterranean sweet oranges, and otherwise considerably improved the place. Later he traded it for a ranch in the Newhall Mountains in Los Angeles County. He went into the hotel business at San Francisquito Canyon, and the large stone building he then acquired is still standing.

In the meantime, having thirty-four acres in East Anaheim, he bought forty acres more, all raw land, with cactus and other brushwood covering the surface. He cleared the land, leveled it, drove out the rabbits and gophers, and in many ways agreeably improved it; and then he raised orange trees from seed, and budded them to superior Valencias. He sunk wells, installed an engine and had a fine pumping plant. He devoted forty acres to oranges, and he was the first to set out oranges in this district. In 1914 he also set out twenty-five acres of lemons. He raised much alfalfa, and now he not only has an electrical pumping plant for himself, but he supplies water to seventy-five acres belonging to other ranchers.

In addition to his valuable California holdings, Mr. Tucker owns two sections of land in Sonora, Mexico, and he has a stock ranch of 18,000 acres at Hermosillo in the same state.

In 1881 Mr. Tucker was married at Anaheim to Mrs. Lizette (Parker) Beckington, a native of Marengo, McHenry County, Ill., and the daughter of Leonard Parker. She came to California in 1871 and settled with a brother at Anaheim, and later her parents bought land in the East Anaheim district, near Madame Modjeska's home. In 1908 Mr. Tucker built a new, handsome residence. One son, Earl Robert, who was born on the first ranch they had, has blessed this fortunate union; he married Miss Laura Lensing, a native of Missouri, and assists his father. Mrs. Tucker has a daughter by her former marriage, Mrs. Lottie Bush.

Mr. Tucker has always, both as a genuine American and as a Socialist, been interested, not merely in building up a community, but in the more difficult, more important work of upbuilding as well; and when he lived near Newhall he served with satisfaction to all as a school trustee.

JAMES HARVEY GULICK.—A most interesting illustration of keeping one's family tree record so that it may become a contribution to history, is afforded by James Harvey Gulick, who can trace his ancestry back to good old pre-Revolutionary stock. Henry Gulick was a captain of the Second Regiment of Hunterdon County, N. J., in the Revolutionary War. He married Mary Williamson of that county, and of their several children one, a son, Nicholas Gulick, of New Jersey and New York, served a part of his time with his father's command. He married Elizabeth Gano, also of those two states. She was of Huguenot stock, and one of their children was William Gano Gulick, of Clark County, Ind., and Cincinnati, Ohio. He married Sarah Adams, and their son was named Martin Nicholas Gulick. He married Eleanor Welch in Clark County, Ind., 1841, and the same year moved to Macoupin County, Ill. After living on his farm at Plainview for more than fifty years he came to Tustin, Orange County, Cal., and died in 1900.

Their son, James Harvey Gulick, was born at Plainview, Ill., June 18, 1844, and there he attended the district school and lived with his parents on the home farm. After the Civil War broke out, he enlisted in Company A, One Hundred Twenty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and served in the West, as some called it at that time, and the last half of his service under that intrepid leader, Andrew Jackson Smith, commanding the Sixteenth Corps. He was in spirited engagements in Tennessee, Alabama, and Mississippi; was in action at Parkers' Cross Roads, Tenn., and Tupelo, Miss., and present at Nashville, Tenn., and Fort Blakely, Ala. He received his discharge July 15, 1865.

After returning to the Illinois home, Mr. Gulick attended the best business college in St. Louis, and then taught school in several counties in western Missouri. On December 6, 1868, he was married in Appleton, Bourbon County, Kans., to Miss Laura Jane Palmer, the daughter of William and Mary Palmer, of Greenbush, Warren County, Ill. A forbear of Mrs. Palmer, Walter Palmer, came from England in 1629, and her father from New York, and her mother from Ohio. They lived in Chickasaw County, Iowa, during the Civil War, and in 1865 moved to Bourbon County, Kans. Mr. Gulick went to Wilson County, Kans., in 1869, and took up 160 acres of government land, to which he added 240 more, which he devoted to grain and stock.

On removing further west to California in the "boom" year 1887, Mr. Gulick came directly to what is now Orange County and for a while he and his family lived in the Greenville district. Then they removed to Villa Park; in 1893 he sold that farm and moved to the Richfield section, where he purchased 107 acres. Seventy of these he set out to walnuts and the rest in various crops. After nineteen years there, however, he disposed of that holding and came to Santa Ana. Here he purchased a home at 1702 Spurgeon Street, where he has resided ever since. Ten children, eleven grandchildren and four great-grandchildren have called this worthy couple blessed. William Nicholas married Mrs. Julia Scovil and is living in Tustin; Mary Eleanor died in infancy; Phillip Frederick passed away at the age of nineteen; Fanny Ethel married William Wagner of Long Beach; Lena May married William L. Hewitt of Santa Ana; Arthur Quinn married Jessie M. Lough and is living at Fullerton; Winnie Hope also died in infancy; Laura Helen married William Huntley of Tustin; James Mark married May Wiley and they reside at Hemet; George Asbury married Maggie Forbes and they live at Tustin. Mr. Gulick belongs to the Sons of the Revolution at Los Angeles, and those that are interested in Gulick genealogy are invited to inspect a fifty-page manuscript on file in the library of that order in Los Angeles.

WILLIAM M. SMART.—Highly esteemed as a member of a distinguished family of Santa Ana, the late William M. Smart, was interesting as a gentleman long foremost in movements for the educational and intellectual advancement of the community. He was born at Xenia, Ohio, September 29, 1848, a son of Rev. James P. and Elizabeth (McClellan) Smart. Reverend Smart served as a pastor of the United Presbyterian Church near Xenia for twenty-two years, or until his death. W. M. Smart was given a good public school education and afterwards attended the Xenia Seminary, after which he was for years engaged in the coal business at Xenia with his brother John, until he sold out to him to come to California.

In 1887 he arrived in Santa Ana and for a time served as secretary of the McFadden Lumber Company, later he was for two years secretary of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, and from 1901 until 1914, up to the time of his death, he served as secretary and manager of the Santiago Fruit Growers Association. Mr. Smart had been a member of the Santa Ana board of education and of the library board, giving freely of his services when the present building was erected. In politics he was a Republican in national affairs, but most nonpartisan when it came to putting his shoulder to the wheel and working for the best candidates making for local improvements. He was a member of the United Presbyterian Church and lived an exemplary Christian life.

The marriage of W. M. Smart, on October 31, 1882, at Xenia, Ohio, united him with Miss Lydia C. the daughter of William and Mary (Collins) Anderson, substantial farmer folk of the Buckeye State. She was educated in the public schools of Xenia and in Ohio Central College at Iberia, an institution now of national repute on account of President-elect Harding having been a student there. To Mr. and Mrs. Smart six children were born: Mary A., is recognized as a professional photographer and is proprietor of the Mary Smart Studio, Santa Ana; Janet, is the wife of Henry L. Thompson of Moline, Ill., and the mother of a son, Carson F.; Fannie M., is a teacher in the public schools of Bisbee, Ariz.; James P., who married Miss Loraine Scott, is a rancher in Oregon, and he was formerly in Y. M. C. A. work in Los Angeles for years; he has two children—Margaret and James P., Jr.; William A., is connected with the Oregon State Agricultural College at Corvallis; and Carson M., is a surveyor and civil engineer in the employ of the city of Los Angeles. William A., and Carson M. were in the United States service during the World War, the former as a second lieutenant of heavy artillery and in line for promotion when the armistice was declared. Carson M. reached France, but did not see active service. Mrs. Smart had the honor of serving on the Santa Ana Board of Education at the time when the Polytechnic was built, and she also is a member of the United Presbyterian Church. William M. Smart passed away on October 11, 1914, mourned by a large circle of friends in Orange County.

ADONIRAM JUDSON SANDERS.—The memory of a worthy, self-sacrificing and attaining pioneer such as the late Adoniram Judson Sanders, known by all his friends as plain Judson, is not likely soon to be forgotten, especially when his esteemed widow, herself one of the oldest settlers in these parts is following in his steps. He was born in Yarmouth, N. S., and came of English and Scotch descent; and there he was reared and received his education in the local schools. In his youth he showed a natural aptitude as a mechanic and he, therefore, followed the machinist's trade. Later, he came out to Minnesota, locating at Le Sueur, where he followed his trade, and it was there in December, 1865, he was married to Miss Elizabeth McPherson, who was born in Chaumont, Jefferson County, N. Y., the daughter of Hugh McPherson, born in New Hampshire, but of Scotch descent. The McPherson family were among the first settlers in the Granite State, and Grandfather William McPherson served in the Revolutionary War. Hugh McPherson was a captain in the New Hampshire State Militia, and was also a farmer; and he followed agriculture when he removed to Chaumont Bay, N. Y. He married Betsy Butterfield, a native of New Hampshire, and the granddaughter of Peter Butterfield, who was of English descent and also served in the Revolution. Mr. and Mrs. Hugh McPherson were Presbyterians, and died at the old home farm at Chaumont, N. Y. They had thirteen children, and Mrs. Sanders was the youngest and is the only one now living. She completed her education at Watertown Academy, and looks back to those girlhood days, in northern New York, as among the happiest of her long career.

After his marriage, Mr. Sanders followed his trade in Minnesota, and in 1873, they came out to California and purchased a ranch two miles east of Orange, where they resided for thirty-six years. The land was a raw cactus and brush patch when they first took hold; but they cleared it and brought it under cultivation, although for the first five years they had very little water. They set out a vineyard of muscat grapes, and soon enjoyed the credit of making among the finest raisins in the vicinity. Indeed, a Los Angeles grocer selected some of their raisins as the best obtainable hereabouts and sent them on to President and Mrs. Cleveland.

Then came the grape disease and killed the vines, after which, they put in a second vineyard, but this also died after the first crop. They then gave up the vineyard, and began setting out oranges and walnuts, and in time they had groves bearing splendidly. After operating the ranch for thirty-six years, they sold out and moved into Orange.

Here they purchased the residence in which Mrs. Sanders now resides, and where, in November, 1914, he died, aged about seventy-eight years, an exemplary man in all his habits and a consistent Christian. While living on this ranch at McPherson, they purchased 1,000 acres of land near Murietta, which they devoted to stock raising and grain farming; but this ranch was also sold after Mr. Sanders' death.

Two children testify to the ideal marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Sanders: Will Hugh Sanders is a well-known operator in the Los Angeles realty world, and Frank A. Sanders is ranching at Paso Robles. Mrs. Sanders has four grandchildren and one great-grandchild. She is a member of the Presbyterian Church at Orange. For years she was a member of the Ebell Club; and, as was her patriotic husband, Mrs. Sanders is a staunch Republican.

JOHN F. PATTERSON.—Among the esteemed citizens of Westminster, Orange County, Cal., is John F. Patterson, the successful pioneer merchant and oldest business man in continuous business life at Westminster.

A native of Brook County, Va., he was born a few miles north of Wheeling, W. Va., April 14, 1851, and when two years old had the misfortune to lose his mother. When he was nine years of age his father, W. J. Patterson, came to California and located on the Feather River in Butte County, twenty miles above Marysville, where John F. grew to maturity. The father engaged in the freighting business and ran an eight-mule team, hauling freight to the mines in Plumas County, Virginia City, Nev., Black Rock, Idaho, and other places. The only child by his father's first marriage, John F. was educated in the schools of Butte County near Biggs. He later attended Heald's Business College at San Francisco, where he pursued a general commercial course. While a mere boy he worked several years for Maj. Marion Biggs, in Butte County, Cal., the large stockman and owner of an 800-acre ranch. Afterwards he joined his father in the sheep business and they owned a flock of 2,000 sheep. Then with his father and three half-brothers he went to Abilene, Texas, to engage in the sheep business. He was taken ill and returned to California, going to Los Angeles. The father died at Los Angeles at the age of ninety. John F. engaged with Roth, Blum and Company, provision dealers of San Francisco, as traveling salesman for the territory of Southern California, and remained with the firm five years. Afterward he came to Westminster and opened a grocery store in 1889, buying a new stock of groceries from Hellman, Haas & Company, of Los Angeles. Since then he has been the proprietor of several stores, and ran a general merchandise store, dealing in flour, hay, grain, etc. He was manager of the flour and feed business for awhile, but has mainly functioned as proprietor. At present he is proprietor of a flour, hay, grain, mill feed and fuel store.

Mr. Patterson's marriage was solemnized at Westminster, and united him with Miss Virginia Carlyle of Westminster, daughter of H. W. Carlyle, pioneer rancher, who came to California from Independence, Mo. Mr. Patterson owns the two acres upon which he built his residence, and has been active in the civic life of Westminster, donating the right-of-way for the Southern Pacific Railway through Westminster. Ex-Governor George C. Perkins was a warm personal friend of both Mr. Patterson and his father, and Mr. Patterson cast his first vote in California for governor for Mr. Perkins. Politically Mr. Patterson is a Democrat, and fraternally he is a member and past grand of the I. O. O. F., and recalls attending grand lodge once when Reuben D. Lloyd was grand master. Manly, honorable and public spirited, matters that concern the welfare of his home town receive his interested support, and his disinterested efforts for the community's betterment have won for him many warm personal friends and the respect of his fellow-citizens.

MRS. ADELHEID KÖNIG-SCHULTE.—To know Mrs. Adelheid König-Schulte, is to fully appreciate her talents and worth. As one of the pioneer women of Orange County she has been identified with its development for over fifty years, during which time she made Anaheim her home. A native of Hungary, she came to the United States during her girlhood, with her father and stepmother and three brothers. After the death of her mother she was reared in the home of an aunt in Vienna.

Mrs. Schulte is a lady of culture and has many varied accomplishments; the walls of her home are decorated with oil paintings of her own handiwork and as a vocalist of more than local renown she appeared in public before audiences in Los Angeles many times, also has been on the program for vocal solos at the entertainments given by the Calumet Club in their hall in that city at one time appearing before an audience of 600 and singing in three languages, as well as appearing at other prominent gatherings on many occasions. Besides these varied accomplishments she is par-excellence in domestic science, serving one year studying and demonstrating, and excels in both plain and fancy baking. One cake baked by her and donated to the Catholic fair at Anaheim sold for thirty-six dollars.

As stated, Mrs. Schulte came to the New World with her father, Henry Eichler, and his second wife in 1866, first locating at Cairo, Ill., where they joined her uncle. From there Mrs. Schulte came to California, in the following year with her aunt, locating in San Francisco, where these two ladies embarked in business, dealing in dry goods and millinery. They carried on a very profitable business until the earthquake of 1868, which destroyed their building. From San Francisco she came to Los Angeles in 1869, and it was here that she met, and that same year was united in marriage with William König. He was born in Hanover in 1832 and was there reared and educated and also learned the art of wine making, serving an apprenticeship of seven years, after which he was employed at the trade for several years in Hamburg. He later came from that city by way of Cape Horn to San Francisco and from there to Los Angeles, where he found employment at his trade.

Immediately after their marriage in 1869 Mr. and Mrs. König came to Anaheim and made a permanent location. Here Mr. König purchased twenty acres of land devoted to a vineyard, erected a winery and carried on a very profitable and growing business, having one of the largest wineries in this section, which was then Los Angeles County. They shipped wine in carload lots to various places in the United States and even to Europe. Much of their product was kept and sold to be used for medicinal purposes. Mrs. König was a true helpmate and worked with him picking grapes in the field with the Indians and also assisted him with the manufacture of the wine. They both labored hard to accumulate a competency and as a result became owners of some very valuable property. Mrs. König erected a bath house in Anaheim at a cost of $6,000 which she leased, and where steam electric and mineral baths were given. She presented the bell that marks the old El Camino Real, which was dedicated with appropriate ceremonies February 5, 1911, and to commemorate the donor her name is inscribed on a brass plate in front of the column supporting the bell; by virtue of this gift she holds a life membership in the El Camino Real Association, which has done so much to perpetuate historical features and for the betterment of the roadways in the state. When the public library was secured for Anaheim, this public-spirited woman donated one of the two lots for its site, and was a liberal contributor towards the building of every church in that city. She was one of the organizers and a large stockholder in the German-American Bank, now the Guaranty Trust and Savings Bank, in Los Angeles. Both Mr. and Mrs. König were reared in the Lutheran Church.

Mr. König was an invalid for many years and his wife proved herself an excellent manager, for she was the means of adding to their holdings of property as well as improving them, thus adding to their value. They were both very generous and recognized as being among the most liberal citizens of Orange County. Mr. König died on April 1, 1911, at the age of seventy-nine years. On February 22, 1917, Mrs. König became the wife of Anton Schulte and they lived in Anaheim one year, then on account of the ill health of Mrs. Schulte, they moved to South Pasadena where they have a fine home on Diamond Avenue and dispense a generous hospitality. Mr. Schulte is an Iowa pioneer, having lived in that state for forty-eight years and where he achieved prominence as an official and public-spirited man, always striving to do what he considered his duty. He came to California in 1914 and ever since then has booked a permanent residence for himself in Southern California. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias and of Anaheim Lodge No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks. With Mrs. Schulte, he enjoys a wide circle of friends.

FRED G. AND ELIZABETH TAYLOR.—A distinguished American couple of Santa Ana, highly esteemed by all who know them, and especially admired for their many sterling qualities, are Fred G. and Elizabeth Taylor, who established the nucleus of "Taylor's," now so noted throughout Orange County, in Santa Ana many years ago. Mr. Taylor was born in Chicago, Ill., in 1847, the son of John Otis Taylor, a native of New York, who came west to Chicago and as early as 1852 located in Freeport, Stephenson County, Ill., where he was successful as a pioneer business man. He died about 1900, survived by his widow, whose maiden name had been Harriet Eames, and who also died at Freeport. They were the parents of five children: J. B. Taylor, a prominent business man and manufacturer in Freeport and founder and owner of Taylor's Driving Park at Freeport, died in that city; Hobart H. was a very prominent business man in various lines; he belonged to the Freeport firm of Taylor and Wise, grain operators, and as one of the founders of the Elgin Watch Company, had a part of that watch's mechanism, the H. H. Taylor Movement, named for him. He was also interested in Aultman, Taylor and Company, of Mansfield, Ohio, manufacturers of threshing machines, and in the Nichols and Shepherd Company at Battle Creek, Mich., which manufactures the "Vibrator" thresher; he was a banker and a philanthropist, and a Republican influential and prominent in northern Illinois; and he died at Chicago, aged only forty-two years, already rated a millionaire. Charles A. Taylor, another inventor, was a trunk manufacturer of that city and died there. Louise H. makes her home at Freeport, and there is Fred G. Taylor, the subject of our sketch.

He was educated in the public schools of Freeport and at the military school at Fulton, Ill., and for thirty-four years made his home in Freeport, where he was associated with his brother, J. B. Taylor, in the management of Taylor's Driving Park. As a boy he saw the stirring events leading up to the Civil War, and it is interesting to hear him relate the incidents connected with the day of the great Lincoln-Douglas debate in Freeport in 1856—how the people came for a hundred miles by teams, in wagons and on horseback to witness the literary duel that has gone down in history; and as a boy he had the good fortune to be near the speaker's platform, and to see and hear the great emancipator at close range. During the war he was too young for service, but tried four different times to enlist, each time being rejected on account of his age and small stature.

In Illinois Mr. Taylor married Miss Elizabeth Sharp, a native of Yorkshire, England, and the daughter of William and Martha (Jackson) Sharp. Her mother died in Yorkshire and her father brought his three children, two sons and the little daughter, to Rockford, Ill., but also passed on soon afterwards. Mrs. Taylor was reared partly in the East, where she had the advantage of splendid educational institutions, until her marriage to Mr. Taylor, a union that has proven very fortunate and happy. Her two brothers reside in Santa Ana, and one of them, Harwood, served in the Twenty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry from 1861 until the close of the Civil War, participating in numerous severe battles, and took part in all the engagements of his regiment during the Georgia campaign—from Atlanta to the sea.

Desiring to remove to California, Mr. and Mrs. Taylor came out to the Coast in 1885 and located on a ranch at Orange, where they resided until, at the end of six months, they located on one near Santa Ana. There they raised deciduous fruits. Northern Illinois is noted among other things for the skill of its housewives in domestic service, and Mrs. Taylor had no superior among them all. Her home always abounded in hospitality, and the excellence of her cooking was often commented upon, and she received especial praise for her fine preserves and canned fruits. After coming to California, and wishing to establish her two sons in business, she conceived the idea of putting up California fruit for sale in the East, and it was her aim to send out only fruit of the finest quality.

The beginning of the business was quite modest, the plant consisting of the cook-stove in the family kitchen, and during the first year, 1892, she shipped three hundred pounds of fruit to Freeport, Ill., where it found ready sale. The second year the "plant" was increased by the addition of a gasoline stove, and the business was doubled, the entire shipment also going to Freeport. Soon they began to get calls for the delicious products from other cities, and the third year they put up and shipped a carload of fruit. About this time, their son, J. E. Taylor, went East in the interest of the business, and the shipments increased year by year, until they reached 100 tons in 1901, and that increase has been getting greater with each season. Sales are made all over the United States and Canada, from coast to coast, and the fruit is shipped direct to the residences of those so ordering. Indeed, before the war, shipments were also made to Europe and the islands of the Pacific.

The first cannery was built in 1894, a very small building, and many additions were made, and also a new building erected, as necessity required; and now there is a large, fireproof, concrete building for the main plant, with every appointment most modern and convenient. Visitors to the cannery always find much to attract their attention and hold their interest, and they are especially impressed with the cleanliness in every department. The washing and paring and cooking departments are kept just as clean as are the scalded jars into which the preserves are poured. They used gasoline stoves until they had thirty-seven four-burner stoves, and then they changed to electricity, using 120 electric stoves, and now they use gas burners for making pickles and steam for cooking the fruit.

The fruit is boiled in porcelain graniteware, after it has gone through a systematic process of washing, paring and rewashing; jams and marmalades of all kinds are manufactured, and also peach mangoes, ng, peach, apricot and pear pickles, brandied peaches, pears, grapes, fig and English walnut pickles. All fruit is put up in heavy sugar syrup; and of late years, owing to the heavy increase in their business, they have been obliged to have fruit shipped in from the north, as the local market is not sufficient for their needs. They employ about 150 hands. They also have a large ice and cold storage plant, one of the finest in the state, and manufacture ice for even the wholesale trade. Up till a couple of years ago the firm was J. E. Taylor and Company, with J. E. and Fred H. at the head of the management, when J. E. Taylor sold his interest to the rest of the family, at the same time removing to San Luis Obispo County, and the owners then incorporated the business under the firm name, "Taylors," with Fred H. Taylor as president and manager, and this firm has become celebrated in fruit circles all over the country.

Indeed, those who are experts in judging fruit assert that the products of the cannery have no superior in any part of the United States, and that they have reached a point where improvement is practically impossible. All these years Mrs. Taylor has personally superintended the manufacture of the products, giving them her personal attention, and insisting on the same care and cleanliness as in the old days of the cookstove, and she has every reason to be proud of the commercial results, as well as of her husband and the two sons and daughter, who stood by her so bravely through all the various evolutions of the important industry. It is an interesting fact that the business has grown to its present large proportions without the company ever having resorted to advertising, and thus it is the quality of the product that makes the constant growing demand without newspaper or magazine solicitation.

Mr. and Mrs. Taylor reside on East Fourth Street, in a comfortable, well-furnished bungalow, where they entertain their many friends with an old-time hospitality. They are strong Republicans, Mr. Taylor having espoused the platforms of that party ever since its formation in the fifties at Jackson, Mich. Their three children are John E. Taylor, an extensive rancher in San Luis Obispo County; Fred H. Taylor, the president and manager of Taylors; and a daughter, Eleanor, wife of A. E. Marker, of Downey.

JOHN J. SWARTZBAUGH.—Thrift and frugality, coupled with a judicious management of one's financial affairs, are characteristics that usually bring success to the man who practices them in whatever line of business he may be engaged in. To these characteristics in the life of John J. Swartzbaugh, the extensive and successful walnut grower of West Orange precinct, are due his substantial prosperity. He is justly proud to be called a self-made man, because of the splendid success he has made by his own unaided efforts.

The descendant of an old Maryland family, Mr. Swartzbaugh was born in Baltimore, Md., September 25, 1858, the son of John H. and Mary (Green) Swartzbaugh, both natives of Baltimore. Grandfather John Swartzbaugh was also born in Maryland. Mr. and Mrs. John H. Swartzbaugh were the parents of five children, John J., the subject of this sketch, being the second child. When ten years of age he migrated with his parents to Springfield, Ohio, where the father rented land. For two years John J. lived with his great uncle, Samuel Swartzbaugh, where he helped with the farm work; subsequently he was hired by farmers who paid him only four dollars per month for the arduous work done and the long hours of service. The only financial assistance he ever received was thirty dollars he inherited from his sister Susan.

At Springfield, Ohio, Mr. Swartzbaugh was united in marriage with Miss Lola Knott, a native of the Buckeye State, and daughter of Charles Knott, a farmer and a veteran of the Union Army. After his marriage Mr. Swartzbaugh removed with his family to Texas, where he remained for eleven months and then decided to move farther westward, with the Golden State as his ultimate goal. He arrived in Santa Ana on February 22, 1888, and soon purchased a squatter's claim in West Orange precinct. Mr. Swartzbaugh improved his place and has from time to time made additional purchases until today he is the possessor of 110 acres of valuable land, ninety of which are devoted to walnuts, ranging from three to nineteen years of age. He has made a specialty of walnut culture for twenty years, the beneficial results of which are apparent in the high quality of walnuts and bountiful yields of his orchards. He is regarded as one of the most successful walnut growers in the West Orange section of the county.

Mr. and Mrs. Swartzbaugh are the parents of nine children. Arvilla married Welley Wheeler, an electrician for the Standard Oil Company, and they reside at El Segundo; Florence is the wife of Clarence Brittain, a carpenter residing at El Segundo, and they have three children; Olyn, a grading contractor at Harbor City, married Mrs. McClure who had three children by her former marriage; Ina married Paul Morse of Harbor City and they are the parents of two children; Ruth is the wife of J. H. Hutchings of Santa Cruz; Ada lives at El Segundo; Lola married Howard Gillette of Santa Ana; Carl and Mary are at home. In politics Mr. Swartzbaugh is a Democrat. He belongs to the Garden Grove Walnut Association.

JOHN DUNSTAN.—A conservative, trustworthy business man, self-made and successful and a good "booster" for Orange County, because of his confidence in the future of this part of the great state of California, is John Dunstan, the able and genial vice-president of the First National Bank of Tustin. He was born on December 5, 1866, near Redruth, Cornwall, England, the son of James Dunstan, also a native of that country, who had married Elizabeth Berryman, a descendant of an old family in that part of England. James Dunstan came to America in 1867, and being a farmer, did not tarry in New York City, where he landed, but immediately came on West, first to Fayette County, Iowa, and then to Pioche, Lincoln County, Nev., making his journey from the end of the railroad to their destination by stage. Finally in 1875 he landed at Tustin. John Dunstan is the only child of these worthy parents and came with them to Orange County and, then a boy of nine, he heard stories of the pioneer days he has never forgotten.

He attended the common schools of that time and locality and worked at home for his parents, helping to improve the twenty acres which his father had bought on East Seventeenth Street, set out in part to grapes, oranges and apricots. He himself in time bought twenty-five acres of vacant land east of Tustin, which he improved with walnuts and apricots and in 1903 he also bought ten acres more, which he planted to oranges and lemons. After a while he sold both of these acreages and bought instead some twelve acres, also on East Seventeenth Street, which he set out to Valencia oranges, and it has grown to be a valuable bearing orchard. He began to market through the Santiago Orange Growers' Association of which he is still a member. Recognizing his ability the stockholders of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company elected Mr. Dunstan a director and he later served as president of the board for two years, during which time he was very active in the improving, enlarging and building up the system. At the end of the period he resigned, not being able to devote the time he felt he should because his personal business affairs required all of his attention. Since its organization, too, he has been vice-president of the First National Bank of Tustin.

In early days he made a specialty of apricots and was rated as one of the largest growers of that delicious fruit in Orange County. His hobby now is Valencia oranges, which from his experience he considers best adapted to this soil and climate, and aside from his grove of sixteen acres he manages his mother's Valencia orchard of the same amount of acreage. On April 16, 1902, Mr. Dunstan was married to Miss Myrtle H. Hall, a daughter of William H. and Susan Frances Hall of Hiawatha, Brown County, Kans. They came to Orange County in 1891 and the father died in 1914, while Mrs. Hall continued to make her home in Santa Ana. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Dunstan has been blessed with three children as follows: Gilbert Hall and Mary Elizabeth are attending Santa Ana high school, while the youngest, Frances Emily, is attending Tustin grammar school. In 1914 Mr. Dunstan erected on his ranch a beautiful residence of nine rooms and furnished the same completely; and nearby on the adjoining orchard is his mother's comfortable home and thus he is able to look after her wants and give her every devotion and care.

Greatly interested in civic and educational lines he can always be counted on to give his time and means to all worthy objects which are for the betterment of conditions and morals of the community. Both Mr. and Mrs. Dunstan were active in the various war activities and Liberty Bond drives.

C. D. HEARTWELL.—One of the natives of the Empire State who eventually reached California to swell the number who have done so much for the development of the state is C. D. Heartwell, the pioneer real-estate dealer of Huntington Beach, who was born in Seneca County, N. Y., on August 12, 1847. His father, Oscar F. Heartwell, known to Huntington Beach residents for years as Grandpa Heartwell, was born at Oaks Corners, N. Y., in 1818, and he married Julia Ann Subrina Webster, also a native of New York and a relative of Daniel Webster. Oscar Heartwell passed the last years of his life at the home of his son, C. D. Heartwell, passing away there at the age of ninety-five years. Grandfather Benjamin Heartwell was born in Vermont and when a young man walked all the way from there to western New York and bought a farm where the city of Rochester now stands. Finding that they had chills and fever in that locality, he threw up his contract and went to Waterloo, N. Y., and bought a farm. He afterwards went to Oaks Corners and engaged in carpenter work as well as farming. Oscar Heartwell was also a carpenter, but spent some years in teaching school, afterward becoming interested in farming.

Of the seven children of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar F. Heartwell all were born in New York and six of them are living. C. D. Heartwell, the third in order of birth, passed his early years in the locality in which he was born. He attended the public schools and later took a commercial course at a business college at Auburn, N. Y. He then took up railroad work, entering the service as a passenger conductor on the Northern Central branch of the Pennsylvania Railroad, afterwards being identified with the railway mail service on the Syracuse, Geneva and Corning Railroad. In 1882, while engaged in this work, he was severely injured in a collision, so that for a time his life was despaired of, and for five years he was an invalid. In 1887, Mr. Heartwell went to Hastings, Neb., and with his brother, J. B. Heartwell, organized the Nebraska Loan and Trust Company.

In 1904 Mr. Heartwell came to Huntington Beach and started on his work of development that has done much for the town. At that time the Pacific Electric Railway had not begun its service there. With his brothers, J. B. Heartwell and J. F. Heartwell, and J. M. Edgar, he organized the Union Investment Company and built for their office the frame building where the U. S. Restaurant now stands; he was president of the company and Mr. Edgar was its secretary. Soon thereafter J. B. Heartwell organized the First National Bank of Huntington Beach and they leased the Union Investment Company's building on Main Street, the company then building a smaller office south of Main Street on Ocean Avenue, and here Mr. Heartwell has been located ever since, being the oldest realty dealer or business man, in point of continuous business, in Huntington Beach. The lands belonging to the Union Investment Company have all been disposed of and the affairs of the company wound up, but Mr. Heartwell still continues a thriving real estate, loan and fire insurance business.

Mr. Heartwell's first marriage, which was solemnized in Buffalo, N. Y., united him with Miss Emma Schermerhorn, who died a few years later at Geneva, N. Y., leaving two children; Julia M., the widow of E. L. Payne, resides with her father and is secretary to the superintendent of the Huntington Beach High School; Emmeline S. is the wife of E. A. Neilson of Huntington Beach. Mr. Heartwell's second marriage took place in Nebraska, where he was married to Miss Georgiana Dennison.

EDWIN BAILEY FOOTE.—With few or no exceptions, the Footes in America descended from either Nathaniel Foote, of Colchester, England, who came to Watertown, Mass., about 1630, or Pasco Foote, who settled in Salem, Mass., soon after, or Richard Foote, of Cornwall, England, and later of Stafford County, Va. That the first two were nearly related, if not brothers, there can be little doubt. According to one tradition, the far-away ancestors of these migrating worthies lived near the base or foot of a mountain in England, at the time when surnames were adopted, and they called themselves Foote, Fotte or Foot. However that may be, our subject's family tree throws its branches back to Nathaniel Foote, the settler of Colchester, Conn., doubtless related to William Henry Foote, the clergyman, who was born at Colchester in 1794. Other early and distinguished Footes are Arthur William Foote, the musician, of Salem; Elial Todd Foote, the physician, of Gil, Mass.; Elisha Foote, the commissioner of patents, of Lee, Mass.; Samuel Augustus Foote, the senator, born in Cheshire, Conn.; Andrew Hull Foote, his son, the naval officer, who was born at New Haven, Conn.; Henry Wilder Foote, the clergyman, also born at Salem, and Henry Stuart Foote, the senator, born in Virginia. There are no less than eleven branches of the Foote family in America at the present time, and Edwin Bailey Foote is the grandson of William Foote, a farmer of Stanford, N. Y., and the son of Henry B. Foote, himself the second son, in a family of eight children. He had married Miss Lucretia Eels, of Walton, N. Y., the daughter of Horace and Eliza Eels, steady-going farmer folk, and the ceremony took place on January 30, 1856. They took up their home at Stanford, and there reared their family.

The eldest son, and one of three still surviving, Edwin Bailey Foote was born on February 6, 1857, and grew up on his father's farm of 126 acres. He attended the district school, and helped to care for the milk and the butter which were marketed in New York City. When he was twenty-five years of age, he started westward, and for a year farmed in Michigan, then for a year in Ohio, and finally worked for a year on a farm at Manhattan, Kans.

An uncle, Horace Eels, had come west to Garden Grove, Cal., on November 18, 1887, and liked what he saw; and the same year Mr. Foote followed to the Golden State. He took up carpentering, and for five years worked at that trade. In 1890 Mr. Foote married Sarah Elizabeth Ross, and as Mrs. Foote was a member of the highly-honored pioneer family of Josiah Ross, the first to settle at Santa Ana, he found no difficulty in making valuable connections, and in getting all the work he could do.

In 1892 he took up ranching for the first time, although he had helped on a farm in Orange County three years before. Three years later he became a pioneer of Laguna Beach. He has acquired city property, and shown his interest in public affairs by serving as a trustee on the Laguna school board. He also owns various ranch properties in Garden Grove and El Toro. He is not a politician, but a liberal-minded, patriotic citizen, proud, to begin with, of his own family of three children—Hugh, and the twins, Harry and Hazel; the first-born died Nov. 23, 1917. He tries to live a simple, Christian life, and is never ashamed of the fact that he is a hard worker.

DE WITT CLINTON PIXLEY.—A prominent financier of California, whose deep interest in the welfare and sound and permanent development of Orange County would naturally entitle him to the good will of those who undeniably admire his methods leading to success, is De Witt Clinton Pixley, who came to Orange County in the early eighties. He was born in Ingraham, Clay County, Ill., in 1857, the son of Osman Pixley, the merchant and banker, who was a native of Edwards County, Ill., and a member of a family traceable to Liverpool, England. They migrated to Boston, Mass., and in time came to be early settlers of Illinois, in which state they established themselves when there were block houses near old Fort Vincennes, and Illinois was a territory. Osman Pixley, as seems to have been the Pixley habit, made a real success of all he undertook in business at Ingraham, as well as in banking at Flora, Ill., where he was president of the First National Bank of Flora for twenty-seven years. He continued actively in business until his death, at an advanced age. His good wife was Frances Wood before her marriage, and she was a native of Illinois, and spent her last days in Clay County. They had three children who grew up: De Witt Clinton, the subject of our sketch; Harvey F., now president of the First National Bank in Flora, Ill., and Arthur H., a member of the Chicago Board of Trade.

De Witt Clinton was educated at the public schools of his district and at Eureka College in Illinois, from which he graduated in 1878, with the Bachelor of Arts degree, after which he engaged in the mercantile business for a couple of years in Southern Illinois. But, desiring a milder climate, he came west to California in 1881 and located on a ranch at Orange.

In the spring of 1882 he bought the general merchandise store of R. L. Crowder in Orange, who was one of the pioneer merchants in town. It was where the Campbell Block now stands, at the corner of the Plaza and Glassell Street, and was in a small frame building. Three years later, Mr. Pixley purchased a lot on North Glassell Street, built a brick block, and engaged in general merchandising in what was for that time, at that place, the largest concern of the kind. Later, he sold the grocery and the dry-goods departments, and continued in the hardware and implement, and also the furniture business, which in time also grew into large proportions. About 1909 he sold the furniture business to his son, W. C. Pixley, who now runs it as the Pixley Furniture Company, and the hardware trade to the Kogler Hardware Company.

Mr. Pixley had early become interested in various enterprises of vital importance to the building up of the town, and was, for example, an original stockholder and a director in the National Bank of Orange; and he has been president of that bank for the past seven years. He was also president, and is still a director of the Orange Savings Bank, which has grown to have nearly $800,000 assets. He was prominent in the reorganization of the Orange Building and Loan Association, and was its president for twenty-two years, or until he resigned in 1919. He saw this institution grow from assets of less than $20,000 to over $800,000. He was the most prominent factor in building up the Olive Milling Company, and his management and financing was such that it was brought to such success it never failed to pay a semi-annual dividend. He served as its president for ten years, until it was sold, in the fall of 1919, to the Central Milling Company of Los Angeles.

Mr. Pixley has for many years been a director and vice-president of the Abstract & Title Guarantee Company of Santa Ana, having been interested in the company from its organization as a stock company, and he is also a director of the Fidelity Savings and Loan Association of Los Angeles. He built and owns the Pixley Furniture Store block on North Glassell Street, as well as other valuable property here, and property of worth in Los Angeles and San Diego, and owns a stock ranch in the Santiago Canyon, as well as one in the Laguna hills.

About sixteen years ago, Mr. Pixley was supervisor of Orange County from the Fourth district for a term, and then, although pressed by friends to continue in the public service, declined further honors in that line. Yet he has never failed to take a leading part in good roads movements, and was chairman of the highway commission of the county, and had a very honorable share in providing, at a generous expenditure of $1,270,000, the excellent Orange County highways, permanent in their construction and well serving the detailed districts of the locality, enjoyed by the public today.

At Ingraham, Ill., Mr. Pixley was married to Miss Florence M. Boring, a native of Illinois, and a sister of J. P. Boring, the well-known pioneer of Orange. Five children have blessed the union. Walter C. is at the head of the Pixley Furniture Company; Osman is secretary of the Orange Building and Loan Association; Frances, the wife of J. R. Fletcher, a prominent citrus grower of El Modena; Florence is the wife of J. G. Marks, a merchant in Los Angeles; Alma is the wife of Argus Dean, a horticulturist at Nuevo, Riverside County. Mr. and Mrs. Pixley are charter members of the Christian Church in Orange, where for many years he was a deacon, and was also active in Sunday School work.

Mr. Pixley was made a Mason in Orange Grove Lodge, No. 293, F. & A. M., and was exalted in Santa Ana Chapter, R. A. M., but is now a charter member of Orange Grove Chapter, No. 99, R. A. M. He was knighted in Santa Ana Commandery of the Knights Templar, and he is a member of Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Los Angeles. In 1916 Mr. Pixley took an ocean voyage to Australia, including the South Sea Islands, and four years later he repeated the delightful maritime adventure.

STEPHEN KISTLER.—An example of well-directed industry conducing to success, is found in the business career of Stephen Kistler, the wealthy retired baker and landowner of Anaheim. He was born June 25, 1863, in Strassburg, Alsace-Lorraine, under the French Flag. After the Franco-Prussian War in 1870, this historic and picturesque territory, by the Treaty of Versailles, became a part of the German Empire. Stephen Kistler was, therefore, educated in the German schools of his native land.

When school days were over, Stephen learned the trade of a baker, serving an apprenticeship of three years, after which he followed the business of a baker for several years in Strassburg. Possessed of a desire to see more of the world and to seek his fortune in America, he emigrated to the United States in 1888, with his cousin, landing at New Orleans. During the same year he journeyed still farther westward until he reached Los Angeles, Cal., where he secured employment in Louis Ebinger's bakery, at the corner of Spring and Third streets, as a candy maker, remaining there three years. During one summer season Mr. Kistler was engaged as the baker for the Redondo Hotel, Redondo Beach; this was during the opening season of the new and popular hotel of that day.

In 1891 Mr. Kistler came to Anaheim, where he purchased the Anaheim bakery on North Los Angeles Street and continued to operate it until 1896, when he built a bakery of his own on the corner of East Central and Claudina streets. For three years, in connection with his bakery, he conducted a restaurant which was known far and wide as the best place in Anaheim and it attracted patrons from many sections of the county miles away and traveling salesmen from the East always stopped there. He also conducted an ice cream parlor and installed the first soda fountain in Anaheim. As an example of his progressive business spirit mention is made of the fact that Mr. Kistler installed the first electric light, for business purposes, in Anaheim, having them in use in his old bakery on North Los Angeles Street; and also was the first baker here to use an oil burner. Thrift and frugality are strong characteristics of Stephen Kistler, whose early practice of them has brought him abundant financial success. As his business prospered he saved his money and wisely invested in land. In 1910 he purchased five and three-quarters acres of land one mile south of Anaheim at $150 an acre; planted it to oranges and after developing the place, sold it at the end of nine years for $4,000 an acre.

In 1913 he disposed of his bakery business on East Center Street, but still owns the building. In 1917 he erected a modern two-story brick building adjoining his property on East Center Street; the upper floor is occupied by the Knights of Columbus

Richard Egan

Hall. At 110 North Claudina Street he built a substantial residence, then in 1919, he bought five acres of oranges and a house on East Center Street, one mile from the center of town, where he now lives retired from active business cares, as the result of thrift and industry, coupled with judicious management and keen business judgment. Mr. Kistler is a public-spirited citizen and has always freely given his aid and support to those movements which had as their aim the benefit of the best interests of Anaheim and Orange County.

In Los Angeles, August 1, 1891, Mr. Kistler was united in marriage with Caroline Kaiser, a native of Basle, Switzerland, a daughter of Ignacio Kaiser, the pioneer landscape gardener and expert grafter and pruner who was active in vineyard work in the early days of Anaheim and Orange. Mary Kaiser, a sister of Mrs. Kistler, has made her home with them since they came to Anaheim. Mr. Kistler is a member of the Knights of Columbus, the Turnverein Society and the Catholic Church.

RICHARD EGAN.—A truly distinguished citizen of San Juan Capistrano is Richard Egan, popular as "Judge Dick," who was born in County Waterford, Ireland, in 1842, and who came to the United States when he was about ten years of age and lived with an uncle on Long Island. He attended the public schools, caught the spirit of the New World, and when about twenty-three years of age, sailed around Cape Horn to San Francisco. He remained there for a year and a half, and then returned East; and in 1866 went to Europe and took in the Exposition at Paris.

On his return to California, he again met a gentleman whom he had come to know in Paris, a Mr. McCowen, who proposed to take up some land, from the Government if possible, to which young Egan assented. Mr. McCowen agreed to sail alone to San Diego, buy a horse, travel in the saddle toward the north or until he found what seemed most attractive, and then return to San Francisco, to report to Mr. Egan, when the two were to go South together, look over the prospective purchase, and make their final decision. In time, they arrived at Wilmington Harbor, from which place they traveled by stage to Los Angeles, and then to San Juan Capistrano, whose location had seemed to McCowen quite ideal. A square league of this public land was then open to settlement, at $1.25 per acre; and they lost no time in acquiring title to some of the land promising soon to flow with milk and honey. At the Mission they found a settlement of about 2,200 Mexicans and Indians, only three of whom could speak English.

Now Judge Egan owns 600 of the acres he originally acquired, and lives in a well-built brick house on Central Avenue, a part of the State Highway running through San Juan Capistrano. He himself set out several walnut groves; he rents out his land, and the tenants give him one-fourth of the produce and one-half of the walnuts. He has the finest row of Lombardy poplar trees in Southern California, some of which at the bottom are seven feet in diameter. He also has a number of giant eucalyptus trees set out by his own hands, and his well-kept lawns show that he has an eye for the artistic, and that he especially appreciates shrubs, flowers and canes of Japanese propagation.

Both a public-spirited man and a leader of wide and valuable business experience, Mr. Egan served for four years as supervisor of Los Angeles County prior to 1889. He never sought the office, but the office sought and found him. Indeed, he has been repeatedly called upon to assume public trust, and never has he been found wanting. With James McFadden, for example, and a Los Angeles man he served on the commission appointed to adjust disputed questions between the counties of Los Angeles and Orange at the time of county division and he has always been ready to serve his own community. He held the office of justice of the peace for many years, during which time he rejected all fees for his services and devoted the fines imposed to the alleviation of the poor in that locality. He himself paid out money for the same cause, and in that way prevented any burden to the taxpayers. He did valiant work for the Santa Fe Railway in securing rights of way that they might build their road, which was the first great boost for Orange County as well as all Southern California. He was one of the commissioners along with D. C. Pixley and M. M. Crookshank appointed by the supervisors to look after the construction of the present system of Orange County public highways, in which he took an active part in the disbursement of the $1,270,000 bond issue that had been voted for that purpose. The splendid highways and good roads of Orange County, the pride of the citizens, as well as thousands of tourists, reflect great credit to the hard work and integrity of the commission. He also worked hard for good and still better highways.

A courteous, genial and well-read gentleman, Judge Egan has a well-stored mind and a fund of interesting things he is ever ready to dispense to others when they evince any wish to hear what he has learned and experienced. He is a member of the Southern California Historical Society, and kept valuable records and acquired many relics; but in 1898 his house was burned and nearly all his collections were destroyed—a great loss to the would-be historian of the section. Since then he has gathered together other relics, largely from and before the period of the Mexican War; and among other things of curious interest is a baptismal font hewn by Indians out of a solid block of granite, and a massive, beautiful chair, made in Spain and used by the Archbishop of Mexico.

OWEN HANDY.—A pioneer in California whose years of prosperity, crowning years of hard work, have made him public-spirited and confident, is Owen Handy, who was born in Boone County, Ill., on February 24, 1841, the son of John Handy, a farmer who helped develop early Wisconsin and died in 1850, honored by all who knew him. His wife was Celinda Shattuck before her marriage, and she was a native of the Empire State. She enjoyed the esteem of a large circle of appreciative friends, and bade goodbye to this world while a resident of Illinois, in 1864. Our subject is the only one of this family to survive.

The ordinary country schools in his district furnished his early education, and in time he became manager for his mother of her forty acres near Belvidere, Ill. In 1866 he left Illinois bound for Oil Creek, Venango County, Pa., and there, as engineer, he became an employee of the Noble Well Company. From March, 1866, to August, 1874, he was a driller and a dresser of tools for a brother-in-law, who was a contracting driller; but in 1874 he removed to Nevada, Storey County, Iowa, and there he purchased 160 acres of land, on which he raised corn, wheat, rye and stock. In Iowa he remained until 1881, and by that time no part of the earth appealed to him so strongly as did the great commonwealth along the milder Pacific.

As early as October, 1870, Mr. Handy had made a visit to Anaheim, Cal., and hoping that times and conditions were better than when he then found them here, he brought his wife and family here in the early eighties, arriving again at Anaheim on March 25, 1881. He then secured a position as manager for Messrs. Hellman and Goodman, who owned some eighty acres of oranges and lemons and limes, and wished to bring it to a high state of development. These gentlemen believed that they found in Mr. Handy, a man out of the ordinary, and he must have "made good," for he was with them for twelve or thirteen years.

In 1882, Mr. Handy bought for himself some thirty acres in Villa Park, and in 1898, ten acres on what is now Handy Street, later named in his honor, and he spent a great deal of time, labor and thought in developing these properties. He came to understand thoroughly the conditions peculiar to Orange County, and was accustomed to trim his sails to the local winds.

On July 2, 1865, Mr. Handy was married to Miss Mary A. Parker, born in Buffalo, N. Y., but living near Marengo, Ill., and they have had the blessing of four children: Celinda J., born May 12, 1866, wife of J. L. Conley of Yorba Linda; Harry B., born September 1, 1878, both of whom were born in the Middle West; and Joell B., born December 5, 1881, and Robert Ray, on April 13, 1884, native sons of California. There are seven grandchildren in the Handy families. While in Orange, Mr. Handy served for a year on the board of aldermen. He retired to Long Beach in January, 1913, and in August moved to San Pedro, and there built for himself a handsome residence at 1016 Santa Cruz Street. He makes weekly trips to Villa Park, and so keeps in touch with both his relatives and those business investments in which he so long had an interest. Both Mr. and Mrs. Handy are members of the Maccabees, where he has gone through all the chairs.

In national politics Mr. Handy is a Republican, and under the banners of that long-established party, he seeks to elevate the standards of citizenship and to increase the highest and purest types of American patriotism. But he knows no partisanship when it comes to "boosting" local movements worthy of support, and is intensely loyal to both Villa Park and San Pedro, the later town of his adoption.

WM. L. BENCHLEY.—As president and owner of the Benchley Fruit Company, W. L. Benchley has taken his place as one of Fullerton's progressive business men and is identified with every movement for the betterment of its civic and commercial interests. A native son of California, Mr. Benchley's entire life has been spent within its borders and so he has been familiar from his earliest childhood with all the details of the citrus industry to which he has devoted his time and efforts for a number of years.

W. L. Benchley was born at Ventura, Cal., on December 16, 1880, his parents being Edward K. and Emma (Wagner) Benchley. The early years of his life were spent at Los Angeles, the family removing to Fullerton in 1893, and here W. L. Benchley received his education in the grammar and high schools, supplemented with a two years' course of private study. He then became associated in the Benchley Fruit Company as a partner with his father and in 1911 he bought out his father's interests, since that time conducting the business of the company alone, and through his foresight and efficient management the affairs of the company have prospered and the volume of business has increased each year.

Owen Hardy

During the war Mr. Benchley was one of Fullerton's most patriotic citizens and he showed his loyalty by enlisting in the U. S. Army on May 12, 1918; spending some time in the officers' training camp at Camp Gordon, Atlanta, Ga. He was honored by recommendation for a commission shortly before the armistice ended hostilities.

Mr. Benchley's marriage, on June 26, 1906, united him with Miss Belle Jennings of San Diego, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Jennings. An active member of the Board of Trade of Fullerton, Mr. Benchley is also prominent in fraternal circles, where he is a member of the Lodge, Chapter, Commandery and Shrine, of the Masons, and also of the Elks. He is also a member of the Hacienda Country Club, the Fullerton Club and the American Legion. Especially fond of out-door sports, he takes his recreation in hunting, fishing and on the tennis courts. Possessing the business ability that has brought him success in his own undertakings, Mr. Benchley can always be counted upon to give his time and energy to all public-spirited undertakings.

THOMAS H. THOMSON.—One of the upbuilders of the Garden Grove district, Thomas H. Thomson, a wealthy pioneer rancher, is now retired from active business, living in comfort on the competence accumulated since coming to the West. Of Scotch ancestry, the qualities of thrift and sagacity which have always characterized this race, have unquestionably had no small part in the success he has made in all his undertakings. A native of Bovina, Delaware County, N. Y., Mr. Thomson was born there August 28, 1837, the son of William and Jeanette (Hamilton) Thomson. The father came from Ayrshire, Scotland in 1825, and settled in New York, and there he was married, his wife being a native of Delaware County. He became interested in dairying, owning a farm of 256 acres. Delaware County was at that time the banner county of New York for Jersey cows, milk and butter, and was the chief source of supply of New York City for dairy products. Here in this beautiful and healthful locality the parents reared a family of six sturdy children as is evidenced by the fact that there was never a doctor called into the house to attend a case of sickness until all were grown up and married.

Thomas H. grew up on the home place, attending the district schools and early taking a hand in the farm work, driving a team, plowing and harrowing when he was but thirteen years old, acquiring in this way that practical knowledge of agriculture which proved such a benefit to him in his later years. The Thomson home was only nine miles from the birthplace of Jay Gould and Mr. Thomson remembers him very well. Notwithstanding the eminence to which the great financier rose in after life, his boyhood days were spent in milking the cows and such homely chores, like the other boys of the neighborhood. When a young man, Jay Gould published the Historical Atlas of Delaware County, and Mr. Thomson well recalls when he was surveying and canvassing for this work. Until he was twenty-six years of age, Mr. Thomson remained on his father's farm, helping run their extensive dairy business. He then began farming for himself, investing the $3,000 which his father had given him in payment for his services, in a tract of 120 acres near Meredith, N. Y. He continued there in the dairy business until November 30, 1870, when he sold out, and went to Clarinda, Page County, Iowa, in 1871, farming there until 1874, when he returned to Delaware County, N. Y. Later he bought a farm of 170 acres near Walton, N. Y., and started in the dairy business again.

In the meantime Mr. Thomson had become interested in California through his brother-in-law, the late James McFadden, who for fifty years occupied a place of such prominence not alone in Orange County, but throughout Southern California, among his many activities being the promotion and building of the Santa Ana and Newport Railway. Mr. McFadden had come to Salinas in 1864 and in 1868 he came to Santa Ana and bought 3,900 acres in what was then called Gospel Swamp, paying $1.75 an acre for it. He returned to Delaware County, N. Y., and in 1874, came back to California with his family and entered upon his long career of useful service here. Naturally, Mr. Thomson heard much of the opportunities offered in the great Southwest through Mr. McFadden, so in 1888 he disposed of his dairy farm in New York and came to California, bringing his family with him. For a time they lived on Pine Street in Santa Ana, and then came up to Garden Grove, where in October, 1890, they purchased sixty acres of land, and later on bought five acres more. Here Mr. Thomson and Mr. Jackson, now Sheriff Jackson of Orange County, built the Thomson home on Ocean Avenue, one mile east of Garden Grove, and which has been the center of many happy social functions since. This was before the days of the electric road at Garden Grove and forty acres of Mr. Thomson's land had never been touched by the plow. He began at once to improve the place, at first raising barley and potatoes.

In 1897, with his son William, Mr. Thomson entered upon a ranching enterprise on the peat lands in the Huntington Beach neighborhood. Taking 200 acres of rough land covered with tules, willows and underbrush, they at once began grubbing and draining. Corn and sugar beets were raised and on the latter as high as twenty-seven tons to the acre were produced. The place was brought up to a high state of cultivation and in 1905 Mr. Thomson retired, his son, William S., maintaining the ranch.

Mr. Thomson's first marriage occurred January 4, 1864, when he was united with Miss Elizabeth Elliott, who was born at Middletown, Delaware County, N. Y., and who passed away at the birth of her first child. Later he was married to Miss Lucy A. Smith, the daughter of Richard and Maria (Saunders) Smith, both natives of England, where they spent their early days, and where Mrs. Smith recalled distinctly seeing Queen Victoria driving through the streets of London. Mr. and Mrs. Thomson have three living children: Luella is the wife of F. E. Farnsworth of Santa Ana, a wealthy and influential banker there, and a large landowner and walnut grower; they are the parents of two children, namely, Evelyn M. and Edward G. Mary I. resides at the home place; William S. continues to own and successfully operate the large ranch at Huntington Beach, in which his father was formerly interested. He married Miss Zella Irwin of Huntington Beach. Mr. Thomson was reared a Scotch covenantanter and he and his wife are now members of the United Presbyterian Church at Santa Ana. It is to citizens of the type of Mr. and Mrs. Thomson that Orange County is indebted to for the wonderful progress that has been made in the past years, and they occupy a high place in the esteem of a large circle of friends.

ANDREW RORDEN.—An interesting, instructive story is that of the life and work of Andrew Rorden, the rancher of 415 East Chapman Avenue, Fullerton, who came to America in the early seventies to add to that valuable class of intelligent and industrious citizens contributed for half a century or more to the United States by Europe. He was born on the Island of Fohr, one of the largest of the Fresian Islands, in the North Sea, in the former duchy of Schleswig-Holstein, now a part of Germany, and duly confirmed in the Lutheran Church. In 1872 he joined his brother, Christ Rorden, who had settled in Los Angeles County four years before, and for three years was employed by William McFadden. At the end of that period, he started at Anaheim to learn the wagonmaker's trade; but the confinement did not agree with his health, and having given it up, he took up any kind of work he could find until the dry year of 1879. The hard times incidental to this reverse led him to make a trip back to Germany; and after a year there with his friends, he once more found himself in California.

At first, he went to Arizona for three years and worked in the quartz mills, where he earned enough money to make an initial payment on the ranch of thirty acres he now owns on East Chapman Avenue, at Fullerton, then in the Anaheim district. He set out a vineyard, but the blight killed it; and then, in 1886, he began to set out walnuts—an experiment at that time here. Now he has fourteen acres, and they make as handsome a walnut orchard as one would wish to find. He also set out, in 1891, the first oranges—luckily, Valencias, and now he has eight and one-half acres. While his trees were maturing, he raised peanuts, cabbage and potatoes, in order to cover expenses; and by 1892, he was enabled to erect a good home. He endured many hardships in these trying-out years, before he was even on the road to that success which he now enjoys and which he so richly deserves; for farming was an experiment in those early days, particularly until the problem of transportation had been solved and markets were established. Now, one of the charter members of the Fullerton-Placentia Walnut Growers Association, and a member of the Placentia Orange Growers Association, and also a shareholder in the Anaheim Union Water Company, he has the esteem of all who know him as an honest man, and the good will of all who have followed his patriotic course during the trying days of the World War. He came to California to establish here a permanent home, and he has been loyal to the country, state and county, and has heartily supported all those measures which have meant the greatest good to the greatest number in the community.

Mr. Rorden has been twice married. His first wife was Rebecca Knudtsen—a good companion, who died at Los Angeles in 1912. For his second wife, he married Mrs. Marie (Togel) Klement of Anaheim, the widow of a butcher of that place, and the mother of one daughter, Miss Pauline Klement, who makes her home with Mr. and Mrs. Rorden. In 1894, Mr. Rorden returned home to Europe for the second time, and in 1907, while Mrs. Rorden was still living, he made a third trip, taking her. His fourth and last visit to Germany was in 1913.

FRED A. MAURER.—After an eventful life, in which he traveled thousands of miles over the entire West, with many adventurous experiences, which he recalls and narrates in an interesting way, Fred A. Maurer is now living retired at his comfortable home in Anaheim. A native of Lorraine. Mr. Maurer was born there March 12, 1849, when that beautiful little country was still a part of France, and her peaceful inhabitants undisturbed by the hand of the conqueror. He was the son of Jacob and Mary (Seigel) Maurer, his father being the owner of a vineyard in that country.

While still a babe he was brought to America by his parents, the trip being made on a sailing vessel and eighty days were spent in crossing the Atlantic. The family settled in Cleveland, Ohio, where Jacob Maurer engaged in business, and here Fred A. grew up, attending the schools of that thriving city and learned the trade of cooper. The spirit of adventure was strong within him, however, and in 1878 he made up his mind to see something of this great country. Starting west, he went first to Green River, Wyo., and then to the Ontario silver mines in that state, remaining six months.

Going to Salt Lake City, Mr. Maurer, with two companions, equipped themselves for a trip across the desert, and traveled the whole length of Utah to Washington, in the southwestern part of the state. Going down into Arizona they crossed the Colorado River at Lees Ferry, making their way from there to Bingham City, a distance of 100 miles. Their supplies gave out on this trip and they had only two flapjacks apiece on the whole journey so they were almost famished when they reached Bingham City. There they obtained a sack of flour for twenty dollars which they divided with another party and going over Simpson Pass continued on to Prescott, where they remained to prospect for gold for some months. From there they went on to Globe, Ariz., working in the Stonewall Jackson silver mine and later Mr. Maurer went on to the Silver King mine, spending five years there. In these days Mr. Maurer spent much time among the Indians and he can recall many interesting reminiscences of the different tribes, among whom he always fared well, as he understood their ways and knew how to treat them.

Coming to Anaheim in 1884, when this country was covered with vineyards, Mr. Maurer remained here for some months, and during his stay helped to make tanks and barrels for the Boege Winery. The lure of gold, however, drew him to the north part of the state and here he prospected for about a year, returning to Anaheim, where he has since made his home. Soon after coming back to this part of the country Mr. Maurer began shipping lemons from here, being the first shipper from the county out of the state and into Arizona; he purchased fruit from the groves around Orange, Placentia and Anaheim, packing them in a cooper shop near the Southern Pacific depot.

In October, 1893, Mr. Maurer was married to Mrs. Mary (Gade) Wilkins, a native of Milwaukee, who came here in 1880 with her brother, Harry Gade, who ran an express business in Anaheim. Mrs. Maurer was the owner of a tract of six and a half acres in Anaheim, its boundaries being Broadway, West, Center and Walnut streets, and for some years they made their home there, selling it in 1909 and building a residence in Resh Street; this they also disposed of after living there a year, purchasing a home on North Citron Avenue. On August 15, 1920, Mrs. Maurer died, aged sixty-three years. In 1894 Mr. Maurer purchased ten acres of land, renting it out until 1910, when he disposed of it. Mr. Maurer was also the owner of a forty-acre ranch thirty miles from Bakersfield on the Santa Fe Railroad, on which he raised hay, buying this in 1910 and selling it two years later.

Coming here in the early days, Mr. Maurer has not only viewed the wonderful transformation that has taken place in this vicinity but has contributed his share in this great work of development. Kindly disposed and generous in his attitude toward his fellow beings, he has a large circle of warm friends. In politics he has always been a believer in the principles of the Democratic party and marches under their banner when he casts his vote.

ELI S. HARRIS.—During the long period of his residence in California, dating from 1857, when, a child of two years old, he accompanied his parents to the Pacific Coast, Eli S. Harris has been an eyewitness of the wonderful changes that time has wrought since early pioneer days. He was born near Denton, Texas, on February 20, 1855, and is the son of Andrew S. and Lou Ann (Major) Harris.

Andrew S. was born in North Carolina in 1816, and attained the age of seventy-seven, dying in 1893. His wife, who was born in 1829, died in 1918, and was buried on her eighty-ninth birthday. Mr. Harris removed from his native state to Missouri, and was with the militia who were called out in 1836 to meet the encroachments of the Mormons, who in those days became very bold. He finally moved to Texas, in 1847, where he had a novel experience with the Indians, who were intent on stealing all the horses they could lay hands on, so that he was obliged to chain his horses to his log house to preserve them from the thieving Indians. Of his family of thirteen children, three of whom accompanied him to the Pacific Coast in the seven-months' journey overland by ox-team in 1857, five are living, and are residents of Orange County. The family stopped in San Bernardino County one year, then moved to El Monte and bought grant land, but lost it. In 1867 he moved with horse-teams back to Texas, where he had land, traded off his land and came back to California, sold his horses and in 1869 purchased forty acres of unimproved land in Los Angeles County, after arriving in his new home, and took up the vocation of farming.

Eli S. Harris moved to Orange County in 1873, where he remained six years, locating south on the Bolsa, and was one of the first men to build in Garden Grove in 1876. Milton Teal has the honor of being the first man to build in that place. Mr. Harris owned a ranch of forty acres and followed general farming. Like most pioneers, he bought and sold several parcels of land before finally settling down. He was absent from Orange County from 1881 until 1914, with the exception of two years, and in the meantime followed ranching. He resided in San Diego County twelve years, and for seven years was "in the saddle" as a stockman, a business he enjoyed and made profitable.

His marriage, in Azusa, occurred in 1894, and united him with Miss Susan Danks, a native of Kentucky, who had been a resident of California since 1869, having crossed the plains with ox-teams. Her father, a major in the Mexican War, and Mr. Harris' father were Texas pioneers together. Eight children were born of their union, six of whom are living, viz.: Albert Andrew, of Orange; William W. makes his home with his parents; Simeon W., of Santa Ana; Charles D., of Santa Ana; George F. is in Orange; Dora B., wife of Leroy Brittingham of Los Angeles.

George F. and William W. were in the U. S. service in the late World War; George F., who saw active service in France, was wounded at the Battle of Argonne. He was promoted to the rank of corporal, and belonged to the Three Hundred Sixty-fourth Infantry, Ninety-first Division. His brother, William W., who was in the heavy artillery, did not see active service, getting no farther than San Diego.

Eli S. Harris's five-acre ranch on the Garden Grove Road, which he purchased in 1916, is devoted to the culture of Valencia oranges. Mr. Harris is a worthy citizen of industrious habits, and enjoys the esteem of his fellow-citizens. In politics he affiliates with the Democratic party in national affairs, but in local matters supports the best men and measures.

JONATHAN WATSON.—One of the few remaining '49ers in California is Jonathan Watson, and his life stands out as one of the hardy pioneers who, with his great strength, courage and determination, was utterly fearless in facing the many hardships that they encountered in those early days. His memory of his pioneer experiences is splendid, and it is most interesting to hear him recount the story of his boyhood escapades and his hunting experiences up on the San Joaquin, when they made corrals from elkhorns picked up on the plains. He has seen herds of elk numbering 500 in a bunch, 20,000 antelope, and in the Santa Cruz Mountains of San Benito County as many as 300 bears in one of the mountain valleys. At one time since living in Santa Ana Canyon, he hunted game for the market, and has killed as many as twenty-five deer in a day in Santiago Canyon.

Jonathan Watson was born near Independence, Jackson County, Mo., on July 24, 1844, the son of Henry Watson, a native of Virginia, where he was born in the historic year of 1812. He married Matilda Cox, also a native of the Old Dominion, the ceremony taking place in Virginia, and the young couple a few years later settled in Missouri. They began to rear their family on a farm in Jackson County, and he followed freighting to Santa Fe with ox teams, over the old Santa Fe Trail. The story of the discovery of gold in California made him restless, however, and he joined the thousands hurrying westward, in the hope of bettering his condition and that of those dependent upon him. Owing to his having been an experienced frontiersman, with considerable knowledge of the language and characteristics of the Indians, many neighbors and friends applied to join his company, and so Henry Watson's train came to have 500 wagons and over 1,000 men, and turned away many others who applied. As captain of the train he scouted ahead, picked the camping places and killed the game—buffalo and antelope—for their food. The Indians massacred the train before them but, thanks to Henry Watson's vigilance and diplomacy, they came through all right.

Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Henry Watson in Virginia: Mrs. Jane Barham, who passed away some years ago, and Mrs. Sarah Ann Bush, who died at the old Bush home above Olive, March 26, 1920. Two children were born to them in Missouri: Jonathan Watson, of this review, and David, who died at Olive a few years ago. Two children were also born to them after they came to California. Jacob, a native of Santa Clara, is a rancher in San Diego County, near the old San Luis Rey Mission. Charles, who was born in Monterey, or what is now San Benito County, is an engineer and is employed at the city water works at Orange.

Henry Watson came to California to make his home, and so brought with him eight ox wagons loaded with merchandise. One wagon was full of clothing, and another loaded with bacon and other provisions, and all of his six and eight-yoke wagons contained something substantial, such as hardware, tools and the like. He left Jackson County, Mo., in 1849, and after a journey of three months, pulled up at Sacramento. He went to Bear Creek, and soon after to Dry Creek, built a hotel and engaged in freighting to Nevada and the adjoining mining towns. He received $100 a day for a team, wagon and driver, and for three yoke of oxen, a wagon and driver he received $300 a day, but flour was then a dollar a pound, mining boots fifty dollars a pair, and other essentials proportionately high.

As a mere boy, Jonathan Watson drove teams; in fact, he drove the first load of freight that ever came into Nevada City, Cal. He passed through Hangtown, and there saw three desperadoes dangling by the neck, the work of Vigilantes. His education was very limited, for from a boy he assisted his father in the sheep business. Henry Watson and his family first lived in the Santa Clara Valley, moving from there to Monterey County; later he owned stock ranches in Fresno and Tulare counties, near Visalia. Then he operated in the Kings River country, in what is now Kings County. He worked hard and prospered, became a large landowner and held title to land for twenty-five miles up and down the San Joaquin River. This land he afterward sold to Miller & Lux. Henry Watson died at Olive at the age of eighty-seven, the mother having passed away when she was sixty years old.

Jonathan Watson started in business for himself as a stockman and sheepman when he was eighteen years old, on the San Joaquin River, and his flocks increased so that he soon had a drove of 15,000 sheep. He brought them down to the neighborhood of Olive in 1868, coming there with his father; then he went back to the San Joaquin Valley and disposed of his interests there. With J. M. Bush as a partner, in 1869 he bought 12,000 acres of land stretching from the Santa Ana River at Olive south and east to Tustin; and for twenty-five years he was in the sheep business, during which time, for twenty years he never slept in a house. When Messrs. Watson and Bush bought this land they also purchased the priority water right and used it for raising alfalfa. When irrigation was started in the valley below, he and his father looked the water right over and decided that it was not right for them to keep it all, but that others should have the use of it, too, so they not only gave up their right to the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, but helped build the canal, and later on Mr. Watson served for a number of years as a director of this company. From time to time Mr. Watson sold off parcels from his holding, retaining 105 acres under the canal, which he set out years ago to walnuts, lemons and Valencia oranges, now full bearing and yielding a handsome income.

A giant in strength, Mr. Watson is still a powerful man; he enjoyed the reputation of being a better shot than even Buffalo Bill, and has killed more grizzlies than any other man in California. When he lined up with Colonel Cody and worsted him, he used a Hawkins rifle; the contest with Buffalo Bill was on the banks of the San Joaquin River, and on account of his marksmanship he was offered $500 a week by an Englishman to go buffalo hunting with him on the great plains, but he turned the offer down. He also excelled in running and jumping and his prowess in athletics was wonderful. His training had not been in the gymnasium as nowadays, but in the great outdoors, by exercise on the plains and in the fields. In those early days he won many contests at both running and jumping; thus it was that when he was a boy of seventeen at Watsonville the manager of Lee's Circus offered him $500 a week to travel with the circus as an athlete, but he also turned that offer down, for he would not leave his mother. One shooting contest he had with John Mason, a quarter-breed Cherokee Indian who thought himself invincible, came near proving a tragedy. Mr. Watson easily proved his superiority as a marksman, when Mason drew a shotgun on him, but with lightning quickness Mr. Watson threw the barrel of the gun up with his revolver and the charge went through his hat; then he covered the would-be murderer, who cringingly wilted and dropped his gun. The remembrance of his mother and her teachings came before him and kept him from shooting, and he was ever afterwards glad, because he did not want the blood of any man on his conscience, even though it was in self-defense.

Mr. Watson was married the first time in Watsonville, when he made Miss Eliza Hildreth his wife. They had several children, but only one lived to maturity—Mrs. Winifred Stoner, who resides near Hemet in Riverside County. Mr. Watson's second marriage, which occurred at Santa Ana, April 16, 1891, united him with Miss Lenna May Barger, the daughter of Josiah and Mary F. (Robinson) Barger, born in Virginia and Ohio, respectively. They came from Nebraska to California September 17, 1884, settling first at Olive, but later were orange growers at McPherson until they moved to Hemet, where the mother died September 25, 1919, while Mr. Barger is still engaged in horticulture. Lenna was the eldest of their six living children and was born near Meade, Nebr. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Watson by this marriage:

Floyd, of the firm of Thompson & Watson, auto electricians of Orange, resides there with his wife, who was Effie E. Whitcomb, they have a daughter, Georgia E.; Errol Trafford is a rancher who married Beatrice Durkee, they have two children, June L. and Maxine, and live on a part of his father's ranch; Florence M. is the wife of Herbert J. Beckler, a merchant at Deshler, Thayer County, Nebr., and they have one child Virginia; Harold A. is also a rancher, living on a part of his father's ranch, he married Bernice Wilbur, a stepdaughter of Dr. Royer of Orange.

Mr. and Mrs. Watson are members of the Christian Church at Santa Ana, and for many years Mr. Watson has been a school trustee in the Olive district. A Democrat in politics, he has always been active in civic affairs and took a prominent part in the formation of Orange County. Kindly, pleasant, straightforward and honest, he is still hale, hearty and athletic at the age of seventy-six, and can look back on a life well spent and filled to the full with interesting experiences. Taking it all in all he is one of Orange County's genuine upbuilders, a true type of the hardy pioneer who has made possible the wonderful development of today.

WILLIS G. MITCHELL.—The efficient manager of the Irvine Company's ranch at Tustin, Orange County, Cal., is Willis G. Mitchell, a native of London, Canada, where he was born on November 20, 1867. He is the son of Ralph M. and Johanna (Allen) Mitchell, also natives of that country. Ralph M. Mitchell was a successful farmer near London until the family moved to California in 1889, locating in Orange County, where he engaged in ranching near Tustin, becoming owner of the farm, where he and his good wife spent their last days. Of their three children Willis G. is the youngest of the family, growing up on the Eastern farm, receiving a good education in the excellent schools of that region. As was the custom in that country he made himself generally useful, thus learning the rudiments of farming from the time he was a boy.

Since 1889 Mr. Mitchell has been a continuous resident of Orange County, Cal., coming direct to this country from his Canadian home when a young man of twenty-one. In due time he became a citizen of his adopted country and for the past thirty-one years has been connected with the citrus industry. He is also well versed in general agriculture. Since 1890 he has been associated with the Irvine Company, and for a number of years was assistant manager of the Irvine ranch. Since 1915 he has occupied the important position of manager of the ranch and his knowledge of general ranching in California makes him a valuable man for the position. The ranch embraces about 100,000 acres of land, upon which all varieties of grains, vegetables and fruits raised in Southern California are grown. This vast acreage has been apportioned into smaller ranches comprising several hundred acres in area, which are leased to about 130 tenants. The Irvine Company operates a part of the ranch, thus giving employment to a large number of men. Mr. Mitchell has the entire oversight of these vast holdings with its many cares and responsibilities, including looking after the leases.

Being very optimistic over the future greatness of Orange County land, and particularly of orange and walnut groves, Mr. Mitchell many years ago purchased lands which he developed and set out to oranges and walnuts and he has seen to it that they have had such excellent care that they are among the most attractive properties of their kind in the district.

Mr. Mitchell established domestic ties by his marriage in Los Angeles in 1893 with Miss Sarah Emily Green, born in Middleton, Wis., a daughter of John W. Green of that state. Of their happy union three children have been born: Ralph, Willis and Florence by name. Mr. Mitchell is a director in the First National Bank of Santa Ana, Cal., and has the confidence not only of his employers and employees, but of the citizens of the county, among whom he is well and favorably known and highly esteemed. In his fraternal associations he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

J. D. PRICE.—Influential in many departments of local activity on account of his enviable status as the largest individual realty owner in Garden Grove, J. D. Price, the well-known pioneer, has been able to contribute much toward the rapid and sure development of Orange County interests, and has thus been privileged, while making progress for himself, to give his neighbors and fellow-citizens, his friends and his competitors, a helpful lift along the way. He was born in the parish of Jefferson, adjoining that of New Orleans, on March 1, 1845, the son of David Price, a machinist who came from England, settled in Missouri, and there married Miss Eliza Williams, a native of that state. He made a specialty of installing sugar machinery, and equipped many Louisiana sugar cane mills. When only thirty years of age he died in Louisiana, leaving three children, all boys; among whom our subject was the second in the order of birth, and is the only one now living. Three years later, the devoted widowed mother also died, and so it came about that the lad was left an orphan at the age of nine.

E. G. Mitchell

One of the sons was sent to relatives in Indiana, and two were taken by nearby kin in Louisiana; with the result that when the Civil War broke out, the latter enlisted from Louisiana as Confederate soldiers, while the former, the youngest of the trio, joined the Twenty-fifth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and fought as a Union soldier.

J. D. Price's education was very limited, and he was obliged to abandon his school books after the age of fifteen. In 1862 he entered Company I of the Eleventh Louisiana Infantry, and stayed in the service until the end of the war. He was in Bragg's Army in Tennessee, and fought at Shiloh, Farmington and Perryville; and upon his being honorably discharged, he reenlisted as a member of Company A, Ogden's Battalion, Louisiana Cavalry. He was wounded and captured at Perryville, and exchanged at Vicksburg, and was taken prisoner for a second time near Morganza, La., and exchanged at Richmond, a month prior to Lee's surrender. At the conclusion of the great struggle, he was paroled at Baton Rouge, La., on May 18, 1865, and returned home.

After the war, he went to farming at East Baton Rouge, where he remained until 1866; and then he removed to Arkansas, where he continued farming. In 1868, he crossed the plains from Arkansas, in a train of mule and ox wagons, coming by way of El Paso and Tucson; and he farmed at Prescott, Ariz., from 1868 to 1874, when he came on in wagons to California. He crossed the Colorado River at Ahrenburg, and arrived at Los Angeles in June, 1874. This was not his first visit to the Golden State, for he had already made several freighting and trading trips to California while residing in Arizona.

Mr. Price was married at Azusa in May, 1871, to Miss Nannie Dougherty, a native of Virginia and the daughter of Charles and Rosamond (Hale) Dougherty. She was only three years old when her parents came from Virginia to Texas, and in the Lone Star State she grew up, until she came to California with her parents in 1868. She thus crossed the great plains about the same period as had Mr. Price, although it was her first trip over the continent. The Comanches and Apaches were hostile, and the immigrants formed large trains for their protection. After their marriage, Mrs. Price accompanied her husband back to Prescott, and there he settled up his business preparatory to coming here in 1874. In that year he took up his residence upon an eighty-acre farm one mile east of what is now the town of Garden Grove, and there erected the first house in this district, also bored the second artesian well.

Mr. Price owned several ranches which he farmed up to about 1910, and he made his first investment in Garden Grove real estate in 1907. Since then his action in buying and erecting business structures and residences speaks louder than words of a supreme faith in Garden Grove. He owns a farm of forty acres devoted to peppers and potatoes two miles south of the town, which he rents out; he built the postoffice building, and the two-story brick building east of it, and he owns the hotel building; and he also owns the garage building east of the two-story brick. He has completed two six-room bungalows on Walnut Street, and he intends to continue his investments and ventures as fast as the growth of the town will justify.

Seven children blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Price. Stella, now Mrs. R. B. Vaile, is a graduate of the University of California and a teacher at Katella, she has a son, R. B., Jr.; Sterling is an extensive rancher in Bolsa precinct, he married Florence Heiland and they have five children—Maurice D., Thelma, Gerald, Wilma and the baby; Charles, formerly county veterinary officer, is a veterinary surgeon at Santa Ana; he married Eva Bridgeford, and they have two sons, Kenneth and Ray; Gertrude resides at San Diego with her husband, R. S. Reed, secretary of an abstract company; Lida is the wife of A. D. Kinne, assistant manager of R. G. Dun and Company, Los Angeles; Rae became the wife of Dr. I. F. Baldwin of Los Angeles; she died on October 9, 1918, leaving two children, Irving and Eleanor; Dr. Baldwin died in 1919; Mattie Lou died at the age of four years.

The Golden Rule has been the chief guide for both Mr. and Mrs. Price in their dealings with others. He is a Democrat in national political matters, and yet always for the best men and the best measures, and served for about eighteen years as a school trustee. With his good wife, he answered every call of the Red Cross during the late war, and associated himself with various war activities. He has served on both grand and petit juries. Fraternally, he is a Mason. Mrs. Price, as a lady of exceptional culture, enjoys the esteem of a very wide circle of friends.

Not long ago Mrs. Price contributed a very interesting story to the Garden Grove News, giving her "Reminiscences of Pioneer Days," in which she says:

"We settled in El Monte, where my father bought a lease and the improvements on ten acres of land, for which he paid $50 and a mule, and gave one-tenth of the crop each year to the owner, Mr. Temple, who owned several thousand acres of an old Spanish grant. About that time, Temple and his father-in-law, Mr. Workman, built the Temple Bank in Los Angeles. It was the second bank there at that time. The building still stands, and is known today as the Temple Block. Through Temple's generosity and his confidence in the people, he lost everything he and Mr. Workman had. Mr. Workman committed suicide, and Temple died in a miserable sheep camp, deserted by his family, and all alone. All this Spanish grant was taken over by their creditors, and sold off for homes.

"I can never forget the first time that I saw Los Angeles. It was nothing but a straggling Spanish pueblo. Saloons were far more in evidence than any other business; every little grocery store sold wines and liquors. There was not a street car nor steam railway in the place. In the year 1868 a railroad was built from Los Angeles to Wilmington, which created great excitement. The first train that went over it afforded a free excursion, and what a jubilee everybody had.

"In 1874, we came to Orange, which was called Richland at that time. We only stopped there long enough to look about us and select a location, and finally purchased eighty acres one mile east of where we now live. Orange consisted of one mixed store, a blacksmith shop, one small schoolhouse, and a few straggling houses. Santa Ana had one general merchandise store, which was Spurgeon's, one blacksmith shop and one saloon. A little later, we had the privilege of helping to build the first church, which was the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

"Mr. Price hauled the lumber for our house from Anaheim Landing, which was the shipping point for all this country. There was only one settler between here and Anaheim, it being all sheep pasture. In a short time we could see little shacks going up here and there, until a school was talked about. The Bolsa school district took in all the territory from Huntington Beach to two miles north of here, except Westminster Colony, they having formed a school district of their own. Finally, we formed our district, and Mr. A. G. Cook named it Garden Grove. Some objected, thought it was not appropriate, as there was nothing that could be called a tree in the whole district, but Mr. Cook said: 'We'll make it appropriate by planting trees and making it beautiful.' In this interesting manner Mrs. Price tells of the early sales of land, the first orange groves here, and the gradual discovery of the rich soil and its capabilities.

MRS. JULIETTE SMITH.—A distinguished resident of Santa Ana, who, despite advanced years, was privileged to take an active part in relief work during the late war, is Mrs. Juliette Smith of 122 East Eleventh Street. She was born in Little York, Warren County, Ill., the daughter of W. C. Maley, one of the delegates to the National Republican Convention which nominated Abraham Lincoln for the presidency, and an enthusiast who stumped the state for and with him, and as a souvenir of that exciting campaign, handed down to her from her father, she treasures a piece of rail split by Lincoln at Decatur, Ill. She was educated at the academy in Little York and received there the best advantages of the period. Her father had come to Illinois in 1830, at the age of twenty-one, riding horseback from Harrisville, W. Va. Her uncle on the paternal side was Maj.-Gen. T. M. Harris, for whose family Harrisville, W. Va., is named, and he was a physician before he served in the Civil War. Her grandfather, Wm. Maley, did not believe in slavery, and came to Illinois with his family in 1831. Juliette Maley's mother was Margaret Giles, a native of Abbyville District, South Carolina, who came to Illinois with her parents, who were also opposed to slavery. Her father, uncle, and her father's brother-in-law, in 1869 removed to Cedar County, Iowa, and purchased 1,200 acres along the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad and started the town of Stanwood, Iowa, which was named after the vice-president of the Northwestern Road. It was prairie land, but it soon came to have a more inviting appearance, thanks especially to the enterprise of the projectors.

A year later, on April 7, 1870, Miss Maley was married to John Neal Smith, the ceremony taking place at Stanwood. He was a native of Illinois, where he was born on January 5, 1835, the son of Hugh Smith, who came from Ireland, and who married Esther Selfrage, a native of New York of Scotch descent. He moved to Mount Vernon, Iowa, and there in Linn County in 1854 took up Government land. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. John Neal Smith lived on the old homestead for eighteen months, when they sold the property and went back to Stanwood.

For the next year and a half Mr. Smith ran an agricultural implement store there, and when he disposed of that, he purchased a farm near Stanwood, embracing 110 acres, which were devoted to general farming, although he specialized in stock, buying and selling cattle. He also had a general store at Stanwood and handled general merchandise, grain and provisions. In August, 1881, he sold out and came west to Santa Ana, Cal. Here for five years he was engaged in the meat business with James McFadden, and then he sold that pioneer his interest. For a year he engaged in the grocery trade, but sold that also. When the "boom" came he went into the real estate business with Judge Humphrey and George Minter, but the "boom" burst. At the end of eleven years of residence here he went back to Iowa, having sold all that he owned in Santa Ana, and he farmed in Lyons County for nine months. The lure of California, however, brought him back here again in 1892, and he settled on a ranch of twenty-one acres on Fruit east of Grand Avenue, and there he devoted his time and energies to the culture of walnuts and oranges until September, 1913, when he died, mourned by all who knew him. Mrs. Smith now resides at 122 East Eleventh Street, Santa Ana, but still owns the ranch, which now comprises twenty-nine acres devoted to oranges and walnuts.

Seven children, five boys and two girls, make up the family of this estimable lady: William M., Margaret E., Martha A., Hugh G., J. Herbert, Archie H. and James Merle. Mrs. Smith, therefore, is happy, being surrounded by her children, who assist her in looking after her properties, thus relieving her of all unnecessary worry and care.

Mrs. Smith is a liberal and helpful woman, and gives her aid to all enterprises that have for their aim the development of the county in which she has so much faith. She loyally shared in the burdensome program of the ever-diligent war drives, particularly in the Red Cross. Mrs. Smith belongs to the United Presbyterian Church and is a member of the Woman's Relief Corps and the Women's Christian Temperance Union.

SAMSON EDWARDS.—Among the pioneers of Orange County none were better known or more active in its upbuilding than Samson Edwards, who for nearly fifty years was identified with its development. He was a native of Berg Parish, Cornwall County, England, where he was born on February 26, 1830, into the family of William and Elizabeth (Pierce) Edwards. As a boy aged six he began working in local mines, but in 1846, when so many of Europe sought an asylum in the New World, he migrated with his parents to the United States, but the parents died soon after reaching this country and they were buried in Pennsylvania. There were left a son, John Samson, and his wife, and some smaller children to battle the world for existence in the new country. They all endured many privations and lived in cramped quarters until a start could be made and the younger children reared to such ages as they could be self-supporting. They had migrated to Pittsburgh, Pa., where Samson worked for sixty-two and a half cents per day in a steam brick mill and later, after locating in Wisconsin he worked for a dollar and a quarter a day at some of the hardest work of his life in the lead mines.

He met and married, at Hazel Green, Grant County, on November 1, 1851, a native of England, who was destined to share with him the joys and sorrows of a long and strenuous life, and also to go with him, almost at the same moment, through the shadowy portal of death. She was Miss Diana Rogers, a daughter of John and Jane (Curtis) Rogers and she was born in England on March 9, 1833.

Thus having set up his domestic establishment, Mr. Edwards took up farming across the state line in Jo Daviess County, Ill., and after four years moved somewhat east, where he bought and developed a good farm until 1874. Then, having read much about California and its advantages to men of thrift and energy, he sold out his holdings and crossed the continent with his family to San Francisco, thence by boat to Wilmington, where they were met by a nephew, W. H. Edwards, and located at Westminster. There were five children in the Samson Edwards family when they came to California: John H., now living in Santa Ana; William J., of Westminster; Mary Isabella, the wife of F. J. Rogers of Santa Ana; Hester Ann, who married C. E. Bowlsby and is deceased; and Nelson T., of Orange. Mr. Edwards formed a partnership with two brothers, John and Thomas Edwards, but at the end of two years they divided their interests equally. In the meantime they had started dairying with good cattle, but they had to haul their products to Los Angeles by team. They paid $18.50 an acre for their land, but to erect the necessary fences and buildings they had to order 250,000 feet of lumber shipped from the North. They raised some of the first corn ever planted in the peat lands, which yielded over 100 bushels to the acre.

His experience in those days afforded Samson Edwards the theme for many a good story. Often he had to drag cattle out of the bog holes with his team and he rode horseback over all that section of country before there were any roads and these he helped to build. He became owner of 160 acres of land, which he developed into a valuable farm with the aid of his sons John H. and William J. He leased the Smeltzer pasturage for some years, and for several years was engaged in the meat business, running the wagons all over what is now Orange County, and through some parts of Los Angeles County, for the country abounded with wild Spanish cattle, hogs and horses. Robert McFadden sold him his first seventy head of wild cattle; he caught and broke wild horses, paying from $22 to $40 a head. All teaming was done with mustangs, as a horse weighing 1,100 pounds was a curiosity. The boys lassoed wild hogs which were then very plentiful in the tules. On account of the dearth of trees thereabouts, Mr. Edwards sent to San Francisco for eucalyptus seed, planted them in beds and then transplanted them to their more permanent places. President of the Westminster Farmers' Club, Mr. Edwards, assisted by his good wife, gave liberally of his time and means for years to advance in every way the best interests of the ranchers. He was a member of the Methodist Church for thirty years, and was instrumental in the building and support of the First Methodist Church in Westminster.

Some years ago, a previous edition of the History of Orange County, in very appropriately noting the life-work of these esteemed, influential pioneers, said among other things: "Mr. Edwards and his wife endured the hardships of pioneer life and, assisted by their children, made rapid strides toward success. They helped their children to get a start in the world, thus repaying them for the assistance they gave him in the early struggle in the county. He and his wife have been residents of Santa Ana for the past ten years, and it was here, November 1, 1901, that they celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary and were greeted by hundreds of friends from all parts of the county. They are enjoying the fruits of their early labors, and can look back into the past upon lives well spent and to the future for the final call without fear." In the light of the foregoing, it is sad indeed to relate that on March 26, 1912, both Mr. and Mrs. Edwards were killed at Santa Ana when their automobile in crossing the tracks was struck by a Pacific Electric car.

D. EYMAN HUFF.—One of the best informed men in all Southern California regarding the marketing and the growing of citrus fruits is D. Eyman Huff, of Orange County, manager of the David Hewes Realty Corporation, which controls 675 acres of land at El Modena. With twenty-two years of constructive service in behalf of the citrus industry of the state, Mr. Huff looks back upon the development of an industry that has taken years to perfect, and a part in which he has had a strong influence in bringing about.

D. Eyman Huff was born at Osawatomie, Kans., September 17, 1880, the son of Samuel and Olive (Smith) Huff, natives of Indiana and Illinois, respectively. Besides D. Eyman there were five children who came to California when the family left their Kansas home in 1887 and emigrated to the Golden State: Lewis N., William F. and E. Gertrude all live in Long Beach; Ralph E. still makes his home with his parents in Orange County; Ivy is deceased. The family first settled near Fallbrook, but in September of 1890 they located in Orange County, where the parents still live.

In 1890 D. Eyman Huff first located in this county, but divided his time between Los Angeles and here until 1910, since which time he has been a permanent resident of this favored section. He was educated in the public schools of Orange County, then went to Los Angeles to take a course in the Normal School there, but soon entered the store kept by his brother, as a clerk, in the meantime carrying a morning paper route in the business district, which took him into the offices of the Southern California Fruit Exchange, where Joseph L. Merrill was chief accountant. Mr. Merrill had picked some likely young lads from amongst the newsboys when a vacancy was to be filled, and his notice was drawn to young Huff, to whom he offered a position as office boy with a salary of fifteen dollars per month, and he began his duties on December 13, 1898. Two months later he got his first promotion and a salary of twenty-five dollars per month, and from this beginning he gradually worked his way through the various positions in the office until he was assistant sales manager and the most capable man to hold that position. Then the Covina Fruit Exchange wanted a manager, and he was recommended for the place and served for two years, the second year there, representing that exchange on the board of directors of the Central Exchange. During these eleven years he had gained an intimate knowledge of all branches of the citrus industry, and was conceded to be one of the best-posted men in Southern California.

In 1909 he became manager of the Orange County Fruit Exchange with only two members, the Santiago Association and the David Hewes Ranch Company. It was shown that only about thirty per cent of the product grown was marketed through the Exchange, and the new manager at once started to awaken an interest among the growers, so that by 1915 he had organized, or helped to organize, seven additional associations through which practically seventy-five per cent of the crop was marketed. These included Tustin Hills, Tustin Lemon Association, Villa Park Orchards, Central Lemon, Olive Heights Citrus, McPherson Heights Citrus and Garden Grove Citrus associations. In July, 1915, David Hewes passed away, a few months after he had organized the David Hewes Realty Corporation, and the property passed to the heirs. The directors of the company cast about for the right man to manage the business, and selected Mr. Huff, knowing he could manage, direct and develop, and he assumed his duties and at once began to put in operation his advanced ideas, and has continued to serve the company with satisfaction to all concerned ever since, all the time making the ranch more productive and bringing about a steady and strong market, as well as a demand for a highly standardized grade and pack.

Mr. Huff is also a grower himself, owning one or more groves, and bringing them to a higher state of productivity before selling them. He has always been a hard worker, has a keen, analytical mind, ever alert in the interest of the cause he espouses, a winning personality and the ability to convince others, all of which have been a great help to his achievement. He sees a great future for the citrus growers and knows many problems will arise with the development of new groves that will call for the cooperation of all the growers to solve. He is always willing to give advice as to latest methods of care for groves, best bud selection, and picking and packing of the fruit. Mr. Huff was manager of the Orange County Fruit Exchange, during which time he was its member on the central board of directors; since 1915 he has been a director of the Orange County Exchange; is a director and one of the incorporators of the Exchange Byproducts Company, operating the Corona Lemon Products plant; was president of the Orange County Associated Chambers of Commerce, and believes in forwarding all projects for the upbuilding of Southern California, and plans greater projects for the development of the great Hewes ranch.

The marriage of D. Eyman Huff with Miss Blanche L. Waite was celebrated on April 20, 1901, and united him with a popular lady who grew up in California from a small child. Her parents, Earl and Inez (Robb) Waite, were natives of New York and Ohio, respectively, who came to California about 1884 with their family of four children. The parents are now residents of Long Beach. Mrs. Huff was educated in the schools of Los Angeles and has lived in this vicinity for many years. They have a son, Chauncey Earl Huff, born 1902, and graduated from the Orange high school. He is an amateur wireless operator, and is now taking a course at the Southwestern University in Los Angeles in commercial and business law. Mrs. Huff has ever been an inspiration to her accomplished husband, and shares with him the esteem of a host of friends in Southern California. Mr. Huff is a thirty-second degree Mason and a Shriner, and in politics is a staunch Republican in national affairs, although he does not draw the party line when it comes to local issues, supporting the men and measures he considers best suited for the office and people.

CALVIN E. JACKSON.—Law and order could not fail to be among the first appeals in favor of residence in Orange County, so long as that office is filled by such a man as Calvin E. Jackson, who is one of the most popular of California sheriffs, as he always has been the most respected. A man who holds the respect of all who know him, even the criminals whom he causes to be arrested, for they know that at his hands they will be dealt with in justice to the crime committed. His reputation of always giving a square deal in every instance is widely known.

A native of Alabama, Mr. Jackson was born at La Grange, on May 24, 1868, a son of James M. and Ellen (Ferguson) Jackson, the latter dying when her son was but two years of age, so that he has no recollection of his mother or of a mother's love and tender care. James M. Jackson was a mechanic of exceptional ability, who in 1876, when Calvin E. was a lad of eight, removed from Alabama to Texas and is still a resident of that state, living in Stephenville at the advanced age of eighty-three years. Calvin attended the public schools of Alabama and Texas in pursuit of his education, but the school of "hard knocks" supplied him with the greater part of his experience. As he grew to young manhood in Texas he rode the range and in that way learned to know men and conditions. Being a natural leader he decided to come to California in hopes that he would be able to find a broader scope for his talents and in that he has not been disappointed. In 1887 he landed in San Bernardino and worked at the carpenter's trade for two years, learning the business, after which, in 1889, he came to what is now Orange County, and here cast his first vote for the new county then being formed. He worked as a journeyman carpenter for several years in various sections of the county and then for eighteen years was a contractor and builder, employing several men in his operations. He has to his credit the erection of many of the old-time residences throughout the county and these homes stand today as evidence of his skill and thorough understanding of his trade.

Mr. Jackson has always had an interest in politics and was more or less prominent in the circles of the Democratic party. In 1906 he was elected to the responsible office of constable and served in that very difficult office for eight years. During that time he became very well informed as to the habits of criminals and successfully trailed them to their haunts. His successful discharge of all the duties of his office led to his election, in 1914, to the office of sheriff of the county and after four years' service he was again elected to succeed himself. Since he took up his duties he has inaugurated many reforms in the conduct of his office, systematized the handling of prisoners and their capture, his duties of constable having been invaluable to him in this larger field. His first word is efficiency, and he never sends any of his deputies into places of danger that he won't go himself, in fact he nearly always takes the lead when danger threatens in the capture or apprehension of a criminal. Even with the increasing of the population in the county, crime is really decreasing in proportion. It has often been said of Sheriff Jackson that "when he goes after a man he usually gets him," and no finer compliment can be paid a public official.

The marriage of C. E. Jackson and Miss Ida Cox, a native daughter, born at Downey, Cal., the daughter of George W. Cox, a pioneer who crossed the plains from Texas in 1869, was celebrated on March 27, 1889, and they have become the parents of two daughters—Lela, a teacher in the schools of Los Angeles; and Elaine, is the wife of W. M. Wilson of Long Beach and the mother of a daughter, Loraine. Mrs. Jackson shares with her husband the esteem of their many friends. The home of the family has been in Santa Ana for many years, in fact Mr. Jackson has lived here ever since the county was organized and is therefore well and favorably known in every part of it. He is a member of the Knights of the Maccabees, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and of Santa Ana Lodge No. 794, B. P. O. Elks. Both Mr. and Mrs. Jackson are deeply interested in the upbuilding of the county, are supporters of all movements that have for their aim the betterment of civic and social conditions and of making Orange County a better place in which to live.

COL. J. K. TUFFREE.—Coming to Anaheim in 1872, Col. J. K. Tuffree will ever be remembered as one of Orange County's staunch pioneers. While St. Louis, Mo., was his birthplace, he was descended from an old Baltimore, Md., family who traced their ancestry back to France, the family name being originally spelled Trefrey, of the French Huguenots. He was reared in St. Louis, where he received a splendid education. On the breaking out of the Civil War, he united his fortunes with the cause of the Confederacy and served throughout the conflict, and it was no doubt owing to this service that his old friends and the old settlers of Orange County and Southern California called him Colonel Tuffree.

Immediately after the close of the war, Colonel Tuffree came to California and for a time he was with the Union Pacific as a dispatcher, being the first dispatcher located at Truckee. Afterwards he came to San Francisco, being stationed at the terminal, and while there he made the acquaintance of C. B. Polhemus, as well as his daughter, Carolina. The acquaintance with the daughter ripened into love and resulted in their marriage. She was born in Paita, Peru, but was reared and educated in San Jose, Cal., and was a cultured and refined woman, and their union proved to be a very happy one. C. B. Polhemus was an Easterner of a prominent and highly esteemed family, and a man of an excellent education. He came from Mt. Holly, N. Y., and was a son of Captain Polhemus, who served in the Revolutionary War. Possessing a love for travel and adventure he made the trip to Paita, Peru, via Cape Horn, where he was engaged in the banking and mercantile business and also served as U. S. Consul. In 1852 he came to San Francisco. He made a number of trips to Peru, remaining for long periods in that country and while there met and married Miss Garay, the beautiful daughter of Governor Garay, then governor of Peru. On the death of his wife he returned with his daughter to California and they made their home in San Jose. He owned a ranch at Gilroy and later also bought Commodore Stockton's ranch, and in order to obtain shipping facilities he built a railroad known as Alsip and Company, of which he was president until it was sold to C. P. Huntington and associates. Aside from his large mercantile interests, Mr. Polhemus was a large landowner and one of the six original owners of the Don Abel Stearns Rancho Company, comprising five large ranchos of 200 square miles.

After Colonel Tuffree's marriage, he made a trip East with his bride, remaining about one year in New Jersey and Delaware. On his return to California, he located in Anaheim, becoming manager of Don Abel Stearns Rancho Company, later on locating in Placentia on their ranch, comprising parts of sections nineteen and thirty of the old Rancho San Juan Cajon de Santa Ana, naming it "De Buena Vista." It included 662 acres and had been given them as a wedding present. Colonel Tuffree began farming his ranch and was also manager of the Stearns Rancho Company until his own affairs having grown to such large proportions that they required all of his time, he resigned his position and devoted all of his time to ranching and horticulture. He took a leading and active part in irrigating matters and was one of the original directors of the Anaheim Union Water Company and was active in the development which brought water for irrigating purposes over this section of the county. To do away with the necessity of irrigating at night he suggested a large reservoir to store the water when it could be used next day. The reservoir was built on his ranch and still goes by the name of Tuffree reservoir. He was also the owner of lands in San Diego County. Colonel Tuffree was one of the organizers of Orange County and took a prominent part in the affairs of the new county, and his interest in its development continued until his death, in 1903. He was a Mason and always a strong Democrat. After his death Mrs. Tuffree continued to reside at the old Tuffree home, surrounded by her children, who relieved her as far as possible from all worry and care. She passed away in June, 1915, aged sixty-two.

Colonel and Mrs. Tuffree were the parents of nine children, as follows:— Frederick B. resides on a part of the old Tuffree ranch; Juanita C. is the wife of Alonzo E. Yorba and also lives on a part of the ranch; Charles P. died at the age of thirty-two, in 1908; George R. died in infancy; Nellie A. is the wife of John A. Lloyd of San Francisco; John C. and Henry D. are ranchers at Placentia; Mariquita R. is Mrs. O'Brien of Honolulu; S. James, of Placentia, who is manager of Tuffree Heirs' rancho. Orange County owes much of its present greatness to men and women of Colonel and Mrs. Tuffree's type, for much of it is due to their optimism, constant application and ceaseless energy, coupled with sacrifice and self-denial, in those early days when they aided so materially in changing this region overgrown with brush, cactus, and wild mustard into the beautiful citrus orchards of today considered a garden spot of the world, to be enjoyed and bring comfort and happiness to coming generations.

CHARLES E. FRENCH.—Preeminent among the successful esteemed and influential Californians of the past whose exemplary, industrious lives and sound judgment and good works have paved the way safely and nobly for all who come after, thereby giving to posterity an inheritance of inestimable value, must be mentioned Charles E. French, who was born in Athens, Somerset County, Maine, on June 3, 1841, and was educated at the public schools and seminaries of that state. When about sixteen years of age, he entered a business house in Boston, where he rapidly advanced in positions of trust; and on the breaking out of the Civil War, stirred by patriotic desire to do something in defense of his native country, he enlisted in the Ninth Regiment, Maine Volunteers, and was assigned to the Army of the Potomac, being subsequently transferred to Commodore Samuel Francis Du Pont's naval expedition which on November 7, 1861, bombarded and captured the fortifications defending Port Royal harbor, S. C., an engagement justly regarded as one of the most brilliant achievements of naval tactics and requiring for its success not only able planning on the part of officers, but the skilful execution by each man under command. Continuing in the service until the failure of his health necessitated his retirement from the army, Mr. French came to California via the Panama route in 1864 and located at Yreka, in Siskiyou County, where he engaged in mining and general merchandising, and after spending a few years on this coast, he returned to his old home in the East.

In November, 1868, Mr. French was married to Miss Emma L. Waugh, a native of Boston, and the daughter of Daniel and Sarah (Sawyer) Waugh, who had been born in Townsend and Lowell, Mass., respectively. She was reared in "the city of culture," and was graduated from Brighton Seminary; and for two years, or until her marriage, she applied herself to teaching. She was splendidly equipped, therefore, to be the intellectual stimulating companion of a man of ever-increasing weighty affairs. Resuming business in Maine, Mr. French became a member of a boot and shoe manufacturing firm, and was also appointed Assistant Assessor of Internal Revenue by President Grant. Finding it impossible to endure the rigors of Eastern winters, he resigned his office, sold out his business in 1870, and returned to San Francisco, where he expected to permanently reside; but being advised by his physicians to seek a more genial climate, he came to Southern California in April, 1871, and assumed the general management of the extensive land and stock business of Irvine, Flint and Company, whose holdings then comprised the ranchos San Joaquin and Lomas de Santiago, and part of the Santiago de Santa Ana, upon which latter ranch the city of Santa Ana is now located, in all about 108,000 acres. At that time, there were very few white inhabitants residing in the country southwest of Anaheim, between the Santa Ana River and San Diego, and the entire country from the foothills to the sea was one vast cattle and sheep range. Mr. French had over 100,000 acres of land under his control, and at times during his administration there were over 50,000 head of sheep grazing upon the broad sweep of the San Joaquin, where today is heard the busy hum and puffing of tractors and modern machinery.

In 1876, Mr. French removed the ranch headquarters to a location east of Tustin and erected a commodious ranch house for James Irvine and his family. In 1878 he relinquished the management of the company's business and removed to Santa Ana, where he had previously made investments for himself. He engaged in the handling of land, and at once took an active interest in the development and building up of the town. In 1886 he erected the brick block adjoining the Bristol and Rowley block on the east, and in 1899 he built the Grand Opera House block, one of the largest in the city, which is still a monument to its founder. He served as postmaster at Santa Ana, holding office under Presidents Hayes, Garfield, Arthur and also Cleveland; and he took an active part in securing the main line of the Santa Fe Railroad through Santa Ana, to which undertaking he freely devoted much time and means, and was twice elected a director of the California lines system, which has been such an important factor in the marvelous growth and prosperity of Southern California.

Whenever, too, public improvements were proposed, Mr. French was always found ready to encourage and aid them, to the fullest extent of his resources, and in this way he advanced not only the building up of the city, but the upbuilding of the popular home community as well. In the founding of the Santa Ana Free Library he took a very live interest, and for several years he served as president of the board of trustees. Having business and property interests in Los Angeles, he also maintained a branch office there for years, and in various ways was the better able to help the younger Santa Ana by means of Los Angeles connections. He always regarded Santa Ana as his home, however, and constantly maintained an elegant residence surrounded by extensive lawns and well-kept grounds, making it one of the most attractive homes in all Southern California. Two children blessed the home life of Mr. and Mrs. French, and have in time proven valuable members of society; Gertrude has become Mrs. Elmer B. Burns of Santa Ana, and Miss Ethel resides with her mother. Mr. and Mrs. Burns have two children, Gladys and Carl. The latter went with Company L from Santa Ana and served overseas until after the armistice, and received the Croix de Guerre for bravery, having been both gassed and wounded. Returning with Company L, he received his honorable discharge in April, 1919.

Mrs. French came to California in the fall of 1872 and joined her husband in what was then a remote region, almost out of the pale of civilization, and for a time their nearest neighbor lived seven miles away, unless the half-civilized natives of that period are considered. Nothing daunted, Mrs. French continued to reside there until their removal to Santa Ana, aiding her husband and helping to make his name and influence known and recognized in the financial circles of Southern California. He was an able financier, with a conservative view of investment, and combined calm judgment and keenness of foresight. It was not his disposition to rush blindly into things, but with a critical insight he weighed and measured principles, and with unbiased mind gave his influence toward those measures whose value could not be questioned. It is possible that many persons seeking the reason for Mr. French's success may account for it as a combination of "Eastern brains with Western enterprise;" he descended from a family long and honorably associated with the history of New England, some of whose representatives served as officers in the Revolutionary War, his maternal ancestors, the Palmers, having come from England to this country during the Colonial period, and he inherited qualities of the greatest value to one destined to leadership in the several fields mentioned. It must not go unsaid, also, that Mr. French gave his devoted wife much of the credit for his business success, saying that he had learned in the early part of their life together that her judgment in property and business matters was so reliable that when he followed their joint conclusions, he had always made a success.

Mr. French was prominent in banking and real estate circles. He was president of the Orange County Savings Bank, and a director of the First National Bank of Santa Ana. When the first street railway for Santa Ana was projected, Mr. French took an active part in establishing it, and was its secretary for several years. The road is now a part of the Interurban Railway system. He was also one of the promoters and incorporators of the Los Angeles and Ocean Railway Company, and held the office of the vice-president of the same until the road merged into the Los Angeles Terminal, now the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad. Fraternally, Mr. French was a Mason, and a member of Sedgwick Post No. 17, G. A. R., from its organization. He was also a member of the Pioneer Society of Los Angeles County. Though the Civil War left him in poor health, his magnificent spirit of pluck and determination enabled him to continue courageously for years at his duties, and in that way, when many would have sought their selfish ends and rested, he was active in his useful career until, on November 2, 1914, he passed away, to his eternal reward. Rev. A. L. Petty a former pastor of the Baptist Church in Santa Ana came over from Los Angeles and assisted Rev. Otto Russell, the local pastor, in a demonstration of esteem and regret seldom witnessed in Santa Ana, and to give voice to feelings of deepest sorrow experienced by all who knew him. In accordance with his desire, his body was cremated.

After Mr. French's death, his widow was appointed administratrix of the estate, and although she had probably never written half a dozen checks in her life, she accepted the trust and with her native ability and imbibed business acumen, with which, as it proved, she had been liberally endowed, she not only settled the estate satisfactorily, but since then she has managed the large affairs entrusted to her with signal ability and pronounced success, enlarging her real estate holdings and improving those already held. She is the owner of valuable business and residence property and different ranches at Stanton and property in other places in the county, and she attends to all the transactions required herself.

She continues to make her home at the beautiful large family residence at the corner of Ninth and Spurgeon streets, a splendidly furnished estate where she dispenses an old-time California hospitality; she is a member of the First Baptist Church and also of the Ebell Club, and other social organizations; and she finds great pleasure in informing herself about and supporting all movements likely to benefit the community. In 1910, with her husband and daughter, she made an extended tour of Europe and brought home many fine specimens of art; and her memory being excellent she is ever interesting and a source of inspiration to all who are so fortunate as to be counted among her friends.

WM. F. ESPOLT.—A resident of California since 1894, William F. Espolt's birthplace was at Dennison, Iowa, where he first saw the light of day on February 7, 1885, his parents being William and Louise (Homeier) Espolt. The father was a well known farmer in the neighborhood of Dennison for a number of years, but in 1894 he disposed of his holdings there and came to California, settling at Whittier, where he purchased ranch and town property, and here he still makes his home.

William F. Espolt grew up in Whittier, attending the grammar and high schools there, and assisted his father in the development of his ranch property. His first purchase of property in Orange County, with his father as a partner, was a tract of thirty acres on Palm Avenue, raw land at the time of purchase, and William F. threw himself energetically into the improvement and development of the place, setting it out to oranges and lemons. When he had disposed of the property he bought ten acres in East Whittier, only partly developed and he continued the work and sold that in 1919. In the meantime he had bought fifteen acres north of the upper boulevard, which has been improved into a fine bearing citrus grove. In 1919 he became the owner of twenty acres on Walnut Avenue, near La Habra, which is devoted to Valencia oranges and lemons. The water for irrigating his properties is furnished by the La Habra Water Company and he markets his fruit through the La Habra Citrus Association. Mr. Espolt is a stockholder in the First National Bank of La Habra and in the Citizens Commercial and Savings Bank of La Habra.

He was one of the organizers of the La Habra Midway Oil Company, in which he is also a director. This company is composed of local men and has 116 acres of land under lease, both of Mr. Espolt's ranches being included in the same. The terms of the lease, which runs for twenty-five years, call for the drilling of wells for oil, and their first well is located north of the upper boulevard, less than a mile from La Habra. From all surface indications and reports of competent geologists and oil well locators, the prospects are bright for a successful culmination of the plans of the originators of the enterprise.

That Mr. Espolt is a man of diversified interests will be seen by his activities since branching out for himself. While he lived in East Whittier he designed and manufactured three types of ladders for picking fruit. These were the peg top, flat top and straight ladders, and he found a ready sale for his product during the several years he was in the business. He is deeply interested in the welfare of Orange County and liberally cooperates with all movements for advancing the commercial prestige of the section of the state he has selected for his home.

On Easter Sunday, April 23, 1905, Mr. Espolt was married to Miss Hazael Ruth Cline. A native of Arkansas, she came to California with her parents, Linn and Clementine Cline in 1893, and was educated in the grammar schools of Fullerton and the high school at Whittier. Her mother passed away when she was a small child, and her father, who has spent the greater part of his life in the mercantile business, is now the proprietor of an establishment at Ramona Acres, near Los Angeles. Mr. and Mrs. Espolt are the parents of two children: Ayetrell is a student at the Fullerton high school and Clementine attends the grammar school at La Habra.

Although the care of his property consumes much of Mr. Espolt's time he has never been too absorbed with his own interests to forget or neglect his duties as a citizen, and he voices his political opinion through the candidates of the Republican party. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Elks and Odd Fellows of Whittier.

JAMES RANDOLPH MEDLOCK, M.D.—Only a few persons appreciate the patience, self-denying application, weight of care and anxiety and the enormous responsibility which attend the life of the conscientious family physician. During the thirty-six years that Dr. James Randolph Medlock pursued the practice of medicine in Southern California he was known not only for his skill and assiduity as a physician, but for his enthusiastic interest in the development and fostering of all worthy enterprises that had as their aim the upbuilding of the commercial and agricultural interests of Orange County.

James Randolph Medlock was born in Lawrence District, S. C., January 24, 1837. Though not richly endowed with material wealth, his parents gave him the priceless heritage of a noble Scotch ancestry. His early education was received in the local schools, but he was ever alert to reach out beyond their limited curriculum into all branches of study. When still a lad in his teens—his parents both having died—he moved to Bentonville, Benton County, Ark., where at the age of eighteen he entered the office of Dr. John Gray as a student of medicine. He remained in this office for three years and the latter year was, as Dr. Gray testifies, “riding with me in the practice of medicine.”

In 1859 he graduated from the Cincinnati Medical College and returned to Bentonville, where he resumed the practice of medicine independently. Here he remained until the outbreak of the Civil War, when he enlisted in the Confederate Army and was in active service until near the close of the war. When the conditions of the country permitted he began practicing at Huntsville, Ark. Practice in this locality was exceedingly difficult owing to the mountainous nature of the region and the severe weather. The only way in which Dr. Medlock could climb the steep hills and ford the swollen streams was on horseback with his medicines and instruments packed in saddle bags. Such strenuous practice, in addition to owning and operating a drug store, began to wear on him, and after taking a post-graduate course at the St. Louis Medical College he decided to come to California. Arriving here in 1876, he located at Orange, which was then in Los Angeles County. He purchased forty acres, which he set to oranges, and later developed a twenty-acre walnut grove. Two years of his long residence in the Golden State were spent in Northern California, near Sacramento, but the delightful climate of the Southland and its great opportunities for development in agriculture and citrus culture appealed so strongly to him that he returned to Santa Ana, where he continued to practice until his demise on November 10, 1913.

Dr. Medlock merited his recognition as a family physician by his knowledge and true skill, genial and sympathetic manner, never seeking notoriety by questionable methods. He was closely identified with the city of Santa Ana and was very public spirited. He was one of the organizers and served as a director of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Santa Ana and at the time of organization was urged to take the presidency, but declined on account of the large practice he could not neglect. He was interested in the development of the water and gas companies and the first street car line in Santa Ana. He also added to the material development of the city by purchasing a 300-foot frontage on North Main Street, in the 800 block, the property extending through to Sycamore Street, and here he erected his home. He also built and owned business blocks on Fourth, near Main, and the Medlock Block at the corner of Fifth and Main Streets.

At Ozark, Ark., in 1869, Dr. Medlock was united in marriage with Miss Martha McFerrin Adams, a native of Arkansas, and to them were born two children, one of whom grew up—a daughter Velda, who married C. A. Gustlin of Santa Ana. Mrs. Medlock's father, Abner Adams, born in Kentucky, was a merchant in Arkansas, but died many years ago. Her mother, Mary S. (Berry) Adams, a native of Tennessee, came to California in 1876 and spent her last years with Dr. and Mrs. Medlock at Santa Ana. Mrs. Medlock is very active in civic affairs and is a charter member of the Ebell Club, which was organized at her home, and is also a charter member and past matron of the Eastern Star. She was one of the organizers of the First Presbyterian Church of Santa Ana, and has always been active in Church and missionary work. Reared in an environment of culture and refinement, she is a woman of rare attainments and pleasing personality, radiating pleasure on her many friends who enjoy her for hospitality and kindness.

Dr. Medlock was no ordinary man or physician. He was a man of deeds more than words. He was a man of action, alert, resourceful, always ready; a man of judicial mind, he saw both sides on all questions. Hundreds of mothers could testify to his skill as an obstetrician. It was in the maternity chamber at the hour of midnight that Dr. Medlock was the dominant figure, “a shadow of a great rock in a weary land.” He always met promptly and successfully every emergency and did it quietly and without ostentation. A “doctor of the old school,” he rode a horse and carried saddle bags to the remote homes in an Arkansas wilderness, and it was there that he became self-reliant and resourceful before coming to California. No night was too dark or storm too severe for him to answer the call of suffering.

Fortunate in being well born, Dr. Medlock had in his makeup the Scotch ancestry of oak. He inherited from his forbears a contempt for the hypocrite or deceitful quack; he was the soul of honor and always signed his letters, "Sincerely yours." He himself was sincere, genuine, honest, unaffected, candid, cordial and true. Dr. Medlock was an honored member of the American Medical Association and of the state and county societies, and fraternally was a prominent Mason of the Knights Templar degree, as well as a Shriner.

JUAN GLESS.—A native of far-away Spain, Juan Gless is one of El Toro's pioneer settlers, having come there thirty-five years ago, when all of this section of Orange County was given over to sheep raising, thousands of them grazing over the land that has in later years been transformed into highly cultivated ranches and orchards. Navarro, Spain, was Mr. Gless' birthplace, and there he first saw the light on April 25, 1861, his parents being Bernard and Juana Gless, farmer folk near Aldudes, who spent their lives in that section, both having passed away some years ago at the old home.

There were six children in the Gless family: Pedro and Gracian reside in France; Pierre resides with our subject; Mrs. Juana Bidart of El Toro; Mrs. Ysabel Yauregue of Ventura, and Juan of this review. The home place of the Gless family was on the line between France and Spain, and here Juan was reared, learning when but a lad to take care of sheep and cattle, that being the principal industry of the region. Having heard good reports from some of their countrymen who had migrated to California, telling of the success awaiting young men of brain and muscle who were willing to work, Mr. Gless left the old home for the New World, reaching California in October, 1885. Finding employment with S. Chavorie and LeFur at Newport, he continued with them for three years, when he purchased a band of sheep and started out on his own account, ranging them on the plains and in the mountains, and increasing his herds until he had 6,000 head. He made his headquarters at El Toro, but in the old days he ranged his sheep as far north as Los Angeles up to what is now Seventh Street, that locality then bearing no indication that in the years to come it would be the business center of the metropolis of the Pacific Coast.

In Los Angeles, November 14, 1904, occurred the marriage of Mr. Gless, when he was united with Miss Antoinette Carle, who was born in Alsace-Lorraine, France, the daughter of Antoine and Clementine (Derzoff) Carle, Alsatian farmers. The mother passed away in 1899, and the following year Antoinette came to Los Angeles with her father and his family. In the Carle family were four children: A. C., a rancher in El Toro; Julia, now Mrs. Falkenberg, of Los Angeles; Estelle, wife of Geo. N. Vusich, resides in Los Angeles, and Antoinette, the youngest, made her home in Los Angeles until her marriage to Mr. Gless. Her father afterward resided at El Toro, making his home with Mr. and Mrs. Gless until his death in 1915. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Gless continued to reside at El Toro until they bought their present place in 1907. It is a splendid ranch of 135 acres, thirty acres being a bearing orchard of apricots. They also engage in general farming and stock raising, in which they are very successful. Mrs. Gless has been an able helpmate to her husband, encouraging him in his ambition and assisting him in every way possible, and he attributes much of his success to her assistance and advice.

Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Gless: John P. and Madeline Estelle. The family are members of the Roman Catholic Church at El Toro, and Mr. Gless shows his belief in cooperation by membership in the California Prune and Apricot Growers Association.

FREDRICK STANCKEY.—Thirty-four years ago Fredrick Stanckey became identified with the Anaheim section of Orange County, and for thirty years has owned his well-kept and productive ranch on the County Highway, located half a mile west of Anaheim. This honored pioneer is justly proud to be recognized as a self-made man, for he has, in the face of seeming insurmountable difficulties, won commendable success. When one realizes that Mr. Stanckey arrived in Anaheim with but two dollars in cash—a stranger in a new country, unfamiliar with the language and surroundings, with a family to support—and today is the owner of a profitable orange grove, and has in the meantime supported and educated his family and accumulated a generous bank account, they can truthfully say he has more than made good, and his record may well be envied and admired by the succeeding generation.

Fredrick Stanckey was born in Poland in 1845, a son of Michael and Anna Stanckey, natives of Germany who moved to Poland in early life. Their family consisted of seven children, three of whom emigrated to the United States, Fredrick being the only member of the family now living. From Poland the family migrated to Russia, and in that country Fredrick was united in marriage with Miss Gustena Laufman, a native of Poland, born in 1843. Mr. and Mrs. Stankey lived in Russia for eighteen years, where they reared a large family of children. Two children passed away in Russia and one in Orange County. The eight living are: Augusta, Mrs. George Simms; Adolph, Amelia, Mrs. George Lenz; Robert, John, Frederick, Bertha, Mrs. Ed Sterling, and Julius, the latter being born in Anaheim. The sons are ranchers and are doing well. Mr. and Mrs. Stankey are members of the Baptist Church at Anaheim, and are highly esteemed in the community for their high ideals of citizenship and unquestioned integrity of character.

WILLIAM SCHUMACHER.—The name of William Schumacher, supervisor of Orange County, stands for progress, efficiency, and the highest ideals in business methods in the conduct of the county's affairs. This probity of character and sterling worth as a citizen of Orange County, are duly recognized by the public and strongly attested by his long and faithful service as a supervisor, being elected in 1912.

Mr. Schumacher is not only a native son of the Golden State, but of Los Angeles County, where he was born in 1881, the son of Joseph and Mary Schumacher. Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Schumacher were the parents of three children, William being the eldest child in order of birth. Joseph Schumacher passed away in 1887.

In 1903 William Schumacher purchased his present ranch of 100 acres, located south of Buena Park on Almond Street. Forty acres of his ranch are devoted to citrus fruit, the remainder to general farming. When he purchased the place it was a dairy farm, but he soon began extensive improvements; set out orange trees, which are now in their sixth year, prolific bearers; constructed modern buildings, and in every way made of his ranch an up-to-date place. Mr. Schumacher is emphatically a man of energy and action, giving substantial encouragement to every plan for the promotion of the county's welfare, especially for the section he has the honor to represent.

For three years he served with great success as president of the Chamber of Commerce of Buena Park; is president of the Citrus Orchards Association, and fraternally is a Mason and member of Buena Park Lodge No. 357, F. & A. M., Fullerton Chapter, R. A. M., Santa Ana Commandery, Anaheim Lodge No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks.

In June, 1918, William Schumacher was united in marriage with Miss Lulu Crum, daughter of D. M. and Lydia Crum. Mr. and Mrs. Schumacher have a large circle of warm personal friends in the county and are most highly esteemed in their community.

JAMES MERRICK HAZARD.—A grandson of a '49er, and a member of a very prominent California family who has seen much development in the great Golden State, is John Merrick Hazard, who first came to Los Angeles in the early seventies. He was born in Ionia, Mich., on October 5, 1857, the son of Charles Hazard, a native of that state, who followed carpentering and building. He served in the Civil War, and was married to Miss Amelia Chrysler, also a native of Michigan. In 1870 he came out to Los Angeles, and a year later the family joined him. Grandfather Merrick Hazard had crossed the plains to California in 1849, and had ventured into mining; and after three years he returned East for his family, crossed the plains again, and settled in Los Angeles. He bought various pieces of land in and around the city, and died here, a member of the Society of California Pioneers. His son, Henry T. Hazard, came the second trip later, and in 1889 he was elected to the high office of mayor of Los Angeles. Charles Hazard owned a ranch on Slauson Avenue, and died in Los Angeles in 1902. His widow is still living, past eighty-six years of age, and resides in Orange County. Four children were born to this worthy couple. Amelia is Mrs. Farris, and lives in the Commonwealth district; James Merrick is the subject of our review; William Herman is in Santa Barbara, and Nellie M. is Mrs. Donaldson, of Templeton, California.

James Merrick went to school in Michigan, and in 1871 came to Los Angeles, at one of the most interesting periods in the city's history. According to Mr. Hazard's recollection, there was no cross street south of First until one came to Ninth, and that was called Squaw Lane. He attended school in the Green Meadow district, and early learned the routine work of a farm, so that he ran the ranch of eighty acres, and raised grain and stock. He continued at home until he was eighteen years of age, when he learned the trade of the carpenter. Later he engaged in contract building, and erected the first house in Ontario for his residence, and also worked on the building of the hotel for Chaffee Brothers.

In 1886 Mr. Hazard removed to Templeton, in San Luis Obispo County, where he bought a farm and went in for the raising of grain and stock. He was troubled, however, with squirrels, which destroyed his crops. After a couple of years he went to Stanford University and assisted, for nine months, in the building of that new institution. Then he removed to San Francisco, and worked at the building of coal bunkers, and when they were completed, and James Kinsman was superintending their operation, Mr. Hazard remained also and acted as foreman, with a hundred men under him. In 1899 he served as construction engineer in the Quartermaster's Department, U. S. A., in the Philippines, returning to San Francisco in 1900.

While residing in San Francisco, however, Mr. Hazard suffered much from sciatica, and this led him to quit the place and to go to Pittsburg Landing, Cal. There, with the same James Kinsman, he built a factory for briquettes; and, when he had recovered his health, he returned to San Francisco. Three months later, the sciatica again attacked him, and then he came down into the Southland; and as Mrs. Hazard liked the change, he decided to remain. He was for a year at Long Beach, and then in 1906 he bought forty acres of land in Orange County, on North Street and Anaheim Road, raw and covered with cactus and brush; but he cleared and leveled it, and set out the entire tract to Valencia oranges, and raised and budded the trees. He also cleared for himself some twenty acres on Anaheim Road in the Commonwealth district. Of his former holdings, he has sold all but thirty acres, and on these, an honored "old settler," he resides in comfort.

At San Jose, Mr. Hazard married Miss Ella V. Mayo, a native of San Jose, and the daughter of James Mayo, who was superintendent of the New Almaden Quick-silver Mine. She was a most estimable lady, and her demise on February 5, 1919, was widely mourned. A son, James Mayo Hazard, is the well-known rancher and horticulturist, who takes care of the Hazard ranch.

In national political affairs, Mr. Hazard lets his Republican colors fly to the breeze; but he is too much of a pioneer to be willing to permit partisanship to bias or hinder him in the support of any worthy local measure, and nowhere is there a better "booster" for state, county and town. The family attend the Episcopal Church

OTTO DARGATZ.—A successful orange-grower, fortunate in his wife as a practical, industrious helpmate, is Otto Dargatz, who entered upon a tract of sagebrush and cactus and, by intelligent, hard labor, transformed the wild land in the most creditable manner into a fine orange grove, situated on Olive Street, in Anaheim, to which city he came in 1894. He was born in Coeslin, Pomerania, on June 10, 1869, reared on a farm and sent to the North German schools. His father was Carl Dargatz, who removed with his family to Russia, where they spent eleven years; and there he passed away.

Called upon to do the usual military service expected of a young man of his age, Otto returned to Germany, was released from service, and then went back to Russia, where he helped improve the home place. However, he could not get a deed to the property, on which account he sold out and returned to Germany with his mother.

A brother, Albert, had come out to California and had done well; and, influenced by his example and letters, Otto, after a year and a half at home, concluded to follow. He arrived in Anaheim in 1894, and eighteen months thereafter his mother and sister joined him. She later passed away in Canada, while with our subject. At first he went to work on farms in and around Anaheim, and then he bought ten acres in West Anaheim; which he sold to his brother.

In 1899 he went to Alberta, Canada, and homesteaded 160 acres of land, which he improved by grubbing out and clearing, and by planting grain. When he had managed this successfully for four years, he sold it and returned to California and Anaheim. He bought back the old ten acres, and three months later sold them again. Then he purchased his present nineteen acres on Olive Street—at that time a stretch of cactus and brush, calling for much hard work to clear and level; he sunk a well, and in copartnership with others, put in a pumping plant. He raised his own nursery stock of orange trees; he budded them as Valencias, and he set out his entire acreage to that variety of citrus fruit tree. He also bought a place in Wasco, Kern County, which he improved to alfalfa and then sold, and in December, 1919, he purchased twenty acres in West Anaheim, which he has set out to Valencia oranges.

At Anaheim, Mr. Dargatz was married to Miss Emelia Peters, a native of Poland, who came to California as a young lady. Four of their children are still living. Leo is ranching in West Anaheim; Herman, Martha and Awalt are at home; Arthur died June 17, 1920, at sixteen years of age. The family belong to the German Baptist Church of Anaheim, where Mr. Dargatz is a trustee. He is a Republican in national politics, and a nonpartisan "booster" of anything worth while likely to help Anaheim and Orange County.

HENRY KROEGER.—A resident of Anaheim enjoying the enviable distinction of being the oldest living settler in the town is Henry Kroeger, who was born in Bramstadt, Holstein, then a part of Denmark, on November 24, 1830, where he was reared on a farm. He learned the cooper's trade, responded for military service, and when the Revolution of 1848 broke out on the twenty-third of March, in both Germany and Holstein, he fought with the forces of Denmark as lieutenant in the heavy artillery, during 1848 and 1849, and was an aide-de-camp on the staff of General Von Wissel.

Breaking away from the associations of home and fatherland in 1854, Mr. Kroeger came to America and to far-away San Francisco, and there started a cooper-shop. Two years later, he joined the Vigilantes and helped preserve law and order in the Bay City by meting out a little law to those who had never really known the desired-for blessing. In 1858, he bought a share in the Los Angeles Vineyard Society from Colonel John Froehling, and another share from Mr. Leutkens, six or eight months after the society's organization, and in 1860 he made his first visit to Anaheim.

In 1862, he settled here with his family, and began, with the rest of them, to raise vines. He opened a winery and set up a distillery, and contributed his share to the development of this industry until the middle eighties, when disease struck the grape vines, and disaster spread over the Southland. Convinced that it was "all up" with the vineyards, Mr. Kroeger set out Valencia and Navel orange trees, transforming his twenty acres on East Center Street, and his hundred acres, besides, in Fullerton. North of Anaheim, he came to have twenty acres in walnuts, and to the southwest of the same town, another twenty acres of the same nuts. With Messrs. Rimpau and Melrose, he owned a two-fifths interest in 130 acres in Placentia.

He built for himself a fine residence on East Center Street, where he still dwells, and he erected the old Commercial Hotel, on the present site of the Valencia Hotel. He also built Kroeger's Hall, and he put up another building adjoining the hall, and still another to the west—all in the early, bustling days of Anaheim, when the good burghers, enjoying life rather according to the Old World standards, were fond of "doing things" and needed roofs under which to give way to their activities. He owned a good deal of other valuable property in the county, and in 1888 built the Hotel del Campo, in association with others. This enterprise was not a financial success; and much of the loss, unfortunately, fell upon him.

In 1857, at San Francisco, Mr. Kroeger was married to Sophia Husman, a native of Hanover, Germany, who died on July 30, 1903. They were granted fourteen children, and just seven of the number are living today. Henrietta is Mrs. Schindler of Anaheim; William is at Fullerton, and so is his next youngest sister, Sophia, Mrs. Matter. Henry J. is a horticulturist of Fullerton, Louis is active at Anaheim, and Pauline, who owns the old home on East Center Street, is the wife of John Brunworth of Anaheim. Amelia, the youngest of those surviving, is the wife of L. D. Bradley of Riverside. Mr. Kroeger was the second mayor of Anaheim in 1868. He was prominent in church circles and helped build up the first churches in town.

When the war broke out between the United States and Spain, Henry Kroeger, patriotic American and still a doughty soldier in his martial spirit, offered his services to General Nelson A. Miles, for the coast defense in California. Dewey, however, made such short work of the Spanish navy in Pacific waters that this generous offer was not accepted; and the veteran pioneer was permitted to continue in his peaceful daily walks, amid an environment recalling days of happiness and comfortable prosperity certainly not eclipsed in many ways by those of more modern times.

D. G. COLE.—A member of the real estate firm of Cole & Hardy of Santa Ana, D. G. Cole has been identified with the realty business of Orange County since first coming here in 1897. Mr. Cole was born on September 2, 1854, in Rock Run Township, Stephenson County, Ill., a son of Wilson and Charlotte (Deighton) Cole, the father a native of New York State, while Mrs. Cole was born in England. Wilson Cole was one of the pioneer settlers of Stephenson County, having come there with his family in the early forties. He was a prominent farmer there until his death, which occurred in 1866 when D. G. Cole was but twelve years old, the mother having passed away four years previous. There were eight children in the Cole family, all boys, and seven of them grew up to maturity.

Naturally, the loss of both parents made Mr. Cole's early life much more difficult, but the energy and determination to succeed were strong within him, and especially was he desirous of securing as good an education as possible. He began working out on farms by the month when but a lad, improving the meager educational opportunities that his circumstances afforded. When he was seventeen years of age, he went to Nebraska with his older brother, Adelbert Cole, now a well-known physician of Britt, Iowa. They took up pre-emptions in Hamilton County in that State, but D. G. lost his because of his minority. He then returned to Stephenson County, and attended school at Freeport, Ill. He then attended the college at Dixon, Ill., later taking the teacher's examination and teaching school for one term in Stephenson County, Ill.

Returning to Nebraska, Mr. Cole purchased the farm of his brother, Adelbert Cole, in Hamilton County, and here he became interested in agriculture, continuing there until 1897, when he came to California and located in Orange County. Shortly after coming here he began dealing in real estate, and since that time he has been actively engaged in the purchase and sale of both city and ranch property the greater part of the time.

Mr. Cole is perhaps even better known in Orange County as a walnut grower, as he has for many years been interested financially in this industry and is a member of the Santa Ana Walnut Growers Association. He is the owner of three fine walnut ranches, one of forty acres at Garden Grove, a twenty-acre grove at Santa Ana, and one of twelve acres at Tustin, on Williams Street, where he lives. Through years of practical experience he has gained a thorough knowledge of walnut production, and in his community he is considered an authority on the subject, and his holdings show the care of an experienced grower.

In 1881, Mr. Cole was united in marriage with Miss Johanna McCarthy, the ceremony being solemnized at Harrison, Winnebago County, Ill. Mr. and Mrs. Cole are the parents of four children. The three eldest were born in Nebraska: George, married Miss Maude Williams and lives near Garden Grove; Fred L., married Miss Leo Yost, of a pioneer Santa Ana family, and they are the parents of two children; Myrtle, is now the wife of Ernest Wakeham, a rancher at Stockton, Cal., and they have four children; Ralph was born in Orange County, and resides at the home place.

Beginning life under disadvantages, owing to the death of both his parents when he was quite young, Mr. Cole is indeed deserving of the splendid success he has made, and he is now numbered among Orange County's most substantial citizens. A man of strict integrity, he has always been enthusiastic in the promotion of every project advanced whose tendency is to benefit the entire community. Mr. and Mrs. Cole are members of the Congregational Church at Santa Ana, and in political matters Mr. Cole is a Republican. Fraternally he is a member of the Santa Ana Lodge of Masons.

THOMAS JESSUP.—Among Southern California's big industries, that of horticulture has attracted men of intelligence, many of whom have gained a competency in this vocation, and the county's rapid growth and consequent increasing prosperity is largely due to their good judgment and efforts.

Thomas Jessup, an extensive and successful rancher, is the owner of a well-kept and remunerative forty-eight-acre ranch three-quarters of a mile southeast of Garden Grove, forty acres of which is in walnuts and the remainder planted to Valencia oranges. He raises lima beans on his property, interplanting the walnut trees with the legumes, and also owns a ten-acre Valencia orange grove at Fifth and English, Santa Ana. Additionally, he rents 600 acres of the James Irvine ranch, on which he raises lima beans. He has been one of the tenants of the estate since 1900.

Mr. Jessup was born near Fairbury, in Livingston County, Ill., December 30, 1859, and is the son of Richard Jessup, a native of Queens County, Ireland, and Ellen (Dunne) Jessup, a native of Pennsylvania. His parents were married in Pennsylvania and removed to Livingston County, Ill., to become prosperous farmers. They reared a family of eight children, four of whom survive, and Thomas is the only one of the family living in California. He grew up on his father's farm and was educated in the common schools. His marriage occurred in Livingston County, and united him with Miss Effie M. Johnson, a native of that county, and the only daughter of W. H. and Mattie C. (Tyler) Johnson. After his marriage he continued the occupation of tilling the soil in Illinois until February, 1888, when he removed to Garden Grove, Cal., which at that time was a part of Los Angeles County. Grain farming abounded there at that time, and there was little else. Mr. and Mrs. Jessup are the parents of eight children: Harry, a rancher on the San Joaquin, married Miss Lillian Beswick, and they have two children; Bertha is the wife of A. L. Trickey, a rancher on the San Joaquin, and she is the mother of two children; Vera is single and is a telegraph operator in Los Angeles; Stella is the wife of Harry Reel, an orange grower at Orange. George died at the age of three and a half; Gladys graduated from the Anaheim high school and is now a student in the State Normal; Thomas is in the Anaheim high school; and Effie is a student in the Santa Ana high school.

In the machinery he uses Mr. Jessup is up to date. He has a forty-five-horse-power Holt tractor and a full complement of horses, mules and machinery for properly carrying on his extensive agricultural and horticultural enterprises. He sunk a well 351 feet deep on his ranch, giving him plenty of water for irrigation. Actively energetic and progressive, his success is due to close application and excellent management. He is recognized as one of the broad-minded, public-spirited citizens of the community, and is justly popular among his many friends and neighbors. He lives contentedly and happily with his family in his commodious country residence, which is perhaps the largest residence in Buaro Precinct. Politically he casts his vote with the Republicans.

RICHARD MELROSE.—The bar of Orange County has been distinguished by the high character of its personnel, as may be illustrated in the life, character and accomplishment of the well-known attorney, Richard Melrose, who was born at Glasgow, a member of one of the most honored families of Scotland, pleasantly associated with Scotch history and tradition. The date of his birth was February 4, 1850, and his parents both died when he was a child. There were seven children in the family, and he was the youngest child. The first fourteen years of his life were spent in Scotland, and the first instruction he received was given him by his mother.

Having come to the United States in 1864, Mr. Melrose for seventeen years engaged in newspaper work, a part of the time on the Pacific Coast; for he arrived in California as early as 1864, and settled in Los Angeles in 1865. He removed to Anaheim in 1870, studied law privately, and was admitted to the California bar at Los Angeles in 1887. Mr. Melrose is thus the oldest attorney in Los Angeles County, and of especial interest as a counsellor who has practiced law alone during most of the time. Always active as a Republican in national and state politics, Mr. Melrose was appointed postmaster by President Chester A. Arthur in 1884; was presidential elector in 1904, on the Roosevelt ticket, and he served in the state legislature in 1909. For fourteen years he was a trustee of the State Normal School at Los Angeles, and he was chairman of the board for eight years. During the recent war he was a member of the exemption board for Orange County.

At Anaheim, in 1874, Mr. Melrose was married to Miss Mary Kuchel, a native of Indiana, and three children were born to them: Jessie, now Mrs. F. A. Backs, Jr., Winifred and Allan. There are two grandchildren, Florence Backs and Richard A. Melrose, both worthy descendants of a worthy progenitor. Mr. Melrose belongs to both the Knights of Pythias and the Elks; and he and his devoted wife live in comfortable retirement, buoyed up with the memories of useful and pleasant years.

FRANK SHANLEY.—Orange County has never failed to honor those distinguished pioneer citizens who helped to lay broad and deep the foundations for the great commonwealth of California, and among those whom posterity ever will honor for both his character and life, and their influence upon his own and succeeding generations, is the late Frank Shanley, whom the green isle of Erin claimed with pride as the land of his birth. When he was two years of age, his family removed to Edinburgh, Scotland, and there in that beautiful and romantic city of the north he was reared and educated.

He learned the trade of the shoemaker, and specialized in the making and fitting of "uppers," starting in at his ninth year, giving seven years to the apprenticeship, and becoming a journeyman at the early age of sixteen. For a while he followed his trade in England; but convinced that the New World would offer greater advantages, he crossed the ocean to America, arriving in New York in the month of August.

He located first at Pittsburgh, and there opened a little workshop; and as it was the period when the high-legged boots were going out of style, and the modern shoes coming in, he was swamped with orders which, notwithstanding the help given him by his wife, he could hardly fill. Later, he entered the employ of the McCarten Shoe Company, and his work proving more than satisfactory, he was taken into the firm. The name of the establishment was then changed to that of McCarten & Shanley, and on the death of the former, Mr. Shanley purchased his share in the firm and continued the business alone.

In 1896 he sold out, came west to California, and located at Anaheim; and in April of the same year he bought fifteen acres of walnut and fruit orchard on South Lemon Street, which he greatly improved. He built a fine, two-story home, and otherwise added to his property. Prior to this, and during the boom in Salt Lake City, he bought property there and erected a very creditable business block, an ornament as well as an addition to the city, which is now the property of his wisely-managing widow.

As a genuine path-breaker in movements of much significance for the future, Mr. Shanley was one of the founders of the First National Bank of Anaheim, and as its vice-president, took an active part in its management. He was very proud of the growth and success of the bank, and actively participated in its affairs until the time of his death. He was elected president of the American Savings Bank of Anaheim upon its organization May 22, 1905, serving until January 11, 1916. Soon after his arrival here he was elected to the office of justice of the peace, and as Judge Shanley he discharged this serious and delicate responsibility to his fellow citizens for four years. He was public-spirited to a large degree, and was always ready to put his shoulder to the wheel and advance in any legitimate way the best interests of Anaheim.

In the good old Quaker town of Darlington, England, on the Skerne, over which is a picturesque bridge of several arches, and not far from the famous cathedral city of Durham, on May 17, 1864, Mr. Shanley was married to Miss Marie C. McCabe, a native of England, but a popular lass of Irish parentage, who now resides in a fine modern bungalow at 201 South Palm Street, Anaheim, the center of a large circle of admiring friends. Mr. Shanley was always fond of children, and they liked him, and his devoted wife shared his pleasure in giving to charity. In his will he bequeathed a third of his estate to the St. Catherine Orphanage of Anaheim; he had been a good host, and only after his death, on July 10, 1918, was the old homestead sold. California has reason to be thankful for many blessings, and among them for such lives as that of Mr. Shanley, who worked hard and, having once established himself and his household on a firm, self-respecting and independent basis, began to do good, whenever and wherever he could, and with means he had a perfect right to dispose of as the generous impulses of his kindly heart and the sound conclusions of his trained mind dictated.

DAVID R. S. SHAFFER.—Hale and hearty at the age of eighty-three, with a truly remarkable memory for names and dates, and with the lucid and logical mentality and physical vigor of men many years his junior, David R. S. Shaffer is living retired on his twenty-acre ranch near Westminster. A Southerner by birth, Mr. Shaffer was born in Page County, Va., in the Shenandoah Valley, eighty miles south of Harpers Ferry, October 23, 1837. His parents were Isaac and Mary (Rothgeb) Shaffer, both natives of the Shenandoah Valley, as was his paternal grandfather, Samuel Shaffer. Isaac Shaffer passed away during the Civil War, his widow surviving him until 1881. There were five children in the Shaffer family, David being the only son; one sister is still living, Mrs. Mary C. Gander, eighty-four years of age, who lives in Butler County, Missouri.

David Shaffer was educated in the common schools in the vicinity of his home and also in a seminary at Luray, Va., and as soon as he was old enough he helped in the work about the farm. He continued on the home place with his father, assuming more and more of the responsibility, until he was twenty-three years old. In the meantime he had taught several terms in the village school near his home, and he became ambitious for better opportunities than his home surroundings afforded, so in 1860 he set out for what then seemed the Far West, settling in Cooper County, Mo., teaching school there and in Moniteau and Morgan counties. When the Civil War broke out he was working in the mill of his cousin, John Rothgeb, in Cooper County. Although we was of Southern birth, he was always opposed to slavery, and was an ardent Whig. He refused to join the "Bushwhackers," as the marauding bands of Rebel sympathizers were known, and was threatened with hanging. He then returned to Ohio, locating in Cheshire, in Gallia County, engaging at the carpenter's trade in summer seasons and teaching during the winter months; but before long he enlisted in the Ohio National Guard; he had in the meantime belonged to the famous "Squirrel Hunters." For two years he did guard duty on the Ohio River, and when Lincoln's last call for troops came, on May 4, 1864, the national guard regiment of which he was a member enlisted as a whole, being mustered in as the One Hundred Forty-first Ohio Volunteer Infantry. Mr. Shaffer continued his work of guard duty, being stationed on the road to Charlestown, W. Va., to guard supply trains. He received his honorable discharge in September, 1864, being mustered out at Gallipolis, Ohio.

Mr. Shaffer took up the carpenter's trade again after the war was over, locating at Addison, Ohio, and here later he established himself in the mercantile business in this town on the banks of the Ohio River. For nineteen years he continued in business there with uninterrupted success, but in 1884 there was a big flood in the river, in which he lost much of his stock and also suffered damage to his buildings, the whole amounting to over $6,000. He then started a broom factory in Addison, but after a short while he decided to remove to California. He first located in Santa Barbara County, in September, 1890, where he engaged in ranching until the fall of 1891, when he went to Los Angeles County and took up a homestead claim in the Antelope Valley, and for seven years made this his home, following dairying, stock and poultry raising. In 1899 he left his property and came to Orange County, purchasing the twenty-acre ranch near Westminster where he still makes his home, later disposing of his homestead in the Valley. For thirteen years he continued in its active management and developed it into a very profitable property through general farming, dairying and poultry raising.

Mr. Shaffer's first marriage occurred in June, 1865, when he was united with Miss Louisa Roush. She passed away in 1881, leaving three children: Joseph V. is now in California and has two children in Riverside; Vesta D. is the wife of Ambrose Chapell of Columbus, Ohio, and has one daughter; David Howard came to California with his father, and passed away at Santa Barbara in 1910, leaving a widow and one child. In 1884 Mr. Shaffer was married to Miss Alice Hill, a native of Mason County, Va.

Early in life Mr. Shaffer espoused the cause of Prohibition when it was far from being popular, and canvassed Gallia County, Ohio, in the interests of that party in 1881. He became an orator of note in the Prohibition ranks, and his strong personality, clear ideas and native eloquence made him a mighty power against the liquor traffic; he rejoices to have lived to see the enforcement of the laws for which he labored so earnestly for so many years. For the last twenty-six years he has worked with the Socialist party and is proud of its advancement thus far. A true humanitarian, he has always been a liberal in his ideas, and is a great admirer of the works of the late Robert W. Ingersoll. He is a member of Sedgwick Post No. 17, G. A. R., at Santa Ana. Living retired now in his comfortable home, he can look back upon a clean, consistent, industrious, studious and well-spent life.

PRESCOTT ALLEN.—A successful rancher of the kind that has always reflected the highest honor upon Orange County is Prescott Allen, whose experience as a progressive walnut grower might well point the way to and encourage others in the same field. He owns a beautiful home ranch of thirty acres at 614 South McClay Street, Santa Ana, where so late as 1910 he built his fine modern residence.

He was born in Oxford County, Ontario, Canada, near the town of Ingersoll and eighteen miles from Woodstock, the county seat, on June 18, 1836, the son of Nathan Prescott Allen, who came to Canada from New York State soon after the War of 1812. He was born in Mohawk County, New York, and on March 7, 1822, was married to Miss Armena Mott, a native of Albany County, New York, where she was born on September 10, 1804. They had ten children, of whom Prescott is the sixth in order of birth; and of this large family, besides our subject only a sister, Mrs. Sarah Louisa (Allen) Dawes, is now living. She was born on July 27, 1838, and is now a widow, residing on French Street, Santa Ana.

Mr. Allen was educated in the common schools of Canada, and helped his father clear up a farm of 278 acres. He had to grub, to clear away stumps and stones, and to swing the cradle, axe and scythe; for at that time the great reapers were not invented. In February, 1862, he came to California by way of the Isthmus, and on the twenty-eighth of that month he landed at San Francisco.

For a while, he went into Nevada at the time of the Comstock excitement, and there he tried the hard labor of the logging camps, but had to give it up on account of the mountain fever. He went back to Sacramento and worked at various pursuits, and in 1863 he ran a ranch and went broke in the attempt to raise tobacco. Then he started anew and worked at various places.

After three years of life in California, Mr. Allen returned to his home in Canada, and when he had been there a couple of years, he was married, on November 21, 1867, to Miss Lydia J. Talbot, who was born on November 15, 1836, and died near Silver City, N. M., March 30, 1892. Four children blessed the union. Minnie died November 20, 1869, aged five months; May is the wife of J. W. Carter, the cashier of the First National Bank of Silver City, N. M.; Edith is the widow of Joe E. Sheridan, mine inspector for the state of New Mexico. He was an editor, a postmaster and a very prominent citizen there, and his demise, on July 17, 1920, was widely regretted, leaving his wife and daughter Margaret, Mrs. Fay, who was also bereaved of her husband, and they in turn had a little daughter named Margaret Louise. Mrs. Sheridan and Mrs. Fay now make their home on Lyon Street, Santa Ana. Margaret, the fourth child, presides gracefully over her father's house and gladdens the lives of all privileged to know her.

The progenitor of this branch of the Allen family was James Allen, a relative of Rev. John Allen, who was a powerful Puritan preacher driven from England and led to join the Puritans who migrated to the New World. He helped to establish the Massachusetts Bay Colony, and in 1637 was the first settled minister at Dedham, Mass. This family has always espoused the cause of education and the ideals of the higher life, and, according to authentic records, sixty-five persons of the name of Allen had been graduated from New England colleges before the year 1825, and of this number seventeen were ministers of the Gospel. General Ethan Allen was of the same family; so was General Israel Putnam, and some of the leading advocates of temperance have sprung from the Allen stock. Nathan Prescott Allen, the father of our subject, for example, helped to organize the first temperance society in Canada—a sturdy millwright and farmer, who let his light shine in the neighborhood in which he dwelt.

He died in the summer of 1865, and Prescott and an older brother, Horatio A. Allen, took over the father's estate and paid off the balance of the heirs. He worked on the old home farm for two years, or during 1865-66, and then sold out; and a few days after his marriage he came West to look for more promising fields. He farmed for a while in Afton, Union County, Iowa, and bought out a store sixty miles west of Chariton, in that state, at that time the western terminus of the Burlington Railway. He continued as a storekeeper at Afton for twelve years, and still later for three years he had a store at Shenandoah, in Iowa. He then went to Silver City, N. M., and for three years engaged in mercantile pursuits, and next he took up ranching, setting out twenty-five acres of fruit trees and raising some 2,500 goats.

From Silver City, Mr. Allen moved to California, and in 1897 settled on his present place. Only eight acres were then planted to walnuts; but he afterwards bought fifteen additional acres of six-year-old trees, and since then he has set out about twelve more acres, so that he now has, all in all, about thirty acres of excellent walnuts.

A Republican in matters of national political import, but a citizen who believes in nonpartisanship in the administration of local affairs, Mr. Allen is a member of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Santa Ana and, with his family, always ready for the upbuilding as well as the building up of town and county.

AUGUSTUS HORATIO ALLEN.—A progressive, exceptionally active and able young man who is successfully operating two ranches, one of twenty and one of thirty acres, a part of the estate of the late Horatio A. Allen, doing much of the work himself with the most up-to-date machinery and according to the most approved methods, is Augustus Horatio Allen. A native son of California, Mr. Allen was born at Tustin April 8, 1893, his parents being Horatio Augustus and Emma (German) Allen, both born in Ontario, Canada, a review of their lives appearing on another page of this history. The father, who was for many years a prominent banker in Canada, located at Tustin in 1886, and at once began the development of a tract of eight acres which he had purchased. As the years went by he met with prosperity and added to his holdings until they comprised eighty acres, in five ranches, the larger part of the acreage being devoted to walnuts, the remainder a thriving grove of Valencia oranges.

Reared on the home place, Augustus Horatio Allen received his early education in the local school, attending the Orange Union high school for two years, later entering the Los Angeles Military Academy, where he graduated with honors in 1911. Two years later, on June 6, he was married to Miss Georgia Liggett, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Liggett, now of Fresno. Two children have blessed their union, Barbara and Jean.

As has been said, Mr. Allen takes hold of the work himself, not content merely to direct the labor of others, and frequently runs the Cletrac tractor, which is only one of the many of the up-to-date machines and implements making up an enviable complement for his farm work. He looks far ahead, and heeds both the last word of science and the practical experience of the veteran agriculturist whose schooling has generally been confined to the ranch itself; and so his groves and orchards yield well.

Two brothers of Mr. Allen also bid fair to attain their measure of success, if, indeed, they have not come to enjoy the same already. Lucius is a rancher at Tustin, and Gerald N., who, with his mother, lives in Los Angeles, and is a freshman at Occidental College. In national politics Mr. Allen is a Republican; but he knows no partisanship in his attitude toward problems of local import, and heartily supports the home district.

ROBERT D. BACON.—To be recognized as a "self-made" man is the honor accorded to Robert D. Bacon, a pioneer of Buena Park, Orange County, and one of the most successful and progressive ranchers of that section.

He is a native of Illinois, born May 13, 1865, in Macoupin County, son of Thomas and Mary (Hoover) Bacon, the former an Englishman by birth, while the mother was a native of Indiana. At the age of twelve years, Robert was deprived of the love and care of his mother, she having passed away in 1877; his father survived until 1898. It was in his native state that Robert D. Bacon was reared and educated, and where he remained until 1884, when he moved to southwestern Kansas, where he resided four years and partly improved a claim.

In 1888 he migrated to the Golden State, locating in Buena Park, Los Angeles County, where he had a friend with whom he made his stopping place until he could establish himself. He worked at any honest employment that came his way and helped to build up Buena Park as it is today. Actuated by that worthy and commendable desire that should possess every man's life—the owning of a home—Mr. Bacon purchased two acres of land, which he disposed of later and secured ten acres as the nucleus of his future ranch. To this ten were added, in due time, and after years of hard work and successful operation of his ranch he was financially able to purchase twenty more, giving him a splendid ranch of forty acres. His ranch is improved with modern buildings, and after many years of continuous development of the land from its primitive condition, Mr. Bacon has lived to see his original experimental walnut grove a financial success. His ranch is devoted to diversified farming and to the dairy business. He bought land in early days for fifty-four dollars an acre, a marked contrast in land values of today. In early days Mr. Bacon worked out by the day and improved his own land at odd times, as circumstances would permit, but in course of time he discontinued this, when he had succeeded in developing his land to the point where it yielded enough to support his family.

Thrift and frugality are strong characteristics of Mr. Bacon, and to these, coupled with hard work and a definite aim, are due his present prosperity. On Christmas Day, 1905, Mr. Bacon was united in marriage with Miss Agatha Van Loenen, a native of Iowa, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Van Loenen, natives of Holland. This happy union has been blessed with three children: Mildred, James E. and Robert W., all attending Orange County public schools.

Mr. Bacon is deeply interested in the educational affairs of the county, and for five years served as an efficient trustee of Centralia school district, and is an honored member of the Farm Bureau of Buena Park. In politics he is a staunch Republican, and has served as a delegate to many conventions. In every way that he could, Mr. Bacon has supported all movements for the upbuilding of the county. Especially has he worked to form a storm district for the control of the Santa Ana River. As a pioneer of the Buena Park district he has seen the development of the land from sheep pastures into small tracts and settled upon by contented families.

ANDREW WESLEY THOMPSON.—Strong and active at the age of seventy-six, Andrew W. Thompson has the unusual record of never having had a day's illness in his life. One of Orange County's pioneer citizens, he has always been a leader in the neighborhood affairs of El Toro and his counsels are eagerly sought on political matters, and he has for the past fifteen years occupied the office of deputy county clerk at that place.

Through his maternal ancestors Mr. Thompson traces his ancestry back to Holland, the progenitor of the Commer family in America having come from that country in 1632, settling in the Mohawk Valley in New York. Grandfather Commer served under General Washington in the Revolutionary War, and nine cousins including the subject of this biography, fought in the Civil War. Andrew W. Thompson was born December 16, 1844, his parents being Andrew and Maria (Dayton) Thompson, the latter the daughter of Alexander Dayton. Mr. Dayton ran a ferry across the Pike River in Canada, and also ran a hotel there, and it was while Mrs. Thompson was staying there that Andrew W. was born; but, although he was born in Canada, the family were residents of New York. There were seven children in the Thompson family, and Andrew W., who was the second in order of birth, is now the only one living. He came to Henderson, Sibley County, Minn., in 1854, with his parents, and here grew to manhood. The country was in its primitive state at that time and there were practically no opportunities for an education, so that Andrew had no schooling until after he was married, when, realizing the handicap he was under, he went to studying and became a well-informed man. He worked hard in those early days, helping break the virgin soil of Minnesota and raising some of the first hard wheat grown in that locality.

In December, 1862, Mr. Thompson ran away from home to enlist in Company M, Second Minnesota Cavalry, and for two years fought the Indians on the frontier, having many thrilling experiences, among others being called to the relief of the white settlers during the massacre at New Ulm, Minn. He then served for four years with the Union Army during the Civil War, after which he returned to Minnesota. In 1870 he began farming there, and also kept a trading post at Big Stone Lake, trading with the Sioux Indians. With a cousin he hunted buffalo for the Government to feed the troops stationed in this territory. In 1875, with his wife and two children, Mr. Thompson made the long journey to California, settling in Ventura County, where they remained for a year. In 1876 they came to Laguna and bought 172 acres about two miles north of what is now Laguna Beach, this place being known as the Spring Ranch, paying $1,500 for the place. He also took up 160 acres of Government land, so that he had a ranch of more than a half section, where he farmed and raised stock. He also worked on the San Joaquin ranch for a time, helping care for the stock.

In 1870 Mr. Thompson was married at Glencoe to Miss Esther Tickner, a native of Illinois. Her father, Ezra Tickner, hunted ducks in the early days where Chicago now stands, later becoming a pioneer farmer in Minnesota. Seven children were born of this union: Senath died at the age of sixteen; Ivy, Mrs. Charles Thompson, resides at Watts; Irving is a retired rancher of Madera; Joseph is employed by Orange County on road construction and resides in Santa Ana; Maria is the wife of Levi Gockley, who owns the old Rosenbaum ranch north of Capistrano; Rebecca was the wife of Orin Boyenton, who died on their ranch at Escalon, Cal., in 1920. She still resides there; Andrew Wesley, Jr., is a rancher, and lives with his father. Mrs. Thompson passed away at Laguna Beach July 23, 1886. Mr. Thompson's present wife, to whom he was married in Santa Ana in 1908, was Mrs. Sarah M. Bonnell, the widow of William Bonnell, who died in the East, leaving her with one son, Robert L. Bonnell, a photographer in New York City. Mrs. Thompson in maidenhood was Miss Sarah M. Clarke, the daughter of Timothy and Rachel Clarke of Passaic, N. J. She was born in Passaic, N. J., where she was educated. She was gifted with a beautiful soprano voice and sang in Henry Ward Beecher's choir of vocalists, in reserve for his famous church choir.

Mr. Thompson removed to El Toro in 1890 and he has since made his home there. He is a member of Sedgwick Post No. 17, G. A. R., at Santa Ana. In religious matters he is a member of the Reorganized Church of Latter-Day Saints of Santa Ana and a preacher and elder in that denomination, and has traveled and preached all over the state. Politically he is a Republican and has always taken a prominent part in the local affairs of his party.

ALEXANDER N. HENRY.—It is given to few men to look back over a life so crowded with eventful memories as that of Alexander N. Henry, one of Anaheim's best-known retired pioneer citizens. A native of Scotland, he was born at the seaport town of Leith, February 15, 1837, the third child in the family of Innes and Jacobina (Nicholson) Henry, natives of Lerwick, the chief town of the Shetland Islands. His grandfather was named Innes, as was his great-grandfather, who was chief of the clan and lord of the islands. The Henry clan coat of arms was a mailed arm pointing upward, the hand grasping a scimiter, the inscription being "Semper Paratus" (always ready). The maternal grandfather, William Nicholson, was also of an old family of the Shetland Islands, and took part in the Battle of Waterloo. There were eight sons and four daughters in the Henry family.

When only ten years old, Alexander N. was apprenticed to his brother, who owned a fleet of vessels and it was while he was at his work that he met with an accident which rendered him unfit to continue and his indenture was cancelled and he was sent home. Two years later, in 1852, he joined a British man-of-war and for eight years was in the service of his government. During this period he went through all of the Crimean War, being wounded six times in battle. He took part in the storming of Sebastopol, the famous charge of Balaklava, and the battles of Alma and Inkermann. After the war his ship, the Agamemnon, was sent to the Baltic, later to the Black Sea, under Admiral Lyons. When he left the navy he apprenticed himself to the ship builder's trade at Leith, later sailing the seas as a ship carpenter. During his service in the navy and the merchant marine Mr. Henry sailed in every sea and visited almost every important seaport in the world. The broad knowledge he acquired during his travels make him an interesting and instructive companion. Naturally one of his most thrilling recollections is of the charge at Balaklava, immortalized by Tennyson in his "Charge of the Light Brigade" and he well remembers how with set faces and hearts that knew no faltering, "into the Valley of Death rode the six hundred" on that October day in 1854. Other stirring memories cluster about Mexico, which he visited during the reign and downfall of Emperor Maximilian.

Sailing from Glasgow on a vessel bound for California around the Horn, Mr. Henry landed in San Francisco after a journey of six months. For a time he continued as a ship carpenter, later followed mining in different places in the state. In 1867, ten years after the San Francisco Company had made its initial efforts towards founding a colony at Anaheim, he came to this town, which was then an undeveloped settlement, and he purchased 220 acres of land at West Anaheim and began farming and raising fruit, principally wine grapes, and for eight years he maintained a winery. When the blight struck the vines in this section he turned his attention to growing oranges and walnuts, being among the pioneers who experimented with these products which have since given the county of Orange such a reputation all over the world, as a center for nuts and fruit. After disposing of all but fifty acres of his original purchase, Mr. Henry developed his homestead, Caledonia Grove, thus linking it with the ancient name of his native country. Here he developed one of the finest and most productive ranches in the county, raising oranges, walnuts and some grapes, and erected a residence costing $10,000, also beautifying the grounds with ornamental trees and a cypress arbor, that was one of the finest in the entire state, and made of his ranch a show place of the Southland. Mr. Henry had a number of discouraging experiences, chief among these being a heavy loss through four fires, in three of which he had no insurance, and in the fourth only one eighth, when he lost more than $30,000 worth of property. In 1910 he sold his ranch and retired to a home in Anaheim which he erected. While a rancher, at a cost of $8,000, he constructed a water plant on his property that produced 156 miner's inches from two wells of 600 and 320 feet.

While still in his native town of Leith in 1862, Mr. Henry was married to Catherine Mason, who was born and reared there. Three sons have been born to them, all now living retired after active and successful lives as ranchers. They are Innes, John and Archibald. Mr. Henry was a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen for thirty years. He is a charter member of the Knights of Pythias and of the B. P. O. Elks, both of Anaheim, and he is most enthusiastic in his support of these orders. He still retains his membership in the Masonic lodge at Leith.

Mr. Henry is intensely patriotic and when the Boer War was in progress, being an enthusiastic supporter of the cause of England, volunteered his services and agreed to pay his own expenses to the field if he would be allowed to enlist. This he was not allowed to do unless he would relinquish his American citizenship, which he felt that he could not do. After the death of King Edward and when George V was to be crowned Emperor of India, all the veterans of the Crimean and Indian wars were invited to witness the coronation in India as guests of the English government. On account of illness in his family Mr. Henry was unable to attend, though he was prevailed upon to be present.

It was but natural after participating in such stirring events as did Mr. Henry in his young days that his interest and enthusiasm should be aroused during the World War. After the sinking of the Lusitania he went to Los Angeles to see the British Consul, who wrote to the British Minister in Washington, D. C., that Mr. Henry had offered his services in any capacity and on any condition to the British government and would pay his own expenses to Canada if he could only be guaranteed the privilege of joining either the army or navy. At that time the minister wrote that he had no authority to enlist American subjects. After the United States entered the war he went to Los Angeles three different times and tried to enter the service of his country in any capacity they chose to put him but the members of the military boards replied, "We can see the fighting devil in your eye, but we are very sorry to state that you are too young to be accepted," so he had to return home and to be content to work for those who were at the front. He was active in all the allied drives and organized efforts that had such an important part in backing up the men at the battle front, giving freely of his time and means. He had a muzzle-loader salute gun cast and mounted at Los Angeles and this arrived in Anaheim a few days before the armistice was signed; it was used to fire the salute of victory. He now uses it on all occasions where salutes are fired. Robert and George Henry, nephews of our subject and subjects of Great Britain, lost their lives when their ship was sunk in the battle of the North Sea. A grandson, Archibald Henry, of Anaheim, trained for service but was taken ill and honorably discharged and died five weeks after he reached his home. Mr. Henry helped organize Orange County and has contributed generously to its prosperity during his residence of fifty years.

STEPHEN MCPHERSON.—One of the earliest settlers of the Orange section of Orange County was Stephen McPherson. He was born in Chaumont, Jefferson County, N. Y., on March 5, 1839, the son of William and Jane (Forsythe) McPherson. His father, a native of Deering, N. H., moved to northern New York in the early part of the nineteenth century, and there became a successful farmer. Stephen McPherson began his education in the public schools of his native county. He then attended the Belleville Academy and the Jefferson County Institute at Watertown, N. Y. Before he reached manhood he was teaching schools near his own home. He then attended and was graduated from the Bryant and Stratton Commercial College at Buffalo, N. Y. Following this, he taught school two years in Ohio.

In 1862 he came to California by way of Panama, where a brother and sister had already preceded him. He settled first in Santa Clara County and followed his profession as a school teacher. In 1872 he came to Los Angeles and settled in the Westminster Colony. The same year, with his brother, he bought land east of the Santiago Creek, of Chapman and Glassell. This land was cleared of brush and cactus and the first raisin vineyard in Southern California planted. A partnership was formed under the name of McPherson Brothers, and the raisin business grew to large proportions. In the eighties it was the biggest of its kind in California, until the raisin business was wiped out by the Anaheim grape disease in 1887-88. In addition to viticulture, Stephen McPherson was one of the pioneer school teachers of Los Angeles County. In 1872 he taught the first term of the Orange public school. At that time the Orange district was known as Richland, and included what is now several school districts. During the following decade he taught various schools in what is now Los Angeles and Orange counties, known as Newport, San Gabriel, El Monte, Santa Monica and Los Angeles City. After the dying of the vineyards, Mr. McPherson gave his attention to other lines of farming, and was particularly interested in orange growing. He saw cactus and brush covered land that he bought at ten and fifteen dollars an acre in pioneer days grow to high values.

Mr. McPherson was an earnest Presbyterian and a charter member of the church in Orange. In politics he was a Republican. In 1882 he married Miss Jennie E. Vincent, who was born in Cape Vincent, Jefferson County, N. Y., and survives him. Three children are also living: S. V., who works for the Southern Pacific railroad at Colton, Cal.; William, now living with his mother, and farming; and Lulu, wife of Walter L. Vieregg of Hollywood, Cal. Stephen McPherson died August 21, 1917. He was a pioneer and upbuilder of Orange County and lived long enough to see the fruition of his efforts.

CORNELIUS C. COLLINS.—A decidedly progressive and successful man in the world of business, who is at the same time quite as pronounced a "home man," and therefore very much interested in all that means the development, building up and upbuilding of the community into which he has cast his lot, is Cornelius C. Collins, of the widely-known firm of C. C. Collins Company, the fruit packers and shippers of Santa Ana. He was born in Greene County, Ohio, November 20, 1852, the son of Joseph Collins, a farmer, who was also a pioneer in Ohio enviably identified with the forming of the Buckeye State. He married Miss Isabella Morrow, and they had eight children, the youngest being the subject of this sketch.

Cornelius C. attended the rural schools of his neighborhood, and later was a student in the Ohio Central and Antioch colleges. After finishing his studies he remained in charge of his father's farm for several years; but in the year of 1887, when California was harvesting largely from its great "boom," Mr. Collins disposed of his interests and came west to Santa Ana. For a year he was busy with real estate ventures, but in 1890 he entered the packing field, and formed a partnership with W. M. Smart, the firm being known as Smart & Collins. This continued for two years, when the concern became the Collins Fruit Company, and later C. C. Collins; finally, when Mr. Collins' son, W. C. Collins, had completed his education he became a member of the firm, which has since been known as the C. C. Collins Company. In its consecutive history under these various names, the establishment is the oldest business house of its kind in the county and has won a high standing for square dealing among the growers of fruit and nuts wherever the company has had business with the producers. The statement has often been made that Mr. Collins' word is always as good as his written agreement. He belongs to and supports the Chamber of Commerce and the Merchants & Manufacturers' Association, as well as other public movements for the betterment of conditions in general throughout the county and state.

At Clifton, Ohio, on December 5, 1878, Mr. Collins was united in marriage to Miss Emma Elizabeth Anderson. The union was an exceptionally happy one and has been blessed by the birth of six children and three grandchildren. A daughter is Ina Isabella, the wife of F. W. Stanley of Fresno; Walter C. is in partnership with his father; Wilford A., is a bean thresher and fruit dryer; Robert W., is engaged in the shoe business; Mary F. is the wife of Ernest C. Fortier of Turlock, Cal., and Joseph S., an automotive mechanic. The family are all members of the United Presbyterian Church, in which Mr. Collins has always been an active worker; for many years he has been identified with mission work in Orange County, part of the time among the Spanish people and later with the Christian Endeavor in the County Hospital, always having in mind the moral uplift of the people in general.

The C. C. Collins Company pack and ship dried fruit, beans and walnuts, sending their products to all sections of the country; and they employ from fifty to 150 persons in all branches of their industry during the busy seasons. They have one packing house in Santa Ana, where the main office is located, and the other at Hill-grove, near Puente, Los Angeles County, both being equipped with modern methods of handling their output.

As a pioneer business man of Santa Ana, Mr. Collins has always been much interested in the advancement of the city as a commercial center and in all movements for its upbuilding has ever been found among the leaders. During the World War he gave of his time and means to make Orange County go "over the top" in all the allied drives for loans and funds. He has seen the city grow from a straggling village to one of the best cities in the Southland. Public spirited to a high degree no one is prouder of the city and county of his adoption than C. C. Collins.

CYRUS NEWTON MAGILL.—A very successful rancher with a record of thirty years or more as a pioneer, is Cyrus Newton Magill, whose twenty acres constitute one of the "show-places" of the West Orange voting precinct. He was born in Clinton County, Ind., on August 12, 1836, the son of Cyrus D. Magill, a native of Kentucky who farmed for a while in Indiana and later in Wisconsin. While in the Hoosier State he was married to Sarah Miller, and it was in the historic year of 1849 that he moved to Wisconsin. He attended the public schools in Indiana, and also at Richmond, later Orion, in Richland County, Wis., and grew up on his father's farm, two miles from the Wisconsin River. Thus he saw that section of the country in its undeveloped state, before there was any railroad there.

In 1863, Mr. Magill enlisted in Battery C of the First Wisconsin Heavy Artillery, and was stationed for a while at Fort Wood, near Missionary Ridge. There, in 1864, he was taken ill, and at Madison, Wis., he was honorably discharged, being mustered out at Nashville, Tenn., on September 21, 1865.

Twenty years later, in Kansas, he was married to Miss Matilda Brady, a daughter of the late Peter Brady, who died at Garden Grove on February 11, 1920. In 1869, Mr. Magill and his father and family moved from Wisconsin to Kansas, and settled in Wilson County, where he pre-empted a tract of 160 acres and bought forty acres of school land. Two children were born in Kansas—Dwight E. Magill, whose sketch appears elsewhere in this work, and Dr. Peryl B. Magill, who lives at home.

Cyrus Newton Magill came with his wife and their two children from Kansas to California in March, 1889, and for the first year lived at Santa Ana. Then he bought his present twenty acres, and there reared his family. Two more children have been born here. James Magill first saw the light on August 24, 1892, and after attending the public schools at Garden Grove, grew up on his father's ranch. On March 8, 1918, he enlisted in the aviation school at San Diego and trained at Rockwell Field, with a Curtis plane, showing such proficiency that he was favored with three promotions. He was never in an accident, and was honorably discharged on November 30, 1919. Now he is a charter member of the Santa Ana Post of the American Legion. Julia M., the fourth child, is at home. Mrs. Magill, lamented by all who knew her, died on September 7, 1901. In 1907 Mr. Magill erected a fine cement-block dwelling house on his ranch property.

The family attend the Presbyterian Church, and are active in good works for the benefit of the community. As a patriotic Civil War veteran Mr. Magill is a member of Sedgwick Post No. 17, G. A. R., at Santa Ana, and he has done civic duty by serving on juries.

WILLIAM COCHEMS.—A hard-working, successful business man of Santa Ana, who thoroughly understands the problems of his field, and who feels that he also so well understands Santa Ana and Orange County, and their problems and prospects, that he is in perfect harmony with his environment, is William Cochems, the wide-awake owner and director of the popular Vienna Bakery and Confectionery establishment at 210 East Fourth Street, Santa Ana, and residing at 640 French Street, where his revered mother presides over his household. For twenty years he has devoted on an average not less than eighteen hours a day to his business interests; and it has been this careful attention to details, ever anticipating the wants of his ever-increasing patrons, that has enabled him to "win out" despite high-cost times.

He was born at Chicago on June 22, 1879, the son of Joseph and Gertrude (Stoltz) Cochems, with whom he came to California and Los Angeles in the late eighties. In 1905 his father settled at Orange and there started, with W. W. Ward, what is still known as Ward's Bakery, although it was then called Cochems & Ward's Bakery. His father had come to Los Angeles in 1886; and his mother—who is still living with our subject—followed, bringing her three sons and daughters. Joseph Cochems had learned his trade in Germany, and so had no difficulty in giving satisfaction to the public when he opened a bakery in Chicago. On coming to California he opened a bake-shop first at Los Angeles, and later came to Orange.

J. A. Turner

Having learned the art of baking from his father, William Cochems started out as a journeyman baker, and worked in San Francisco, Santa Barbara and Sacramento, as well as San Diego; and held positions as baker at the celebrated Hotel del Coronado and also at the Raymond at Pasadena. Only when he was satisfied that he had mastered the ins and outs of the trade did he set up for himself.

As a starter, he bought out H. L. Smith, in 1901, and took charge of his bakery at 309 North Main Street, in Santa Ana. Three years later he removed to 210 East Fourth Street, and here he has been ever since. He has a full, sanitary equipment for his bakery, and produces nothing but the purest of pure food, from the best of wheat flour, eggs, sugar, milk and spices. He uses no substitutes—dried eggs or evaporated milk. Indeed, in 1913 he expended $10,000 in refitting, remodeling and refurnishing his place, and among other things then installed was his elaborate soda fountain. He also has one of the best-arranged, cosy and elegant lunch rooms, ice-cream parlors and confectioneries. He bakes the Butter Top—the best of wheat breads—French, Graham, whole wheat and rye bread, and also a complete line of cakes. He manufactures his own ice cream, from pure cream, his watchword being, "Not how cheap, but how good." He employs five people, and they, as well as himself, are always busy. His ice cream being of the high quality described, he makes it only for the retail trade. No wonder, then, that everybody goes to the "Vienna," and that everybody comes away satisfied.

Having started in Santa Ana in business for himself with just one week's wages as his capital, and worked hard and practiced the Golden Rule, Mr. Cochems finds himself today the proprietor of one of the best business establishments in Orange County, and a small stockholder in the First National Bank, as well as in the new Santa Ana Hotel. He also has a life membership in the Elks.

JAMES ANDREW TURNER.—Associated for nearly a third of a century with the business interests of Santa Ana, a man of widest influence, the sudden demise of James A. Turner on October 8, 1919, came as a great shock to his family and wide circle of friends. Born in Audrain County, Mo., October 27, 1848, Mr. Turner was the son of Andrew and Mary (Harris) Turner, both natives of Kentucky, and as a young married couple they settled in Missouri. His early education was received in the rural schools of the locality, but, when the Civil War broke out, like other boys of his age he had to go to work on the farm to help fill the place of the men who were away fighting for their country. At the age of eighteen he was married to Sarah Riggs, and two sons were born to them, Benjamin E., who died in May, 1919, in Santa Ana; and Henry Ola, who died in infancy. Mrs. Turner passing away in 1873.

Locating in Sturgeon, Mo., Mr. Turner engaged in the dry goods business with Maj. John F. Rucker, and later with his nephew, P. Henry Turner, in the hardware business. In June, 1887, he came to California with his family and in January, 1888, settled in Santa Ana, being associated in the shoe business with P. H. Turner who came to California about the same time, continuing in that line until he became cashier of the First National Bank of Santa Ana, holding that office for nine years. In December, 1905, he organized the Farmers and Merchants National Bank, acting as its cashier. The bank prospered greatly under his management and a few years later absorbed the Commercial Bank of Santa Ana. In February, 1919, the Farmers and Merchants Bank merged with the First National Bank and after that time Mr. Turner gave his time to the interests of the Farmers and Merchants Savings Bank, the savings department of the First National Bank. On the first of October, 1919, only eight days before his death, he severed active connection with this institution, for the purpose of devoting himself to his ranch interests, owning seventy-two acres in oranges and lemons near Olive, and to get relief from the strain of business life.

On February 12, 1874, Mr. Turner's second marriage occurred when he was united with Miss Alice Rucker, a sister of Maj. John F. Rucker. Of their children, Ellis B. died at the age of twenty; Nannie H. passed away at the age of seventeen months; and Elizabeth is the wife of Thomas L. Inch of Los Angeles; she has one child, Thomas Turner Inch.

In politics Mr. Turner was active in the ranks of the Democratic party. He was a Mason and an Elk and attended the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. A man of fine character and high ideals, he was always a leader in the affairs of the community; his interests in its various enterprises were wide, but it perhaps was as a banker that he was best known. He knew Orange County like a book, he knew lands, he knew men, and in his knowledge of men came his greatest realm of usefulness as a banker; and there are today in the vicinity of Santa Ana many men whose present financial prosperity is due to the encouragement and advice and backing they received from him.

AARON BUCHHEIM.—A remarkably successful rancher whose attainments and prosperity are all the more striking because he began life under the necessity for constant work from the time he was a boy of seven years, is Aaron Buchheim, who owns the site of Serra, formerly called San Juan-by-the-Sea, an ideal mountain town on the Pacific Ocean, situated where the State Highway strikes the coast between Los Angeles and San Diego. He was born at Sauk Center, Stearns County, Minn., on April 30, 1870, the son of Frank S. Buchheim, who had married Caroline Zymon. When eleven years old, he came with his parents to California, arriving here on October 11, 1881, and in 1904 his father died at Santa Ana, the mother also passing away here on January 20, 1915.

Aaron Buchheim began life doing farm work, and the hardest kind of farm work, at that; he helped take care of the straw at the tail end of the old-time grain threshing machine as early as 1878, and did his part faithfully, little dreaming that one day he would undertake the most extensive threshing operations of any person in Orange County. When he came to California and lost his father, he resolved to be a help to his mother, his family and his friends; he began as a farm hand on a ranch and he has thus come to sympathize with the laboring man, and to feel a pride in caring for all who labor for him.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank S. Buchheim were the parents of twelve children: The eldest, Lydia, now Mrs. Hemenway, resides at El Toro, where she operates one of the O'Neill ranches in partnership with her brother Aaron; Aaron was the second in order of birth; John is a beet grower near Garden Grove; Jacob is a rancher at Downey; Henry William, the fifth in the order of birth, is ranching both in the San Juan Capistrano district and in Ventura County; Emma is deceased; Josie is Mrs. Van Whisler, the wife of a rancher at El Toro; Paul assists his brother Aaron and also is interested in orange and walnut growing with him in Ventura County; Frank is married and resides at the old Buchheim place on East Seventeenth Street, Santa Ana; Fred passed away at the age of thirty, in Santa Ana, leaving a son, Carl, and a widow, the present Mrs. Aaron Buchheim; Emil, who also works for his brother Aaron, has an honorable discharge from the army, having served in the light artillery, Sunset Division, and served overseas as first gunner on a French "75." Minnie, who married Henry Hoeffner, resides in Nebraska.

Mr. Buchheim's cozy home is ably presided over by his wife, who was Miss Alice Hasenyager before her marriage, a lady of many accomplishments, who was reared in an atmosphere of culture and refinement. Born at Fall City, Richardson County, Nebr., her father was John Hasenyager, a native of Tecumseh, Pawnee County, Nebr., whose parents were among the first settlers of eastern Nebraska and pioneer farmers of that section. Her mother, Anna Dietrich in maidenhood, was born near Fall City, Nebr., and Grandfather Dietrich was a prominent farmer in Richardson County, Nebr., until 1906, when he and his wife located on an orange ranch on Grand Avenue, Santa Ana. He passed away in April, 1918, and his widow still makes her home there. John Hasenyager brought his family to Santa Ana in 1909, and he has ever since been engaged in walnut growing on Grand Avenue.

Operating some 2,500 acres besides his own land, Mr. Buchheim employs the latest machinery and methods in scientific farming, using two gigantic threshing machines drawn by a mighty seventy-five horsepower Holt caterpillar tractor, which also provides the motive power. One is a grain thresher and the other a bean thresher and both were built by himself, showing his remarkable genius and adaptability as an inventor. The bean thresher—without doubt the largest in Southern California—was constructed on his home place in 1916, from plans of his own and is a model of efficiency. When operating at full capacity it turns out six sacks of lima beans a minute, requiring three sack sowers, and has attracted widespread attention for its success, having been commented on so favorably that representatives from large threshing-machine manufacturers have called to see it at work and get new ideas. It is necessary for him to have a very large threshing outfit since he handles the beans from the fields and thus has to haul them to the machine, which requires twenty teams and wagons and a complement of sixty hands to do the work. His own years of experience and hard work have made him insistent on giving the workmen the best food obtainable and he says "the best is none too good for them." Consequently the whole crew, almost to a man, remain with him the entire threshing season, which takes about three months. This excellency of service requires convenience, so he has designed and constructed a dining wagon, 11 by 24 feet, with a large steel range in the kitchen, with the necessary equipment of cooking utensils and pantry facilities, as well as separate cooling compartments for meats and vegetables, and the room arranged with adjustable tables having a seating capacity for thirty-six men. Mrs. Buchheim takes an equal interest in providing for the farm employees and much of her husband's success is undoubtedly due to her.

For many years Mr. Buchheim was the crop reporter for the Capistrano district for the Department of Agriculture at Washington, and each month would send in a report to the department as to the amount of acreage, condition and estimate of crops. This he did with the strictest regularity until his own business affairs took so much of his time that he could not do other than resign. He was one of the original stockholders, with James Turner and others, in the formation of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Orange, which recently was consolidated and is now the First National Bank, in which he is a stockholder. He was also an original stockholder of the Citizens Bank until it was consolidated and is now the California National Bank, in which he is one of the stockholders.

Mr. Buchheim has always been interested in sports and particularly in shooting, in which he excels, and has attained an enviable record as a marksman. For many years he was a member of the Santa Ana Rifle Club of the National Rifle Association. At one of the tournaments, shooting a Springfield rifle he won the sharpshooter's medal making nine hits out of ten shells, all shot inside of twenty minutes, and it was the best score made at the tournament.

A leader among farmers and working men, Mr. Buchheim has such clear ideas regarding industry and economics that it is to be hoped that his voice may some day be heard in legislative halls. In looking back over his life Mr. Buchheim sees that while he had hard work when a boy, yet the system, industry and application taught him by his father established with him habits of accuracy and efficiency which he deems the secret of his success, for he finds that no business can thrive and be successful without accuracy and efficiency at the bottom, as its fundamental principle. Mrs. Buchheim is a member of St. Peter's Lutheran Church at Santa Ana and fraternally Mr. Buchheim is popular as a member of Santa Ana Lodge No. 236, I. O. O. F., as well as the Encampment and Canton of the Odd Fellows, and is a life member of the Santa Ana Lodge of Elks. The Buchheim home is on the land owned by the family and is attractively located, surrounded by flower and vegetable gardens. Music, art and literature find a welcome here, and so does discussion of the latest problems of the day.

W. DEAN JOHNSTON.—The president of the Orange County Farm Bureau and an influential and progressive landowner is W. Dean Johnston of Santa Ana, who has for many years occupied a place of prominence in the agricultural development of the county, where he has resided since he was sixteen years old. Mr. Johnston was born June 13, 1871, at Tipton, Iowa, the son of John and Laura (Safley) Johnston, pioneer farmers of Iowa. John Johnston was a native of Campbellsford, Ontario, Canada, and settled in Iowa in 1865, at the age of seventeen. The mother was a native daughter of Iowa, belonging to the first generation of Iowa girls, her father, John Safley, having emigrated from Scotland and settled there in 1836, when Iowa was on the extreme frontier beyond the limits of civilization. Mr. Safley is still remembered by the people of Santa Ana, having resided on Ross Street for about four years before his death. Mr. and Mrs. John Johnston and their family left their home at Tipton, Iowa, in 1886, coming directly to Santa Ana, and there Mr. Johnston still lives, retired from active business, his wife having passed away in 1914, at the age of sixty-eight years. There were four children in the Johnston family: Mrs. G. W. Tighe, wife of a citrus grower and banker at Fillmore, Cal.; William Dean, of this review; Mrs. J. E. Snow, wife of a real estate broker of Santa Ana; and John Clifford, an electrician for the Ventura Refining Company at Fillmore, Cal.

W. Dean Johnston received his first schooling at the country schools of their neighborhood in Iowa, and attended the Santa Ana high school for one year after the family removed here. Always energetic, he made up his mind to start in to ranching on his own account, and went to Riverside County, where he followed grain and alfalfa farming for five years, becoming the owner of 100 acres of land, but leased 500 or 600 acres in addition, devoting it largely to the production of barley. In 1906 he returned to Orange County and became interested in ranching in the vicinity of Westminster. He is now the owner of two ranches of eighty acres each, which are devoted to sugar beets; besides this, he rents three other ranches, aggregating 242 acres of land, which includes his father's place of twelve acres immediately north of Santa Ana. Mr. Johnston has grown up in the industry of farming in Southern California, and so is thoroughly conversant with its best and most progressive methods. He still continues to conduct his own farming operations, notwithstanding his many other interests, and is equally at home with an eight-horse team or a caterpillar tractor.

While ranching in Riverside County, Mr. Johnston was married at Elsinore to Miss Olive Yates, born in San Diego County, and the daughter of Lafayette and Mary (Brown) Yates, born, respectively, in Alabama and Kentucky, their marriage occurring in Arkansas. The family located at Elsinore in 1886, and Mr. Yates still makes his home there, being well known, especially in Odd Fellow and Knights of Pythias circles. Before coming to Elsinore he resided in Cajon Valley, San Diego County.

Mr. and Mrs. Johnston are the parents of three children: Adelle, a senior in the Santa Ana high school, Fred and John. After residing for a number of years on their ranch near Westminster, the family moved to Santa Ana in March, 1919, and have established their residence on North Main Street.

Mr. Johnston was prominent in the establishment and organization of the Westminster Drainage District, and for four years served as its president. While living at Westminster he served for a number of years on the board of trustees of the Westminster school district and was president of that board when more land was purchased for school purposes and the excellent two-story brick building was erected. He helped organize the Orange County Farm Bureau and was elected on its first board of directors, serving several terms, and was elected to the presidency in 1919, an office for which he is admirably fitted. He is also vice-president and a member of the board of directors of the Orange County Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company. Fraternally, Mr. Johnston is very prominent in Masonic circles, being a member of the Blue Lodge at Huntington Beach, and of the Chapter and Commandery at Santa Ana and the Shriners of Los Angeles. In politics he favors the principles of the Republican party, but is essentially broad-minded and liberal in his views, especially in local issues.

WILLIAM WILSON.—A well-posted, experienced rancher who, through his own worth and exertions, has steadily come to the fore, so that now, the owner of a valuable ranch at Smeltzer, his word is as good as his bond, is William Wilson, a pioneer and prosperous lima bean grower. He has been twenty-three years on the James Irvine, or San Joaquin Ranch, and besides the ranch he owns, he leases and operates 232 acres. He was born near Tipton, Moniteau County, Mo., on April 1, 1864, and was reared on a farm in Polk County of the same state.

Mr. Wilson's father was Bartlett Elmore Wilson, a farmer who is still living at the age of seventy-seven in Douglas County, Mo., where he is popularly known as Uncle Dudd Wilson. He was born in Tennessee, and was of Scotch-English blood. He had married, in Missouri, Miss Emaline Morris, of Dutch-Irish origin, who was also a native of Tennessee, and she died when our subject was only four and a half months old, whereupon his father married again. He had eight children by his second wife, six boys and two girls, all of whom are living; and among them is a half-brother of William Wilson, George B. Wilson, the district attorney of Douglas County, Mo. Another half-brother is the Hon. J. B. Wilson, a member of the Arkansas legislature, while still another half-brother is Thomas Wilson, living at Holly, Colo. Two half-brothers, Francis, a wheat rancher, and David, a school teacher—live in Montana.

In 1889 William Wilson went to Caldwell, Kans., and was in the rush for Oklahoma; but he did not stay there. Instead, he came out to the more promising commonwealth, California, arriving in the Golden State in the spring of 1890. He had been married in Missouri, in 1885, to Miss Emma Shepard, a native of Michigan, and he thus had the good fortune to start with the companionship of a wife who has been a genuine helpmate. He lived at Ventura for seven years, during three of which he followed agriculture, while at other times he worked at various other pursuits, and incidentally learned all about growing lima beans.

In October, 1897, Mr. Wilson came south to Orange County; but the following three years proved so dry and disastrous, that he ran behind and got into debt. He did not despair, however, but persevered and finally prospered. Now he owns eighty acres at Smeltzer, irrigated from artesian wells, which his son-in-law rents and farms to lima beans; and he also raises lima beans where James Irvine once thought he could raise nothing but barley, and in a thousand ways demonstrated that he is not afraid of hard work, and plenty of it.

On April 10, 1908, Mrs. Wilson died, the highly-esteemed and lamented mother of four children: Beryl is a farmer at Chatsworth and the husband of Miss Mamie Jeffrey of Irvine; Maude is the wife of Earl Lentz, the rancher at Smeltzer, and the mother of two children; William Oscar Wilson married Miss Leonore Benott, of Irvine, a prosperous rancher; and they have two children; Leo B. is the husband of Miss Gladys Geyer, of Santa Monica, by whom he has had one child. Fraternally Mr. Wilson is a member of all branches of the Odd Fellows.

Mr. Wilson has for years advocated the principles of the Democratic party, but he has never allowed party politics to influence his action in matters purely local, where the needs of a small, mixed community must be considered. He is a wide reader, a deep thinker, and a good conversationalist; and his influence must necessarily work for the upbuilding of town and county.

Mr. Kilron

LUMIS A. EVANS.—A pioneer of two cities—Pasadena and Anaheim—who started in the good, old-fashioned way as a farm hand contributing his mite toward the development of American agriculture, Lumis A. Evans, the path-breaking dealer in Anaheim real estate is one of the very interesting citizens of Orange County. He was born on a farm in St. Joseph County, Mich., at Centerville, the county seat, on November 8, 1854, and attended the country schools of that section and period. When eighteen years of age, he removed to New York state, to work on a farm, and later he secured employment on an Erie Canal boat plying between Buffalo and New York, an adventure affording him one of the most pleasing experiences of his life. After two years in New York, he returned to his Michigan home for a brief stay.

In the spring of the Centennial year of 1876, he arrived in California and came on to the Anaheim district, then in Los Angeles County, after a run through the northern part of the state; and for a couple of years he worked out by the month on neighboring ranches. In 1878 he was married to Miss Louise Jane Kellogg, a native of Napa, Cal., and a member of a pioneer family; and after marriage, he started to farm in the West Anaheim section on the Garden Grove Road. He had ten acres of his own, and in addition he leased land.

At the end of four years, Mr. Evans located at Pasadena, becoming a pioneer in the truest sense of the word, for when he arrived there in 1881, the place was so small that farming was the chief occupation. He lived there for seven years, and farmed 600 acres to grain in what is now the heart of the city. He was there, in fact, through the big "boom," and also dealt extensively in real estate.

Returning to Anaheim in 1892, he raised sugar beets for the Los Alamitos Sugar Factory; but since 1900 he has followed realty exclusively, dealing extensively in orange groves. He has made a special study of soils and relative land conditions, and has become an authority on that subject; and as the oldest dealer in real estate in Anaheim, in the matter of years of service, he enjoys an esteem and influence such as anyone might covet.

Mr. Evans is also a member of a syndicate which has large land interests in Guatemala, Central America, known as the Guatemala Agricola Central Company, acting as one of its directors, and they hold a large tract of land which is devoted especially to cocoanuts, pineapples, and also to sugar cane, grain and stock raising. In addition, he has extensive mining interests in Sonora, Mexico, which is being operated as the Esperanza Mining Company.

Ten children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Evans. Alice is the wife of H. M. Barker of Iowa. Francis is a lumberman in Siskiyou County. Leonard A. is a graduate of the University of Southern California, holding the diploma through the law school, and is a well-known practicing attorney at Anaheim, with offices in the First National Bank Building. Russell is chief engineer of the pumping station of the General Petroleum Oil Company at Nenach. Bayard H. is a member of the fire department in Los Angeles. Lawrence J. is with the ship yards at Mare Island Navy Yard. Orilla May is a graduate of the Los Angeles College of Osteopathy and practicing at Redlands. Carrie is at home. Benjamin is an engineer at Nenach. Jennie is a graduate of the Anaheim high school and now at home.

Mr. Evans helped to organize the First Christian Church in Pasadena, in 1881, and the First Christian Church in Anaheim, in 1890; and he has been an active member ever since.

HUGH T. THOMSON.—A very interesting family, immediate and in its many worth-while connections, is that of Hugh T. Thomson, the manager of the Jotham Bixby Company's large ranch, as he is also manager of the Peralta Tract, in Villa Park Precinct. He was born in Chicago on August 23, 1871, and growing up there, came to California in 1892, when he was twenty-one years old. He had been married in Chicago, and on arriving here, purchased a ranch of ten acres in the Villa Park Precinct. He was at that time wholly unfamiliar with ranch work, and had had no experience in ranching or orcharding. He was apt, however, and learned rapidly.

Having settled in this vicinity and become acquainted with the late Jotham Bixby, he became an employe on his ranch, and arose to be foreman and superintendent, and was continued in the employment of the Bixby's for a period of twenty-three years. After coming to the Jotham Bixby ranch, Hugh Thomson studied civil engineering and became a practical civil engineer. When the Jotham Bixby Company was organized, and this ranch was taken over by the new corporation, Mr. Thomson remained with the new company; he also had to do with the Bixby Development Company, a subsidiary concern engaged in improving and selling off the Peralta Hills Tract of 400 acres. He set out orchards on this place about fifteen years ago, and now they are in full bearing.

Of all the hard work he has done, however, none gives him more satisfaction than his recent war work. He became enthused about this at Los Angeles when he heard an address by Will H. Hays, Chairman of the Republican National Committee; and he accepted the local secretaryship of the campaigns for the second, third, fourth and fifth loans, and successfully put his constituency over the top every drive in record-breaking time. He was also in charge of two Red Cross drives. In the year 1918 alone he put in five months' time on war work.

He was born, as has been stated, in the early seventies, the son of Somerville Thomson, a wholesale baker in Chicago, who was burned out and ruined during the great Chicago fire. He was a Scotchman by birth, and came to the United States when a young man. He married Elizabeth Boyd, who died at Ontario, Cal., in 1917.

When he married, Mr. Thomson chose for his wife Miss Emma Conger, a cousin of Edwin H. Conger, the American Minister to China at the time of the "Boxer" siege of Peking; and four children have blessed this fortunate union: Hugh Conger Thomson, who was foreman of the Bixby Company, owns a ranch in Villa Park; Somerville Thomson, having returned from war service in France, is at present foreman, in place of his brother Hugh; and there are Margery and Lois, schoolgirls. The family attend the Congregational Church at Villa Park, where Mr. Thomson is a prominent member. He has also done good civic service as a trustee of the Villa Park grammar school, and was on the building committee when the new school, thoroughly up-to-date, was erected. In every way he is interested in the development and permanent, healthy growth of Orange County, and never fails to help along any good movement likely to benefit any of its rising communities.

ANSON LAMB.—The history of the Lamb family in America dates back to the early colonial days. The founder of the family in this country was Terry Lamb, who came from Ireland in the early days of New England and fought in the War of the Revolution under George Washington. During the period of his service he was captured by a band of Oneida Indians, but later a force of cavalry came to his rescue and saved his life. After the Revolutionary War was over the Government took upon itself the task of educating the Indians in the constructive arts of peace, and Mr. Lamb was appointed a teacher to instruct the Oneida tribe and in the course of his work he taught them the trades of blacksmithing and carpentering, as well as the science of farming. Afterwards he settled in Onondaga County, New York, where he established the family home, and here he lived, an honored and respected citizen, until his death in 1824. He and his wife, who was a native of New England, were the parents of five children: Terry, Timothy, William, John and Nancy. Of these children, John became one of the pioneers of Grand Rapids, Mich., and here he lived to the ripe old age of eighty-four years, prominent in the political affairs of his locality and a staunch adherent of the old school of democracy. During his early manhood he had farmed in New York state, and while there married Mary Chase, a native of that state, who passed away at their Michigan home at the age of ninety-six.

Mr. and Mrs. John Lamb were the parents of eight daughters and three sons, and one of the latter was Anson Lamb, the subject of this review. At the time of his birth, August 25, 1818, his parents were still living in New York, and his early years were spent on the old homestead there. He began farming when but a youth, having been brought up to a knowledge of agricultural pursuits, but later he became second mate on a boat plying on the Ohio River. During the Civil War he was in the Government service and after the close of hostilities he located at Nevada, Iowa, where he worked at blacksmithing and also operated a threshing machine. During his residence here, his wife, Caroline (Bartholomew) Lamb, whom he had married in New York, passed away in Dubuque, when their son, William D. Lamb, Orange County's well-known pioneer citizen, was only four years old. Ten years later father and son started across the plains in a Mormon freight train, locating at Salt Lake City. There they embarked in the lumber and sawmill business in Mill Creek Canyon, about nineteen miles from Salt Lake City. Here they developed a remarkably successful business, which they continued in for several years. In the meantime, William D. Lamb had been married to Miss Elizabeth Holt, and shortly after that, about the year 1869, he came to California, settling in what is now Orange County, and becoming one of its best-known settlers and a large ranch owner. Anson Lamb was associated with his son in many of his extensive undertakings and he became the owner of 800 acres of land, 149 acres belonging to the Stearns Rancho, of which William D. Lamb was for many years manager. The remainder of the acreage was formerly a part of the Laguna Rancho. He did much pioneer work in the development of this region and contributed valuably to its agricultural upbuilding. This property descended to the grandchildren. His death occurred at the ranch in August, 1906, at the age of eighty-eight years.

STEPHEN F. CLARKE.—Many years of various business experiences have gone to make up the thorough knowledge and understanding of human nature which has contributed so largely to the success accompanying the efforts of Stephen F. Clarke, of Orange, who is known throughout Orange County as one of its sterling and progressive citizens. A descendant of good old New England stock, Mr. Clarke was born at Boston, Mass., in 1859, his parents being Isaac P. and Caroline (Frothingham) Clarke, both natives of the Bay State, where they passed their entire lives, the father attaining the age of eighty-four, while Mrs. Clarke passed away when seventy-three years of age. There were five sons and one daughter in the Clarke family, as follows: Eben B. of Pittsburgh, Pa.; George F. of Boston, Mass.; Isaac Wells, also a resident of Pittsburgh; Charles McClellan of Buffalo, N.Y.; Edith R. of Pittsburgh; and Stephen F. of this review.

Fortunate in a family environment where a thorough education was considered of prime importance, Stephen F. Clarke was given exceptional advantages and unlike many youths of his age he appreciated these opportunities. Being naturally of a studious disposition he made good use of his time and when his school days were over he was well grounded in all the subjects that are the basis of true education. Taking a special course in drawing, he subsequently made use of the technical knowledge thus acquired when he served as draftsman with the board of park commissioners of Boston. Notwithstanding his pleasant environment and splendid prospects for a successful future amid the cultured surroundings of his birthplace, Mr. Clarke was imbued with the spirit of the early pioneers and chose rather to carve out his future in a new and undeveloped region.

Leaving the parental home in 1883 he chose California for his future home and not long after arriving here he purchased a twenty-acre tract near Orange, ten acres of which had already been planted to oranges, the remainder being uncultivated land. At that time there was much activity in the grape industry in this district, hundreds of acres being planted to vineyard and a number of wineries being established, Mr. Clarke set out ten acres of grapes, but with the gradual dying out of this industry, due to several causes, he later experimented with other crops, among them figs and barley, but while he attained a reasonable success he came to the conclusion some years ago that citrus fruits were the best all-around paying crops. His acreage is now divided between Navels and Valencias and the grove is one of the heaviest producers in this locality, bringing in a handsome income. Mr. Clarke has given his property the most intelligent care and he is rewarded in seeing the value of it increase from $3,500, which he paid for the entire acreage, to what it is today with adjoining land selling for $6,000 an acre besides a sanguine possibility for oil.

In 1908 Mr. Clarke returned to his native state, the occasion being the solemnization of his marriage to Miss Katherine Keith Alger, which occurred on July 20, 1908, at the family home of the Algers at Yarmouth Port, Mass. Mrs. Clarke is the daughter of Francis and Izette (Matthews) Alger, both descendants of old and respected families of the Bay State. Mr. and Mrs. Clarke are the parents of one daughter, Izette Caroline.

In addition to his horticultural holdings Mr. Clarke has also given considerable time to other developments, spending three years at Copperopolis, where he was associated with Fred Ames of the Union Copper Mines. Of recent years he has given much time to the study of the mineral resources of Orange County and it is his belief that this county will be the largest producer of oil in the state of California. An independent in his political views, Mr. Clarke is vitally interested in every movement that concerns the welfare of the nation as well as the purely local issues and during the war he not only gave generously of his time and endeavor in all the drives, but also served as a private in Company Seventy-six, California Military Reserve of Orange.

ANTON SCHILDMAYER and MRS. LOUISA SCHILDMAYER.—When, on December 20, 1919, Anton Schildmeyer passed to his eternal reward, Orange County lost one of the most conscientious of her experienced and industrious ranchers, and one who had long operated on such broad lines as to entitle him to the credit of having been a true empire-builder. He was a studious, widely-read rancher, and his well-planned orchards, symmetrical yards, drying-houses, poultry houses, garages and machine sheds, show the manner of man that he was. He had reached his sixty-fourth year, so that his life may be said to have been fairly well rounded out.

Mrs. Schildmeyer was born near Louisville, Cass County, Nebr., and became a social favorite as Louisa Brunkow, a daughter of Frederick and Ann C. (Panskey) Brunkow. She was educated at the ordinary public schools, and was married in 1882 to Mr. Schildmeyer. Three miles east of Greenwood they bought a farm of 200 acres, which they conducted with success. On March 9, 1893, they came to California, and in August of the same year they commenced to build their two-story, eight-room frame house. He owned two ranches at the time of his death—the home ranch of thirty-three acres, and the ranch where his son, Oscar A. Schildmeyer, resides, three miles northeast of Orange, a fine tract of fifty-five acres. He also owned other valuable personal property, and he became a stockholder in the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Santa Ana.

Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Schildmeyer—three girls, who first saw the light in Cass County, Nebr., and two boys of Orange County birth. Marie A. is the wife of John Gobbruegge, a rancher of Riverside, and the mother of two children. Emma C. married Arthur Hoeffler, a rancher of Owensmouth, Los Angeles County. Martha S., who is at home, is a graduate of the Orange high school and a graduate registered nurse. Oscar A., the rancher living north of Orange, married Merl Brown, and has one child, a boy baby, named Robert. Frederick William operates Mrs. Schildmeyer's place. The family are members of the Evangelical Association of Santa Ana, to whose building committee Mr. Schildmeyer belonged. Mrs. Schildmeyer is a member of the Ladies' Aid and Women's Foreign Missionary Society of said church. This estimable lady continues to reside at the Schildmeyer ranch of thirty-three acres, four acres of which are devoted to the culture of Valencia oranges, two to the growth of Navels, six to apricots, soon to be superseded by Valencias, and the balance to walnuts. The property has long been exceptionally productive, and under the skillful management of the enterprising son, bids fair to become even more so as the years go by.

MATHIAS NISSON.—A prosperous rancher, prominent for years as one of the most successful horticulturists of Orange County, is Mathias Nisson, who was born on March 31, 1847, in Tondern, North Schleswig, near the boundary line of Denmark and Germany, the son of Nis and Esther Nisson, a member of a long line of educators, his grandfather and uncle both being renowned as instructors. Very naturally, therefore, he enjoyed the best of educational advantages in the superior schools of his native land. In 1873, when twenty-six years of age, he bade farewell to home, friends and the scenes long so familiar and dear to him, not because he loved his Fatherland less, but because he believed that the New World would offer greater opportunities.

Passing through New York City, he stayed for a short time in Chicago, and then went to the vicinity of Paxton, Ford County, Ill., where he worked on various farms for three years, and at the same time he attended the district school for a winter's term at Paxton. When 1876 rolled 'round, California began to be more talked about, incidental to the Centennial at Philadelphia, and after a while Mr. Nisson concluded to leave Illinois and make for the Pacific Coast.

That same year, therefore, he reached Orange County and on the fourth of November arrived at Santa Ana, where for four years he worked on various farms. Then in 1880 he purchased twenty-one acres, his present place at 2500 North Main Street, and in his efforts to do something with the land, he went through the hardships of the early grape industry. After the vines had been grubbed out, he planted his own nursery stock, which he next set out. He had five acres in prunes and five acres in apricots. Later still, he grubbed out both the prunes and the apricots and gradually set the whole out to walnuts and oranges. Now he has eleven acres of walnuts, nine acres of Valencia oranges and one acre of Navels and as his ranch is under the service of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, he has an abundance of good water.

For fifteen years Mr. Nisson was a director in the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, serving as president of the board for several years. He also has a joint ownership with John Maier and Henry Rohrs in a pumping plant that throws sixty inches of water. This well is used during the dry season. Mr. Nisson has also improved his ranch with a handsome and commodious residence. He was an organizer and is a director in the California National Bank of Santa Ana, a director in the Santa Ana Steam Laundry, and also a stockholder in the Santa Ana Commercial Company, of which he has been a director. Believing in cooperation, he was one of the organizers and thus a charter member of the Santa Ana Walnut Growers Association, serving as a director for several years. He was also a charter member and a director of the Santiago Orange Growers Association at Orange.

In San Francisco, on July 12, 1888, Mr. Nisson was married to Miss Charlotte Laederich, a native daughter, born in San Francisco. Her parents, Jean Jacques and Louise (Weiss) Laederich, were natives of France, who came to New York City in 1848. In 1849 Mr. Laederich took the gold fever and started for the new Eldorado, coming in a sailing vessel around Cape Horn to San Francisco, so was an Argonaut in the true sense of the word. His wife joined him in 1852, coming by way of Panama, crossing the Isthmus on muleback with Indian guides. Mr. Laederich was prominent in the business and social life of San Francisco in those early days and was a member of the first vigilance committee.

At an early age Mrs. Nisson removed with her parents to Santa Clara, where she received her education and grew proud of California and its institutions. Two children blessed their family life: Clarence A. married Vera Montgomery, and they are living on a citrus grove in Tustin with their two sons—Clarence A., Jr., and Richard Montgomery; Estelle G. graduated at Stanford University with the degree of A. B., after which she did graduate work at Bryn Mawr College, Bryn Mawr, Pa., taking a war course in employment management and industrial supervision, then spending some time in New York City in the personnel division of the Retail Research Association.

The family take an active part in the work of the First Presbyterian Church of Santa Ana; they did their part in the bond drives during the late war and they are alert to contribute in any way to the elevation of civic standards and the election of the best men or women, irrespective of party politics. Mr. Nisson belongs to the Santa Ana Lodge of Odd Fellows and with his wife is a member of the Rebekahs.

ANDREW GUSTAV BLOM.—Probably one of the best known and most expert steel rolling mill men on the Pacific Coast is Andrew Gustav Blom, who is now living on his eighty-acre ranch, beautifully situated in Villa Park. It is one of the finest properties in the vicinity, seventeen acres being set out to oranges and lemons, fifteen acres of hay land and the balance foothill land, in the neighborhood of the oil-producing section of Orange County. When Mr. Blom purchased this place, in October, 1919, it was already improved with a beautiful, commodious mansion, located on a hill commanding a wonderful view of the Santiago Valley, and with its winding roads, beautiful trees and flowers, it is indeed one of the beauty spots of this section. The house is furnished with every convenience enjoyed by the city dweller and sleeping porches and sun parlors add to its attractiveness.

A native of Vermland, Sweden, Mr. Blom was born there on January 8, 1861, and was the fourth eldest of a family of nine children, seven of whom are still living. His parents were Olaf and Annie Blom, both of whom were born, married and died in Sweden, the mother passing away when Andrew was but eleven years of age, leaving the following children: Britta, the wife of Nils Person, a carpenter and builder of Chicago, Ill.; Charles John, in the automobile business at Ishpeming, Mich.; Mary, the widow of Olen Urban, resides on her farm at Washburn, Wis.; Andrew Gustav, of this review; Olaf August, the largest wholesale iron and steel merchant in Stockholm, Sweden; Mina resides in Stockholm; Emma is the wife of A. W. Stark, who is in the hotel business at Milwaukee, Wis.

Olaf Blom, the father, was an iron and steel worker, and Andrew started to work in the steel mills when but a small lad, running the big water-power hammer for his father when he was only nine years old. After his mother's death the home was practically broken up and Andrew went to Toosby, another steel town, where he ran a power hammer for a year. After a short visit at his old home he then went to Soderhamn, in the eastern part of Sweden, where he was engaged in railway construction work; later he located in the large rolling mill town of Munkfors Brook, making railroad iron for construction work. During these twelve years Mr. Blom gained a wonderful training in all the many and varied processes of the steel industry, but, possessed of an unusual amount of energy and ambition, he felt that the New World offered greater opportunities for advancement. Accordingly, he sailed from Gothenburg, Sweden, in April, 1882, expecting to locate at Worcester, Mass., where a sister was living. He worked his way over on a vessel that landed at Philadelphia, Pa., and soon his money gave out and he had to barter a feather pillow for a night's lodging—the last of his possessions, with the exception of his clothing. Reaching Worcester, Mass., he went to work in the wire mills of Washburn, Moen & Co., remaining there for about six months.

Mr. Blom's next move was to St. Louis, Mo., where he obtained work in Helmbacher Forge and Rolling Mill, now well known as the American Car and Foundry Company. Before he had been there three years he was made head roller, a position which he was well qualified to fill through his many years of thorough training. For twenty-four years he remained with this company, gaining a well-deserved reputation for being one of the most expert rolling-mill men in the country, and establishing himself in an authoritative position in this great industry. During his years of residence in St. Louis Mr. Blom was also actively interested in the realty business, building, buying and selling many residences and apartment houses there.

On July 7, 1905, Mr. Blom came to Los Angeles to take the responsible position of head roller with the Southern California Iron and Steel Company, located at Fourth and Santa Fe Streets, holding that position continuously until 1917, when the strike occurred. Mr. Blom went out at that time because of his convictions on the principles involved, and he has never gone back, but now gives all his time to the care of his extensive ranch. This is not Mr. Blom's first venture in the citrus industry, as he was formerly the owner of a grove of fifteen acres between Garden Grove and Anaheim. For many years while Mr. Blom was engaged in work in Los Angeles Mrs. Blom had charge of the orange grove and so successfully did she superintend its development that when it was sold it brought $50,000 net, nearly tripling its purchase price of $17,000. This ranch was one of the show places of Orange County and her flowers took prizes and received honorable mention at the Orange Flower Shows. Mrs. Blom has also shown her talent as a writer of poetry.

Mr. Blom's first marriage, which occurred in St. Louis, united him with Miss Mary Spenley, who passed away there, leaving five children, as follows: Josephine is the wife of R. T. Mitchell, a rolling mill worker in Los Angeles; Stella married Fred Conrad, Jr., employed in the lumber business in Los Angeles; Ollie W., formerly a steel worker, is now a producer of feldspar and silica at Ethanac, Cal., where he is the owner of a mine; Florence, who became the wife of Earl Ladd of Garden Grove, passed away in 1917, leaving two children—Vivian and Oliver; Helen died at the age of eleven in Los Angeles. Mr. Blom was married on March 8, 1905, to Mrs. Elise Floyd, the widow of George G. Floyd, the ceremony being solemnized in St. Louis. She is the daughter of Charles L. and Mary Josephine (Lahay) Pelot, the father being a native of Canton Berne, Switzerland, and the mother of French-Canadian extraction, and was one of a family of seven children, four of whom are now living, all residents of California. Mrs. Blom was born in Farmington, Mo., her father being a well-known business man of that place, but the family later removed to St. Louis, and there her girlhood was spent. Mr. Pelot built up a substantial business there, dealing in coal, lime and cement, having large yards in that city. He passed away there in 1907, at the age of fifty-one years; the mother is still living and makes her home with the Bloms on their beautiful ranch.

Entirely through his own efforts Mr. Blom has, by his untiring industry, reached a high degree of success, and he is now enjoying the fruits of his labor. He is devoted to the country of his adoption and is a firm believer in the permanent prosperity of this section of the country.

JOHN BRUNWORTH.—A liberal-minded, kind-hearted gentleman, who has improved acreage and who never fails to entertain with his interesting and instructive stories of early-settler days, is John Brunworth, of East Center Street, Anaheim. He was born at Edwardsville, Madison County, Ill., on New Year's Day, 1861, the son of Henry Brunworth, who came to St. Louis when that city was a small French town. He soon removed to Madison County and rented land, farming until he got a start; and finally he bought a tract on the rich prairies, and improved it, and added to that by other purchases, so that now, still living at the age of ninety-six, past, he owns 180 acres of very choice farm land. He had married Miss Sophia Buettemeier, who died at the old home. They had ten children, six of whom are at present living; and among those John was the second in the order of birth.

He was brought up in Illinois, where he attended the public schools, and he early went to work at grain growing and stock raising. He also ran a steam thresher for seven years, and did general farming until 1887, when he came to Los Angeles, Cal. The town was then a small place, with not a foot of paving, and he went to work for a liveryman as floor manager. After that, for four years, he was a truck driver for Hellman, Haas and Company, and it was not until 1893 that he located at Anaheim.

He bought ten acres on Sycamore Street, planted to walnuts and figs; but he soon dug the figs out, and, instead, set out oranges. In 1910, he bought another ten acres which he improved, again setting out walnuts and oranges; so that he had twenty acres, which he managed with success until 1917, when he disposed of his holdings. He still owns residence property in Anaheim.

In Los Angeles Mr. Brunworth was married to Miss Ernestine Frederick, a native of Germany who died at Anaheim, the mother of two children. Albert was in the Sixth U. S. Marines, Second Division, and served overseas, on the Argonne front, without getting a scratch; Eleanor Brunworth became Mrs. Dyer of Hollywood. Mr. Brunworth married a second time, at Anaheim, choosing for his bride Miss Pauline Kroeger, a native of Anaheim and the daughter of Henry Kroeger, one of the pioneers of the town. A Democrat in national politics, Mr. Brunworth is a nonpartisan "booster" in every local movement giving promise of contributing toward the building up and the elevating of the community and county in which he lives, works and prospers. He attends the Lutheran Church of Anaheim.

Colum C. Chapman

COLUM C. CHAPMAN.—Prominent among the level-headed, far-seeing men of invaluable experience and unimpeachable integrity, to whom not only Orange County but Southern California will ever be agreeably indebted for public-spirited interest and years of unselfish service in both the development of the state's resources and the upbuilding as well as the building up of the communities with which he has had to do, must be mentioned Colum C. Chapman, of the well-known Eastern family which has come to play such an enviable role, in one way or other, in the Golden State. He was born at Macomb, McDonough County, Ill., on August 23, 1858, the son of Sidney S. and Rebecca Jane (Clark) Chapman, who removed with him, when he was ten years of age, to the village of Vermont, Fulton County, Ill. In 1872 Mr. Chapman and his family moved again, this time to Chicago; and in that fast-expanding city Colum grew up and remained until the middle nineties.

During his residence in Chicago, Colum Chapman was connected with various enterprises, and they were all of such a character as to reflect with credit his inclinations and his ability. For some years, for example, he was head of the lithographing department in the publishing house of Chapman Bros., and as such had much to do with the extension of education in the Middle West, the proper preservation for future, accessible reference of historical data and memorials, and with the formation of popular taste in art. At Chicago, also, on November 9, 1887, Mr. Chapman was married to Miss Anna J. Clough, of Chicago, a gifted lady with the capacity for making friendships. Her father was a native of England, doubtless related to Arthur Hugh Clough, the poet of that country so popular with our New England bards, and her mother came of good old Puritan stock in Providence, R. I.

In March, 1894, Mr. Chapman made his first trip to California, to look over the lay of the land and decide upon a future site for location, after which he returned to Chicago; and in December of the following year he came out to Los Angeles, bringing with him his family. He then removed to Fullerton, and for four years he was on Charles C. Chapman's ranch, after which he went back to Los Angeles for another three years. He then went to Monrovia, where he had an orange grove of twenty acres, which he sold at the end of three years. Again he took up his residence in Los Angeles, where he remained until he came to Yorba Linda, in November, 1917.

Since taking up his residence and responsibilities here, Mr. Chapman has been active in various lines such as spell prosperity for others as well as himself, and augur well for a section of the great commonwealth with unrivalled resources awaiting appreciation and development. He has improved forty acres by the setting out of oranges, and leased part of his ranch to the Ridge Oil Company, in which he is a large stockholder. While in Los Angeles, he was engaged in the handling of important real estate and in building high-class residences, and he also superintended certain interest of his brother, and still looks after those interests.

Two sons bless the fortunate union of Mr. and Mrs. Chapman. Llewellyn Sidney was born in Chicago on May 22, 1891, and married Miss Ruth Reid, who is a graduate of the University of Southern California preparatory school and took a course at the University of Southern California; they live on the home ranch and are the parents of one daughter, Marilyn; Colum Clough Chapman was born at Fullerton, on February 11, 1899, graduated from the Hollywood high school, and is now pursuing a course in agriculture at the Davis branch of the State University. True to the traditions of the Chapman family, Mr. Chapman is a member and active supporter of the Christian Church, and being a man who favors training the body as well as the mind and the soul, he belongs to the Los Angeles Athletic Club.

MITT O. AINSWORTH.—A public-spirited citizen of Orange, whose position as vice-president and director in the Orange Savings Bank, and as a stockholder in the National Bank of Orange, makes him naturally a leader of wide, helpful influence, is Mitt O. Ainsworth, a native son who was born near Weaverville, Trinity County, Cal., on April 1, 1860. His father was Lewis Ainsworth, whose sketch is given on another page in this work. Mitt O. was reared in that locality until he was eight years old, when he removed with his parents to Iowa. There, in Monticello, Jones County, he remained until he was eighteen; he went to the public schools, and in 1878 moved on to Glasco, Kans., where he engaged in farming. In 1888, he pushed out to the great Northwest, with his family, and at Salem, Ore., he followed farming. In 1890 he came back to Glasco; and when a bank was started there, he entered its service, and continued banking for four years. Then he resumed farming and also took up stock raising; he cultivated wheat and corn, and fed cattle and hogs.

In 1903 Mr. Ainsworth came out to California, and at Orange embarked in the lumber trade, having his father and brother as partners; he became a member of the Ainsworth Lumber and Milling Company, and became its vice-president and a director.

He took an active part in it until he sold out; they built a planing mill which was burned to the ground, and then they rebuilt it on modern lines, had a large lumber yard and enjoyed a fast-growing trade. Since he sold out, in May, 1914, Mr. Ainsworth has engaged in ranching, growing oranges, lemons and walnuts. He has bought, improved and sold ranches, and he now owns a ten-acre ranch of oranges and lemons, and another ranch of ten acres on Tustin Avenue, where seven and a half acres are given up to oranges and two and a half acres to lemons. Naturally enough, Mr. Ainsworth is a member of the Villa Park Orchards Association, and the Central Lemon Growers Association.

During his residence at Glasco, Kans., Mr. Ainsworth was married to Miss Nellie Sutton, a native of Iowa, the ceremony taking place in 1883. Four children have blessed the fortunate union. Rose has become Mrs. B. J. Fletcher of Orange; Ina is Mrs. Carl Schmidt of San Fernando; Jesse is a rancher in Orange; and Nellie is Mrs. Earl Johnson of Nuevo. Mr. and Mrs. Ainsworth are members of the Christian Church of Orange; and Mr. Ainsworth is a trustee and also a deacon in the church.

JOHN WEHRLY, M. D.—A physician who, following exceptional and technical preparation for his work, and years of illuminating practice, has come to take front rank among the best representatives of medicine and surgery in Santa Ana, is Dr. John Wehrly, the fifth oldest practitioner in point of service in the city. A native of Canton Aaru, Switzerland, John Wehrly was born April 1, 1868, the son of Samuel and Marie (Simons) Wehrly, both born in the same canton, and living only about five miles from the original Hapsburg Castle. They had four children, two of whom died in infancy, and the others were Samuel Wehrly, Jr., a farmer near Kane, Greene County, Ill., and John Wehrly, of this review. The mother died in Greene County in 1913, aged seventy-seven years, and the father, now past eighty-five, makes his home with his son in Santa Ana. He was the owner of a 200-acre farm in Greene County for many years, selling it at a recent date at a very satisfactory advance in price.

John was but a lad of four years of age when his parents came to America, and he grew up on the Greene County farm, attending both the grammar and the high schools of Carrollton, in that county. Having a natural aptitude and a leaning for the medical profession, he began his studies under Dr. C. A. Armstrong of Carrollton, and a year later matriculated, in September, 1887, at the Missouri Medical College, and was graduated therefrom on March 4, 1890, with his degree of M. D. The young physician began his practice in Jacksonville, Ill., and one year later removed to Highland, Madison County, that state, where he continued for three years as a general practitioner.

In 1894 we find Dr. Wehrly in St. Louis, specializing in diseases of the stomach and electro-therapeutics and winning a deserved popularity. Desiring a change of environment, he decided to come to California, and in 1901—an eventful year in his eventful career—located in the city of Santa Ana and opened an office in the Henry Finley Block, continuing there for eight years. As his practice grew he moved into the Farmers and Merchants Bank Building and remained there until able to move into his own building at 607 North Main Street. This was built in 1912, expressly for his growing clientele, and is equipped with all modern conveniences. Soon after locating in Santa Ana, Dr. Wehrly went east to Chicago and pursued a post-graduate course in electro-therapeutics and diseases of the stomach, intestines and bladder, and there learned the latest word of science and was enabled to take the lead in his specialties after resuming his practice here.

Besides having a large general practice, Dr. Wehrly served as county physician from 1911 to 1915. At the beginning the hospital was located at the corner of Fifth and Spurgeon streets, in the city of Santa Ana, but in 1913 Dr. Wehrly encouraged the board of supervisors to purchase seventy-three acres of land in the West Orange Precinct for a county farm, and also assisted in planning the new county hospital building. This investment by the board has been a wise one, for the market value of the land has increased many times since it was made, and has shown the far-sightedness of Dr. Wehrly. The Doctor is a member of the American Medical Association, the State Medical Society, the Southern California Medical Society, the Orange County Medical Society and the Pacific Coast Roentgen Ray Society, and was vice-president of the Santa Ana Hospital.

While a resident of Highland, Madison County, Ill., Dr. Wehrly and Miss Augusta Wehrle were united in marriage on November 17, 1892. She is a native of Highland and the daughter of Andrew and Katherine (Raber) Wehrle. Mr. Wehrle was a well-known business man of that city and there the daughter was reared and educated. Two children blessed their union: John L., graduated from the Santa Ana high school in 1916 and became a student at the U. C. Dental College in Los Angeles. During the World War he enlisted in the students' training corps and, after his honorable discharge at the signing of the armistice, resumed his studies, being a member of the class of '21; Waldo S., graduated from the Santa Ana high school in 1918 and was in the students' training corps as a student at Throop College at Pasadena. After his honorable discharge he resumed his college work and is now taking a medical course in the medical department of the University of California at Berkeley, Cal. The family attend and belong to the First Methodist Episcopal Church at Santa Ana, where Dr. Wehrly is a member of the board of stewards.

Dr. Wehrly was chief examiner for Exemption Board No. 1 of Santa Ana, during the World War, until enlisting in the service in August, 1918, being commissioned captain of the base hospital at Camp Kearney, and was given charge of the gastrointestinal ward until transferred to Fort Snelling, Minn., and while stationed there base hospital No. 108 was organized. From Fort Snelling he was ordered to France, and sailed from Hoboken, N. J., October 31, 1918, on the George Washington, one of the captured German liners. The vessel arrived at Brest on November 9, 1918, and two days later the armistice was signed. His services were still needed, however, and he assisted at the base hospital at Meves, near Nevers, France; was promoted to major on May 2, 1919, and on May 3 was transferred to the Thirty-sixth Division, made up from Texas and Oklahoma. - He left Brest in May and landed at Hoboken June 2, and was honorably discharged at Camp Dix, N. J., June 8, and arrived home in Santa Ana June 13, 1919. Dr. Wehrly is a major in the Medical Reserve; a member of the Association of Military Surgeons of the United States; president of Santa Ana Post No. 131, American Legion; chairman of the Santa Ana Chapter of the American Red Cross; and chairman of the Santa Ana Board of Health. In matters fraternal he belongs to Santa Ana Lodge No. 794, B. P. O. Elks, and is a Knights Templar Mason and belongs to the Eastern Star Chapter, in which he is past patron. In national politics always a Republican, Dr. Wehrly never lets partisan affiliation interfere when it comes to local offices, and supports men and measures he deems best suited for the greatest good to the greatest number of people, and for the upbuilding of the city and county of his adoption, where he is held in the highest esteem by all who know him.

CHARLES EDWARD RUDDOCK.—One of the most esteemed and helpful residents of Fullerton was the late Charles E. Ruddock, and his death, which occurred on February 2, 1917, in the prime of his manhood, was a distinct loss to the community, where he had won a high position in the regard of his fellowtownsmen; and he left behind him a record of quiet, honest and earnest integrity which has placed his name on the roll of honored citizens of that city. Like hundreds of California's citizens who have aided in bringing it to its present wonderful development, Mr. Ruddock was an Easterner by birth. He first saw the light of day on March 8, 1864, in Chenango County, N. Y., his parents being Chester S. and Sarah J. (Chandler) Ruddock, natives, respectively, of Massachusetts and New York.

When he was but three years of age, Mr. Ruddock's parents decided to try their fortunes in the Middle West, and they traveled out as far as Wisconsin, settling in Winnebago County, where the father engaged in agricultural pursuits. Here Charles was reared, receiving his education in the country schools, and like the other lads of his day, learned the rudiments of farming by assisting his father on the home place. He grew to manhood in this state, near Berlin, Green Lake County, and on November 27, 1884, was united in marriage with Miss Lila L. Ruddock, a native of Wisconsin, the daughter of Asahel Dwight and Julia Amelia (De Forris) Ruddock.

On November 1, 1896, Mr. and Mrs. Ruddock came to Fullerton, Cal., and entered at once into the life of the community. Mr. Ruddock purchased twelve acres on West Wilshire Street; this was planted to young Navel oranges and walnut trees, and later he set out late Valencias, and other varieties. He also bought twelve acres of raw land, three-fourths of a mile west of Fullerton, which was planted to lemons, and which he later disposed of. He built a substantial home on Commonwealth Avenue, and here he made his home for fifteen years, then bought a place on North Birch Street, Santa Ana, and lived there five years, then moving into the home on West Wilshire, where he died. Always interested in promoting every worthy project for the good of the community, and a firm believer in cooperation, he was a member and stockholder in the Placentia Orange Growers Association, the Fullerton Walnut Growers Association and the Anaheim Water Company.

A staunch Republican, Mr. Ruddock was always prominent in the councils of his party and in the political life of the county. In 1910 he was honored by being elected to the office of sheriff of Orange County, serving a four-year term. Prior to this he was city marshal of Fullerton for eight years. For years he was very active in fraternal life, being a Scottish Rite Mason, past master of the Fullerton Lodge, a Knight Templar and Shriner. He was also a member of the Odd Fellows and Elks lodges of Santa Ana. In his religious affiliations, Mr. Ruddock was an adherent of the Presbyterian Church and was a prominent member and trustee of the Fullerton organization. A natural musician, he was an excellent performer on both the violin and cornet, and in Winnebago County, Wis., organized and led the band at Koro for seven years. He organized the Fullerton band and was its president.

Mr. and Mrs. Ruddock were the parents of two children. Ray, the only son, is deceased; the daughter, Pearl L., is the wife of W. E. Oswald of Fullerton, and she is the mother of two children—Una Claire and Wanda Mae. Mrs. Ruddock has also always been prominent in fraternal circles, being past worthy matron of the Eastern Star Chapter at Fullerton, and past noble grand of Sycamore Lodge of Rebekahs at Santa Ana; during the war she was very active in Red Cross work. When she came to Fullerton with her husband it had a population of only 750 people, and from this small hamlet she has witnessed its growth to its present thriving proportions. While Mr. Ruddock was in the East, she erected a beautiful new bungalow at 211 West Wilshire Street, Fullerton, and here she makes her home. She has also subdivided the remainder of the twelve acres on West Wilshire Street which they first purchased. This is known as the Ramona subdivision and is one of the finest residential sections of Fullerton, many beautiful residences being erected there.

MAX NEBELUNG.—In a roster of the pioneers of Orange County, no name is more deserving of prominence than that of Max Nebelung, for not alone was he one of the earliest settlers in this section, but he was a pioneer in industry as well, for it was through his unaided efforts that two of Orange County's greatest sources of wealth received their start—that of walnut growing and the raising of sugar beets, for through their development millions of dollars are added each year to the wealth of the county. So marvelous have been the improvements and changes which the past few years have brought that it is difficult to picture, even in the imagination, the barren, undeveloped state of this locality when Max Nebelung arrived in 1868, alone and practically penniless.

Born in Germany, at Ellrich in the Province of Saxony, on November 25, 1844, Mr. Nebelung received a good education in the schools of his native land. On completing his education he followed the occupation of clerk in retail stores, but when he had reached the age of twenty-three years, he felt that there were greater opportunities in store for him in America. Accordingly he left his native shores in 1867, arriving in New York in July of that year. Going to Utica, N. Y., he secured work in the woolen mills located near there. In 1868, however, he decided to come to California; he made his journey by way of the Isthmus of Panama, coming to San Francisco by steamer. He had as a companion a boyhood friend who had come from Germany with him; not finding employment in San Francisco the two boys, in company with two others, came south to San Pedro, where they found a small wharf about twelve feet long, one house and a small lumber yard. They proceeded to Los Angeles, bought a wagon and mules, and started overland to Arizona, intending to try mining. Near Searchlight, Nev., they worked for a time in a silver mine, but as the prospect of wealth seemed so uncertain they disposed of their outfit and proceeded to Fort Mojave, where a troop of U. S. cavalry were stationed. Here they experienced some of the thrills of the early day, before they found an opportunity to join a man who was coming to California and came to San Bernardino and on to Los Angeles, remaining there a few weeks; then hearing of the colony which had settled at Anaheim, Mr. Nebelung made his way there, arriving in December, 1868, and liked the looks of the place. He first found employment in a winery, where he remained a year and a half, afterwards clerking in a general store and became acquainted with the people and conditions. In those days Anaheim Landing was the port of entry for steamers, and Mr. Nebelung secured the position of freight clerk for the Anaheim Lighter Company, working there two years, assisting in loading, unloading and checking freight that came and went by steamer. He then went back to clerking, taking a position in the general store of August Langenberger, who was the first storekeeper in Anaheim. He remained there for eight years, the last five as manager of the store.

Mr. Nebelung then bought twenty acres of land on West Orangethorpe Avenue, which he planted to vineyard, but later lost all by blight. He then planted ten acres to walnuts and figs and on the other ten he planted Pampas grass, which in those days was very popular for decorative purposes. After being cured he packed it and shipped it in carload lots to England and Germany, Mr. Nebelung receiving $2,000 a year for the crop. After Pampas grass went out of fashion he planted the acreage to walnuts and oranges. During this time he followed the real estate and insurance business in Anaheim.

In the meantime, Mr. Nebelung had bought nineteen acres of land on East Sycamore Street, which he planted to budded walnuts and Valencia oranges, selling his Orangethorpe Avenue ranch. He personally did all the work of planting on his new place, rebuilt the old house, made many improvements, and here he has made his home for many years. A successful orange grower, he was the first manager of the first orange growers' association in Anaheim. He was the first man to start the development and shipping of walnuts in Southern California. He urged the ranchers to plant more walnuts, and then became a buyer, shipper and packer, selling them in the Los Angeles market; for the first lot he paid nine cents a pound. For fifteen years he carried on this business, one year shipping twenty-two cars from the district, buying all over Orange County, the largest buyer in his day. He was also the originator of sugar beet growing in Southern California, importing the seed from Germany. It was tried out with success and he urged the farmers to plant on a commercial scale, and from this small start has grown the large sugar beet industry, so he can justly be called the father of the sugar beet industry in Orange County.

J. C. Sheppard

Progressive and public spirited, Mr. Nebelung has held many official positions in the civic and commercial organizations of the community. He served as a director of the Anaheim Union Water Company, and for ten years was a member of the audit board; for fourteen years consecutively he was city clerk of Anaheim, being elected seven times and defeated the last time by only one vote; he was chairman of the board of trustees of Anaheim from 1910 to 1914, and one term on the board of education; for seventeen years he has been secretary of the Anaheim Cemetery Association. For three years he was proprietor of the old Anaheim Hotel, which stood where the beautiful new Valencia Hotel now stands. He is the owner of a modern apartment house which he recently built on the corner of Chartres and Lemon streets. With three associates Mr. Nebelung owns a small ranch at Richfield which is leased for oil to the Midway Petroleum Company.

In 1883, Mr. Nebelung was married to Josephine Finck, born in Missouri, daughter of Henry Finck, a pioneer of Oregon, who later moved to Anaheim where he was a music teacher. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Nebelung: Dolores died when four years old; Mrs. Elsie P. Skinner of Anaheim, the mother of three children living: Violet, Mrs. Thomas F. Cantwell of Los Angeles, who has one child; and Raymond E., who is a graduate of University of California and is farm adviser of Riverside County.

JAMES C. SHEPPARD.—An esteemed rancher who, after a busy apprenticeship of many years in the science of agriculture, has become a successful orange and walnut grower, is James C. Sheppard, who was born near Eldorado, Union County, Ark., on August 31, 1856. His father, who was killed when our subject was only one and a half years old, was Abner Sheppard, and he married Miss Lucinda Carrol, now deceased. Of their three sons, James was the second in order of birth and is the only one living.

Having been educated in the public schools of Arkansas, Mr. Sheppard came to California in 1875, and wishing to acquire a higher education, he attended the Southern California College at Downey for two years and then entered the law department of the University of California, but before graduation was advised by a specialist that he must give up studying or lose his eyesight; so he was obliged to give up his ambition of a legal career and turn his attention to other lines. In 1880 he began working as a railroad contractor and helped to build the Santa Fe from San Diego to Colton.

Mr. Sheppard then took up farming on the Alamitos ranch at Long Beach, and for four years he was a partner of John W. Bixby & Company, in the raising of stock. Selling out his interests there, he came to Fullerton in 1890 and bought his present place of fifty-six acres, and in the following January he came here to live. He has been very successful in the development of this place, which is devoted to oranges and walnuts, and it is now bringing in splendid returns. Mr. Sheppard has not given all his time to agriculture, however, as he has been very active in a number of irrigation projects. A good illustration of his capability is found in the building up of the Anaheim Union Water Company, which he superintended; it was badly run down, but for more than eight years he clung to it and reconstructed it, restoring it to its old prosperity. After resigning as superintendent of this company he engaged in general contracting; he built the Arroyo Ditch Company's system at Downey, the Los Nietos Irrigation Company's project, the Cate Water System at Riviera and the San Juan Capistrano Irrigation System, all splendid water systems. Next he built five and a half miles of the Salt Lake Railroad through Senator Currier's ranch and in each direction from his place in Pomona Valley. Next he constructed the water system for Canal No. 6 in the Imperial Valley through Lower California, about thirty miles in length. In his work he used 250 head of stock and a full complement of men. Mr. Sheppard has always been a lover of fine horses and at various times has owned some very fine standard-bred stock. He is particularly fond of horseback riding and now has a beautiful black saddle horse which he admires and enjoys very much.

At Spadra, January 16, 1884, Mr. Sheppard was married to Miss Dixie C. Fryer, the accomplished and charming daughter of Rev. R. C. and Caroline (Veazey) Fryer, natives of Alabama, who were pioneers of El Monte where she was born. Reverend Fryer with his family crossed the plains in 1852. In 1869 they located at Spadra, where they engaged in agricultural pursuits. Reverend Fryer was one of the pioneer Baptist ministers in Southern California. He founded numerous congregations in Southern California, among them Santa Ana, Pomona and many others. He also served as a member of the state legislature. He passed to the great beyond in 1890, his wife having preceded him eleven years. Mrs. Sheppard was engaged in educational work and taught school in Pomona, in 1883, until her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Sheppard have four children: Edna May is the wife of W. K. Tuller of Los Angeles; Carrie assists her mother in presiding over the home; Sue Lucinda is the wife of C. C. McBride of Hermosa Beach; James C., Jr., left Occidental College to enter an officers' training camp and was stationed in Texas when the armistice was signed. He is again at Occidental College and is president of the student body.

Mr. and Mrs. Sheppard are prominent members of the Baptist Church, having been among the twelve original members that organized the church at Fullerton, Mrs. Sheppard serving as the secretary for many years. A firm believer in protection Mr. Sheppard is a decided Republican, but he has never solicited nor accepted public office. He has for many years been affiliated with the Odd Fellows, is active in the circles of the Fullerton Board of Trade, and for several years served on the board of directors of the Anaheim Union Water Company. Fullerton may be congratulated on such a citizen as James C. Sheppard—an idealist ever desiring the best that is available for his town and its environs.

O. T. CAILOR.—To such learned, experienced and common sense members of the California Bar as O. T. Cailor, the well-known attorney and junior member of the firm of Tipton and Cailor, Orange County owes much of her rapid progress in certain fields, on which account all who enjoy an acquaintance with this gentleman will congratulate him for his steady and increasing success. He is a Hoosier by birth, and was born in Clay County, Ind., on June 19, 1865. His father was Tobias Cailor, a general mechanic and wagon maker, who married Miss Alma Moody, by whom he had five children. He passed away years ago, and Mrs. Cailor died in 1912 at the home of our subject. The second eldest in the family, O. T. was sent to the rural schools in Clay County, and later attended the State Normal School, after which he taught for twelve years, then entered the University of Indiana, from the Law School of which, after a stiff course of two years, he was graduated in 1894, and for a while practiced in Clay County, and there he tried himself out.

In 1902, Mr. Cailor came west to California and settled at Anaheim; and almost at once he began to practice. The readiness with which he impressed those who came in contact with him of his knowledge of the law, and the force of his strong, but pleasing personality, combined to bring him more and more patronage; and for years he has been numbered among the leading lawyers of Orange County. He belongs to both the State and the County Bar Associations; while as a Republican, he has taken an active part in national political affairs and in the elevation of citizenship and a stimulated, healthy civic interest. He is especially active in the Board of Trade.

On December 15, 1898, Mr. Cailor was married to Miss Essie Glick, also a native of Indiana, and they are the parents of four children. Ray and Fay are twins; while the other children are Clarence and Alma. All are able to boast of California birth, and thus to belong to the enviable army of "native sons and daughters." Mr. Cailor is both an Odd Fellow and a Mason—having passed all chairs in the former.

MRS. MARTHA A. NIMOCKS.—One of the beautiful country homes in western Orange County is owned by Mrs. Martha, or "Mattie" A. Nimocks, and lies one-half mile east of Talbert. Mrs. Nimocks resides in her beautiful country residence, but leases the 184 acres of her ranch to tenants for raising lima beans and sugar beets. A native of Wisconsin, she was born in Milwaukee, the daughter of Plummer Brownell, a manufacturer there of the Brownell plows and other agricultural implements, who moved to Omro, Wis., after the death of his wife, which occurred when Martha was four years old. Mrs. Nimocks is a grand-niece of Stonewall Jackson on her mother's side, who was in maidenhood Ann Jackson. Her father married again, and Martha was adopted into the family of Bonaparte Blackmer, storekeeper at Omro, Wis., in whose family she grew to young womanhood and was educated in the public schools of Omro. Later she went to live with some of her mother's relatives

Henry Dr. Roberts.

Mrs Anna Johns

near Milwaukee, Wis. She has an own sister Elsie, Mrs. Williams Brooks, living at Argyle, LaFayette County, Wis.

For over thirty years Mrs. Nimocks has owned the ranch near Talbert, and has lived on the place since 1904. Previous to 1904 she owned the celebrated Hawkins Ranch at Santa Fe Springs, which she operated successfully as an orange grove and fruit ranch, its 140 acres being set to oranges, pears and alfalfa under her direction. Magnificently built up for those days, this property was for many years one of the show places of Los Angeles County, Mrs. Nimocks' rare sense of the beautiful and artistic nature serving in good stead in the plans carried out on the ranch. Needing pasture for her increasing herd of cattle and band of horses she purchased the 184 acres near Talbert from the Stearns Rancho Company about thirty years ago, when the county was yet undeveloped. This place was a part of what was known as "Gospel Swamp," and was grown up to willows and tules. She cleared the land and made it one of the most valuable ranches in the Talbert district. When she purchased the place a cow corral was located near the site of her present residence. She had bought fine blooded, registered Jersey cattle and for many years successfully ran a large dairy business. She formerly owned the Argyle Hotel at Second and Olive streets in Los Angeles. Mrs. Nimocks was in early life a member of the Good Templar Lodge, and has been a consistent worker for prohibition, suffrage, and the good of the common weal. She has been interested in all movements for the advancement of Southern California and gifted with unusual tact, business ability and executive force, she is one of the few women of her generation who have really been successful in business operations, and is a well-known business woman with a wide acquaintance in California. Attractive, accomplished and interesting, her admirable traits of character in addition to her natural ability, have won many friends who esteem her for her intrinsic worth, and her name will be chronicled in the annals of Orange County among its citizens who have contributed to the highest development and progress of that portion of Southern California.

HENRY W. ROHRS.—Among the enterprising and successful of Orange County ranchers is Henry W. Rohrs, the well-known pioneer horticulturist and capitalist, who attributes much of his prosperity to his devoted and equally far-seeing and industrious wife. He was born in Hiddingen, in the kingdom of Hanover, Germany, on June 12, 1851, the son of Henry Rohrs, an experienced farmer of that section, who had married Annie Vos. The lad attended the grade schools of Hanover until he was fifteen years of age, and then began to paddle his own canoe, working on farms in the vicinity of his old home for seven years.

In 1873 he left home for America, sailing from Bremerhaven in a steamer that took nine days in crossing the Atlantic. He stopped for a while in Ohio, and helped raise grapes, peaches and other fruit. He also assisted in making wine, for which, as well as the choice fruit, there was a good market in Chicago, Detroit and Toledo.

On December 1, 1880, Mr. Rohrs arrived in Wilmington, Cal., in which city, none too attractive then, he remained for a couple of weeks. Then he came into what is now Orange County; and at Santa Ana purchased his present place of fourteen acres at the corner of Lincoln and Santa Clara avenues. Then the best of land sold for seventy-five dollars an acre; and the price, as well as the promise of the new acquisition, appealed to one who had seen the more worked-out East.

When he migrated to America, he entered the port of Baltimore, and having taken a train west, located at Napoleon, Ohio. Soon after, however, he went to Kelley's Island, in Erie County, and there, for three years, he rented land. At the latter place, on April 30, 1878, Mr. Rohrs was married to Miss Anna Cordes, also a native of Hanover, Germany, who came to America with her parents while she was quite young. Five children survive from this fortunate union. William H. lives at Orange; Marie C. resides at Dixon and is the wife of William Wittman, a rancher; the next in order of birth were twins—Albert F., who is at Orange, and Nellie K., who resides at home; while the youngest living is Otto C., who also resides at Orange. Mrs. H. W. Rohrs passed away on February 27, 1914, and was buried at Fairhaven; she was a woman highly esteemed for her many virtues and was mourned by her family and friends.

Mr. Rohrs owns some of the best land between Santa Ana and Orange, where at first he set out half of the acreage to vineyard, reserving the balance for Australian Navel and Mediterranean Sweet oranges, and later he put in Valencia oranges and walnuts instead. In 1883, he purchased ten acres across the Santa Fe tracks, and there he is growing oranges and walnuts. The Santa Fe laid a track through his land in the "boom" year of 1887, from Santa Ana to Orange.

Mr. Rohrs is the owner of some very desirable ranch property at Olive, and is interested in other ranches at McPherson and Buena Park. He uses a tractor and four horses on his farms. In 1881 he built a beautiful, symmetrical residence on his ranch, or home-place. A believer in cooperation, he is a member of Santiago Orange Growers Association and also in the McPherson Heights and the Olive Heights Associations, and he also belongs to the Central Lemon Growers Association at Villa Park, and the Santa Ana Valley Walnut Growers Association, and he is a stockholder in the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company.

In national political affairs—a subject always of absorbing interest to Mr. Rohrs—he is a Republican, although he never allows partisanship to affect him in his support of local measures and men likely to benefit the localities in which he lives and operates, and where he endeavors to see that others besides himself have a winning chance. He has always favored Prohibition, and in church membership belongs to the Evangelical Association, having been one of the organizers of the church at Santa Ana, and served on the board of trustees as well as the building committee. In 1910, he made an extended trip to his old home in Germany, when he was accompanied by his daughter, Marie. They visited the relatives at his former home, and then traveled through France, Belgium, Holland, Switzerland and Italy, remaining away from home for about seven months, and during their trip they had the pleasure of visiting Oberammergau, when they witnessed the Passion Play. In Italy they visited the Coliseum and Catacombs of Rome as well as Vesuvius and ancient Pompeii.

Albert F. Rohrs enlisted on May 21, 1917, in the naval reserve band, at San Pedro, and traveled with that organization to many cities on the Coast, playing at concerts in behalf of the loan drives, the Red Cross campaigns, and in support of other war activities. And on December 21, 1918, he received his honorable discharge at San Francisco.

MRS. ELLA D. COLE.—The owner of one of Orange County's most profitable ranches is Mrs. Ella D. Cole, whose husband was the late Myrtle Cecillian Cole. The history of the Cole family in America dates back to the earliest colonial days, the first representatives of the family coming over from England in 1629 and settling at Plymouth. They were prominently identified with all the early development of those pioneer days and when the days of the Revolutionary War came the Cole family furnished more than 1,000 soldiers to help in the defense of the principles of American liberty. In religious affiliation the Coles were of the Baptist persuasion and they played an important part in the early days of that denomination as well as in the succeeding generations. A family of education, character and progressiveness, they have always been leaders in every community in which they have settled.

Mrs. Cole, who before her marriage was Miss Ella Delavan, was born at Canaan, Columbia County, N. Y., in 1855, the Delavan family being of French Huguenot ancestry. Her parents were Albert H. and Mary A. (Sperry) Delavan, the Sperrys being one of Connecticut's prominent families who settled in central New York in the early days, Mrs. Delavan having the advantage of an education in the select schools of the latter state. At the time of Mrs. Cole's birth, her father, Albert H. Delavan, was engaged in farming in eastern New York, but when a young man he had been in the railroad business, having had charge of the freight house at Canaan, N. Y. He was also superintendent of construction of the street railway at Albany, N. Y., and of the Albany and Binghamton Railway.

In Duanesburgh, N. Y., on January 31, 1878, occurred Mrs. Cole's marriage, when she was united with Myrtle Cecillian Cole, who was also a native of New York. He was born at Deansboro, in Oneida County, September 18, 1854, and received his first schooling in that neighborhood, afterward attending a school at Delhi, N. Y., so that he was fortunate in receiving a good education. He also studied law and was admitted to the bar in the Empire State; for some time he practiced law at Deansboro and kept books for his father, Menzo White Cole, who was extensively engaged in growing hops in central New York. Myrtle C. Cole afterwards became interested in agriculture and operated a large market garden at Oneida, Madison County, N. Y. In 1898, with his wife and children he came to California, first settling at Glendora, where he remained for one year, coming then to Santa Ana, where he took up agriculture and horticulture, farming twenty acres at Wintersburg which was formerly the property of his father, M. W. Cole, who had passed away at Glendora in 1896; his widow survived him until 1917. Myrtle C. Cole became possessor of the twenty-acre Wintersburg ranch, improved this place and afterward sold it, and then purchased the sixty-acre Ross ranch near Wintersburg, which Mrs. Cole still owns. Mr. Cole was a scientific and progressive farmer and he effectually drained and irrigated this farm and brought it to a high state of productivity. His death occurred at Santa Ana August 13, 1916.

M. C. Cole

Ella D. Cole.

Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Cole: Homer L. is a well-known contractor and builder in Santa Ana; he married Jessie M. Hoffman and they have one child, Clifford Delavan. Ernest Delavan, the second child, is a graduate of Stanford University with the degree of civil engineer and is now located in Gainesville, Texas, where he is engaged in building a large oil reservoir; he has spent considerable time in South America in connection with the oil industry. Philip Chester, a graduate as an architect of the International Correspondence School at Scranton, Pa., married Irma B. Hale and practices his profession at Chico, Cal.; Edith Blanche, a graduate nurse, is now the wife of Oscar Blake and they reside on the Cole ranch near Wintersburg and have a daughter, Ellen Dee.

Since her husband's death Mrs. Cole continues to reside in Santa Ana, where she has built a comfortable bungalow on East Pine Street, looking after the interests left by Mr. Cole, in which she is ably assisted by her devoted children.

Considerate and generous, Mrs. Cole is a woman of rare attainments and she has ever taken a genuine and active interest in all movements that aimed at the betterment of the community. In her girlhood she was a student at the state normal school at Cortland, N. Y., and taught school in that state for five terms before her marriage. A consistent Christian, she is a member of the First Presbyterian Church at Santa Ana, in whose benevolences she takes an active and liberal part.

WALTER A. GREENLEAF.—A California agriculturist whose highly intelligent and aggressive work in walnut and citrus fruit culture has been productive of a decided advance in those important fields, is Walter A. Greenleaf of Santa Ana, who was born at Carson City, Nev., on September 25, 1865. His father was Edward F. Greenleaf, a pioneer who braved all the hardships necessary to cross the great plains to California in 1865; and his mother, who was Miss Lucy Sweet before her marriage, shared those trying experiences with her husband. In his time, Mr. Greenleaf was one of the leading men here. Both parents are now among the great silent majority. They had ten children, and Walter was the sixth in the order of birth.

Walter A. started to learn the lessons of life in the public schools, and continued in the vast school of human experience. In this way he progressed to what is popularly termed a self-made man. Little by little, he prepared for increasing responsibility; and when he undertook to farm some fifty acres at Olive and Santa Ana he made a marked success of it.

Busy as he has always been, Mr. Greenleaf has still found time to do for others, and especially to serve the state. He was a member of the National Guard, and for six months served in the Spanish-American War as first lieutenant of Company L, of the Seventh California Volunteers. Later, imbued with a desire to help build up the town in which he lived, Mr. Greenleaf accepted election to the office of city trustee. He is a Democrat in national politics, but knows no partisan distinctions in campaigning for the best local measures and the best local men.

Inheriting from his father, who was one of the early pioneers and who also took an active part in public affairs, a deep interest in Santa Ana and its unrivalled valley, Mr. Greenleaf is keenly alive to all future possibilities in the region, while as observant of what has happened in the past, and the lessons we ought to learn from the set-backs and the strides forward of persisting man. He is a popular member of the Elks.

NELSON THOMAS EDWARDS.—A representative Californian, although a native of Illinois, having been born near Galena, Derinda Township, Jo Daviess County, on September 19, 1872, Nelson Thomas Edwards, supervisor of the Fourth District in Orange County, has been privileged, beyond the good fortune of the average citizen to participate in public, commercial, financial and social affairs, and so to help guide the destiny of Southern California. His parents were Samson and Diana (Rogers) Edwards, highly esteemed pioneers of Orange County and residents of Westminster and Santa Ana for close to a half century, a sketch of their lives being given elsewhere in this work.

The youngest son of the Edwards family, Nelson Thomas, through whose business integrity the community of Orange has profited since his advent in the middle nineties, was graduated from the grammar school at Westminster in 1887 and from the Orange Business College in 1890. His first experience in business was as an employee of his brother John, who had succeeded Samson Edwards and was proprietor of a meat market in Westminster and, as a driver of one of his brother's wagons, he got his first insight into a field into which in time he ventured on his own account. He then built up a fine wagon trade in and around Santa Ana, which he continued until he came to Orange in 1894. For a time thereafter he was employed by the Santa Ana Meat Company, but subsequently he bought out the stock and good will of the proprietor and ran the business for himself. Later he took into partnership J. E. Meehan, this continuing for six years, and during this time they made the Plaza market the finest establishment of the kind in Orange or vicinity. The meat market, however, is not all that has come to command the attention of Mr. Edwards. Besides owning several orange groves in Orange County, an interest in business blocks at Orange, the townsite of Gadsden, Ariz., acreage at Yuma and stock in the Olive Milling Company of Olive and the National Bank of Orange, Mr. Edwards is a director in the Olive Milling Company and also in the National Bank of Orange and the Santa Ana Canyon Oil Company of Santa Ana.

A Republican in matters of national political moment, he has served his fellow citizens as city trustee of Orange, postmaster at Orange, from June 11, 1906, to April, 1915, a member of the Orange County Highway Commission, from September, 1917, to January, 1919, was appointed county clerk to fill a vacancy and served a little over a year, and he is now one of the Orange County supervisors. He belongs to the Orange Commercial Club at Orange and the Yuma County Commercial Club at Yuma, Ariz.

At Olive, on December 31, 1896, Mr. Edwards was married to Miss May Tetzlaff, a native of Bloomington, Ill., where she was born on Christmas Day, 1877, and the daughter of Mrs. Susie Tetzlaff, of Olive. Two children have blessed this union, a son, Roy Edwards, and a daughter, Maybellé. Mr. Edwards is a member of Orange Grove Lodge No. 293, F. & A. M., of which he is past master. He also belongs to Orange Chapter No. 73, R. A. M., the Santa Ana Commandery No. 36, K. T., and Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Los Angeles, and he belongs to and is a past grand of Orange Lodge No. 225, Independent Order Odd Fellows.

LORENZO NATHAN BROOKS.—Whatever the future historian of Laguna Beach may find desirable to say concerning those pioneer men and women whose far-sightedness, courage, industry, frugality, enterprise and self-sacrifice made possible the founding and development of this unrivalled coast resort, he will not fail to give a prominent part of his narrative to Lorenzo Nathan Brooks, better known to all his friends and acquaintances as "Nate" Brooks, who was born in Rockford, Ill., on January 6, 1852, and came first to this locality on horseback in 1876, arriving in the month of December, having been preceded by his brother, W. H. Brooks, who arrived in June of that same year. That was at a time when these two men were the only whites in the place, the balance of the inhabitants being Indians who tried to steal what these white men had brought with them—their ponies.

"Nate" Brooks at once homesteaded a claim which took in what is now known as Arch Beach and part of Laguna Heights, and purchased the balance lying between the former and Laguna from George Rogers, who had preempted it from the Government, paying $1.25 per acre for it. The holdings of Mr. Brooks totaled 600 acres. This spot was to "Nate" Brooks the very choicest spot on earth and he held on to what he had during many years when others became discouraged and "let go" their holdings. He was made of sterner stuff and the hardships and deprivations he endured to hold on to his land were remarkable. His promptness in meeting every obligation was characteristic of the man. Money was not to be earned nearer than Los Angeles, and then only by working in the grain fields for one dollar a day from sun up till sun down; and later on as he saw the development of his dreams he was ever ready to even mortgage his holdings to promote the best interests of Laguna Beach. In 1883 he platted Arch Beach and installed a small water system from a 500-foot tunnel in the hills. In 1912 he subdivided Laguna Heights, developing water for that tract after thirty years of patient search and experimental digging and pumping. He could be depended upon to help in any enterprise that was beneficial to all, and he lived to see many of his dreams come to pass.

After living a life of single blessedness for nearly fifty years he was united in marriage on December 14, 1899, with Mrs. Catherine A. Skidmore, widow of the late George E. Skidmore, well-known pioneer merchant of Los Angeles and a native of Texas. A mention of his life will be found in the sketch of J. W. Skidmore on another page of this history. Mrs. Brooks was in maidenhood Catherine A. Brenizer, daughter of Josiah K. and Antoinette (Roberts) Brenizer, the former a native of Ohio, where he was born on a farm and while pursuing the even tenor of his way the Civil War broke out and he enlisted in the Forty-sixth Illinois Regiment and served his country from 1861 to 1865. He came West in the early seventies and settled on a ranch near Compton, later retired to Long Beach and died, in 1905, in Los Angeles where he was then living. His wife was born in Pennsylvania but was reared near Rockford, Ill., her father being one of the founders of that city. Mrs. Catherine A. Brooks, who is one of the pioneers of California and had many interesting and dangerous experiences in the early days, was an able helpmate to her husband and when he died, on April 27, 1914, after an illness of some months' duration, she became sole owner—by purchasing the interests of the other heirs—of Laguna Heights, and this property is now being looked after by her son, Joseph W. Skidmore.

L. A. Brooks

At the passing of this worthy pioneer of Orange County, not only the county and Laguna Beach, but the state lost one of its upbuilders. "Nate" Brooks always backed his "boosting" of his favored section with cash, and he could always raise that. No one ever went to him for help that he did not put his hand in his pocket and give the aid asked for.

Other settlers came to Laguna Beach in those hard years, saw, but failed to "stick." Making the utmost record compatible with opportunity, without duality of allegiance to his self-set task, with a complete hold on the realities of life, with a towering self-confidence, erected on a solid foundation, "Nate" Brooks must be regarded as "The Father" of Laguna Beach. It is easy, and cheap, to be wise after the event. Well did he know that his vision's realization could not be an act of startling immediacy, and this has been borne out by subsequent events. Communities often express their feeling toward the "father" of their town in monumental masonry. Santa Ana, for instance, has the Spurgeon building, dedicated to the memory of the father of the county seat. The memory of the father of Laguna Beach, Lorenzo Nathan Brooks, is perpetuated in the work he started. Most beginnings are difficult, and this case was not an exception. May those who happen to have been accorded the privilege of continuing the good work, so bravely started by this valiant pioneer, prove themselves worthy of their predecessor.

THOMAS HILL.—One of the most highly esteemed citizens of Stanton, Orange County, is Thomas Hill, who has been a resident of that section of the county for thirty years. Mr. Hill is a native of Ireland, born in 1858, the son of William and Margaret Hill, whose family consisted of seven sons and one daughter, five of whom emigrated to the United States.

Thomas Hill came to Orange County in 1883 and since that time has witnessed many marvelous changes and developments. He is the owner of sixty acres of fine land which he devotes to general farming. This land was in its primitive state when Mr. Hill purchased it, but after years of hard work and close attention to its special needs he has brought it up to a high state of development, and has installed many modern improvements for the operation of his ranch as well as for the comfort and convenience of his cozy home. He is regarded as one of the most progressive ranchers of his community, a man of strict integrity and probity of character, well known for his patriotism. It is a recognized fact that many of the natives of the Emerald Isle are counted amongst the best and most loyal citizens of the United States, being friends of education and enlightenment.

In 1888 Mr. Hill was united in marriage with Miss Sarah Tait, also a native of Ireland, and the daughter of George and Matilda Tait. Of this union three children were born: Matilda, who is a graduate of the State Normal School; William and Margaret E. The family are members of the Episcopal Church and Mr. Hill is a Mason, a member of the Buena Park Lodge No. 537, F. & A. M. For six years he has held the office of trustee of the city of Stanton and has been an efficient member of the school board for eight years.

LOUIS D. GUNTHER.—A highly esteemed citizen whose influence in many directions is due to his successful business career during a long and exemplary life, is Louis D. Gunther, who located in California in the early part of the present century. He was born in Maywood, Cook County, Ill., in 1858, the son of Justus Gunther, who was a mason and a builder, and a first-class one at that. He made a trip to Fort Dodge, Iowa, but returned to Cook County, where he married Miss Wilhelmina Weiss; and in 1859 he moved his family to Fort Dodge and became there a pioneer contractor in mason work. Through a sad accident, he died at Fort Dodge on February 19, 1879. Twenty-seven years later, Mrs. Gunther, after a comfortable life in which she had surrounded herself with a large circle of friends, passed away in Iowa. Six children had blessed their union: Louis, the eldest and subject of this sketch; Ernestine, now Mrs. Craemer of Orange; Annie, Mrs. Trost of Fort Dodge; Laura, who became Mrs. Grumm and Louise, who is Mrs. Adolph Dittmer, both of Orange; and Mrs. Clara Loescher of Richfield.

Brought up at Fort Dodge, Louis attended the grammar schools, and while yet a boy began to learn the mason trade under the guidance of his father. Then, when old enough, he, too, took up contracting and building, and for years followed that line of activity in Fort Dodge and vicinity. In 1901 he made a trip to California, and was more than pleased with what he saw here.

He was so well pleased, in fact, that two years later he decided to return to the Coast and to locate here permanently; and having settled at Orange, he erected a large, handsome brick residence at the corner of Almond and South Olive streets. He then engaged again in contracting and building, which engrossed him until, in 1915, he retired. In the meantime, he had built three residences for himself, and one by one sold each of them. He also built a store, and when he had a good offer, disposed of that. A second store was built and sold in the same way—each deal evidencing the shrewd, but straightforward and honest business sense of the man. He has also owned and operated both orange and walnut ranches. In 1920 he erected a very artistic and attractive residence on South Olive Street which is one of the show places in Orange.

Mr. Gunther was married in Forest Park, Ill., April 3, 1884, to Miss Adolphine Aneling, also a native of Maywood, Cook County, Ill., a daughter of Gotfried and Lauretta (Gunther) Aneling, who were prosperous farmers at Maywood. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Gunther has been blessed with two daughters and three sons: Clara, the oldest, is Mrs. Bandick of Orange; Emma, a graduate of the Clara Barton Hospital, Los Angeles, is at the Letterman Hospital in the United States service; Louis G., a contractor, who enlisted for the great war, but was not called to the colors on account of the armistice, is now ranching at Orange; Oscar, who is also ranching near Orange, was in the harness business, while he served the city as a trustee, until he enlisted in the United States service as a leather inspector; and Elmer is attending the Concordia College at Oakland. Mr. and Mrs. Gunther are members of the St. John's Evangelical Lutheran Church, at Orange, and he is chairman of the board of trustees. He has been a member of this board for many years, and was on the building committee when the church was erected. He is also a member of the Lutheran Men's Club.

During his residence in Iowa, Mr. Gunther was for two terms a trustee of the city of Fort Dodge; and in 1918, on the resignation of his son Oscar, as a trustee of Orange, he was appointed to fill the vacancy thus created, and is chairman of the finance committee, and a member of the light and power committee. He is interested in various enterprises, of more or less local business significance, and is a stockholder and director in the First National Bank of Orange.

WILLIAM J. WICKERSHEIM.—An establishment which has grown to occupy a commanding place in Orange County, Cal., is that of the Wickersheim Implement Company of Fullerton. Its founder, William J. Wickersheim, was born in Lake County, Ill., May 6, 1866, the son of Jacob and Louise (Meyer) Wickersheim, both born in Alsace, the former in July, 1836, and the latter in 1839. Jacob Wickersheim emigrated with his parents to America in 1845, settling in Lake County, Ill., where his father died in 1865. His mother passed away in Cook County, that state, in 1868. Louise Meyer was brought to America by her parents when she was a child of three, and she was reared in Illinois, and in Lake County married Mr. Wickersheim at Long Grove, in 1858. They had five children, all of whom are living: Charles Jacob is a resident of Orange; Louise Mary lives in Hollywood, Cal., with her mother; William J. is the subject of this review. These three were born in Lake County, Ill. Edward F. is a resident of Santa Ana, and he was born in Wheeling, Ill., whither the family had moved. Emma is the wife of George Heil, and they live in Santa Ana. She was born in Roberts Lake, Minn., where the family, in the fall of 1869, had settled on a farm five miles from Faribault. In 1878 they all moved to Lincoln County, Minn., and continued to farm and improve a homestead and timber claim. In 1898 Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Wickersheim and two of their children came to Santa Ana and settled, and there the parents celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in April, 1908, and it was here, too, that the father passed to his reward on July 23, 1910, aged seventy-three years. His widow, eighty-three years of age, makes her home in Hollywood, as does her daughter, Louise M. Wickersheim. Jacob Wickersheim always took an active interest in all movements in the localities where he lived to make them a better place morally, and he was a loyal American citizen and often held offices of various kinds where he lived. Grandfather Wickersheim had the distinction of having served under Napoleon.

William J. Wickersheim received a liberal education, attended the high school at Faribault for two years, then took a four years' advanced course in the second State Normal at Mankato, after which he taught school for nine years in Minnesota, and served four years as county superintendent of schools of Lincoln County. In 1894 he came to California, whither his two sisters had preceded him but a few months. He taught school one year at Fallbrook, then a like period at Menefee, Riverside County, and three years in Old Newport, Orange County, selling school supplies during vacations. He next moved to Orange, where he had bought two orange groves, and there spent three years in cultivating them. Hoping to broaden his field of business he moved to Fullerton in 1902 and opened a bicycle, vehicle and implement house, starting on a small scale, and as the locality expanded he increased his business to keep pace with the times and enjoyed an increasing prosperity. It was on January 1, 1913, that he secured the agency for the Ford automobile for the Fullerton territory. The business was incorporated in May, 1907, as the Wickersheim Implement Company, and it now employs twenty-five men in its various departments. Their sales volume for the year 1920 will total a half million dollars, due in a great measure to the guiding hand of the founder of the business, who has won and held the confidence of a very wide circle of friends, which is ever increasing as the population increases. The courteous treatment and square deals accorded each and every customer at this establishment is the best advertisement they issue.

Am. J. Kickersheim

W. J. Wickersheim has been twice married. His first wife, whom he married on June 25, 1893, was Miss May Ladenburg, of Marshall, Minn., who was a teacher in Lyon County, that state. Two children blessed this marriage: Lyle is a graduate of the Fullerton High School, and the University of Southern California, where he took the course of electrical engineering. Since his graduation he has been in the employ of the Western Electric Company of New York and Chicago, and by the end of the first year he had been promoted to the research department, where he has specialized on the multiple telephone and telegraph. He served one year in the army in the signal corps and as instructor in radio. He and his wife are wintering (1920-21) in Key West and Havana, where he is in charge of the technical and scientific part of the laying of the multiple telephone and telegraph between Key West and Havana. Mildred is a graduate from the Fullerton high school, and also graduated in music at the State Normal in Los Angeles. She then taught school for one and one-half years in the Hawaiian Islands, then returned and entered the Southern California University, and graduated with the class in December, 1920. The wife and mother, mourned by all who knew her, died at Old Newport on July 1, 1898. On March 5, 1902, Mr. Wickersheim was married to Miss Emma Oswald, and they have a son, Theodore J., a talented pianist, and a student in the Fullerton school.

Mr. Wickersheim is a Methodist in his religious belief, and politically he supports Republican principles, and has served as a delegate to state and county conventions for years. He is a member of the California Auto Trade Association and a charter member of the Fullerton Board of Trade. He is a man of fine character, public spirited, and a supporter of every movement that has for its aim the building up of state or county; particularly is he interested in all projects that put Fullerton to the fore. His financial success has been deservedly won and he enjoys the confidence and esteem of his fellow-citizens, with whom his word is as good as his bond.

DAVID F. CAMPBELL.—An excellent citizen whose reputation as an unselfish "booster" of the town and county of Orange has given him an enviable influence in many fields of activity, is David F. Campbell, who came here during the great boom of 1887. He was born at Alta, Peoria County, Ill., on December 12, 1854, the son of Robert Campbell, a native of Pennsylvania, in which state he was also married. His bride was Catherine Fasnacht before her marriage, and she was a native of the Keystone State. They moved to Peoria County, Ill., and here this worthy couple were successful farmers; and when they came to California in 1884, they brought with them a valuable experience. The father died in Los Angeles, and the mother passed away at Orange. They had two girls and five boys, all of whom grew up; and two of the sons were in the Civil War. Walker W., who enlisted at Peoria in an Illinois regiment, returned alive; John, however, who was in the Seventy-seventh Illinois Regiment, was killed in the battle of Vicksburg.

Next to the youngest in the order of birth, David was brought up on the farm at Alta, and there he started out to farm for himself. In 1878, he removed to Corning, Holt County, Mo., and engaged in the drug business with his brother-in-law, H. F. Ferris; but at the end of three years he sold out his interest and returned home to Illinois, to resume his farming.

When the boom was at its height in California, he again sold his holdings and came west to Orange; and immediately he located on his present place of twenty acres on South Cambridge Street. Here he began horticulture with the raising of oranges—seedlings in those days; but after a while he changed to Valencias. It happened that some of the original trees were of that stock, and now he has some Valencias over fifty years of age, the oldest of the kind in the state. This is a strange fact for which there is no accounting; and as he has about one hundred of these aged Valencias, the circumstance is all the more profitable and interesting.

Mr. Campbell also owns eighteen and a half acres of Valencia oranges on Tustin Avenue, and he is one of the original stockholders in the Santiago Orange Growers Association, where he has been a director for many years, and is also vice-president of the association. He is a member of the Central Lemon Association at Villa Park, and a stockholder in the Orange County Fumigating Company. He owns valuable residence property in Orange, has been a director of the First National Bank from the time of its organization, and is the vice-president of that institution. He is a stockholder in the Security Savings Bank of Orange, and is one of the directors. He is also a stockholder in the Orange Building and Loan Association, in which capacity he has served for over twenty-six years, was formerly vice-president and is now president. This association he has seen grow from assets of $20,000 to about $700,000.

While in Peoria County, Ill., Mr. Campbell was married to Miss Julia F. Shaw, a native of Illinois, where she was born near Alta. Ten children have blessed their union. Earl E. is a rancher on twenty acres adjoining the farm of his father; Henry S. is a rancher near Orange; Roy, a graduate of the University of California, is assistant entomologist in the Department of Agriculture, and is stationed at Alhambra; Elma is Mrs. Wood of Corona; Ruby is a graduate of the University of California and won a Carnegie scholarship at the Carnegie Institute, Pittsburgh, Pa.; she is now with Hamburger Bros. in Los Angeles; Ensley is also a graduate of the University of California and is assistant farm adviser in Monterey County; Robert is attending the University of California; Margaret is in the Orange union high school; and Hazel and Julia are in the grammar school. Mr. Campbell, who is a Republican in national politics, was a nonpartisan trustee for the Orange school district for many years. Mrs. Campbell is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

MRS. MARY E. ALSBACH.—A devoted, motherly woman who enjoys the quiet of California canyon life, is Mrs. Mary E. Alsbach, the widow of Montgomery Alsbach, who passed to his eternal reward in the summer of 1918. She was born in Carthage, Hancock County, Ill., the daughter of Isaac and Louisa Lucas, prosperous farmers, who raised corn and small grain on a large Illinois farm. In 1881 they removed to La Plata, Mo., where Mr. Lucas purchased 90 acres.

Montgomery Alsbach was the son of Michael and Sarah Alsbach—the former a German Evangelical minister, who traveled through the country creating new interest in the church. When twelve years of age, Montgomery accompanied his parents to Indiana, where he lived through the Civil War. At the conclusion of that terrible struggle, Rev. Alsbach moved to Chicago, where he made his home, while he continued to travel through Illinois on his mission work. After thirty-four years, they moved from Chicago to Missouri, and there he spent the rest of his days on a farm which he purchased.

For a while Montgomery had worked on a farm near Chicago, but in 1872 he left Missouri and went to Minneapolis, where he was employed by the Shockby Milling Company, and later by the Pillsbury Milling Company. At Minneapolis, on March 8, 1887, he was married to Miss Mary E. Lucas; and, after living in Minneapolis for five months, they came west to Los Angeles. For a year and a half Mr. Alsbach engaged in carpentering, and then moved to a ranch at Downey. In 1892 he moved to Silverado Canyon and homesteaded 160 acres of land, and here they built a residence and made improvements. There were forty acres of tillable ground, and at present thirty-five acres are in barley and five in wheat, while the rest is good pasture land. The sycamore, live oak and water alder grow bountifully in the canyon ranch, and as there is plenty of stock for domestic use, the rancher is almost rendered independent of the outside world. A well-educated man, who had had a good grammar and high school education, and three years of study at Northwestern University, Mr. Alsbach was greatly mourned when he died, on August 16, 1918.

Four children owe much to their mother, Mrs. Alsbach. The eldest is Mrs. Naomi Schulz of Williams Canyon. The second is Mrs. Ruth C. McKinzie of Santa Ana. Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Shaw of Laguna Beach is the third in the order of birth. The fourth is Mrs. Ruby Lola Shaw of El Toro.

In 1920 Mrs. Alsbach sold eighty acres of the ranch and retired from farming, and will make her home at Laguna, where she is building a new residence in Arch Beach Heights of that seaside resort.

A brother of Mrs. Alsbach is Scott Lucas, a gentleman blessed with the family affability. The youngest in a family of seven children, he was born on November 28, 1873, and he lived with his parents on the home farm in Missouri. He not only had a grammar school education, but the last year of his schooling he assisted the teacher. He helped his father until he was twenty-two years of age, and then he came out to California and to Santa Ana. He became an expert brick burner and maker of cement, and had a part in much building of note in Los Angeles and in and about Santa Ana. In November, 1918, soon after Mr. Alsbach's death, Mr. Lucas came to Silverado Canyon to live with his sister.

Mary E. Alsbach.

HERMAN G. LEMBCKE.—A leading contractor and builder; whose valuable experience, far-seeing capacity and exceptional enterprise, enabling him to operate on broad, generous lines, and with a sensible view of the future as well as the immediate present, have been of the greatest benefit to both the city and county of Orange, is Herman G. Lembcke, who was born at Ulzen, Hanover, Germany, on May 3, 1861, the son of John Lembcke, a brick manufacturer. He came with his wife, who was Mary Pagel before her marriage, and his family, to Wisconsin in 1885, and there for a time resided, although he spent his last days in Nebraska, where Mrs. Lembcke also died. Four of their six children are still living, and Herman is the youngest of all, save one.

The lad received the best of educational instruction in the local schools and a private academy, where he majored in drawing, after which he assisted his father in the making of brick, as well as in farming. In 1885 the family moved to Cedarburg, Wis., and for a time Herman attended the Addison Academy at Addison, Ill., following which he undertook contracting and building at Cedarburg. Having a brother, however, at Canastota, McCook County, S. D., he removed there in 1887, and then, for four years, was engaged in contracting and building at Sioux Falls, and later also at Canastota. In both Dakota and in Minnesota, Mr. Lembcke erected many of the leading edifices of that time.

In 1907 he made his first trip to California, and he was so pleased with what he saw here that on his return he at once shaped his plans for removal to the more favored Pacific country. In 1909 he effected that important step, and came here, family, bag and baggage. He looked the state over carefully and finally selected Orange as the most desirable, and soon engaged in contracting and building; and ever since he has been augmenting an enviable reputation as one of the ablest and most reliable men in his important field. He frequently makes even his own designs, and such has been his acknowledged success that he has been called to Los Angeles and other towns beyond the confines of the county for important building enterprises. He belongs to the National Contractors' Association, and is ever ready to lend his counsel for the best development and the building up of Orange and its environs.

While in South Dakota, Mr. Lembcke was married to Miss Elizabeth Muehl, a native of Erie County, Pa., by whom he has had six children. Walter is a carpenter, assisting his father; Herbert, also a carpenter, is yardman for the Griffith Lumber Company; Hugo is attending Stanford University, taking an engineering course; Edgar is a student at the Orange Union high school, and there are Hilda and Althea. The family attend the Lutheran Church, and Mr. Lembcke is a member of the Lutheran Men's Club. At Canastota, S. D., he was for thirteen years secretary of the board of trustees of the Lutheran Church. He is a Republican in national politics, and yet is decidedly nonpartisan in all cooperation for local improvement and uplift. Some years ago Mr. Lembcke built for himself and family a large, very comfortable residence at 320 North Lemon Street, and there they now dispense an old-time hospitality.

MICHAEL F. REAGAN.—America has been blessed with adopted sons and daughters from every corner of the globe, many of whom have done much to make possible the rapid development of this country, and among those who have proved their worth are natives of Ireland, and those of Irish descent, whose American birth and training have added to their characteristic resourcefulness. Typical of the latter is Michael F. Reagan, who was born in Norfolk Township, St. Lawrence County, New York, in 1862, the son of Jeremiah and Mary (Donovan) Reagan, both natives of the Emerald Isle. To them were born nine children, five of whom are still living, Michael being the only one in California. He was reared in New York, and there he received his education; early in life he learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed for many years.

Mr. Reagan came to California in 1889, settling in Anaheim, where he followed his trade, and so has been a resident of the county for over thirty years. In 1896 he came to Los Alamitos, being one of the early settlers to locate there, and he has since made this his home, being the oldest settler, in point of residence, in the locality. In the fall of 1904 Mr. Reagan saw the necessity of supplying the residents of Los Alamitos with water; the artesian well was going dry on account of many wells being sunk for irrigation purposes, and also on account of the drouth. He sunk four wells with a six-inch bore from 300 to 400 feet deep, to supply the growing town of Los Alamitos with water for domestic purposes; they are operated by electricity and furnish water for 140 families. The original wells were the property of the Bixby Land Company until he purchased their interest. This supplies Mr. Reagan with enough business to keep him moving around in the midst of his patrons, and at the same time reimburses him for the capital and labor expended.

In 1909 Mr. Reagan was united in marriage with Miss Annie Hedgepeth, and to them one child, who died in infancy, was born. Mrs. Reagan's death, in 1912, deprived him of a loyal and helpful companion. Mr. Reagan has seen many remarkable changes in the county, the development of oil, the sugar beet industry, and the building up of towns throughout the entire county, until today when this county stands foremost in the counties of the state. Fraternally, he is a member of the Knights of Columbus.

ADOLPH STANKEY.—During his thirty years' residence in Orange County Adolph Stankey has seen many changes wrought and has had an active part in the development which has taken place with such rapidity during that span of time. His birth occurred in Germany, August 29, 1870, and he was reared in Walline, Russia, a son of Frank and Ernstine (Laffman) Stankey, the former a native of Germany and the latter of Russia. The family came to Anaheim in 1888, and here the father located and is now living on his ranch two miles west of town, on the county road.

Young Adolph did not have very good school advantages in Russia, and is what may be called self-educated, picking up knowledge and experience as he went along in life, the most thorough of all teachers. On arriving in Anaheim, in 1888, he worked for a time at ranching with his father, and later leased 400 acres of land near Placentia and cultivated it to grain. Land in that section could then be bought for seventy-five dollars per acre, and the same land he farmed in early days is now finely developed into large orange groves and worth in the thousands per acre. The first year Mr. Stankey was quite successful in grain raising, and cleared $5,000. The next three were dry years and he lost all he had put in the venture.

Later, he lived on a twenty-acre ranch of his own west of town and near his father's place, where he raised barley, corn and sugar beets. Selling this out, in 1905, Mr. Stankey moved to Anaheim and bought his present home, at 136 North Lemon Street, and started his work in cement; he was in the employ of Chas. Scindler, and also of Conliffe Bros., cement contractors. After gaining a thorough knowledge of the business, he started in contracting for himself, and since that date, 1910, he has constructed many miles of cement sidewalks and curbs in Anaheim, besides porch and house foundations. He has done much work for the city of Anaheim, and also cemetery work, and has made a reputation for the class and quality of his work, which is known throughout the county as first-class in quality and lasting—in fact, always satisfactory.

The marriage of Mr. Stankey united him with Ernestine Pressel, a native of Poland, and three children have been born to them: Harry, an electrician, in the employ of J. Leep; Nettie and Hattie. An active worker for the further advancement of his home community, Mr. Stankey has never doubted the future in store for this section of the state since his first location here, and has done his share to make it one of the most progressive cities in Southern California.

O. A. STEWART.—Another walnut grower whose progressive foresightedness, thorough familiarity with the problems before him, and untiring industry have helped him to attain success far beyond the ordinary rancher in his field, is O. A. Stewart of South McClay Street, Santa Ana, who has ten acres of twelve-year-old trees, interplanted to lima beans. He was born in Hartford, Blackford County, Ind., on April 7, 1849, and when only ten years of age crossed the great plains with his parents and the other five children in the family, in 1859, traveling in a prairie schooner drawn by oxen. They were part of a large train that started from the Hoosier state and tried to reach Pike's Peak in 1859 during the Pike's Peak excitement, but while still on the Platte River, before turning off of the trail for Denver, they were disappointed with what they heard of returning Pike's Peakers who were discouraged, and so continued on to Nevada, locating in Carson City. There Wellington Stewart, our subject's father, opened a law office and began the practice of law, which he continued until 1866, when he removed to Helena, Mont., where he maintained a law office for another six years. He was a member of the legislature in Nevada, and also Montana, and in the latter state he was the speaker of the house. He was a well-posted lawyer and had a large clientèle. Then he moved back to Carson City, and later on went to San Diego, where he opened a law office and practiced there until he went to Washington and settled at Seattle, and there he died at the age of eighty. He was born at Painted Post, Steuben County, N. Y., and was married in Indiana to Miss Sarah Barnhart, a native of Pennsylvania, who died in Carson City, Nev., at the age of sixty-nine years. They had six children, O. A. Stewart being the third in the order of birth, five of whom are still living.

O. A. Stewart attended the public schools in Carson City, Nev., where he grew up, fortunate in being in that town when the great Comstock Lode was discovered. In 1870 he went to San Diego, Cal., at the beginning of that city, and having studied law in his father's office, he was admitted to the bar in San Diego County. He never practiced law there, however, but for a number of years taught school in that county, at Encinitas, San Luis Rey, Julian and Temecula. While at Encinitas he met Miss Florence Ada Foss, the acquaintance being continued while teaching at San Luis Rey, ripened into love and resulted in their marriage at San Diego on February 3, 1874. She was a native of Jackson, Maine, but came to California with her parents, David R. and Rebecca A. (Libby) Foss in 1861 via the Isthmus of Panama, first engaging in dairying in Marin County, and later he was in business in San Francisco. In 1869 they came to San Diego County where he farmed, residing there until his death in 1886 at the age of fifty-three. The mother is now living at Manteca, Cal., eighty-five years of age. Mrs. Stewart is the oldest of three children, the others being Mrs. J. J. Rawleigh of Manteca and Albert J. Foss, an apiarist at Corona, Cal. The one child of Mr. and Mrs. Stewart is an adopted daughter, Mattie, who lives at home. Mr. Stewart continued teaching until 1879, and then engaged in ranching at De Luz, San Diego County, where he homesteaded 160 acres, improved it, put the first plow in the raw land and engaged in viticulture, general farming and bee culture, having two apiaries. In 1906, after having brought the place to a high state of cultivation, he sold it and located in Santa Ana and bought a ten-acre alfalfa field, which he set to budded walnuts, now full bearing. He is a member of the Santa Ana Walnut Growers Association. In 1912 they erected their elegant residence where alfalfa grew when Mr. Stewart first came here.

Being an admirer of Horace Greeley, his first vote was cast for a Democrat candidate, and he continued with that party until he became a strong nationalist and protectionist, and since then is a Republican.

PROFESSOR W. M. CLAYTON.—A man of high scholarly attainments, whose thirty-five years of service in the cause of education has given him an authoritative place in that profession, is Prof. W. M. Clayton, who during his residence of eighteen years in Santa Ana has contributed generously, not alone to school affairs but to the life of the whole community. A native of the Buckeye State, he was born at Van Buren, Hancock County, Ohio, October 20, 1861. He obtained his early schooling in the public schools of his home district and being ambitious beyond the average lad, he determined to secure a college education, even though it meant hard work and sacrifice on his part. He matriculated at Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, Ohio, working his own way through, and graduating there in 1891; during the school year of 1889-1890 he was principal of the Allen Township high school at Van Buren, Ohio, this being one of the first township high schools to be organized in the state. After his graduation, Mr. Clayton was superintendent of schools at Piketon and Waverly, Ohio, serving for four years in each place. While he was teaching at Piketon he organized the Teachers' Summer Normal School at Piketon and during the session had about 175 teachers in attendance from southern Ohio. For six years he was county examiner of teachers in southern Ohio.

In 1899 Professor Clayton came to the Pacific Coast and for one year occupied the chair of mathematics and was vice-president of the Southern Oregon State Normal School at Ashland, Ore., and for the following two years was president in the same institution. In 1902 he came to California, and located at Santa Ana, for the next eight years occupying the post of principal of the Roosevelt grammar school. Following this he went to the Santa Ana high school as a teacher of mathematics. Four years after the new Polytechnic high was organized, in 1917, he was made vice-principal and head of the mathematics department. Professor Clayton is an expert mathematician and occupies an authoritative position as an instructor in this branch of study. It is worthy of note that in thirty-five years of teaching he has lost but three days on account of illness, a record that few can equal.

Prominent in fraternal circles, Professor Clayton is a Knights Templar Mason, and is a past commander of Santa Ana Commandery No. 36, and a Shriner, member of Al Malaikah Temple of Los Angeles. While at Piketon he was made a member of the Knights of Pythias, and is past chancellor of Lodge No. 521, at that place; he is also past commander of Santa Ana Tent No. 8, of the Maccabees, member of Santa Ana Lodge No. 236, I. O. O. F.; Society of Sons of the Revolution; Phi Beta Kappa. Faculty University of California Smith-Hughes Teachers Training Division, and while a student at the university was a member of Beta Theta Pi. During the World War he gave much time and assistance to the local patriotic activities, and was one of the four-minute men.

By Mr. Clayton's marriage in Van Buren, Ohio, he is the father of two children: Allen D., of Pasadena, and a daughter, Georgiana, who died at the age of nine years. Professor Clayton is a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Santa Ana.

JESSE O. NICHOLS.—Among the most successful orange and walnut growers of the Buaro and West Orange precincts of Orange County, especial mention is made of Jesse O. Nichols, now living in Huntington Beach. He was born August 9, 1864, at Avon, Fulton County, Ill., a son of Albert Kimball Nichols, a native of Vermont, who married Miss Harriett Rose, of Avon, Ill., where her father was the owner of a grist mill. Albert Nichols was a ship carpenter and worked at his trade in Chicago, after the great fire. Mr. and Mrs. A. K. Nichols came to California in 1896 and made their home with their son. Mrs. Nichols died in 1898, and he in 1907.

When Jesse O. was eight years of age, his parents moved to Waukegan, Lake County, Ill., and here he remained until he was eighteen; during this period he learned the trade of a machinist. In 1882 he migrated westward, locating for six months at Denver, Colo., where he followed his trade. In the fall of that year, he arrived in the Golden State, stopping at Los Angeles, subsequently taking up school land at Cucamonga, which, after two years, he sold and then located at El Monte, going from there to San Diego County. In partnership with M. F. Quinn, his father-in-law, he rented 3,000 acres of the Warner ranch, a tract of 50,000 acres, where they raised stock and farmed to grain and hay.

On August 4, 1889, Mr. Nichols was united in marriage with Miss Susie Quinn, daughter of Michael Fay and Ruth Jane (Glenn) Quinn. Mrs. Nichols was born at El Monte, and when seven years of age her mother passed away. She crossed the plains from Texas when a girl and they had some exacting times with Indians. Mrs. Nichols' father, Michael Fay Quinn, born in New York City was of stanch old Irish stock, his parents having been born in the Emerald Esle. His grandfather was born in 1761 and died in Wisconsin in 1857. John Quinn, the father of Michael F., was born in Limerick in 1808, and married Mary Fay in 1832, coming with his family to America in 1836. Two years later he died in Wisconsin, and subsequently his widow became the wife of Richard Hartwell of Ohio; she passed away six days after her marriage.

Michael Fay Quinn was born in New York City, February 14, 1836, and at the tender age of four years he was orphaned. His stepfather cared for him until he reached the age of twelve years. In the spring of 1850, he went to Fort Snelling, Minn., where he obtained a position as clerk in a sutler store, owned by a Mr. Steele. Through the influence of Colonel Lee, the commanding officer at Fort Snelling, and an old schoolmate of his stepfather, Richard Hartwell, the young man secured a position in the quartermaster's department, and in 1854, when but eighteen years old, he was appointed government wagon master and started from Fort Leavenworth with an expedition against the Sioux Indians. On September 26, 1854, they surprised a camp of about 5,000 Indians at Ash Hollow, on the Platte River. Several Indians were killed and nearly the entire camp captured. The expedition proceeded to Fort Laramie, where some of the troops were left, the rest going on to Fort Pierre, on the Missouri River, where the great treaty with the Sioux was made by General Harney, on New Year's Day, 1855. Immediately after his arrival in Fort Pierre, Mr. Quinn was sent out with twenty-eight six-mule teams and wagons loaded with supplies for the troops at Fort Randall. The trip was safely made in ten days, and two days later the return trip was started, with empty wagons and provisions for ten days. A severe snow-storm set in, continuing with slight abatement for twenty-two days, burying their camp in deep drifts of snow. On the twenty-fourth day, after great labor, the party cut its way out and continued the journey. Cottonwood trees were used for the mules' provender, while the men lived on corn and mule meat. They arrived at Fort Pierre at the end of thirty-six days, with only forty-eight of their 180 mules left. After many interesting adventures Mr. Quinn succeeded in reaching St. Louis, Mo., by steamboat and on November 2, 1855, he matriculated in the Illinois State University, where he remained until April 11, 1858, Robert T. Lincoln, son of the illustrious President, being one of his classmates. Mr. Quinn joined General Harney's expedition against the Mormons and was appointed wagon master under Captain Winfield Scott Hancock, later so well known as General Hancock. Mr. Quinn became Government purchasing agent in charge of purchasing materials used in constructing Camp Floyd, Utah.

On February 12, 1859, Mr. Quinn joined a company of seventy-two men bound for California and March 5 found him in Los Angeles. Twenty days later he went to the San Gabriel Canyon gold mine, where his quest of the precious metal was unsuccessful. Returning to Los Angeles, he secured work as a carpenter and time-keeper on the old court house, where the Bullard Block now stands.

In 1859 Mr. Quinn located at El Monte, where he engaged in contracting and building, and also operated a lumber yard. Subsequently he commenced farming and was engaged in agricultural pursuits for many years. He was always intensely interested in the progress and development of Southern California; served as president of the Los Angeles County Pioneers Society and after a busy and more than interesting career passed away in 1911.

Mrs. Nichols attended the El Monte public school, afterward attending the Los Angeles State Normal School, where she was a student for one and a half years. In January, 1891, Mr. Nichols located in Orange County, where he purchased twenty acres of land which had been used as a sheep pasture and was devoid of any improvements. They set out every tree and helped make the roads, established the markets, etc. Seven acres were planted to walnuts the first year and the balance as they could, farming in the meanwhile, raising chickens, melons and garden truck. He subsequently purchased twenty acres for his son and at one time possessed in all ninety-five acres of land, of which he still retains forty-five acres. In 1916 Mr. Nichols built a beautiful, cozy bungalow on his property. He has the distinction of installing the first pumping plant in his vicinity, which was in 1898; it was run by horse power. He was the first in his locality to install a gasoline engine for pumping purposes in irrigating, and again took the lead by being the first to install an electrically driven pump. He and his neighbor, W. H. Hending, owned the pumping plant under the name of Nichols and Hending and sold water to some of their neighbors, or until they put in their own wells.

Mr. and Mrs. Nichols are the parents of one son, Albert Quinn, who owns twenty acres near his father; he was married to Miss Rose Anna Haase on October 30, 1920. Mr. and Mrs. Nichols are highly respected in their community, where they have a large circle of warm friends.

EDWARD STARK.—Concentration of his energies to any particular enterprise which he has on hand doubtless is one of the paramount secrets of the success that has attended the business undertakings of Edward Stark and he has ably demonstrated his adaptability and power to carry affairs to a prosperous outcome. Identified for twenty years with the beet-sugar industry and a pioneer in this field in his native state, Wisconsin, Mr. Stark is especially well qualified for the important post he now occupies—that of field superintendent of the Anaheim Sugar Company—and not a little of the wonderful commercial importance that this industry now commands in Orange County is due to his tireless, constructive work.

Edward Stark was born in the prosperous farming district near Richfield, Washington County, Wis., on May 12, 1872. He remained on the home farm until he was sixteen years of age, meanwhile securing his education in the public schools of the neighborhood. An older brother was engaged in the general merchandise business at Menominee Falls, Wis., and Edward was associated with him there in this line for a number of years. During his residence in that city he served for two years as city clerk. In 1900 Mr. Stark entered the employ of the Wisconsin Sugar Company at Menominee Falls, having charge of the agricultural department. The sugar-beet industry was then in its infancy, this being the first sugar factory erected in the state. Up to this time the sugar factories had considered the pulp as a waste product and refuse and the company was facing a problem in disposing of it, so as not to be a nuisance to the neighborhood. Mr. Stark thought it contained enough food value so that stockmen, if they knew, would gladly purchase it, so the same season Mr. Stark purchased the pulp from the company and sold it to stockmen for feed and so as far as the records show he was the first to demonstrate the food value of this product and to promote its sale for feed. This added resource was not only an aid in putting the infant industry on its feet, but protected the company from legal litigation arising for damages on account of the odor of the refuse to adjoining resident districts. Through his travels about the country in this work he became very familiar with crop conditions and land valuations and this knowledge made him especially valuable as field superintendent for the factory. When Mr. Stark took up his work for the factory only from 14,000 to 18,000 tons of beets were being sliced yearly, and this amount he increased to 50,000 tons per year. He started a campaign of education among the growers, addressing the farm centers all over the state. It was a new enterprise and the farmers were doubtful about its success and, consequently, very conservative in the acreage they would devote to it, as is shown by the fact that the 5,000 acres of land given over to the cultivation of sugar beets represented 1,900 growers, thus averaging about two and a half acres to each grower. Through Mr. Stark's endeavors many more farmers were induced to plant, and those who had already become interested in the production of beets increased their acreage. Machinery for cultivating the crop was bought by the factory and rented to the farmers and later sold to them.

Having for some time had a desire to locate on the Pacific Coast, and particularly where his eyes turned toward Southern California, Mr. Stark resigned his position with the Wisconsin Sugar Company in 1905 and located in Los Angeles, Cal. Until a proper opening in the sugar industry should present itself, he engaged in the mercantile business there, in time having two stores in the metropolis of the Coast. Mr. Stark, being a personal friend of Fred Heinze, former superintendent of the Wisconsin Sugar Company at Menominee Falls, Wis., kept up a correspondence concerning the future possibilities of the sugar industry in this part of Southern California. Mr. Heinze came out to California in 1907 and they spent some time investigating in Los Angeles and Orange counties, with the result that the Southern California Sugar Company was organized and the plant at Santa Ana started. Mr. Stark sold his business in Los Angeles and became foreman of construction, remaining with them until the end of the first season, when he resigned to accept the position offered him by the Anaheim Sugar Company, just incorporated, as field superintendent from its inception, so he was the first man connected with the work of starting the new plant. He went into the field, and with his years of ripe experience interested the ranchers and signed up sufficient acreage, after which the plant was immediately started and duly completed. He has continued actively with the company ever since.

Originally the plant of the Anaheim Sugar Company had a capacity of 500 tons per day, which has since been increased to 1,200 tons. At first 5,000 acres of beets were required to supply the factory, but since enlarging its capacity 12,000 acres are necessary, thus supplying approximately 100,000 tons of beets a year. The company owns over 2,500 acres of land in the vicinity and this they rent to beet growers. Mr. Stark is also interested in the company as a stockholder and gives it his undivided attention. He has been very successful in organizing his branch of the work and has brought it up to a high state of efficiency.

Mr. Stark's marriage, which occurred at Menominee Falls, Wis., on October 22, 1898, united him with Miss Anna Schlageter, a native of Washington County, Wis., and they are the parents of three children: Willard G., a student in the dental department of the University of Southern California; Berdilla and Melvin. Since 1907, Mr. Stark has resided in his comfortable home at 202 East Chestnut Street, Santa Ana, where he and his family have hosts of friends. Mr. Stark gives no small credit for his success to his devoted wife, who has ever been a willing helpmate, encouraging him in his every ambition and doing her utmost to help him in his life work. She is a cultured and refined woman with much native ability and artistic tastes, which find an outlet in beautifying the home, and thus in their liberal way they dispense a true western hospitality much enjoyed by their friends.

It is to men of Mr. Stark's caliber and ability that Orange County owes much of its prestige and greatness, for he brought many years of valuable experience and much acquired knowledge in the sugar business and particularly regarding the growers' end, or production of the raw material, and was able to interest the people in that branch, without which the factory could not have been made a success. He has truly become one of the men of affairs in Orange County and a valuable addition to the personnel of the community. A splendid type of man, his pleasing personality, coupled with a liberal and kindly disposition, has brought him a large circle of friends who appreciate him for his honesty of purpose, integrity and worth.

JOHN WESLEY POPE.—Radiating the sunshine of an exemplary life filled with good deeds and generous benefactions, the memory of John W. Pope and his devoted wife will be forever cherished by all whose lives were blessed by their friendship, and the deep influence of the beautiful Christian example that characterized their every act will live far beyond the span of their earthly existence. Born in Tuscaloosa, Ala., August 12, 1832, Mr. Pope was the son of Burwell and Jane Pope, and at an early age was taken by his parents to Macon County, Miss., and there he passed the next fifteen years, then going to Holmes County, in that state. It was here that he united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at the age of twenty, and from that time he was loyal to the church of his choice, a consistent, useful member throughout the remainder of his life.

On January 13, 1859, he was united in the bonds of wedlock with Miss Martha Douglass, and for close to half a century their lives were lived together in peace and harmony. In 1861 they removed to Nueces County, Texas, where they remained for a year, spending the same length of time in Goliad County, before settling in Navarro County, where Mr. Pope became actively engaged in farming and stock raising. A man of industry and fine business ability, he soon occupied a prominent place among the ranchers of that district. Failing health, occasioned by repeated attacks of la grippe, so depleted his constitution that it became necessary for him to seek a milder climate, and in January, 1902, with his wife, in company of the family of E. C. Martin, a sketch of whose life is found elsewhere in this work, he came to Santa Ana, Cal. Mrs. Martin, who lost her parents in early childhood, was reared by Mr. and Mrs.

Pope, and given their loving care, and in their later years this was repaid in the loving ministrations and devotion she gave them.

With characteristic optimism, Mr. Pope became at once identified with the interests of his adopted home, purchasing some fine walnut groves, but again another move was deemed necessary on account of the damp sea air at Santa Ana, so in 1903 Mr. and Mrs. Pope removed to Redlands. Here he made a gallant fight for life, but pneumonia developed from a cold contracted while on a visit at the Martins, and the earthly life of John W. Pope closed on December 9, 1905. It was his wish to be buried at his old Texas home, and now his companion of forty-six years rests beside him, Mrs. Pope having survived him until October 14, 1914, reaching the age of seventy-five years. After her bereavement she made her home with Mr. and Mrs. Martin, who surrounded her with every loving care during the closing days of her life.

A true Christian gentleman, Mr. Pope expressed in his life those qualities of mind and heart that endeared him to family, friends and business associates, but it was perhaps in his spirit of liberality that he excelled. He not only gave generous support to his church, but to the poor, wherever he found them, and to every worthy Christian cause that was brought to his attention. One of his last benefactions was a gift of $1,000 toward the erection of a parsonage at Redlands. While devoted to the church founded by John Wesley, for whom he was named, he was never a bigot, but a lover of his church's doctrines and loyal to her teachings. Mrs. Pope, if possible, even excelled her husband in her generous benefactions, three gifts during her later years alone totaling $4,000, besides numberless smaller donations. Lives such as these will ever leave their impress on all who were privileged to come within their hallowed influence.

HERBERT A. JOHNSTON, M. D.—Surgical science has no disciple more loyal to the profession or more eager to keep pace with its development than Dr. Herbert A. Johnston of Anaheim, who was born at Minesing, near Barrie, Ontario, on October 8, 1873, the son of James B. Johnston, also a native of Barrie. His grandfather, James Johnston, was born in the north of Ireland, and having married Mary Graham, they migrated to Ontario, where he was a successful contractor and builder in Kingston, Toronto and Barrie. James B. Johnston, on the other hand, was a merchant for many years until he sold out and came to Anaheim about a decade ago; but he was permitted to enjoy the delightful climate of California only for a short time, and died soon after arriving here. He had married Jeanette Livingston, a native of Montreal, Canada, and the daughter of Donald and Mary (Brown) Livingston, natives of Paisley, Scotland, who migrated to Canada, where they followed agriculture. The Livingstons come from the same family forever famous through David Livingston, the explorer. Mrs. Johnston is still living, and now resides at Anaheim, the mother of three children. The eldest is the subject of this review; the next in order of birth is Mrs. Marion Ross, who lives at Anaheim; while the youngest was Robert, who will long be honored in Orange County as the editor of the Anaheim Herald. When his health failed, he sold the paper, hoping through freedom from the responsibilities and cares of business to recuperate, but he lingered only until June, 1920, and passed away at Monrovia.

Herbert A. Johnston attended the public schools in Minesing, after which he entered the Barrie Collegiate Institute, from which he graduated in 1894. Then he entered the medical department of the University of Toronto and there pursued his studies until the beginning of the senior year, when he was forced to discontinue, owing to ill health. He came direct to California in 1897, and soon after his arrival entered the medical department of the University of Southern California, which graduated him in 1898 with the degree of M.D. He immediately located at Anaheim, and on June 22 of the same year opened an office and began the practice of medicine and surgery, in which field he has been notably successful.

When Dr. William H. Wickett graduated in medicine, he became associated with Dr. Johnston as a partner, and ever since they have practiced together with particularly satisfactory results. As early as 1903, Dr. Johnston opened the first hospital in Anaheim, in the old Fowler residence, which became the nucleus of the present Anaheim Hospital, incorporated and built about 1910—an institution of considerable importance to Southern California for it has become a center for surgical work. Drs. Johnston and Wickett also started the Johnston-Wickett Clinic, which has grown to its present large proportions. Originally there were only two persons on the staff, but one by one physicians and surgeons were added and the departments opened, until there are now ten physicians and surgeons on the staff, as well as a pharmacist and other employes, and the establishment is the largest and best equipped clinic on the Pacific Coast. Each department has for its head a specialist, and the clinic has recently acquired the Fullerton Hospital, a new modern, concrete fireproof structure located very pleasantly and conveniently in Fullerton, and conceded by all who are competent to judge, to be one of the finest hospitals in California. The appreciation of the clinic is not confined to residents of this locality, but its reputation has reached the outside world, with the result that about eighty per cent of its patients come from distant points. Indeed the work has developed to such an extent that the members of the staff are unable to take care of any private practice, but give all their time to the clinic and the two hospitals. Dr. Johnston is a member of, and was formerly president of the Orange County Medical Association, and is a member of the State Medical Society, the Southern California Medical Association and the American Medical Association.

At Toronto, Canada, on October 2, 1900, Dr. Johnston was married to Miss Annie Marwood Wickett, the only daughter of William Marwood and Lillis (Balfour) Wickett, now residents of Anaheim, and a sister of Dr. Wickett, his partner. Their household has been brightened by the birth of three children—Lillis, Agnes and Jessie. The family are members of the Presbyterian Church at Anaheim.

OREN BROWN BYRAM.—More than one interesting, historic family, notable for its relation to famous men and events of the past, is recalled by the life-stories of Mr. and Mrs. Oren Brown Byram, prominent in Presbyterian circles at Westminster, and leaders in progressive movements in Orange County. Mr. Byram is a rancher, who lives about a mile south of Westminster, and owns ten acres of the best land to be found anywhere.

He was born on September 24, 1861, on his father's farm, about three miles east of Janesville, in Bremer County, Iowa, the son of Aaron Milton and Harriet Newell Byram, the former a representative of an old and distinguished family, whose very quaint records go back to the eleventh and twelfth centuries, when they were noblemen in Normandy, France. Having shown great loyalty to William the Conqueror, they went to England with his cohorts and settled in Kent. They bore the name of De Beaureaume in Normandy, but in time, when they became weavers of cloth in Kent, their name was changed to Byram. The progenitor of the family in America was Nicholas Byram, who left England and came to the North American Continent under peculiar circumstances. He was the heir to a considerable estate; but his guardians sent him to the West Indies, in order to divert the property to themselves, and from there, in 1632, he came to Plymouth, Massachusetts Bay Colony. Ebenezer, the grandfather of our subject, was born in Morristown, N. J., in 1808, while Aaron Milton first saw the light of day at Basking Ridge, N. J., grew up in Ohio where he taught school and at seventeen was bound out to learn the trade of tanner and furrier.

After a while, the Byram family removed to Darke County, Ohio, and in 1853 pushed on to Iowa. There Aaron Byram became a farmer. In the Centennial Year of 1876, when attention was directed anew to California, the family removed to the Golden State, and Oren Byram began his identification with the Westminster district in 1876, when the family settled in this section of Los Angeles County. In 1883, Aaron Byram located near Lamanda Park; he died when in his sixty-seventh year in Pasadena. He was twice married, his first wife having been in maidenhood Miss Harriet Newell Brown, a native of Cattaraugus County, N. Y. They were married in Iowa on January 1, 1861; and after twenty-nine years of happy married life, she passed away in Pasadena. She left three children—Oren Brown Byram, the eldest; Walter Brooks, the second-born, and Annie Bertha, now the wife of J. W. Sedwick, a civil engineer in Los Angeles. When he married again, Mrs. Josephine Emerick, nee Wilkins, became his wife, bringing with her two daughters. This second union was blessed with the birth of a daughter, Gladys, now Mrs. Pickering of Pomona.

After having attended the University of Southern California for five years, where he pursued a general scientific course, Oren Byram was married on November 11, 1891, to Miss Stella F. Mack, a native of Solano County, Cal., and the daughter of George C. Mack, a Vermonter, who had married Miss Susan A. Fisher, a native of the Granite State. With a first-grade certificate for teaching, he conducted the academy at Hillsboro, Ill., assisted by seven teachers. In 1863 Professor Mack crossed the great plains, later being joined by his family who came via the Isthmus, Mrs. Byram then being the youngest of four children; later, she enjoyed such educational development that for some time she has been the able correspondent from Westminster for the Santa Ana Register.

Mr. and Mrs. Byram have had six children. Roy M., the eldest, is married and with his wife is a graduate in medicine from the Medical Department of the University of Texas; his wife was Miss Bertha Stanley of Huntington Park. Wilfred Carroll, who graduated from Occidental College and became a corporal in Company E of the Hundred Seventeenth Engineer Corps, lies buried in France. Marjorie Fay is a student at Occidental, and expects to become a nurse. Glenn Alden, so named in honor of a maternal ancestor who came over in the Mayflower, recalls the hero immortalized by Longfellow, and is attending Junior College in Santa Ana. Wilbur F. Byram attends the high school at Huntington Beach, and Dorothy Fern is a senior at the Huntington Beach high school. Mr. and Mrs. Byram and family are members of the Presbyterian Church at Westminster, where they are enthusiastic Endeavorers, and in national politics work for the Prohibition cause, Mr. Byram having long been a Prohibitionist and cast his vote for John P. St. John, in the campaign of 1884.

WILFRED CARROLL BYRAM.—If one must die, and die young, as Wilfred Carroll Byram, for whom all of Westminster, Orange County, recently joined in touching memorial services, it is some consolation to give one's life for his country, and a matter almost enviable to have caused the first gold star to be placed in the community service banner. A native son very proud of his Golden State, Wilfred was born at Westminster on November 18, 1894, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Oren Brown Byram, and attended the grammar school of his birthplace, where he finished his studies in 1908. He then entered the Huntington Beach Union high school, from which he was graduated with the class of '12.

A year later, he matriculated at Occidental College, and went in for the regular, four-year course, graduating at the age of twenty-two—a performance the more creditable, because he had, like so many sturdy American youths, worked his way, while studying. Such was his daily performance of duty as an undergraduate, that after his death, one of his instructors, Prof. E. E. Chandler, wrote his bereaved, but proud parents: "Carroll made a fine record at Occidental, and endeared himself to all of us by his manly character and genial disposition. I recall him as if it were but yesterday, doing his work in the laboratory, cheerfully and faithfully, just as he did in the larger service to which he was called."

During his last year in college, in 1916, Carroll enlisted in Company B, California Engineers, and mustered for training in Los Angeles. In July, 1917, the company was called to the colors, and sent to Camp Lewis, where they were reorganized into Company E, One Hundred Seventeenth U. S. Engineers, becoming a part of the Forty-second, or Rainbow Division. The company left Camp Lewis for Long Island on September 1, of that year, and with the Rainbow Division left for France on October 15, 1917.

The accident which caused young Mr. Byram's death on July 25, 1918, occurred when he was struck by a low bridge while on the train transferring his company. His skull was fractured in two places, and he was left unconscious at a French base hospital. For some time, all that the afflicted relatives of the brave fellow knew was conveyed in a brief, unsatisfactory telegram of official announcement.

A single sentiment or two from one of Carroll's letters to his home may suffice to show his high conception of unselfish duty. "Men don't join the army to become rich or famous," he said, "but to do their part and serve their country. If everybody would give up all personal ambition and work for the good of the cause, it would be the ideal condition."

EDWARD SMITHWICK.—Among the interesting and highly-esteemed pioneers of Santa Ana must be numbered Edward Smithwick, a native of Austin, Texas, where he was born on September 2, 1840, with the distinction of being a Texan before the Lone Star State became one of the United States. His father was Noah Smithwick, a pioneer of Texas pioneers, having come there from Tennessee in 1828; and he had married Miss Thurza Blakey, a native of Hopkinsville, Ky., whose family migrated to Texas in the thirties.

Edward was educated in the district schools of his locality, and came to California with his father and mother, who started from Texas in a prairie schooner drawn by oxen, the day upon which Fort Sumter was fired upon. There were five families, numbering thirty-five persons, in the train, and they arrived in San Diego County in the fall of 1861, and remained there for the winter, for the season was so wet that it was deemed best not to attempt travel. In the spring—1862—Mr. and Mrs. Smithwick moved north with their family to what was then Tulare County, and there they lived until 1881. In the meantime, Kern County was formed out of a part of Tulare and a part of Los Angeles counties, and the Smithwicks became residents of Kern County.

Edward Smithwick pastured sheep on what is now the rich Kern River oil fields, and at Linns Valley, on November 15, 1871, he was married to Miss Rebecca Reid, a native of Bell, Texas, who was brought to California by her parents in 1853, when she was only three months old. Her father was John C. Reid, and he had married a Miss Glen. After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Smithwick engaged in general farming, and for eleven years lived in Linns Valley. When they sold their ranch of 150 acres, they went to Bakersfield, and came to Santa Ana in the spring of 1881, and here they have made their home ever since.

Until 1895 Mr. Smithwick engaged in the livery business, and then he was judge in the justice's court, having been appointed in 1903 to fill the balance of Judge Freeman's term after his death. He was re-elected and served a second term, which expired in January, 1911.

In 1909 Mr. Smithwick purchased a half-acre home place on North Broadway, and then, while still holding his Santa Ana property, he lived near Harper on a five-acre ranch devoted to the raising of apples. When he sold out, he came back to Santa Ana.

Eight children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Smithwick, and six are living: Sidney married Miss Elizabeth Sidell, of Santa Ana; Effie is Mrs. Benjamin Jerome, and lives on the San Joaquin ranch; Mattie is Mrs. William Brodhag, of Los Angeles; Charles married Miss Ruby Spencer, and lives at Randsburg, Cal.; Bertha is Mrs. Olaf Warling, of Santa Ana; Laura lives at home. Eddie passed away at the age of six, in Kern County, and May, who had become Mrs. Kribbs, was a victim of the influenza while living in Los Angeles in 1919.

In national political affairs a straight Republican, Mr. Smithwick has always been too good an American citizen to allow partisanship to obscure the issues of a local campaign, or to interfere with his duty in supporting the best men and the best measures for the community's good.

GEORGE CLINTON MORROW.—To come into a new country and successfully grow with it, is a record of which any one might be proud, and George Clinton Morrow can claim such, being one of the real pioneers, having first come to California in 1863. He was born in Richland County, Ohio, May 31, 1835, the son of William and Maria (Potter) Morrow. William Morrow was born in the north of Ireland in the year of American Independence, and came to America when a young man, settling in Ohio, where he died in 1855. His marriage had united him with Maria T. Potter, a native of New York State, who came to California to reside some time after the death of her husband and passed away at San Antonio, San Bernardino County in 1871. On attaining his majority, George Morrow determined to seek his fortune in the West, so left his Ohio home, going first to Cass County, Iowa, where he remained for six years. Continuing his westward journey across the plains with horses and wagons, he arrived at Cache Creek, Yolo County, Cal., in 1863, where a year passed. In 1864 he came on to Los Angeles, then but a small settlement bearing no indication of its present metropolitan proportions, and he could have purchased then the present site of the Los Angeles County Court House for $1.25 per acre. He and his brother drove a freight team from Los Angeles to San Pedro. The next year he set out with a ten-mule freight team for Helena, Mont., and when they reached Salt Lake City his employer grew short of funds and sold his outfit to a party of Mormons with whom Mr. Morrow continued to Helena. From there he and his twin brother, Thos. Benton, took the stage. The driver had bronchos and could not manage them, so George C. and his brother being good horsemen, drove them through to Ft. Benton on the Missouri River, taking a steamer from there to Council Bluffs, Iowa.

For the next four years Mr. Morrow remained in Iowa, coming back to Los Angeles over the new line of the U. P. and C. P., which had recently been completed, being accompanied by his wife. They resided at Downey and he drove the stage for Wright and Seely between Anaheim and Los Angeles. After a year and a half, he and his wife again returned to Iowa, where he owned a farm with his brother, and farmed from 1872 till 1879. After these varied migrations, when he returned to California in 1879, it was with the intention of making it his permanent home and he has never regretted his decision, for he had traveled extensively over all the western part of the country, and in none of his travels had he found anything that could compare with it. His faith in its possibilities is shown by the fact that he purchased a tract of seventeen acres, five miles northeast of Orange for twenty-five dollars per acre. It was virgin soil, completely covered with cactus, and he at once set to work to develop it, first planting grapes and when they died, he planted it to oranges, peaches and apricots and also raised barley and beans. The splendid income he enjoyed from it in after years, substantiated his firm belief in its productivity. They have refused $4,000 an acre for the tract.

In 1869, at Indianola, Warren County, Iowa, George C. Morrow was married to Sarah Jane Hutchins, who was born in Noble County, Ohio, her parents, Hezekiah and Sarah (Wheeler) Hutchins, being natives of Maine. After an eventful life of more than fifty years together they are both still living, Mr. Morrow now being in his eighty-fifth year, while Mrs. Morrow is seventy-six. Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Morrow: Thomas Benton married Miss Mabel Bostwick, who died in July, 1910; George Clinton, Jr., is now a resident of Huntington Beach; Maggie May,

G. C. Morison

Sarah J. Morrow

Mrs. William Boden, died here in 1913; Lovena Madge married C. B. Christenson and they live at Orange; Nellie B., who married Harry Fenton, died in Nebraska at the age of twenty-one; Anna T., Mrs. Frank Wheeler of Orange; Sylvester W., mentioned elsewhere in this work; Charles William married Miss Mable Stutheit. Rich in reminiscences, of the early days, Mr. Morrow has frequently written for publication concerning his many and varied experiences while freighting and stage driving, and there are indeed few of the county's residents who have been privileged to take such an active part in the various stages of its transformation.

GEORGE B. SHATTUCK.—The lines in the life of George B. Shattuck were cast in pleasant places when his lot in life brought him to the beautiful and fertile section of Orange County in which Tustin is located. He is among its foremost citizens, and occupies the important position of secretary and general manager of the Golden West Citrus Association. Born at Hillsdale, Mich., July 26, 1868, he is the only son of L. B. and Julia B. (Reed) Shattuck. His father was a captain of Company F, Thirty-fifth New York Regiment, Volunteer Infantry, in the Civil War. His parents came to California in 1906 and both are now deceased.

George B. Shattuck was educated in the public and high schools of the city of Chicago, Ill., and afterward entered the University of Michigan, from which he graduated, receiving the degree of LL.B. in 1890, and the degree of LL.M. in 1891. From 1890 to 1906 he practiced the legal profession in Chicago, and in the latter year came to California, where he purchased the Tustin Packing Company, which he successfully operated until the fall of 1917. He was instrumental in organizing the Golden West Citrus Association, and assumed the position of secretary and general manager of the association, his present position. Under his competent management the company has been successful, and occupies modern, up-to-date buildings built in March, 1918. He also has charge of the 1,400-acre Marcy ranch, about 400 acres of which is devoted to the culture of citrus fruit. Always interested in the upbuilding of Santa Ana, he was one of the promoters and is a trustee of the new Santa Ana Tourist Hotel; is president of the Santa Ana industrial fund, which is to be used to induce manufactories and industries to locate here.

Mr. Shattuck's marriage, on June 2, 1898, united him with Miss Jennie Otis, of Chicago, whom he had the misfortune to lose when death's portals closed her earthly career in 1900. He was at one time president of the Santa Ana Chamber of Commerce and a member of its board of directors, and was one of the founders of the Orange County Country Club, of which he is secretary and director. In politics he sustains the principles advocated in the Republican platform, and fraternally is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is a member of the military order of the Loyal Legion of the United States, and is also a member of the Sigma Chi.

MISS NINFA SERRANO.—The name of Serrano is one well known in Southern California, where the family was identified with its early history and among its largest land owners. The youngest of the family, Miss Ninfa Serrano is the daughter of Joaquin and Encarnacion (Olivas) Serrano, the father having been born at Los Angeles and the mother at San Diego. Grandfather Jose Serrano owned the original Rancho Cañada de los Alisos, afterwards Rancho del El Toro, a great tract of 11,000 acres which was situated on Aliso Creek. For many years the family lived on this extensive estate, maintaining the old Spanish mode of life and dispensing the liberal hospitality of those days of abundance, but the old rancho has in past years been subdivided and sold and is now the property of others.

Joaquin Serrano, a capable, industrious rancher, bought the land comprising the present Serrano ranch, a tract of 393 acres lying about seven miles east of El Toro and here his children cooperate in the cultivation of this estate, which has grown to be a valuable property. Joaquin and Encarnacion Serrano were the parents of the following children: Frank J. married Juana Olivares; Joaquin F.; Cornelius; Leandro; Jose; Alphonso married Aqueda Pacheco; Ninfa, the subject of this sketch; and Juan Pablo. The ranch is devoted to stock raising and to general farming, a variety of farm products being raised. Reared in Southern California from her birth, Miss Serrano has been familiar with agricultural life from her earliest childhood and takes an active interest in the management of the family estate. Recently the Serranos have given an oil lease on their land and a test well is now being put down near the Orange County Park, her brother Joaquin Serrano being engaged in the drilling. The present prospects are very encouraging and should the well be the equal of a number of others in the district it will be a continual source of wealth to the whole family.

Like their forbears of the past generations, the family are members of the Roman Catholic Church, and are communicants of the Mission Church at Capistrano. Politically they adhere to the principles of the Democratic party.

SAMUEL M. DUNGAN.—A successful rancher who was once a professional baseball player, adding no end of luster to the laurels in athletics already won by the Golden State, is Samuel M. Dungan, who was born, a native son, on the "Island" near Eureka, in Humboldt County, on July 29, 1866, the son of Robert M. and Joanna (Jenkins) Dungan, the former who first came across the Isthmus of Panama in 1857. He was by trade a builder of boats and ferries, and himself built the first ferry boat, and established the first ferry on Eel River. He also helped to build the Piedmont Ferry now run by the Southern Pacific between San Francisco and Oakland while living in the latter city. He and his wife moved to Los Angeles County in 1877, settling in what was known as Gospel Swamp, now in Orange County, and soon after he established himself as a contractor and builder in Santa Ana, at the same time carrying on his ranch work. Both parents died in Santa Ana, the father in April, 1915, and the mother in February, 1920.

Samuel Dungan was educated at the grammar school at Newport, now Greenville, walking two and a half miles to school. From 1886 to 1888 he attended the State Normal School at Ypsilanti, Mich., and in the latter year he returned to California. Two years later, he began to play professional baseball, from 1890 to 1891 being right fielder under T. P. Robinson at Oakland, where he had the best batting average of any individual in the league, and was given a gold medal therefor. During 1891 he was with the Milwaukee club in the Western League under Manager Chas. Cushman. From 1892 to 1893, and during half of 1894, Mr. Dungan was with Captain Anson's "White Sox" of Chicago, and from 1894 to 1900, he played at Detroit, Mich., in the Western League, and in 1900 with Kansas City, the first year of the American League, which he led in batting.

In 1901, the first year when the American League expanded under Ban Johnson, he was with the players of Washington, D. C., and during 1902 and half of 1903, with the Milwaukee Western League. From the middle of 1903 to the end of 1905, he played at Memphis, Tenn., with the Southern League, and in those seasons he held every position save that of pitcher and catcher, in the infield. In 1905, he quit playing baseball altogether.

In 1893 Mr. Dungan had purchased twenty acres of open land at Talbert, which he leased out for potatoes and celery and later beets and beans; and when he came back to Orange County he built a home on Fourth Street, later bought a lot and built a home at Laguna Beach, where he lived for twelve years while he was doing carpentering. During this time, in 1912, he bought ten acres at Lemon Heights, most of which is in the Red Hill Water district, the remainder being under the service of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company. In 1917, Mr. Dungan built his home at 221 South Broadway, Santa Ana, and retired.

On November 14, 1900, Mr. Dungan was married to Miss Laura B. Lippy, a native of Mansfield, Ohio, the ceremony taking place in Chicago. Her parents were Harry and Mary (Long) Lippy, and her father was a cigar maker in Galion, Ohio. There she commenced her studies, which were finished in Santa Ana, Cal., for her family came out to the Coast in 1887. After their deaths, which occurred here in 1889 and 1891, respectively, the daughter returned East and stayed with a grandmother at Galion, in Crawford County, Ohio, and having studied stenography, typewriting and bookkeeping, she entered the service of a large jewelry firm in Chicago. Two children, who belong to the Baptist Church in Santa Ana, have blessed this fortunate union, and their names are Myron Robert and Dorothy Eleanor both attending the public schools. Mr. Dungan is a Knights Templar Mason, belonging to the bodies of Santa Ana.

HARRY WOODINGTON.—A resident of Orange County for forty years, Harry Woodington is justly entitled to be called one of its pioneers, for aside from his many years of residence here he has indeed been a pioneer in the agricultural and business development of the Wintersburg section of the county. A native of Illinois, he was born at Elizabeth, Jo Daviess County, in that state, April 11, 1875, the son of George and Alice (Neal) Woodington. The father had been a farmer in that state for many years, but after a visit to California in 1870, he cherished a desire to return to this land of sunshine and make it his home. Ten years later in 1880, he carried out that wish, removing with his family to Orange County, in the vicinity of Westminster, where he resided. His death occurred on the San Joaquin Ranch in 1905. He had been engaged in farming the greater part of his life and during the fourteen years of his residence in California he carried on agricultural pursuits quite extensively on the Bixby ranch and later raised grain on the San Joaquin ranch.

A lad of only five years when the family came West, Harry Woodington received his education in the schools of Westminster, but when a boy he always manifested a great interest in farming and even during his school days he worked on ranches in the neighborhood of his home when school was not in session. When a young man he became closely acquainted with D. E. Smeltzer, who introduced and built up the celery business in this part of the country. Mr. Smeltzer was known as the "Celery King," and the town of Smeltzer was named for him. Mr. Woodington entered his employ and was later made foreman of his ranch. After Mr. Smeltzer's death, the Golden West Celery and Produce Company was incorporated, taking over the holdings of Mr. Smeltzer. Mr. Woodington continued with them and in 1903 was made superintendent, a position his knowledge and experience made him most competent to fill, and through his untiring efforts the ranch was brought up to the highest state of productiveness. The celery business, however, reached the height of its prosperity about 1910-1912, and after that date its returns began to decrease, owing to blight and other pests; the large returns from lima beans and sugar beets also was a factor that led to its decreasing acreage. Mr. Woodington remained its superintendent until the company sold out to the Anaheim Sugar Company in 1919.

Meanwhile, in 1918, Mr. Woodington had purchased his present home place of forty acres, formerly known as the A. J. Crane place, and this acreage he devotes to raising lima beans. He also rents sixty acres and planted the entire hundred acres in lima beans in 1920. Always in the habit of doing things on a big scale, Mr. Woodington has been extensively engaged in the bean threshing business. He operates a threshing rig drawn by a thirty-six horsepower traction engine with a 36x60 separator. He has done much threshing in the vicinity of Smeltzer and on the San Joaquin ranch, putting in forty days on the former and thirty days on the ranch, cleaning up $7,000 by that work. He threshed 2,448 sacks of beans on the San Joaquin ranch as a record day's run.

Mr. Woodington was united in marriage on July 7, 1898, to Miss Rella Clemens, a native of Michigan. She was reared in Rapid City, S. D., coming to Wintersburg when she was eleven years of age. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Woodington: Russell and Donald, the elder son, Russell passing away in 1913. The family attend the Wintersburg Methodist Church, which Mr. Woodington helped to build and which he generously supports. He is a member of the California Lima Bean Growers Association and of the Elks Lodge at Santa Ana, and politically adheres to the principles of the Republican party. A man of great force of character and executive ability, one of his greatest assets is in his ability to handle men, and in this regard, especially, he is one of the most successful men in Orange County.

JOHN W. MARTIN.—A worthy example of a man who has risen to a place in the community through his own unaided efforts and in the face of many early obstacles is furnished in the career of John W. Martin, now a prosperous rancher of the Talbert precinct, where he owns 130 acres of choice land. Mr. Martin was born in Freeport, Ill., October 27, 1867, a son of John and Katherine (Claus) Martin, his father being engaged in the butcher business there. The family moved from Freeport to St. Louis, Mo., and there the mother died when John W. was a lad of but nine years, and from that time on he has made his own way in the world. He saw some rough and hard times in his boyhood, but being filled with ambition and determination he managed to secure the elements of an education by working out during the summers and attending the public schools for a short term in the winters. He returned to the northern part of Illinois and there worked out on farms near Rock City, in Stephenson County, and at Pecatonica and Winnebago, in Winnebago County, of that state.

When in his twentieth year, Mr. Martin came to California, locating at Los Angeles, and still with the desire to have a better education he got such schooling as he was able during the winters, finally entering the academic department of the University of Southern California, but unfortunately was taken with typhoid fever and was unable to complete the course. He then worked at various pursuits, farming for a time and then becoming interested in the oil business. The latter did not prove successful, however, so that he had to begin life practically anew at the age of thirty-five. He went to San Jacinto in 1898, and went into dairy farming on a rented farm, remaining there for about four years. In 1902 he came to Orange County, settling in the Talbert precinct, where he bought thirty acres for a starter, and since then he has made two subsequent purchases, so that he now has a well-kept and profitable ranch of 130 acres. Mr. Martin has gone into sugar beet raising quite extensively, and has also had splendid success in raising celery and chili peppers and has planted a number of apple trees on his place. In 1916 he suffered a severe financial loss by the floods of that year, losing a crop of fifteen acres of celery and an alfalfa field. He has put in 3,000 feet of twelve-inch, and 1,500 of ten-inch cement tile for irrigation and has a pumping plant with two wells and has a half interest with his brother, George E. Martin, in another pumping plant with two wells. He has also remodeled his residence and made many other improvements.

On September 29, 1897, Mr. Martin was married to Miss Georgia Smith, a daughter of Jackson and Maggie (Mellon) Smith. Her father was for a number of years in the furniture business in St. Louis, Mo., but after coming to California engaged in ranching near Newhall. Mr. and Mrs. Martin are the parents of five children: John W., Jr., enlisted in the Coast Artillery during the war, but the armistice came before he saw active service; Catherine Marie is a graduate of the Santa Ana high school, in the class of 1919; Edward J.; Floyd Raymond; and Margaret Luella. Remembering his own struggles to obtain an education, Mr. Martin has naturally felt a keen interest in furthering in every way possible the school facilities for the present and coming generation, and has given faithful service for a number of terms as trustee of the New Hope school district, and was clerk for many years. He is also a director of the Newbert protection district and was one of its organizers. While Mr. Martin inclines toward the principles of the Democratic party he is liberal minded in local political matters and believes in putting the best man and the best principles above mere partisanship. The Martin home abounds with hospitality and good cheer, and the whole family are justly popular in the community.

GEORGE R. REYBURN.—One of the liveliest of all Orange County wires, both in times of peace and during the recent World War, is George R. Reyburn, the genial, accomplished and accommodating secretary of the chamber of commerce of Garden Grove, where he has given abundant evidence of his faith in the future of the town by investing in the best realty to be found there. A native son who never loses an opportunity to boost the Golden State, he was born at Petaluma on May 19, 1860. His mother died there when he was only four years of age, and his father two years later.

When he was sixteen, George came to Santa Ana and for a while went to school. Then he worked at sprinkling the streets, and next went to Texas for ten or more years. In 1894 he returned to Santa Ana, and for two years was in business there; and since 1896, he has been a leading resident here. The town has used him well, as has the county; and in turn George gives every stranger the glad hand, and so encourages every good project.

At Santa Ana in 1895 Mr. Reyburn was married to Miss Katie McGee, a native of Pennsylvania, who moved to Iowa and thence to California. They are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Garden Grove, and Mr. Reyburn is president of the board of trustees, having been a member of the church for twenty-five years.

Mr. Reyburn owns three of the best store buildings in Garden Grove, and also his residence, and besides dealing in realty, an enterprise he abandoned during the war, he is the veteran fire insurance agent in Garden Grove, and represents the Phoenix of Hartford. He bought five acres, planted and farmed the land and subsequently subdivided and sold it in town lots, known as the Reyburn Subdivision of Garden Grove; but for four years he was engaged in general merchandising at Garden Grove. In national political affairs a Democrat, he knows no party lines when it comes to putting his shoulder to the wheel and working for the best interests, now and in the future, of Garden Grove and Orange County, both of which, he is sure, are growing better every day.

For some time Mr. Reyburn has been the popular secretary of the chamber of commerce, boasting seventy-five members; and with an inside view of the real resources of this section, says that prospects were never better than in this year, 1920. Probably because of this valuable experience, Mr. Reyburn was called upon to do much important war work. He had charge of the registration for this district, planned the drives, and was an all-around, confidential man. He worked hard for the four Liberty Loans, and also for the Victory Loan, and gave a willing and most helpful hand for the Red Cross drives.

How valuable has been this work of Mr. Reyburn for the building up of Garden Grove and neighboring sections of Orange County may be judged by certain newspaper acknowledgments, and from statistics found in chamber of commerce publications. Garden Grove now has, thanks in part to these strenuous exertions of our subject, a population of 800 souls, and is in the center of a population of 2,000. It has a strong bank, a first-class weekly newspaper and printing plant, four well-housed churches, a strong Young Men's Christian Association, with a good building of its own, a woman's club which holds weekly meetings; and a public school system, in good headquarters and manned by ten teachers. The town enjoys a good telephone system, electric light and gas for domestic use, streets lighted by electricity, good streets for the most part substantially paved, and an abundant artesian water supply. It has good passenger and freight facilities furnished by the Pacific Electric Railway, and stores equal to those of any town of the size in the state. The irrigation system is the most perfect obtainable, for at an average depth of 180 feet plenty of good water is found. The Garden Grove section produces the most chili peppers, for the area, to be found in all America. A thousand acres of walnut groves are close to Garden Grove. The neighborhood is rapidly coming to the front as a Valencia orange section and there are thousands of acres planted. There are 2000 acres of beans. Sugar beets cover about 2000 acres and over 300 acres are planted to potatoes. Great quantities of garden truck in excess of local wants are shipped away; apricots and other fruits here grow to perfection and prove a fine investment for the planter; and there is a record of 200 per cent on the investment in poultry and eggs.

Speaking of the war work in which Mr. Reyburn took such an active part, the Garden Grove News of April 11, 1919, had this to say:

"In all of the Liberty Loan drives, as in the case of the present Victory drive, Mr. George Reyburn has been the moving spirit, and has had charge of all the local business by direct appointment from the Treasury Department at Washington. And well and patriotically has he performed his duty. At all times Garden Grove has gone over the top with more than its quota, and that the place has sustained this record for liberality and generosity is largely due to Reyburn's indefatigable devotion to public duty without thought of compensation other than the abiding esteem of his fellow-townsmen and co-workers."

The Garden Grove News of May 16, also contained the following:

"Garden Grove's Honor Flag was received by George Reyburn, local chairman of the Victory Loan Committee this week. The quota assigned this district was $30,375, the major part of which was raised the opening day of the campaign. At the close of the drive, Garden Grove had subscribed $33,500, or $3,125 above our apportionment. There were two hundred sixty-two subscribers to the last Liberty Loan in this locality."

WILLIAM H. WICKETT, M. D.—Since coming to Anaheim in 1907, Dr. William Harold Wickett has won and maintained a high reputation for skill in medicine and surgery. Through his association, with Dr. H. A. Johnston, of the Johnston-Wickett Clinic, he has made a valuable contribution to the medical profession of the Pacific Coast. The doctor has kept abreast of the most advanced medical thought and practice of the day, not merely because of the allurements which beckon the student on to that which is purely experimental, but largely from the standpoint of the humanitarian, who is actuated by the desire to alleviate human suffering.

Toronto, Canada, was the birthplace of Dr. Wickett, April 5, 1884, marking the date of his birth. His father, William Marwood Wickett, was born in England, and came with his father, William Wickett, to Brooklyn, Ontario, where he followed farming during the days of his early manhood. He then engaged in the business of a tanner and currier at Brooklyn, later removing to Toronto, where he was extensively interested in the manufacture of leather, being a partner in the firm of Wickett and Craig. Here he continued until 1906, when he disposed of his business interests in Toronto and came to California, locating at Anaheim, where he has since devoted his time to citrus culture. Mrs. Wickett, who was Lillis Balfour before her marriage, was born in Fifeshire, Scotland, and crossed the Atlantic on a sailing vessel with her parents in the days when the journey was a matter of weeks instead of days. The family settled in Canada and here she met and married Mr. Wickett. Since taking up their residence in Anaheim, Mr. and Mrs. Wickett have been active in the work of the Presbyterian Church of that city, Mr. Wickett being an elder of that body. Two children were born to them: Annie Marwood, who is the wife of Dr. H. A. Johnston, and William H. Wickett, of this review.

Dr. Wickett was reared in Toronto, and his early education was obtained in the Lord Dufferin school. Even from a youth he had always had a strong desire to enter the medical profession, and when he had graduated from the Lord Dufferin school, he continued his studies at the University of Toronto to prepare for his medical course. In 1903 he came to California and entered the College of Medicine of the University of Southern California, and was graduated in 1907, with the degree of M.D. Coming to Anaheim, he formed a partnership with his brother-in-law, Dr. Herbert A. Johnston, which culminated in the formation of the Johnston-Wickett Clinic; and so successful has been this work that the members of the staff have been compelled to give up their general practice and devote all their time to the clinic. Year by year the staff has been increased and new departments added, until it has become one of the largest clinics on the Coast, ten physicians and surgeons, each at the head of his special department, being in constant attendance. Drs. Johnston and Wickett have for some years been large stockholders in the Anaheim hospital and have recently acquired the Fullerton Hospital, a modern, fireproof building that is considered the most complete hospital of its size in the state.

In January, 1918, Dr. Wickett was commissioned a captain in the Medical Corps of the U. S. Army, and proceeded to the Mayo Clinic at Rochester, Minn., where he remained for two months. He was then appointed on the surgical staff at Camp Sheridan, Montgomery, Ala., later becoming attached to Evacuation Hospital No. 11, detailed for overseas service. Arriving in France, he was placed in charge of an operating team and sent to the Toul sector, serving throughout the St. Mihiel drive. At the close of activities in that sector he was sent to the Argonne Forest, where he was in active service until January, 1919, when he joined his old command at Le Mans. Here he remained on duty until he requested a transfer to the United States, returning as medical officer on the S. S. Roma, landing in April, 1919; then serving as medical officer in charge of a troop train to Camp Kearny, Cal. He received his honorable discharge from the U. S. Army April 18, 1919, and returned to Orange County to resume his practice. In 1920 he spent some time in Chicago, where he took a post-graduate course at the Bremmerman Urological Hospital.

On June 2, 1910, Dr. Wickett was united in marriage with Miss Ethel Pearson Chapman, the daughter of Charles C. Chapman of Fullerton. Mrs. Wickett was born in Chicago, but from early girlhood has been a resident of California and Orange County. After their marriage Dr. and Mrs. Wickett spent four months in Europe, visiting the Royal College of Surgeons in London, and many places of interest on the Continent. Two sons have been born to them, Charles Marwood and William Harold, Jr. Some years ago Dr. Wickett erected the Marwood Apartments in Fullerton, later disposing of this property; he is at present interested in horticulture, in addition to his busy life as a surgeon, and is the owner of several ranches devoted to Valencia oranges.

Prominent in the ranks of the Masons, Dr. Wickett is a member of the Lodge, Chapter and Commandery at Fullerton, the Consistory at Bloomsburg, Pa., and Rajah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., at Reading, Pa. He also belongs to Fullerton Post of the American Legion, and in his professional affiliations is an active member of the Orange County Medical Association, the Southern California Medical Society, the California State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. With Mrs. Wickett, he holds membership in the Christian Church at Fullerton, and is a deacon in that body.

SAMUEL Q. CONKLE.—The Conkle family trace their origin in this country to their Dutch ancestors who settled in Pennsylvania in early days, and S. Q. Conkle of Garden Grove is the representative of the California branch of his family. Mr. Conkle was born September 8, 1846, near East Liverpool, Columbiana County, Ohio. His father, Daniel, was a native of Columbiana County and his mother, who was Barbara Poor in maidenhood, was born in Westmoreland County and came to Ohio, where she was reared. His parents were married in Ohio, where the father, a stockman and farmer, owned a large farm and bought sheep for the Pittsburgh markets, in early days driving his droves and herds through on foot to that city. He also drove sheep into Missouri in the early fifties. The father, at the age of sixty-five, sold his farm and moved to Minerva, near Canton, Stark County, Ohio, where he lived retired until the time of his death in 1887, at the age of seventy-five. The mother died at the age of seventy. In the parental family of eight children, three girls and five boys, Samuel Q. Conkle is the youngest child, and the only one of the family now living. None of his brothers died under the age of seventy-five. His oldest brother was a civil engineer in Stark County, Ohio; some of the brothers were farmers, and Noah F. was a merchant at Topeka, Kans., for twenty years. Three of his brothers served in the Union Army during the Civil War.

Samuel Q. was educated in the district schools of his native state and at Mount Union Academy, and began life as a clerk in the produce business at Minerva, Ohio, in which he was employed three years, from twenty-one until twenty-four years of age. He then bought out his employer and continued to conduct a wholesale business as a shipper of butter, eggs, and poultry, shipping to the Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, New York City, and Baltimore markets for ten years, and doing a profitable business. Having contracted asthma, he sold his interests in the East and came to Orange County, Cal., then a part of Los Angeles County, first settling at Santa Ana in 1885. After two years he moved to his ranch of twenty-two acres in the Bolsa district between Santa Ana and Bolsa, being a part of the Stearns' Rancho, where he engaged in farming. He also owned eighty acres in the Black Star Canyon where he accumulated some 225 colonies of bees. He had learned the bee business in Ohio, but owing to climatic conditions found it was much different in California, and had to practically learn the business over again. He succeeded and became one of Orange County's most successful apiarists.

His marriage, which occurred in Sandyville, Ohio, January 24, 1872, united him with Miss Normanda McFarland, a native of Tuscarawas County, Ohio, and daughter of John McFarland, a hotel keeper at Sandyville. Six children were born of their union, five of whom are living, the second child dying in infancy. Ura Bertie is the wife of Frank Mills, a prosperous rancher at Garden Grove; Hazel is the wife of Samuel McKee, of Los Angeles; Lemon L. runs an auto truck in Los Angeles, is married and lives in that city; Mellie is the wife of John Bedabach, a dealer in stock, and their home is at Pasadena. Roscoe lives in Los Angeles, and is single. Owing to his wife's failing health Mr. Conkle disposed of his home ranch and they made their home with Mrs. Mills, where Mrs. Conkle died in 1910. Mr. Conkle then came to Garden Grove and built a comfortable bungalow on Pine Street, where he now resides. Mrs. Conkle was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Conkle still owns ten acres south of Garden Grove which is leased. In 1918 he suffered a stroke of paralysis, and lay unconscious for three weeks, but his great vitality enabled him to make a good recovery. He was well acquainted with the late ex-President McKinley, who was his legal adviser while he lived in Ohio. One of Garden Grove's most highly respected citizens he has the satisfaction of knowing that his long and useful life has been well spent, and his children, who were born with a good inheritance, are living useful, active lives, honored and esteemed by their friends and acquaintances. In his political views Mr. Conkle is a Republican. He never was sued nor ever sued any person, nor did he ever serve on a jury or hold office of any kind.

WM. J. CHENEY.—A successful rancher operating extensively and enjoying a popularity shared by his estimable wife and children, is Wm. J. Cheney, who was born near what is now Downey, and is one of three sons, all the living children of Tilford D. Cheney, a native of Arkansas, who married Emma Ryle, a belle of Kentucky. Tilford Cheney came with his parents from Arkansas to California in 1856, driving a mule-team, and proceeding along the northern route, by way of the Black Hills; and while they were passing through that country, a most unusual accident took place. A bolt of lightning struck the lad, while he was walking along the side of the wagon train, and he fell unconscious to the ground, where he was picked up by his mother, and although a heavy rain was falling, her mother-love would not permit her to give him up, and for three days she worked over him, until she brought him back to consciousness and eventually restored him to health.

The family settled at first in Napa County, where the subject's grandfather, Wm. W. Cheney, was engaged for several years in ranching, and then they lived in Salinas, Monterey County, and in San Luis Obispo County, before they came to Los Angeles County in 1865. Thus the Cheneys were pioneers in those sections. The mother died in Los Angeles County twenty-one years ago, at the age of fifty-one; the father still lives in Tulare, having passed his eighty-first birthday. Two younger brothers, H. C. and C. D. Cheney, are ranchers in Tulare County.

Wm. J. Cheney is the only one of the family living in Southern California, and here he attended the public schools, topping off with a course at Woodbury Business College in Los Angeles, from which he was graduated in 1896. Ever since he finished his schooling, he has been engaged in agricultural pursuits, at first farming 300 acres of his father's at Calabasas, in Los Angeles County, at which he continued for three years. There he became acquainted with James Irvine, from whom he rented 960 acres; now he operates 600 acres of the Irvine ranch, where he has farmed for seventeen years.

Five years ago Mr. Cheney bought ten acres on Prospect Avenue, Tustin, the beginning of his home place, and two years ago he bought the twenty acres across the street. He has set out 815 Valencia orange trees on the ten-acre field, and 1600 Valencias on the twenty acres west of Prospect Avenue. This land was formerly planted to Navels and walnuts, but the trees being old and neglected, he grubbed them all out, and now has two of the finest young orange groves in the country. In partnership with James Utt he is operating the nursery which is devoted to the raising of Valencia orange trees, of which they now have 12,000. This nursery comprises two acres he owns at Tustin.

On some of the Irvine ranch leased by Mr. Cheney, he has planted 359 acres to lima beans, 150 acres to black-eyes, while the balance of the acreage is set out to barley and hay. He is the secretary of the San Joaquin Lima Bean Growers Association, and was one of its organizers in 1916, as well as the first secretary. Before its organization, farmers got only three and a quarter to four and a half cents per pound, while the price in 1919 was fourteen and one-half cents. As a successful business man, Mr. Cheney is a stockholder in the First National Bank of Santa Ana. He is also a member of the Tustin Hills Citrus Association, which owns a packing house on the Southern Pacific Railway. With Santa Ana and Orange associates he was one of the organizers of the Wyana Oil Company, of which he is president. The company is now drilling for oil on their own holdings in the Lost Soldier oil field in Wyoming.

On December 11, 1907, Mr. Cheney was married to Miss Eva F. Fraser, a native of Iowa, and the daughter of Francis Peter and Rebecca Ann (Scott) Fraser. She came to California when about nine years of age. Her father died in Santa Ana on May 30, 1919, and his widow is still living on East Second Street, in Santa Ana. Two children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Cheney, William J. Cheney, Jr., and Edra Evelyn. Mr. Cheney will soon erect a pressed-brick residence at a cost of twenty thousand dollars. He is a life member of Santa Ana Lodge No. 794, B. P. O. Elks.

Mr. Cheney also owns and operates 300 acres four miles south of Tulare, in Tulare County, on the State Highway, which he farms to wheat and corn and where he raises mules. He uses mules of his own raising in both Tulare and Orange counties, keeping twenty-four head of Percheron brood mares. He raises about sixteen mules every year, and in partnership with Leo Borchard and Guy W. Wilmot, he owns the imported jack, "Burr Oak," bred at New Boston, Mo., and valued at $3,000, without doubt the finest jack in the county.

P. W. EHLEN.—A successful, prominent business man of Orange, a town in whose progress he takes an enthusiastic pride, is P. W. Ehlen, also one of the pillars of the Lutheran Church in this city. He came to Orange as far back as the booming middle eighties, and since that time his advancement and that of the community have been common in objective and character. He was born in Hanover, Germany, on October 11, 1863, the child of devoted parents who spent their last days with him in Orange and died here. He was educated at the public schools of his native district, and went through the gymnasium where he prepared for teaching; and for two and a half years he presided over classes, until he decided to leave the Old World for the New. In 1882 he crossed the ocean to New Jersey, and spent three years at Bayonne, where he clerked in a grocery. In 1885 he pushed on to the West and California, and located at Orange, then a small town. He was employed by McPherson Brothers at McPherson, one and a half miles east of Orange, and while there he packed oranges and raisins in their packing house.

In 1887, at the crest of the "boom," Mr. Ehlen started the general merchandise business at McPherson, known under the firm name of P. W. Ehlen, and two years later he removed his store to Orange, where he located on the site of what is now the Schaffert Building on South Glassell Street. He rented a building for the purpose, and the same year Henry Grote became interested with him in the business, and the firm became known as Ehlen and Grote.

The partners removed their store, in 1901, to the corner of South Glassell and the Plaza, where the Mission Pharmacy now stands, and in 1906 Mr. Ehlen incorporated the Ehlen and Grote Company, with himself as president and manager. In 1908 he built his present large business block known as the Ehlen and Grote block across the street from his former location. For 140 feet the lot fronts on South Glassell Street, and for fifty feet on the Plaza. Here he has built up a very large business with the different departments of groceries, hardware, shoes and gents furnishings, and no one who knows his ability as a merchant, and his fidelity in endeavoring to serve his numerous patrons, will envy him his exceptional success. Having started with a capital of $350 he built up the sales, prior to selling out, to over $1,000 in value a day. The strain proved too great for him, however, and finding that his health was being impaired, he disposed of his interests in 1910, and retired from the strenuous life.

Since then Mr. Ehlen has been interested in lands and their development. He incorporated the Ehlen Land Company, which has extensive holdings in the Imperial Valley, which they lease, devoted in part to the raising of cotton. They also own valuable lands in the Sacramento Valley, on Grizzly Island, Solano County, where they have constructed six miles of good canal, thereby reclaiming a large tract of land. Mr. Ehlen is a stockholder in and director of the National Bank of Orange, and he is president and director of the Orange Savings Bank.

Since he took up his residence at Orange, Mr. Ehlen was married to Miss Marie Eggers, a native of Illinois, who was reared in Oregon. They have had four children. His two sons, Henry and Edward are both graduates of Concordia College, Oakland, Cal. Henry, after finishing at the Lutheran Normal School at Seward, Neb., taught school in Detroit, Mich. During the World War he enlisted and served fifteen months in the navy. Edward is now an automobile mechanic; and Adele and Sophia are students in the Orange Union high school.

Mr. Ehlen is a prominent and influential member of St. Johns Lutheran Church of Orange having served as elder and trustee for over twenty-five years and most of the time as secretary of the congregation. He is president of the Lutheran Layman's League for the California and Nevada District and is also the financial secretary of the California and Nevada district of the Missouri Synod for Southern California.

EDWARD W. HARMON.—A very successful farmer who has made a specialty of dairying, following the last word in science and sanitation and getting far superior results both in his products and in the economy of operation, is Edward W. Harmon, son of Jonathan Harmon, the well-known pioneer, who came to Santa Ana and vicinity in the late eighties, bought sixty acres of land and added to that until he had 140 acres, and whose sketch appears on another page in this work.

Edward W. Harmon was born at Petaluma, in Sonoma County, on January 12, 1871, and came to Santa Ana when he was nine years old and attended the local public schools. He was married to Miss Martha May McGuire, a native of Petaluma, and a woman of accomplishment and charm, who has become the mother of their four children, Ralph L., Gale W., Lawrence Norton and William Warren McGuire Harmon.

He was engaged in dairying with his father on the home ranch for twenty-one years until the elder Harmon wished to retire, when they sold out. For two years Edward raised sugar beets, but found it did not pay as well as the dairy business, so he purchased cows and has now built up a splendid herd of sixty head; the milk is all sold to the Sanitary Dairy in Santa Ana. The Harmon ranch is equipped with pumping plant yielding 110 inches of water, and also has a complete cement pipe line system for irrigating.

In national politics a Republican, in local affairs a nonpartisan worker for whatever seems best for the community, Mr. Harmon is always an American, and therefore one of the best "boosters" imaginable for California and Orange County.

ELMER HAYWARD.—It is not given to many men to attain in their own home district the success enjoyed by Elmer Hayward, a resident of Orange for more than forty-four years, who is prominent as a school trustee in the same district where he went to school as a boy, and is the president of the board of trustees of the city of Orange, which has grown up since he came here as a boy. He is now one of the best-posted citrus growers in the county, and, because of his valuable experience and success, his advice is much sought by those desiring to emulate his example. Affable and popular, and thoroughly wide-awake, he is pronounced in favor of the perpetuation of historical records which may show what was done in the building up of the great California commonwealth, and who did the hard work of construction.

He was born near what is now Dysart, Tama County, Iowa, on February 25, 1865, the youngest of twelve children, the son of Joel Hayward, a native of New Hampshire. He had married Mary Barrett, who was born at Salem, N. Y., and whom he met in Michigan, where they were married. After setting up their household, they engaged in farming in Lenawee County, Mich., cleared a farm of the timber, and after twenty years became early settlers in Tama County, Iowa, where they remained another twenty years. A son, DeWitt C. Hayward, came to California in 1872 and settled in Orange County; and three years later Joel Hayward and his family followed, and soon afterward located in Orange and bought a ranch, and engaged in horticulture. On their arrival in California, they stopped for a short while at Sacramento, and from there journeyed by boat to San Francisco, after which they took the steamer to San Pedro, and came ashore on a lighter bound for Wilmington.

Nine of the twelve children referred to above grew to maturity, and eight came to California. Charles served in the Civil War as a member of an Iowa regiment, and eventually died in that state. DeWitt C., who came to California in 1872, died at San Jose. Alonzo, who pushed west soon after DeWitt, also died here. Jennie E. came to California about 1873 and married Millard Parker, a pioneer, and now resides on East Palmyra Street, Orange. Julia is Mrs. A. M. Hayward, and lives at Escondido; Minerva resides in Monrovia; Norman is living at Van Nuys; Mary, or Mrs. Taylor, lives near Minerva; and Elmer is the subject of our review. Joel Hayward died here, aged seventy-one; and Mrs. Hayward also passed away in Orange.

Elmer was ten years old when he came here and began to attend the local schools; and his first teacher was Mrs. Samuel Armor. When old enough to do so, he assisted his father to improve the place they had bought in 1880, and where the original house was built in 1881—a comfortable structure that has long since given way to the present fine home place; and when he was twenty-one, he took charge of the homestead. In acquiring his present valuable knowledge of horticulture, he went through all the early trying experience necessary to learn just what was best to do with the land. For a while they had a vineyard; then they cultivated apricots, peaches and apples; but finally they decided to raise oranges and walnuts, and therein attained the best results. Mr. Hayward has now set out all the land to Valencia oranges, to which he finds the land best adapted. Eight acres were cleared of the sage brush when they came; and the balance they have cleared since. Joel Hayward paid forty dollars an acre for the land, and $6.10 for water stock, and since his death one of the finest orange groves in the state has been developed on this land. There are sixteen acres in all in the ranch, which is at 420 Cambridge street, and the orange trees, bordered with walnuts, are said to constitute one of the finest ranches of the kind in the district. Mr. Hayward is a member and has been a director of the Santiago Orange Growers Association, and was a director when they built the new packing house. He helped start the Orange County Fumigation Company, which has grown to large proportions, and he is at present one of the stockholders.

At Orange Mr. Hayward was married to Miss Callie M. Graves, a native of Green Bay, Wis., and a graduate of the Oshkosh Normal School. She was a teacher, and came to Orange a young lady. They have three children—Dorothy, who is in the Orange Union High School, Mary Louise and Lucile. Mrs. Hayward is a Presbyterian.

Mr. Hayward is a Republican in national politics, but independent in local affairs; he is a trustee of the grammar schools of Orange, and is president of the board. There are now three schools, instead of one, in the district—a real progress since the days when he went to school there. He is also a member of the board of city trustees of Orange, having been elected in 1918 for four years. He was chairman of the police committee and a member of the street committee until 1920, when he was chosen president of the board, a position he is filling with zeal and to the satisfaction of his fellow-citizens.

CAPTAIN ANDREW HARRINGTON BIBBER.—A very interesting representative of fine old Revolutionary stock is Captain Andrew Harrington Bibber, renowned in the late Civil War, and doubly honored today as the husband of a lady whose singular talents and exceptional personality have enabled her also to attain social eminence such as always affords influence for good.

Mrs. Annie L. Bibber was born at St. John, N. B., the daughter of John Annesley, also a native of that place, and the granddaughter of Daniel Annesley, who crossed the Atlantic from Devonshire, and settled at St. John, where he became a shipping merchant operating so extensively that he owned his vessels, and made sixty or more ocean trips. John Annesley was a mill owner, but he gave up milling on account of ill-health, after which he took a government position under Queen Victoria; and that responsible post he held until his death. Mrs. Annesley was Lucy Hayden before her marriage, and she was born at Beacon Hill, Boston; Grandfather Aaron Hayden was a native of Massachusetts, and was born in the neighborhood of what became Haydenville. He was a merchant in Boston, and married Ruth Alden Jones, of that city, who proudly traced her New England lineage back to the famous John Alden. Lucy Hayden, in fact, was the sixth lineal descendant of the illustrious patriot, and resided at St. John until she joined Mrs. Bibber at Orange, and here she breathed her last. Of the six children in the family, three grew to maturity and are still living; the other two, besides Mrs. Bibber, being Mrs. Frances Paine, of Berkeley, and Mrs. Lucy C. Coulson of the same town.

The youngest of all, Mrs. Bibber was educated at St. John's Young Ladies' Academy and at Vassar College. At Eastport, Maine, on Sept. 27, 1876, she was married to Captain Andrew Harrington Bibber, a native of Lubec, Maine, and the son of Charles Bibber, a native and merchant of the same state. His mother was Adeline Harrington, and she was born at Eastport, Maine. Grandfather Andrew Harrington was a business man whose family belonged to some of the original settlers of Concord, Mass. There were eleven of the Harrington brothers in the Revolutionary War, and all fought in the battle of Lexington, and one, Jacob Harrington, was the first man killed in that battle, so that the Harrington home at Concord, Mass., is now maintained as a relic of Revolutionary headquarters.

Captain Bibber served as captain of the First Maine Cavalry throughout the Civil War, or for four years and seven months, and was present at Appomattox at the surrender of Lee. His regiment was in two hundred engagements from Bull Run to Appomattox. After marrying, he brought his wife to Eastport, Maine, engaging in the dry goods business. His spare moments he gave to painting, for he was an artist of ability, and noted as a marine painter. He exhibited his work in an art gallery in Philadelphia, and at Williams & Evarts well-known art rooms at Boston, and at each exhibition received his quota of praise.

In 1890 Captain and Mrs. Bibber came out to California and located at Orange, where they purchased twenty acres between Schaffer and Cambridge streets, to Culver and Palmyra; and this acreage they set out to oranges. They also built a fine residence. From 1895 until 1901 Captain Bibber was again active as a dry goods merchant, this time at Orange, but in the latter year he sold his mercantile business and on October 7, 1912, he died. During his latter years he again devoted himself to painting, and Mrs Bibber possesses some fine specimens of his art. The Bibbers laid out ten acres of the land in lots, and this was soon sold and built up. In 1919 Mrs. Bibber sold her larger residence and her ten-acre orange grove, and since then has had built for herself a comfortable bungalow at the corner of Van Bibber and Harwood streets.

One child blessed this marriage of Captain Bibber and Miss Annesley—Alice Alden, a graduate of the Girls' Collegiate School of Los Angeles, where she was a member of the Class of '03, and she is now the wife of Ray O. Van Bibber, who is engaged in the oil business.

Captain Bibber's first wife was Miss Sarah Houghton of Eastport, Maine, a daughter of the Hon. Partman Houghton, who was a member of the state legislature in Maine. She died in Boston, leaving a daughter, Edith Prince Bibber, who also makes her home with Mrs. Bibber. She was educated at Vassar College, and teaches music in the El Modena schools, and she has built herself a studio adjoining their home, where she teaches private pupils.

Captain Bibber was a Unitarian, while Mrs. Bibber is a member of the Baptist Church of Santa Ana. She is also one of the early members, and one of the executive committee of the Ebell Club of Santa Ana. Both Captain and Mrs. Bibber have been Republicans; and he was a member of the Southern California Commandery, Military Order of the Loyal Legion, and also a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, being thrice commander of Granger Post.

JOSEPH S. THURSTON.—A resident of California for half a century, Joseph S. Thurston has slight remembrance of any other locality, having been brought here by his parents when a babe of two years. A successful, self-made man, he has acquired large realty holdings entirely through his own industrious efforts and has been for a long time the leading rancher, fruit and vegetable grower at Laguna Beach. Born November 26, 1868, in Cash Valley, Utah, Joseph S. Thurston was the seventh in order of birth of a family of fifteen children. His father was George W. Thurston, born in Huron County, Ohio, while his grandfather was Thomas J. Thurston. His mother, Sarah Lucina Snow before her marriage, was born at Chester, Pa., while her parents were en route from Vermont to Illinois. Grandfather Erastus Snow was a native of Vermont and there he married Artimesia Berman, and they were early settlers of Hancock County, Ill.

Mr. Snow and Thomas J. Thurston and others were members of the pioneer train to Salt Lake City. Mr. Snow and a comrade, Orson Pratt, went ahead of the train, and as Mr. Snow had a splendid, swift riding horse, he blazed the way for the train, picking the trail and camp sites, as well as furnishing provender by hunting. After arriving at Salt Lake he helped lay out the town. He was very prominent in the early days of Salt Lake City and became one of the head men in the Mormon Church, being one of the first group of twelve apostles. He was sent to and founded St. George City, Utah, and there he died. Thomas J. Thurston became a bishop in the Mormon Church and passed away in Utah. George W. Thurston and his wife engaged in ranching near Salt Lake City for a time and then removed to Weber County, where he engaged in freighting and made sufficient money to purchase machinery for a grist mill, building the first mill in Cash Valley. While living there a little son died of diphtheria and then a still harder blow fell on the family when one of their little daughters was stolen by the Indians. While residing in Utah, George W. Thurston and his wife withdrew from the Mormon Church.

In 1870, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Thurston, with their children, came to San Francisco, but remained there only a few weeks, going by boat to San Diego. Here they acquired land and began raising stock and grain, but being warned of trouble brewing among the stockmen, they sold out and came to Tustin in 1871. Camping at the old artesian well east of Tustin for about six weeks, they then took up the original homestead of 152 acres at Aliso Beach and in the canyon. The Thurston ranch is the most scenic and picturesque of any on the coast of Orange County, and has a frontage on the ocean of a quarter of a mile, extending back three-fourths of a mile inland.

Joseph Thurston began making himself useful at a very early age. When about five years old he herded ducks along Aliso Creek to see that coyotes did not prowl up and get them, and at other times by watching that the ground squirrels did not make too much havoc with the patch of young corn; in each case he would be gone from the old farm house practically the entire day. When eight years old he was told to watch the cattle off the wheat patch in the canyon. He started up the canyon with his lunch zealously keeping his eye out for the patch of wheat. At that season of the year the country was all green and all looked alike, but he finally located the wheat and faithfully guarded it. This he kept up for seventy-two days without interruption, marking the time by cutting a notch for each day in a stick. During this period he had no dog, but had some experience with squirrels eating his lunch and also with wild cats, but was not afraid of them, except once when he had to go into the dense brush to drive the cattle out where he had previously seen a cat. He always carried a tough stick about thirty inches long which he kept in readiness, determined that if the cat should jump out at him he would hit him once, at the least. This stick he carried with him for years, and afterwards when his dog cornered a large cat, he killed it with the same stick. Most of his time for seven years was spent herding cattle on the hills and many times was where he could look down into Laguna Canyon. During these years he was taught to read and spell, the lessons being usually taught him at home by some of the children and he was also taught to write, being given a little time each day until he had filled out two primary copy books, while his mathematics consisted of some of the neighbor's children showing him how to subtract, multiply and divide; that is all the assistance he ever had in obtaining what is commonly known as an education until he was thirty-six years old, when he hired a man and his wife to take care of the ranch as best they could and went to Los Angeles, where he attended Woodbury's Business College for a period of three months, a most enjoyable experience, as he had excellent surroundings, staying at the home of Judge and Mrs. W. A. Cheney. While herding cattle he had always carried his books, but had to carry the same ones for years not having any new ones, Ray's primary and second arithmetic being among the number, but he says he could always find something new in them.

At the age of fifteen his older brother left home and Joseph then had to devote his entire time to the farm work and when he was nineteen, his father left home and the entire responsibility of the farm rested on his shoulders. However, he took hold of the work and as usual mastered the situation, so that in 1891 they managed to build a new house and it was not until then that he had ever slept in the house where the rest of the family were since he was a small boy. In 1893, at the age of twenty-five, feeling that a change was absolutely necessary and hoping that some of the other boys would take care of the ranch he left home, and it was during very trying times, being the time of Coxey's army and work was about as scarce as money. He worked on threshing machines at $1.50 a day; he helped put in some of the first paving in Santa Ana at $1.75 and boarded himself, and he worked for Will Halesworth on the desert, 144 days at one dollar a day.

When he came back to the ranch in the fall of 1895, his mother had moved to Santa Ana and the other children had gone out to work and he found things in a state of chaos. So he and his sister and her husband, W. H. Wallis, came down to work the place, but they stayed only about one year and then he was left to work the ranch alone, doing the work previously accomplished by the whole family, and this with his nearest neighbor four miles distant. For seven years he was confronted by that situation; they were seven long years of toil and privation, for five of them were the driest the country had known and one of the others was only half a crop. A volume could be written about his experiences and hardships of those years of constant work and worry. In speaking of it he says, "he felt like one who was trying to sweep the water back from an island that was gradually being submerged."

There were times when he felt like deserting, but then would come the thought that his mother depended on him, and the ranch and all the efforts they had put forth would go for naught if he failed to hold the fort, and that would never do. It was a lonely situation but he kept going. With the small market in Laguna limited to about ten yeeks a year and with the expense of twelve months, together with all the pests that naturally would come to the only place (his being the only place for many miles where fruit and vegetables were raised) where they could find what they wanted to eat, the situation was intense. There were birds by the thousands, mice, rabbits and gophers and the surrounding country harbored thousands of squirrels; then there were skunks, coons, coyotes and wild cats, as well as numerous kinds of bugs, all bent on getting all they could of his produce, so at times he found it almost impossible to raise anything. So between these pests and the regular work, to say nothing of the housework and keeping up the machinery and numerous other things that had to be regulated, including trying to make financial ends meet there was plenty to keep him in a fighting mood; so much so that when some well-meaning individual who really wanted to be pleasant would say, "What a beautiful place, pray what do you find to do down here?" he would really find it difficult to keep his temper. During all this time he has cared for his mother, who now resides at Santa Ana at the age of eighty years. A remarkable fact in the family is that of the fifteen children, thirteen grew up to maturity and all are living, there having been no death in the family since nearly sixty years ago, when they were living in Utah. The little girl, Rosetta, who was stolen by the Indians when she was three years old, was never heard from in spite of extended search, and this was always a great grief to the family.

After a number of years Mr. Thurston purchased the home ranch and later added to it 161 acres, so that the Thurston ranch now comprises 313 acres. In 1919 he acquired the 528-acre tract at Laguna known as the Rogers place, which brings his holdings up to over 800 acres. His principal products are early vegetables, melons, corn and fine apples, and he has made a reputation for growing string beans, being the first to ship to the San Francisco and Los Angeles markets and bringing as much as thirty cents a pound. For irrigation he has a pumping plant, while domestic water is piped to his residence from mountain springs. Mr. Thurston has recently leased his ranches for oil, and the Rogers place is now being exploited for oil, with splendid prospects.

One of Orange County's enthusiastic citizens, Mr. Thurston can always be counted upon to aid in any progressive movement for its betterment, and this is but natural when one considers the wonderful success that he has made here entirely through his own unaided efforts. He was in this region five years before any one settled at Laguna, so he is the oldest settler in this locality, having located here two years after Santa Ana was founded. Very affable and of a pleasing personality, upright, honest and enterprising, he is a man any community may justly be proud of. While a liberal in politics, he inclines toward the principles of the Republican party and is a firm advocate of prohibition.

JOHN W. ELLIOTT.—A hard working man whose beautiful home very pleasantly testifies to his success, is John W. Elliott, the retired carpenter, so well and favorably known, with his kind-hearted, devoted wife, for a lively interest in the homes and the welfare of other folks in the community. He was born at Schleisingerville, Washington County, Wis., on November 4, 1847, the son of Thomas and Jane Elliott. His father was a farmer; and while John worked on the farm to help his parents, he attended first the district school of his home town, and later the Cedar Valley Seminary.

In the spring of 1865, Thomas Elliott removed with his family to Floyd County, Iowa, and settled near the town of Rudd; and in 1869 John Elliott became the first clerk of Rudd Township. The father and five of his sons owned jointly a section of land, which they devoted to the raising of corn and hogs; and in 1874 John purchased a quarter-section near the old homestead. In 1886, he sold the Rudd farm and removed to Osage, Mitchell County, Iowa; and near there he ran a market-garden farm of ten acres. This he held onto until 1901, when he came out to California.

At Santa Ana Mr. Elliott took up building and helped to erect the Public Library, the City Hall, the Intermediate school on Sycamore Street, and many of the best business establishments and private homes in Santa Ana, thereby helping materially to build the town and to guide the public taste.

On June 13, 1880, Mr. Elliott had been married near Rudd to Miss Emily Neville, a native of Fond du Lac, Wis., and the daughter of Dr. and Mary (Lancaster) Gallup. One child, Elsie E., who is living at home, has blessed this happy marriage. Mr. Elliott is a staunch Republican in matters of national political import; but his strong love for the community in which he resides, and his deep interest in community progress, never permits him to mix partisanship with a vigorous support of every good measure and candidate proposed.

JACOB DITCHEY.—An enterprising and progressive resident of Orange, whose equally industrious wife shares with him the good will and esteem of a large circle of friends, is Jacob Ditchey, who for many years of his life was engaged in farming in Indiana and Colorado, and later in the Golden State. The success he has made is all the more praiseworthy, since it was in the face of obstacles that would have daunted one of a less courageous spirit. A native of Ohio, where he was born at New Washington, Crawford County, in 1855, Mr. Ditchey was orphaned at an early age, a circumstance whose sadness was increased by the unkind treatment he received by the family to whom he was bound out. Unworthy of their trust, they put him to work instead of sending him to school and thus deprived him of the opportunity to secure anything beyond the rudiments of an education.

Even these hard circumstances did not quench his ambition, however, and as soon as he reached his majority he started out for himself, and at fourteen years of age began working out on farms in Ohio. In 1873 he removed to Clinton County, Ind. He established family ties in 1882 by his marriage to Miss Flora A. Misner, born at Rossville, Clinton County, Ind., and the young couple engaged in farming there until 1905, when he removed with his family to Colorado, where he continued agricultural pursuits at Longmont. For a long time he had been attracted to the balmy climate of the Pacific Coast, hoping some time to make his home there, so in October, 1910, he came with his family to California, and located at Orange. For several years he followed horticulture and met with deserving success. In 1913 he completed his modern bungalow at 421 South Orange Street, where he resides with his family. He now gives his time to his duties as janitor of the Grammar School at Orange, as well as being janitor of the City Hall.

Mr. and Mrs. Ditchey were the parents of six children, four of whom are living: Ward C. is an employe in the Santa Ana Post Office; Ross is a graduate of the Orange County Business College and now resides in Los Angeles; Dayton D. served his country during the World War, being stationed at Camp Lewis and later in North Carolina; Stella M. is a graduate of the Orange Union high school and is now with the Orange County Trust and Savings Bank. Realizing the handicap that he experienced through his inability to procure a good education, Mr. Ditchey has been especially zealous in giving his children every opportunity within his means. Liberal and kind hearted, he has always been ready to make sacrifices and practice self denial in order to help others, and this generous spirit, combined with his tireless habits of industry, makes him one of the community's dependable citizens.

G. H. FLESNER.—A liberal-minded, progressive citizen of Anaheim whose prosperity has very naturally made him love California, the Golden, is G. H. Flesner, who has the added blessing of a good housewife, an excellent helpmate, a true companion. Nearly ten years ago he located at Anaheim, and both he and his friends have good reason to regret that he did not come here years before.

He was born near Champaign, in Champaign County, Ill., on February 16, 1887, the son of Henry Flesner, an early settler, who broke the raw prairie of Champaign County, improved his first holdings, and bought more and more land, until in all he had four hundred of the best acres. And there he died, in 1908, his sterling merits known to all the community. He had married Miss Folke Classen, a worthy woman of her day and generation, who now resides in California, sharing the comfortable home of her son, our subject, who is the only child of the family still living.

He was brought up on a farm, and attended the usual public schools of his locality, after which, for two and a half years, he went to the Watertown, Wis., high school. From his boyhood he assisted his folks upon the home ranch and after his father died he ran the farm, which included not less than 240 acres in operation. In 1911 he came to California, and the following year he disposed of the Eastern home.

On coming here he bought a ranch west of Anaheim, but after a year sold it again. Then he purchased the place on East Santa Ana Street, consisting of twenty acres, thirteen of which are in Valencia oranges and seven set out to walnuts. He also owns four and a half acres on Broad Street, planted to Valencias of the choicest variety. He owns an electrical pumping plant, and he has a fine residence on the property.

While yet in Illinois, on October 9, 1904, Mr. Flesner was married to Miss Gertie Duitsman, a native of Pawnee Rock, Rush County, Kans., but who was reared in Illinois. Her father was Henry Duitsman, and he had married Miss Ricken Debuhr, who is now dead. They were farmer folk, and her father still resides on the old homestead. Five children blessed the fortunate union of Mr. and Mrs. Flesner—Frieda, Rosie, Henry, Bertha and Carl, all of whom are at home. The family attend the Lutheran Church, of which Mr. Flesner is a trustee; and in national political affairs he works for the advancement of the Republican standards.

CLAUDE NEWTON ELLIS.—An industrious, straightforward business man who is naturally again and again rewarded, in his various enterprises, with an enviable success, is Claude Newton Ellis, for nearly two decades a Californian by adoption, and second to none in his loyalty to the Golden State. He was born in Silex, Lincoln County, Mo., May 3, 1879, the son of Clark Ellis, who was also a native of Missouri and became one of the extensive farmers and stockmen in Lincoln County, and later removed to Montgomery County. Isaac Ellis, the grandfather, was a Kentuckian equally well and favorably known as a raiser of fine stock in his day, and made a good record as a soldier in the Civil War. Clark Ellis married Miss Jennie McDowell, a native also of Missouri; but she died at the age of twenty-three, three years after Claude was born. She had three children, and our subject was the second in the order of birth. Clark Ellis died in his native state.

Claude N. Ellis was brought up on the stock farm in Lincoln, and then in Montgomery county, Mo., and studied for a while at Pike County, in Bowling Green and then at Watson Seminary, in Ashley, Pike County. When, however, his father became ill, he returned home to take charge of the farm; and having formed a partnership with his father, took up farming and stock raising in earnest, and continued at the same until 1903, when he sold out and came west to California.

He located in Orange; and here, in March, 1904, he married Miss Lillian Northrop, who was born in Hopedale, near Boston, Mass., and came to California in August, 1898. She accompanied her father, James H. Northrop, the inventor of the Northrop loom, manufactured in Hopedale and used in putting out seventy-five per cent of all the cotton goods manufactured. He retired and chose California as a home place for his latter days; and coming here undertook ranching, and in time invented a date-pitting machine. He is living and resides in Santa Ana. After their marriage, Mr. Ellis had charge of the Northrop ranch, and next he bought an orange ranch in El Modena; later he sold this and removed to Coachella Valley, where he bought a homestead and a deserted claim and proved up on it—that is, he and Mr. Northrop had 320 acres, where they were among the pioneers in raising the date palm, and also figs for commercial purposes. He had two large pumping plants, and laid 28,000 feet of cement piping.

During this time Mr. Ellis went to St. Louis, Mo., and spent nine months at the St. Louis College of Embalming, from which he was graduated in 1912, after which he returned to his California ranch. He became a funeral director in Indio, and was also a merchant there; at the same time that he maintained on his farm the finest teams of horses and mules, as well as the latest types of tractors. In October, 1918, he sold out; and the following March he bought out Blank & Mead, the undertakers at Orange, and established his present business. He has a chapel, an operating room and a morgue, and Mrs. Ellis is also an embalmer—the only licensed woman embalmer in Orange County. Mr. Ellis belongs to the Southern California Funeral Directors' Association.

Mr. and Mrs. Ellis have one child, J. H. Northrop Ellis; they belong to the order of the Rebekahs. Mr. Ellis is a member of Orange Lodge No. 225, I. O. O. F., and Mrs. Ellis of Septic Chapter, No. 163, O. E. S. Mrs. Ellis belongs to the W. R. C. and he to the Modern Woodmen of America. Both husband and wife are members of the First Presbyterian Church of Orange.

JOHN LUTHER MAROON, M. D.—No greater evidence could be had of the success in every way of Dr. John Luther Maroon as a physician and surgeon since his advent in Santa Ana in 1917 than in the exceptional confidence reposed in him as one of the most representative medical men of the state by a large number of Santa Ana's best citizens. They find in him a good neighbor and a model citizen, who is devoted to his high professional work, and who goes about doing good with a sympathy and assurance which begets confidence and optimism, and in itself works miracles in the healing art. Dr. Maroon was born in Cleveland, Bradley County, Tenn., in November, 1873, the son of Samuel W. Maroon, a member of one of the fine old families of Tennessee and a merchant who was a leader in the commercial world of his part of the state. He married Miss Sarah Elizabeth Henderson, a representative of another family equally held in high esteem in the South, a charming lady of accomplishment and beauty. They are now both dead; but their six children—among whom our subject was the fourth in the order of birth—attested to their nobility of character, and the good influence they bequeathed to others.

John Luther Maroon attended the grammar schools of his locality, and later enjoyed the advantages of the Chattanooga high school. Then he matriculated first at Grant University at Chattanooga, Tenn., and then at Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn., where he was graduated in 1912 with the M.D. degree. Having well equipped himself for the practice of medicine by close application under the direction of some of the most learned medical instructors of the day, Dr. Maroon spent a year at Chattanooga Hospital in his native state, and for three years joined the medical fraternity at Portland, Maine, where his agreeable personality soon made for him a host of friends. In 1916, however, he let the pendulum swing far to the westward and came to California, long noted for its pick of surgeons and physicians; and for a year, he was house surgeon at Loma Linda Hospital in Loma Linda.

He has now been a resident of Santa Ana for three years, having established himself here in 1917 in the practice of medicine and surgery, and it hardly needs to be said that he is doing very well. He is highly esteemed as a Fellow of the American Medical Association, and stands equally high as a member of the California State Medical Society and of the Orange County Medical Association. His scientific bent, his soundly-trained mind, and his helpful ideals have enabled him to grasp the latest word or cue, and to suggest where and how others may follow in his lead. As a skillful surgeon he has been able to dare and effect what not every practitioner of surgery would attempt, while as a consulting or visiting physician he has brought light and hope to the sick room, and easily induced those inclined to despondency to hope, look up, go forward, save themselves. Dr. Maroon is very conscientious in his examinations, having always in mind the deep welfare of the patients and no accommodation he can render them is too hard or difficult for him to do. It is noted that his patients are very loyal and have explicit confidence in him, counting his friendship an acquisition to the family.

Two children, bearing the names of Catherine and Dorothy, add to the attraction of the doctor's hospitable home, which is pleasantly situated in a suburban walnut grove at 407 West Seventeenth Street—a large modern bungalow, tastefully furnished. A Republican in national politics, Dr. Maroon is decidedly nonpartisan in all matters affecting local life and development, and has both caught and disseminated the Orange spirit which leads to helpful loyalty to Orange County and her promising towns. As has already been intimated, it has been the boast of California since her entrance amid the sisterhood of States that her medical men and women have been and are, both in respect to ability, experience and character, second to none in the world; and not only may Orange County therefore congratulate itself that Dr. Maroon pitched his tent at Santa Ana, but it is a subject of interest to the old state when such an aggressively progressive man of science comes here instead of going to some other corner of the waiting world.

MILO BAILEY ALLEN.—A rancher whose present prosperity is the result of his industrious, untiring work of development, is Milo B. Allen, senior member of Allen Brothers, whose ranch of seventy-seven acres lies on Euclid Avenue, north of Garden Grove. Born at Spring Valley, Fillmore County, Minn., January 9, 1880, he is the son of Lucian Waite and Rhoda Ann (Conklin) Allen. The father was born in Erie County, Ohio, and came to Minnesota in the early days, being one of the pioneer wheat growers of that region, and there he lived for more than fifty years. Mrs. Allen was a native of Pennsylvania, and came out to Minnesota when a young girl, and there she met and married Mr. Allen. This branch of the Allen family are lineal descendants of Robert Allen, a brother of Ethan Allen of Revolutionary fame, and the traditions of this old colonial family were well sustained by Lucian Waite Allen, who had an excellent record in the Civil War. He served for four years in the Union Army with the Third Minnesota Volunteers as principal musician in his regiment, being a fifer. He was considered the best fifer in Minnesota, and after his removal to Southern California he was often asked to play in military bands on patriotic occasions. His death occurred in 1914, at the age of seventy-seven years.

Milo B. Allen spent his early years on the home place at Spring Valley, Minn. Here he attended the local schools, the Spring Valley high school, the Spring Valley Normal, and later taking a three years' course at the Minnesota Agricultural School at Minneapolis, where he graduated in 1901. Thus he was unusually well equipped for the undertaking in which he has made such splendid success. In 1905 Lucian W. Allen came to California, locating in the Garden Grove district, where he bought twenty acres of land. A few months later Milo B. Allen and his brother, Joseph Garfield, whose sketch also appears in this work, also bought a tract of twenty acres. It was a stubblefield, and they at once began to improve it, leveling and irrigating it, putting in several miles of cement tile. They have made subsequent purchases in small amounts, and under the name of Allen Brothers they now jointly own and operate a ranch of seventy-seven acres. Of this, fifty acres have been set to Valencia oranges, that are from three to ten years old; twenty-five acres are in Eureka lemons, and two acres in a family orchard of deciduous fruits. They have developed an inexhaustible supply of water, having a well 195 feet deep. They irrigate by means of an electric pumping plant with a forty-five foot lift. Besides irrigating their own ranch they furnish water to others, having a sufficient supply for 140 acres. During the years of development the brothers did a tremendous amount of work in bringing their holdings up to their present high state of cultivation, for some time raising lima beans and peppers between the trees to help pay expenses. Now the trees are in full bearing and the income received by them reaches a handsome figure.

In 1902 M. B. Allen was united in marriage with Miss Hattie Crosby, a native of Fillmore County, Minn., where their marriage occurred. She is a sister of C. G. and C. B. Crosby, both prominent citrus growers of Garden Grove. Mr. and Mrs. Allen are the parents of seven children: Lucile, who was born in Minnesota, Ruth, Lawrence, Burton, Dorothy, Gertrude and Marjorie. In February, 1919, Mr. Allen was elected president of the Garden Grove Orange Growers Association, and he is filling this responsible position with the greatest success and satisfaction to all concerned. This association, which was organized in 1916, met a long-felt want on the part of the citrus growers of this district. Its first president was John D. Arkley, who served for two years, followed by James Henry, who occupied the office for one year, up to the time Mr. Allen was elected. E. L. Dozier has ably filled the position of secretary and manager since its organization, and J. O. Arkley is now the vice-president.

The other directors are: J. O. Arkley, Fred Andres, A. E. Snitiger, Anson Mott, F. G. Rosselott, James Henry and Mr. Allen. Mr. Allen, with his family, is a member of the Baptist Church at Garden Grove, and he is a member of the board of trustees. The family are very prominent in the social life of the community, and Mr. Allen's affability and generous spirit have made him justly popular among a large circle of friends; his rise to affluence is indeed well deserved, as it is the result of intelligent, well-directed industry on his part.

JOSEPH GARFIELD ALLEN.—Dating back to the earliest colonial days, the Allen family has reason for pride in its history. Patriots ever, and always in the forefront at any time of their country's need, one of the outstanding members of this notable family is familiar to everyone—Ethan Allen of Revolutionary fame, the hero of Ticonderoga. It was a brother of this famous soldier, Robert Allen, who is the progenitor of two of Garden Grove's most influential citizens, Joseph Garfield Allen and Milo B. Allen, who as partners in the firm of Allen Brothers, are among the most prosperous citrus growers in this section, their grove of seventy-seven acres being situated on Euclid Avenue, north of Garden Grove.

Joseph Garfield Allen was born at Spring Valley, Minn., January 12, 1882. He was the son of Lucian Waite and Rhoda Ann (Conklin) Allen, natives of Ohio and Pennsylvania, respectively, who were both among the early settlers of Fillmore County, Minn., where they met and married. There were nine children and four are now living, all residents of California: Mrs. Charles Maas of Santa Barbara; Mrs. Amy Graves, of Garden Grove; Milo B. and Joseph Garfield, of this review. Mrs. Lucian W. Allen passed away at their Minnesota home in 1896, and in 1905 the father came to California. Joseph G. was reared on the home farm in Fillmore County until he was about fifteen years old, and received a good education in the schools of the district and in the high school at Spring Valley. Later he completed his education with a course at Western College at Toledo, Iowa, now known as Leander Clark College, and upon locating in Orange County he and his brother have worked together in harmony to develop their citrus groves, as is shown in the sketch of Milo B. Allen.

J. G. Allen was married in 1909 to Miss Bertha Oertly, a daughter of Conrad Oertly; she is a talented and accomplished woman and an excellent helpmeet. They have three children, LeRoy Richard, Archie Eugene and Junior Garfield. The family belong to the Baptist Church at Garden Grove and Mr. Allen is the choirmaster, as both he and his brother have inherited much of the musical talent of their father. He is a member of the Garden Grove Orange Association, the Garden Grove Farm Center and the Central Lemon Association of Villa Park. An advocate of prohibition, he is always to be found on the constructive side of all the questions of the day. A hard and industrious worker, agreeable and gentlemanly, he and his family have a large circle of warm friends.

L. W. HEMPHILL.—An enterprising, public-spirited man who stands high in the estimation of the people of Orange, who have chosen him to be one of their city trustees, is L. W. Hemphill, who was born at Millford, Dane County, Wis., on August 14, 1874, the son of S. K. Hemphill, a native of New York, who settled in Wisconsin and married Miss Alice Brelsford. They were farmer folk of the finer American type, and in 1875 brought their family to California and settled a mile south of Orange. Later, they bought the ranch, setting it out with grapes, which failed on account of the blight; after that he ordered orange trees, of the St. Michael, Mediterranean and seedling types, which in time he budded to Navels. He also ran a citrus nursery. Finding that Valencias did better he budded some and set the balance to this species.

Mr. Hemphill followed orange culture here until 1905, when he sold out and located at Long Beach, where he engaged in the sale of real estate, and this he followed until he retired, to make his home in that city. His good wife had passed away in 1884. They had three boys and a girl, and all are living save one of the sons. Alice has become Mrs. Ellsworth, of Yakima, Wash.; Earl is in Placentia; and Lawrence W. is the subject of our sketch.

At first the lad went to school to Mrs. Alice Armor, and then he continued to attend the public grammar school. From a boy he learned orange culture and the work in a nursery, under his father on the home ranch, and during boyhood, also, he worked for three or four years in a packing house. Then he clerked in Canfield's Grocery, and after that was in the service of D. C. Pixley's Hardware Store. With Clifton Hamilton he then started a shoe and novelty store at the corner of North Glassell and the Plaza, in Orange; but after two years he sold out, and next suffered a siege of illness. After that he had charge of the boot and shoe department of the Ehlen & Grote Company, and he gave that up only when he decided to take up real estate. He not only sold, but bought and improved several ranches, and did something for Orange in opening subdivisions. He put on the market the Hemphill & Paxton subdivision, on East Culver Avenue, consisting of ten acres, now handsomely built up; also the Thermalita tract on North Glassell and Walnut streets—this last enterprise in partnership with D. C. Pixley and Charles Ehrman. There were ten acres in this tract, and all are also now sold and built up. With his brother-in-law he bought and improved twenty acres, setting them out to oranges.

He himself bought fifteen acres at Olive, on the Santiago Boulevard, which he improved with oranges, building a residence and making there his home for some years; and then, with Mr. Spencer, he bought forty acres of sage brush and cactus on Anaheim Boulevard, which he cleared and leveled. He put in a pumping plant and set out Valencia oranges, and now it is one of the finest groves in the county. Finally he sold this at a handsome profit. All this time he was located on his ranch in Villa Park; but in March, 1919, he sold this also, and settled in Orange. He built a residence on South Orange Street, which he later sold; and now he is located at the corner of Palm and Olive, having built two residences here.

At Orange he was married to Miss Flossie P. Spencer, a native of Iowa, who came here as a child and attended the local public schools. Both husband and wife are members of the Methodist Church, and Mr. Hemphill belongs to the official board. In the spring of 1920 he was elected a trustee of the city of Orange, and he is now chairman of the committee on streets, and also a member of the police commission. He gives promise of being just the man for these peculiar responsibilities, and Orange is to be congratulated on the choice of such a public servant.

MRS. EMMA BURCHFIELD COOPER.—An admirable example of California womanhood, a worthy representative of other worthy Americans, long influential in the communities in which they lived and amid the civilization they helped to guide and develop, is Mrs. Emma Burchfield Cooper, who has long been successfully interested in horticulture in Orange County and is now the owner of a fine ten-acre ranch at Hemet, devoted to apricots and walnuts. Pennsylvania was Mrs. Cooper's native state, her birthplace being near Meadville, in Crawford County. She came of an old family of that vicinity, her parents, David and Elsie (Scowden) Burchfield, both having been born there. Grandfather Burchfield was a native of Ireland, but came to Crawford County, Pa., in the early days and engaged in agriculture there, residing there until his death. Mrs. Cooper's maternal grandfather, David Scowden, was also of an old Pennsylvania family and spent his whole life there.

After farming in Pennsylvania for a number of years, David Burchfield brought his family to Illinois, settling in De Kalb County, and was there engaged in agriculture until a short time before he passed away, his death occurring at his old home in Pennsylvania, whither he had gone on a visit. Mrs. Burchfield survived her husband for some years, spending her last days in Iowa in the home of her daughter, Mrs. Cooper. The youngest of a family of ten children, only two of whom are now living, Mrs. Emma Burchfield Cooper came to Illinois with her parents at the age of nine years and was reared on the home farm in DeKalb County, receiving a good education in the public schools there. On reaching young womanhood she was united in marriage with Oliver Cooper, who was born near Belfast, Ireland, his father being a minister of the Presbyterian faith. After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Cooper decided to locate in Iowa, and they became pioneer settlers of Story County; here they homesteaded 160 acres of raw land, putting the first plow in the virgin prairie soil, and improved and built up a nice home. Like the pioneers of every age and country, their task was far from being an easy one, but with youth, strength and ambition on their side, they were happy and successful in their undertaking.

After some years, however, Mr. Cooper's health failed and they decided to seek a milder climate; as a result they came to California, settling in Orange County. Pleased with the prospect of spending the coming years in this balmy climate, with its beautiful surroundings, they purchased a ranch at Villa Park, disposing of their holdings in Iowa. There was twenty acres in their Villa Park place, and through their care and cultivation it became one of the finest orange groves in that locality. The responsibility of its care became too heavy, however, on account of Mr. Cooper's continued ill health, so they sold it and removed to East Palm Avenue, Orange. Mr. Cooper then carried out a long-cherished desire to visit his old home in Ireland, and three months after he arrived there he passed away and was laid to rest beside his father and mother.

Chas. Eygabroad,

After her husband's death, Mrs. Cooper continued to be actively interested in horticulture, purchasing a ten-acre ranch at Olive, which she later traded for a ranch at Hemet, which is devoted to apricots and walnuts. This she still owns and superintends most capably, as her many years of experience have given her a thorough knowledge of the varied branches of horticulture.

Mrs. Cooper is the mother of six children: William, who was born in Illinois, died in Iowa at the age of six years; James is a farmer near Des Moines, Iowa; Ralph is also engaged in farming at Springville, Iowa; Lettie is Mrs. Williams of Orange; Bertha, Mrs. Ferguson, resides with her mother; and Maude, now deceased, was the wife of Warren Fletcher. Mrs. Cooper still makes her home at 641 East Palm Avenue, Orange, and takes an active interest in all that concerns the welfare of the community. A firm believer in the future greatness of Orange County, she has, herself, done her full share toward its horticultural development. She has reared and educated her family, giving them every advantage possible, and has lived a useful and self-sacrificing life, and her influence has ever been on the side of good. A member of the Mennonite Church at Orange, Mrs. Cooper is active in its work; politically she is a staunch Republican and a firm believer in the principles of that party.

CHARLES H. EYGABROAD.—Emphatically in accord with the true western spirit, especially in the development of Orange County along broad and enduring lines, and one whose confidence in its future grows with his own ever-increasing success, Charles H. Eygabroad had prior to his coming here held a distinguished place in the financial and public life of South Dakota, where he had a prominent part in helping to shape the destinies of that commonwealth in the early days of its statehood.

Iowa was Mr. Eygabroad's native state and there he was born at Fredricksburg, Chickasaw County, on October 25, 1863, the son of John J. and Catherine (Worth) Eygabroad, natives of Utica, N. Y., and Germany, respectively. The Eygabroad family were of old Knickerbocker stock who came from Holland and settled in New Netherlands, now New York, in about 1765. Great-grandfather Eygabroad, who was born in Holland, was but a child when he accompanied his parents to the New World, and at the breaking out of the Revolutionary War, although he was only thirteen years old, he enlisted as a drummer boy, and after three years he carried a musket, serving throughout the whole seven years of the war, and was at memorable Valley Forge with General Washington. Grandfather Charles Eygabroad was a blacksmith at Utica, N. Y., and here John J. Eygabroad, the father of our subject, was born. He came to Freeport, Ill., where he followed his trade, and in 1849, with three companions he crossed the plains with ox teams to California, mining there for three years, when the gold excitement was at its height. Returning by way of the Isthmus of Panama in 1852, he walked across to the Atlantic side, finally reaching his old home at Freeport, where he was married. Here he engaged in farming until he removed to Chickasaw County, Iowa, where he bought Government land for $1.25 an acre. This he improved and he became one of the prosperous, successful farmers of that district, where he and his wife resided until they passed away.

The fifth in order of birth of a family of eleven children, Charles H. Eygabroad received his fundamental education in the rural schools of his native state and this was supplemented by the broader education acquired in the best and most practical of schools—the school of experience. He remained in the paternal home until he reached his majority, then sought his fortune in Dakota Territory in 1884, where with a capital of $1.50 he homesteaded land in Brown County, near the present town of Hecla, S. D. With the undaunted spirit of the pioneer he taught school in the winter, farmed in the summer months, and turned his hand to blacksmithing and anything else he could find to do. He was justice of the peace, performed marriage ceremonies and practiced law; and when, during this time, South Dakota was admitted to the Union. Mr. Eygabroad was elected a member of the state legislature in 1894. He was a member of the educational committee of the House, acting as its chairman, was chairman of the Federal relations committee and a member of other important committees.

After the expiration of his services in the legislature Mr. Eygabroad was elected auditor of Brown County for two terms of two years each, afterwards occupying the office of county commissioner for three years. During all of this time he was active in the realty business, buying and selling farm lands in South Dakota. For three years he was president of the First State Bank of Hecla, S. D., disposing of his interest in that institution when he came to California December 26, 1908, on account of his health. Locating at Anaheim, he bought an orange grove at the corner of Center and Walnut Streets, to which he gave his care, and in this salubrious climate and the enjoyment of his work he regained his health. Since then he has dealt extensively in orange groves and is now the owner of eight groves in the vicinity of Anaheim.

In 1913, in connection with F. C. Krause, he organized the Anaheim National Bank, of which he was president until he disposed of his interest to Mr. Krause. He has since been active in real estate circles, subdividing and putting on the market the Johnston-Houck tract, an addition to Anaheim, and later he laid out the Vista del Rio Rancho tract, and has already disposed of most of it. Besides his realty transactions, Mr. Eygabroad is president of the Orange County Mutual Telephone Company. In 1918 he became interested in the First National Bank of Anaheim and is a director of that institution, was an organizer of the Anaheim Citrus Association, having been a director since its beginning, and is a member of the Northern Orange County Exchange. He still owns valuable farm lands in South Dakota, preferring to keep some interests where he was successful in his early years. In 1916 he drove his own car through to South Dakota, from there to New York, and back to California, taking in Yellowstone Park and making the whole trip in less than three months. Part of his trip was made over the old California emigrant trail over which his father had journeyed with ox teams, fifty-seven years before, some of the scenes being familiar to him from his father's description of his early trip.

Mr. Eygabroad's marriage which was solemnized March 1, 1887, at Kilbourn, Wis., united him with Miss Nettie Stearns, and two children were born to them, a daughter, Lilly, who is now the wife of Lynn Birdsall and the mother of two children; and Lonnie who died at six years of age. In his religious convictions Mr. Eygabroad is a Methodist, and ever since he was twenty-one years old he has been active in church work and has taught a Bible class. In his political views he is a Republican, and while living in South Dakota was elected chairman of the Republican County Central Committee in 1900. He is now a member of the Orange County Republican Central Committee and is chairman of the finance committee of Anaheim district. Prominent in the ranks of the Masons, he was made a Mason in Frederick Lodge, S. D., and later was a member of the lodge at Hecla, in that state and he is now affiliated with Anaheim Lodge No. 207, F. & A. M., serving as master of this lodge during the building of the Masonic Temple. He is a member of the Chapter at Aberdeen, S. D., and in that city was exalted to the Knights Templar degree, Aberdeen Commandery, but now a charter member of Fullerton Commandery, K. T. He belongs to Yelduz Temple, No. 38, A. A. O. N. M. S., at Aberdeen, S. D., and is a member of the Southern California Association of Past Masters at Los Angeles, and with his wife is a member of the O. E. S. He also holds membership with the Odd Fellows and Elks at Anaheim.

As one of the progressive business men of Anaheim, Mr. Eygabroad is naturally prominent in the Chamber of Commerce, and he has always been a leader in furthering the many projects which have been promulgated for the upbuilding and prosperity of this section, and not alone has he accumulated a comfortable fortune for himself, but he has contributed generously to the growth and wealth of the community, where he enjoys the sincere esteem of his fellow-citizens.

JOHN C. MAIER.—A retired merchant whose success was undoubtedly due, in part, to his wise conservatism, is John C. Maier, now active as a rancher, whose straightforward Christian life has contributed to make him a representative citizen of Orange County. He was born in Cass County, Iowa, on August 20, 1858, the son of Sebastian Maier, a millwright by trade, who had married Miss Sophia Hazelmeyer in Germany, his native country, and came to the United States in 1850, when he had been married only a few years. Columbus, Ohio, was their destination, and there Mr. Maier followed his trade for a couple of years. After a while they removed to Westpoint, Iowa, and in the spring of 1853 took up there some 320 acres of raw government land, and secured title.

John attended the common schools of Westpoint, and when sixteen years of age commenced a three-year apprenticeship in a tinshop at Atlantic, Iowa. Later he found steady employment as plumber and tinsmith for six years. On the death of his father in 1879 he took charge of the home farm and ran it till he disposed of it to come to California. In 1882 he brought with him to California his already aged mother, to whom was accorded an additional ten years of life in more balmy Southern California, and who died in 1893.

In 1883 Mr. Maier entered the employ of the McFadden Hardware Company, at first working for only three months; but later becoming financially interested in that well-established concern, he remained with them for twenty-three years, continuing to build up an extensive hardware and plumbing trade. He did the plumbing and tin work in such notable structures as the First National Bank, the Medlock Building, and the Lacy and Chandler buildings, the Brunswick, now New Santa Ana Hotel, and many others. For the past twelve years he has been retired from active business life, although still controlling and guiding important interests. In 1890 he bought ten acres on Santiago Street, which he afterward sold at a good profit. In 1899 he purchased his present home site with twenty acres of walnuts and oranges at the northeast corner of C and Seventeenth streets. He also has other real estate, including thirty acres of walnuts and oranges one and a half miles northeast of Garden Grove, with a fine well and pumping plant. He has also owned and improved various other ranches. He is a stockholder in the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Co., and in the Santa Ana Walnut Growers Association. To provide surplus water for irrigation during the summer he became associated with Mathias Nisson and Henry Rohrs, Jr., and they sunk a well and installed an electric pumping plant, giving them over fifty inches of water. The pumping plant on his Garden Grove ranch has a capacity of 100 inches, sufficient for the ranch as well as supplying some of the neighbors.

In 1887 Mr. Maier was married to Miss Louisa Bartling, a schoolmate, the daughter of Henry Bartling; she was a native of Iowa. Four children have blessed their union: Gertrude died at the age of seventeen; Henry J. married Mabel Laux of Garden Grove, and they live on the Maier ranch; Edwin G., a rancher, resides at home; while Ethel is in Sonoma County. All of Mr. Maier's children have gone through the Santa Ana schools, proud of their association with Orange County as native sons and a native daughter, and Edwin, the second son, enlisted in the service of his country on May 21, 1918. He was sent to the Naval Reserve at San Diego, and was on the Eastern Coast until 1919. He had extensive trips to the island possessions of the United States, and made three trips to Nova Scotia, having enlisted as a fireman and been promoted as an engineer, and he was finally honorably discharged at San Francisco. Mr. Maier was bereaved of his first wife in 1911, and in 1916 he was married a second time to Miss Minnie Schuler of Pasadena, the daughter of George Schuler of Galena, Ill., where she was born, the youngest in a family of eleven surviving children.

A Republican in matters of national politics, and a strong advocate of the building up of home, rather than club life, Mr. Maier contributes something to steady local finances in the wise investments he has made in California National Bank stock and in the management of his excellent ranch holdings. In more respects than one, therefore, Mr. Maier may be spoken of as a pioneer and an exemplary citizen.

LEROY BENNETT.—A good man who, after years of unremitting labor, has succeeded in acquiring a comfortable competency, is Leroy Bennett, whose years are brightened with the recollection of creditable service in the Civil War. He was born in Athens County, Ohio, on December 22, 1845, the son of Clinton Bennett, a native of that section and a farmer; he was in the Civil War as a Union soldier in 1861, but was crippled and discharged, and in 1864 he enlisted in the One Hundred Fifty-first Ohio National Guard, and was with his son, our subject, in Washington, until he was mustered out. He came to Humansville, Polk County, Mo., in 1865, and after farming industriously for years, died there. Mrs. Bennett was Johanna Wells before her marriage; she was a native of Ohio and died in Missouri, the mother of seven children, the oldest of whom was Leroy. A younger brother, Samuel J., who enlisted in the Sixty-third Ohio Regiment in the Civil War, died in Orange.

Leroy Bennett was reared on a farm, attended the local public schools, and left the plow to enlist for service in the cause against slavery and for the preservation of the Union, in April, 1864, joining the One Hundred Fifty-first Ohio National Guard, Company K., and was stationed at Washington, until mustered out at Camp Chase, Ohio, in August, 1864. The following year he removed to Missouri and helped on the home farm; and in that state he remained until his marriage, in 1867, to Miss Susan Minerva Wrentfrow, a native of Missouri and the daughter of James Wrentfrow, who came from Tennessee to Missouri. She had two brothers, James and A. F. Wrentfrow, in the Union Army, and both acquitted themselves as men.

After his marriage, Mr. Bennett engaged in farming in Missouri until 1894, and on New Year's Day started for California, first stopping at Burbank, in Los Angeles County, for a year; but in February, 1895, removed with his family to Orange County and located at Orange. He then bought his present place, a promising tract of an acre, which he improved by the setting out of oranges and the building of a residence; but Mrs. Bennett, esteemed and mourned by all who knew her, died on July 31, 1912, leaving a void in both the home where she had so well presided, and the heart of her devoted husband. With her he has always attended the Methodist Church and served on its official board for several years.

Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Bennett: Hester A., now Mrs. W. E. Jones, presides over Mr. Bennett's household; Carrie N. is Mrs. Wm. F. Black of San Jacinto; Sarah Olive is Mrs. J. Z. Smith of Long Beach; and Harriet Eddith, Mrs. Amos Kaiser, also lives in San Jacinto.

Mr. Bennett is a Republican in matters of national political import, but knows no partisanship when work or support is demanded for local uplift or progress, and seeks to help along the best men and the best measures. He never forgets the ideals of the nation for which he fought, and renews his patriotic youth in the circles of Gordon Granger Post, No. 138, G. A. R., of which he is a member.

HARRY B. HANDY.—A railway section foreman for a decade and a half who has carefully studied present-day devices in the constructing of railroads, is Harry B. Handy, popular with all who know him, on account of his modest, unassuming personality. He was born at Nevada, Story County, Iowa, on September 1, 1879, the son of Owen Handy, who came to that county from Illinois and who had married Miss Mary A. Parker, who came from Buffalo, N. Y., a sketch of their lives appearing elsewhere in this volume. They had four children, and Harry was the eldest son.

Harry Handy went to school at Villa Park, in what was then in the Mountain View school district, and grew up with ranch surroundings. His father was superintendent of some eighty acres of vineyard, owned by I. W. Hellman and Morris L. Goodman, of the Farmers and Merchants Bank, and in this way our subject has come to be identified with the later agricultural interests of this locality.

November 17, 1897, witnessed the marriage of Harry Handy and Miss Mary Aline Horton of Orange and formerly of Iowa, and from this fortunate union have come two children—Orval B., born in June 19, 1898, and Robert Le Roy, born November 14, 1899. These sons are at present on the United States Revenue cutter Unalga, and on the Alaska coast; the eldest was in the United States service two years and the youngest has served one year.

H. B. Handy has been in the employment of the Southern Pacific Railroad for the past fifteen years as section foreman on the Los Angeles division, Tustin branch; and for six years he was zanjero and foreman on the ditch of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company. He belongs to the Central Lemon Growers Association and to the Villa Park Orchards Association. The family live on a ranch at Center Drive and Villa Park Road where the tractor, representing the modern way of doing things, is used throughout for farm work. Mr. Handy finds part of his social recreation in the circles of the Odd Fellows at Orange, honored there as one of the past grands. He also works under the national banner of the Republican party for better citizenship, and has been active as a supporter of the movements for the local schools and the community church.

HANIGAN C. MOBERLY.—A veteran of the Spanish-American War with an interesting record for manly service in the Philippines, who has seen great improvements effected in and around Orange, is Hanigan C. Moberly, who was born in Loogootee, Martin County, Ind., on August 7, 1874, the son of Irvin Moberly, a native of Kentucky and a member of a well-known Southern family. He settled in Indiana, and there led a prosperous farmer's life, and there he died. Mrs. Moberly was Sarah Calvin before her marriage, and she also was a native of Kentucky. There were two girls and three boys in the family, and of these Hanigan was next to the youngest.

When only five or six years old he was left an orphan, and until he was old enough to hustle for himself he lived with relatives and did a boy's chores about the farm. He first came to Hamilton County, Nebr., in 1891, and there, until January, 1892, he continued working at farm labor. Then he came to California and stopped at Los Banos, Merced County, where he worked on the canal survey for four months.

In May, 1892, Mr. Moberly removed to Orange, and for four years was employed on a fruit farm. Then he engaged in the confectionery business, and later was with Ben Davis & Company in the bicycle trade. When the Spanish-American War broke out, however, he could not refrain from offering his services to his country; and on August 14, 1899, he enlisted. He joined Company D of the Thirty-fifth U. S. Volunteer Infantry, which was mobilized at Vancouver, Wash., and sent to Manila, P. I., and he served throughout the Philippine insurrection, or until May 2, 1901, when he was mustered out at San Francisco. He was in the following engagements: a skirmish at Arayat, P. I., on Nov. 10-11, 1899, and another at San Miguel de Mayumo on December 11, 1899; a battle at Balubid, P. I., on June 11, 1900; a skirmish at Sibul, P. I., on June 12, 1900, and one at Santa Lucia, P. I., on October 29, 1900. He was commissioned corporal on March 25, 1901, or shortly before his return to Orange.

Having retained his interest in the bicycle concern, Mr. Moberly and his partner started at Orange the first auto repair shop, in 1904, at the same time taking the agency of the Tourist automobile; and there, on North Glassell Street, near the Plaza, Ben Davis & Company continued until the spring of 1908, when the firm was dissolved. This move afforded Mr. Moberly an opportunity for foreign travel, and he made the most of it. Sailing for Costa Rica, Central America, from there he went to Panama.

W. B. Stanchury

Then he crossed the ocean to London, and after an extended trip of eighteen months, during which he saw and learned more on account of what he had seen and experienced in his previous travel to and from the Philippines, he returned to America and California. Coming west he stopped for a while at Indiana, and in due time, glad to be home again, he arrived in the Golden State.

Taking up work again, Mr. Moberly started in the laundry business with the Orange branch for the Santa Ana Steam Laundry, and since the fall of 1910 he has been established at the corner of Lemon and La Veta streets. He began with a horse and wagon; but it was not long before the business grew to such dimensions that he required an auto delivery, and he still serves customers obtained in the beginning. The Orange plant is at the address already mentioned, and there he has his office. Personal attention, promptness and an earnest effort to give every patron the maximum of good service for the least cost have wrought the usual wonders popularly termed "prosperity."

Since coming to Orange Mr. Moberly was married to Miss Elizabeth Williams, a native daughter born at Riverside; and with his good wife he resides at 536 East Palmyra Street. He also owns an orange grove of seven and one-third acres, half a mile north of El Modena. In national politics a "black Republican," Mr. Moberly is a very "white" nonpartisan when it comes to supporting local issues likely to make for the development of Orange and Orange County, in which great civic work he is second to none in both good will and practical activity.

D. J. BASTANCHURY.—A progressive young man willing to help through his time, labors or other means all worthy projects, who has become an influential leader among the men of Orange County doing worth-while things, is D. J. Bastanchury, who has demonstrated his resourcefulness by improving one of the finest ranches in the state, now a famous show place along the State Highway between Fullerton and La Habra. A native son proud of his birthright, and of whom California may well be proud, Mr. Bastanchury was born at Anaheim on August 24, 1881, the eldest of four children born to Domingo and Maria Bastanchury, natives of France, who were pioneer settlers in what is now Orange County. Domingo Bastanchury engaged in sheep raising, and prospered in spite of dry years. He enlarged his flocks, and with deep foresight purchased land from time to time, in order to provide range for his sheep, until he became owner of from 8,000 to 10,000 acres in the La Habra Valley, extending to the built-up portions of Fullerton. He was eventually a very wealthy man, and before his death was rated a millionaire—the most tangible evidence of his rare business acumen. Survived by his widow, his monument is administered by his sons, who have developed the largest citrus orchard in the world. Mrs. Bastanchury has retained her mental gifts to a rare degree, and can relate many interesting incidents, as one of the oldest living settlers in the county, of the ever-interesting early days.

D. J. Bastanchury, as the first-born in the family, was familiar with stock raising as a lad, and after completing the work of the local schools, attended St. Vincent's College in Los Angeles, from the commercial department of which he was graduated in 1899. He continued with his father for a while, and then he entered the offices of the Capitol Milling Company in Los Angeles, and later was also in the employ of the Globe Mills. After that he purchased the Whittier Milling Company, and engaged in buying and selling grain for himself. He extended the milling and grain business to Fullerton, and had the satisfaction of seeing a large trade built up when he sold out, in 1910, to take up the development of his large ranch. This consisted of 400 acres on the State Highway, between Fullerton and La Habra, and was then only a stubble field. He sunk several wells and developed water, and next installed electric pumping plants. These have afforded some 300 inches of water, and by means of his extensive cement pipe lines, he has an ample supply of water for the irrigating of all his holdings. He set out Valencia oranges, lemons and walnuts, and now the whole place is an orchard; presenting an up-to-date, well-kept appearance indicative of the most scientific procedure highly creditable to Orange County and California.

Mr. Bastanchury is also interested in fine stock and is making a specialty of breeding pure-bred Berkshire hogs of the finest blood obtainable. His stockyards are located on the extreme west of his ranch and cover about fifteen acres; the whole is divided into suitable pens with running water in each pen and cement platforms for feeding, the whole being thoroughly sanitary. The buildings are large and roomy and are painted white or covered with whitewash, presenting a splendid appearance. The heads of his herd, both male and female, were obtained from selected stock from Gentry in Sedalia, Mo.; Baker of Thornton, Ind.; Lovejoy of Roscoe, Ill.; Sid Williams in Kentucky, and also some from the famous stock farm of Mr. Humphreys near Stockton, Cal. His exhibit at the State Fair at Sacramento received highest awards, as did his exhibit at the Livestock Show at Los Angeles and the county fairs at Tulare and Riverside; and no wonder, for he spares neither money nor labor to secure and further develop the best blood for the head of the herd.

At the old Mission town of Los Angeles, Mr. Bastanchury was married to Miss Elizabeth Depweg, a native of Ohio and a lady of culture and refinement, who is a splendid helpmate to her husband, encouraging and aiding him in all his ambitions. They have completed an attractive modern residence, where in true Californian style they dispense a large-hearted hospitality; a home that is delightfully brightened by their four children—Domingo, Catherine, Elizabeth and Frederick. He is a member of the La Habra Citrus Association and fraternally is a member of the Santa Ana Lodge of Elks. He is a stockholder in the Union Bank and Trust Company of Los Angeles, and also an original stockholder and director in the Citizens Commercial and Savings Bank of La Habra, where his counsel as well as his optimistic influence is of the greatest benefit. A man of pleasing personality, as well as of the aggressively progressive action, Mr. Bastanchury never fails to encourage anything which makes for the upbuilding, as well as the building up, of the county in which he lives and prospers, and toward the speedy development of which he and his family have contributed so much.

MISS JUSTINE WHITNEY.—Prominent among the officials of Orange County whose personality as well as their efficient public service have entitled them to the highest esteem and confidence and rendered them justly popular is the experienced and accommodating county recorder, Miss Justine Whitney, who has filled that office of peculiar responsibility for several years past and bids fair to be in requisition for years to come. She is a daughter of Nathaniel Bradish Whitney, who married Miss Rhuby H. Houghton, both New Yorkers of English descent, and was born in Lewis County, in that state, near the home of Franklin B. Hough, one of the greatest American historical students and scientists, who was the author of the pioneer county history published in the United States. She attended the local country school and later matriculated at the Dekin Business College, in Syracuse, from which she was graduated in 1898, well equipped for the ordinary commercial affairs of life. She was also prepared to instruct others, and for some years taught school in New York, after which, like other Easterners who have made a success, she came West and followed newspaper work in California. She was employed in the office of the Daily Californian at Bakersfield, and next came to the Daily Evening Blade at Santa Ana.

On March 1, 1903, Miss Whitney was made deputy recorder of Orange County, and served with untiring fidelity in that office until April, 1914. She was then elected to be county recorder, and assumed the duties of that office in January, 1915. Four years later, when the public had ample time to judge of both her ability and her faithful performance of duty, and also of her acquired, invaluable experience, she was re-elected and is now serving a second term. Although a Republican in matters of national political moment, Miss Whitney endeavors to define her attitude toward local issues in a strictly nonpartisan manner, and to support the best men and the best measures, and in every way to upbuild, as well as build up, the city and county in which she lives and is primarily interested.

Miss Whitney belongs to the Sycamore Lodge of the Rebekahs, where she passed through the chairs, and in 1896 was appointed district deputy president of District No. 50, comprising the Rebekah lodges of Orange County, and served for a year. She is a communicant of the Episcopal Church, but is broad-mindedly interested in religious and social endeavor generally, and takes pleasure in helping, in a modest way, to make the world a better place in which to live.

RICHARD T. DAVIES.—A well-known figure in Orange County and popular with all who know him, R. T. Davies, of Fullerton, has been a factor in the development of the city in which he has been a resident for years. A native of South Wales, he was born at Carmarthen, March 31, 1867, the son of Lewis T. and Mary (Evans) Davies, who had three children, of which number R. T. was the oldest. Both parents have long since answered the final roll call.

Richard T. attended the excellent schools of his native shire and later farmed in that fertile country, so that he knows what hard work means and appreciates the opportunities offered to men who are willing to work to earn a place for themselves in this great commonwealth of California. When he was twenty-five years of age he came to America and for four years he was engaged in farming near Hiawatha, Kans., learning the ways of this country so that he could better advance in any line of endeavor he chose to enter. In the fall of 1896 Mr. Davies came to Orange County and in Orange—then a small village—he found employment in a packing house to learn the details of the business thoroughly, and gradually he worked his way through the various departments during the ensuing seven years. In 1903 he removed to Fullerton and for several years he packed fruit for a Los Angeles concern, each succeeding year becoming more closely connected with the citizenry of this section of the county. In 1912, he decided he would embark in business for himself and accordingly he established a packing house at Placentia and in time employed fifty or more people and used the most modern of machinery and methods. He continued this business until the fall of 1920, when he sold out the business and equipment and leased the building—which he owns—to give his time and attention to his growing interests.

Mr. Davies owns orange groves aggregating forty-six acres, and these he is bringing to a high state of production, as they were originally run-down groves when he purchased them. His thorough knowledge of the orange and lemon industry makes him an authority on the subject, and all this he has brought to bear in the development of his groves.

At Orange, Cal., in 1902, R. T. Davies was united in marriage with Miss Gertrude Charlotte Kennedy, daughter of William R. and Gertrude Kennedy, both living in Anaheim. Mr. and Mrs. Davies have been granted four children, John Wesley, Harold, William and Gertrude, all natives of the Golden State, and being educated in the best of schools here. Mr. Davies is a stand-pat Republican and has always taken a very active interest in local and in state politics and has served in the councils of the party for years, but never can be induced to accept any office. He is an active member of the Board of Trade and the Fullerton Club, and participates with vigor in all civic movements likely to improve, uplift and advance the community. He is a life member of the Santa Ana Lodge of Elks, and belongs to the Knights of Pythias and the Odd Fellows in Fullerton. R. T. Davies is one of the real "boosters" of Orange County and is a leader in advocating all improvements that build permanently. With several associates he is interested in oil development of the county, which industry he has witnessed from its infancy until it has grown to be of such proportions that it is astonishing the world.

FRANK S. GATES.—A representative business man of Orange County, now retired, whose various operations have always stimulated the commercial life of the Southland, is Frank S. Gates, a contractor in brick and stonemason work, who was born in Chicago, Ill., on November 9, 1862. His father was Francis A. Gates, a native of Massachusetts, who had married Miss Sarah Fitch, a belle of the Bay State. They came out to Cheyenne, Wyo., in the late sixties, with their family, and for a couple of years conducted there a restaurant which was one of the best establishments of its kind in the town. In 1870 they arrived in the Anaheim district of Los Angeles County, now Orange County, and for seven years Mr. Gates raised grapes on his ranch half a half a mile to the south of Anaheim. He next bought forty acres of land five miles southwest of Anaheim, where he lived many years and raised corn. He had one of the early artesian wells on his property, with a seven-inch pipe and giving three inches of water, which was used for irrigation purposes. He was a pioneer in experimenting with the date, which he planted from the seed, and was one of the first in America to cultivate that fruit. He sent his product to the World's Fair in Chicago, and such was their quality that they readily took the first prize. Mr. and Mrs. Gates are now both deceased, but three children represent them worthily. The subject of this sketch lives at Anaheim; a daughter is Mrs. William Huff of Long Beach; and there is another son, James L., at Anaheim.

For a while Frank S. Gates worked on the home ranch with his father, and then he learned the brick and stonemason's trade at Anaheim. His first employment was with the Santa Fe Railroad Company, when he helped to build the road then being constructed from San Bernardino to San Diego. He had two teams and looked after the grading; and while working near Perris, he had an interesting experience. The men were camping out in tents when a heavy snowstorm came on, the temperature dropped to ten degrees below zero, and snow piled up in drifts eighteen inches over the tops of the tents, frozen so hard he could walk over them. Often, too, the Santa Ana River was full of water, and fording was difficult and dangerous. The country between Anaheim and Santa Ana was a thick tangle of willows, many feet high. When he first came to Anaheim, there were two stores, ten saloons and a few houses.

Mr. Gates followed brick and stonemason contracting for thirty years, and many of the old landmarks he built are still standing. These include the Rossmore Hotel in Santa Ana and the Hotel Rochester and the Dobner Block in Orange. He also built the old Spurgeon Block where the first postoffice was located, and the Lacey Block on Main Street, Santa Ana. He built and owns the modern brick block on North Lemon Street, Anaheim, occupied by the Romaine Garage. His son Irving was associated with him for eight years and now carries on the business and makes and installs artificial cement blocks. He specializes in porch and mantel construction in fine cottages and bungalows, and a very able workman he has proven to be.

When Mr. Gates married, he took for his wife Miss Cornelia R. Ryder, a native of Boston, who died in Anaheim, on September 8, 1918, leaving behind her a very enviable record for usefulness to society. She established the Floral Nursery at 119 South Illinois Street, now being carried on by her son, Howard E. Gates—the only nursery in Anaheim, and known throughout the county for its large variety of flowers. Four children blessed this fortunate union of Mr. and Mrs. Gates. Howard E., is married and has one child, Morgan Gates. Adalaid is the wife of Merle G. Anlauf of Santa Paula, and has three children: Helen, Glenn and Virginia. Irving, the successor of his father's business; and Inez, the wife of Roy Ivins, of Santa Ana, and the mother of one daughter, Blanche. Frank S. Gates served for six years as a trustee of the City of Anaheim; he is an Odd Fellow, belonging to Anaheim Lodge No. 199, and to the Encampment, the Canton and the Rebekahs, Lodge No. 268; and he is a member of Company No. 10236, Modern Woodmen of America. For three years he served in the National Guard of California, Company E and in Company G four years as quartermaster sergeant. He was a member of the volunteer fire department in Santa Ana three years, and lived in that city for six years. Mr. Gates has lived many years in Orange County, has been successful and is now practically retired from active business.

James L. Gates, already referred to as the brother of our subject, was born on his father's ranch, near Anaheim, on March 5, 1875, attended the Alamitos school, and the Central school at Anaheim, after which he took a thorough course at the Los Angeles Business College. In the spring of 1898 he went to Alaska, and for seven years he remained there in the Dawson district, mining and hunting. When he returned to Anaheim, he took a course in assaying, and then he went to Clark County, Nev., where he spent two years. His next removal was to Acton, Cal., where he mined for two and a half years. About seven years ago Mr. Gates returned to Anaheim, and since then he has been engaged in selling new and second-hand furniture. He married Miss Bessie Stewart, of Nevada, and has one son, Stuart. He belongs to the Odd Fellows and attends the Catholic Church.

HENRY ANDREW SCHREINER.—The late manager of the Globe Grain & Milling Company, Henry Andrew Schreiner, brought to his present business operations, the most desirable wealth and power for any ambitious man—a rare combination of experience, character and ideals, which contributed to the increasing success of all that he undertook. He was a native of Wisconsin, although almost a native son, and so added another esteemed name to the long list of those hailing from the Badger State. He was born at Milwaukee on January 18, 1885, the son of Andrew and Annie (Risch) Schreiner, natives of Bavaria and Wisconsin, and came to Los Angeles, Cal., in 1889, where they engaged in the grocery business on West Washington street, near Figueroa. Andrew Schreiner passed away in Los Angeles and his widow still makes her home in the Southern metropolis. Henry A. was the only child of the union and attended both public and private schools, and later St. Vincent's College, from which he was graduated in the commercial course. During these years of study, Mr. Schreiner laid broad and deep those foundations easily discernible by all who analyze his make-up. He first entered the employ of the Whittier Milling Company, which was sold after a year and a half to the Globe enterprise; and when the latter opened their place at Fullerton in about 1909 he became the Globe's manager. For two years he was president of the Fullerton Club, and was a charter member of the Board of Trade. On April 9, 1913, Mr. Schreiner was married in Fullerton to Miss Emma Salveson, of Fullerton, whose parents were Hans and Tonniet (Tollofsen) Salveson natives of Sogndal, Norway, where Mr. Salveson followed mining and farming until 1878, when he came to St. Joseph, Mo., where he was married; after this they farmed at Maysville, Mo. In 1888 they came to Fullerton, California from Brown County, Kans., and thus they are among the oldest settlers here, the town just having started at that time. Later they purchased twenty acres of raw land on North street in East Anaheim, which they improved from cactus and brush to a splendid Valencia orange grove. However, most all of these years they have made their home in Fullerton. This worthy pioneer couple have ten children: Sophia, Mrs. Simpson of Alhambra; Ida, Mrs. Shaw of Oakley; Sigwald of Fullerton; Emma, Mrs. Schreiner; Theodore resides in Brea; Herbert makes his home under the parental roof; Selma, Mrs. Callan of West Orangethorpe; Melvin served overseas in the U. S. Army, and was in the battles of Argonne and St. Mihiel and since his return, with his brother Herbert, he operates the Salveson Orange ranch; E. Franklin, who is with the Union Tool Company at Brea; Louise, Mrs. Swink, resides at Brawley. Mrs. Schreiner was born at Horton, Brown County, Kans., but reared in Fullerton, where she received her education in the public and high schools.

Mr. Schreiner was a stockholder in the Globe Grain and Milling Company, and as manager of the Fullerton mills for the company had an enviable record as a business man. He improved a small orange grove at 638 West Commonwealth Avenue, where he built his residence and made his home until his death, February 3, 1920, a sad loss to his family and friends. Popular and fond of social life, Mr. Schreiner belonged to Anaheim Lodge No. 1345 of the Elks. He was public-spirited and second to none in advocating and working for civic improvement. The same high standards demanded by Mr. Schreiner for business efficiency and attainment he applied without reservation to the conducting of affairs in official life and the performance of duty, in political matters, by the ordinary and average citizen.

DANFORTH C. COWLES, M.D.—A member of the medical profession of Orange County of superior training, whose skill and conscientious attention and care to every patient has enabled him to rise to well-deserved prominence in his chosen field, is Dr. Danforth C. Cowles, who stands high in the profession, not only in California, but in the East, where he was very prominent as a surgeon, having a splendid record in Minneapolis, Minn., so that he was not long in establishing a successful practice after locating here. Of Southern lineage, Dr. Cowles was born at Richmond, Va., February 22, 1875. His father was Dr. Ransom F. Cowles, a native of Virginia, who after obtaining his bachelor's degree at the University of Virginia, went abroad, graduating from the University of Heidelberg as an M.D. He practiced in Richmond, Va., until the Civil War started, when he served as a surgeon in the Confederate army. He was married to Miss Dulcinea Rowe, also a native of the Old Dominion. After the close of the war he continued to practice in Richmond, and there both he and his wife passed away. They were the parents of two children of whom Danforth C. was the younger. The older son, Frank, chose a military career, and was killed during military activities in Brazil.

Danforth C. Cowles early experienced the cares that are reserved for more mature years. He received the foundation of his education in the public schools, and at the age of fourteen, an orphan, was thrown upon his own resources for a livelihood. He earned a living by driving a mule in the coal mines, and with indomitable pluck and perseverance worked his way through the Virginia Military College, graduating with the class of 1892 as a civil engineer. He was engaged in this capacity for a few years with some of the big mining companies in the West, then entered the University of Minnesota as a student, graduating from the medical department in 1901, with the degree of M.D. The mantle of the father descended upon the shoulders of the son, and he spent two years at Bellevue Hospital, New York, acquiring an invaluable experience, and then going abroad, where he spent three years doing post-graduate work in Edinburgh, Vienna and Paris. Returning to Minneapolis, Minn., he established a lucrative practice, remaining there for eighteen years. In 1918 he removed to Fullerton, Cal., and his professional skill rapidly became well known, so that he has acquired a large clientele, his patients having implicit confidence in his ability.

In Minneapolis, June, 1900, Dr. Cowles was united in marriage with Miss Ragnhild Sorensen, a native of La Crosse, Wis., whose father was a well-known editor of La Crosse, and later of Minneapolis, Minn. She passed away in 1914, leaving him one child, Danforth C., Jr., now a bright, sturdy lad of eight years. In June, 1918, Dr. Cowles' second marriage occurred, when he was united with Miss Anna Hicks, a graduate nurse and a very cultured, refined woman, who is a great aid and encouragement to Dr. Cowles in his profession.

Politically Dr. Cowles is a Republican, and in his religious associations is a member of the Christian Church, in which he is an elder. Fraternally he is a Scottish Rite Mason and a Shriner, being a member of Zorah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., at Minneapolis. His Blue Lodge membership is now in Fullerton Lodge No. 339, F. & A. M. His fraternal relations are further extended by affiliation with the Knights of Pythias, and of Anaheim Lodge No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks. He is a member of the American Medical Association, the State Medical Society and the Orange County Medical Association; and also of the Fullerton Club and the Hacienda Country Club. An enthusiastic booster, Dr. Cowles is active in the circles of the Fullerton Board of Trade, and he is as well known for his public spirit and tireless activity in the interests of his adopted city, Fullerton, as he is for his skill as a surgeon and medical practitioner. Dr. Cowles has traveled extensively in many parts of the world, and during his residence in Minneapolis he made trips to Europe each year, and there visited the hospitals and attended the Old World clinics.

ELWOOD COATE.—A man of exceptionally high character and agreeable personality is Elwood Coate, who was born at Pleasant Hill, Miami County, Ohio, on December 12, 1843. His father was the Rev. Samuel T. Coate, a native of Miami County, and also a merchant, who in 1853 removed with his family to Marengo, Iowa, and after five years settled in the neighborhood of Le Grand, Marshall County, where he was a successful farmer, and where his wife died. In 1882 he removed to Cloud County, Kans., and there resided until his death, when he closed an enviable record of forty years service in the Christian Church ministry. Mrs. Coate was Harriet Anthony before her marriage; she was a native of Ohio, and was educated at Earlham Academy in Indiana. She was a cultured, refined woman, esteemed for her liberal education, and as a minister in the Christian Church, to which she, too, had been ordained, she was a gifted public speaker. She died in Iowa in 1881.

The Coates are of English extraction, and may proudly trace their family tree back to Marmaduke Coate, who came from Cumberland, England, to South Carolina, and joined the Society of Friends. He had a son, William, and he in turn had a son also named Marmaduke—the great-grandfather of the subject of our sketch. He removed from North Carolina to Pennsylvania, and there with a Mr. Coppock, bought 5,000 acres of land from the Indians, some of which now lies in the rich oil belt of western Pennsylvania. In 1806 he came to Miami County, Ohio, and bought land at twenty-five cents per acre near Pleasant Hill; and the old home place he erected is still standing. Grandfather James Coate was born in Ohio. On his mother's side Mr. Coate is descended from John Furnas, also a native of Cumberland, England, whose father was a lord and large landowner. John Furnas has four sons born in England—William, John, Thomas and Jonathan. John Furnas had married Mary Wilkinson, the ceremony occurring in the meeting house of the Friends. They came to North Carolina, arriving in Charleston on February 18, 1763; and while they were in the harbor, another son, Joseph, was born, who, when he grew up, married a Miss Teague. The name was originally Furness, and was changed to Furnas in South Carolina. The father was an early pioneer in Iowa, when government land went begging at $1.25 per acre, although later the land was rapidly gobbled up.

There were ten children in the Coate family, six of whom are still living: Susan W. Conway, in her eightieth year, the widow of a Civil War veteran, lives at Bloomfield, Iowa; Elwood; Esther C. Rose lives at Tucson, Ariz., the widow of Captain Rose, of the Civil War; D. A., of Parsons, Kans.; Cynthia Ann Stallings, of Oswego, Kans.; Olive Hart, of Macksburg, Iowa. Elwood Coate was reared in Ohio until 1853, when he removed to Iowa with his parents. There he was educated in the public schools and fully caught the spirit animating all Americans as more and more the great struggle between the North and the South came to a focus; and on March 26, 1864, when he was twenty years of age, he enlisted as a volunteer in Company I, Second Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and was mustered in at Davenport on April 9, 1864. He served in Missouri, Kentucky, Mississippi, Tennessee, Alabama and Georgia, and was in the battles or skirmishes of Tupelo, Cormory's Cross Roads, near Harrison, Littlehatchee River, Old Town Creek, Shoals Creek, Campbellsville, Lynville, Columbia, Spring Hill, West Harpeth, Franklin and Nashville, and then on Hood's retreat, at the Battle of Spring Hill, Lawrenceburg, Richland's Creek, Tuscombria, and various other places. After the war Mr. Coate served in the South during the Reconstruction period, and the regiment was honorably discharged at Selma, Ala., on September 19, 1865. He returned home October 6, 1865.

After the war Mr. Coate established himself in the harness business at Le Grand, Iowa, but owing to ill health he sold out and learned the cabinetmaker's and the carpenter's trades, which he followed for eighteen years, engaging in contracting and building. During that period he was also township clerk and school director. In 1885 he removed to Oakland Township, Cloud County, Kans., and having previously purchased 160 acres of land, he added more until he had 480 acres. He engaged in raising grain and stock and also in horticulture, raising peaches and apples. He was elected township clerk and was re-elected to the office, serving two terms of two years each. After three years as county treasurer, Mr. Coate returned to his farm and remained two years, when his wife's health became impaired and he sold out and came west to California. This was in 1905, and he at once located at Orange, and for some time owned and managed an orange ranch, which he later sold. With his son, he still owns seventeen acres of Valencia oranges and lemons.

Mr. Coate's first marriage occurred in Iowa, on February 1, 1866, when he was joined to Susan Elleman, a native of Ohio, who died two years later, leaving one child, Orin M. who resides at Orange. He was married a second time, 1869, to Sarah Diefenbaugh, of Ohio, by whom he has had three children, two of whom are still living. Herman E. is an orange grower, living near Orange, with his wife and four children; and Samuel Rush was a banker, but is now an orange grower near Anaheim. Mr. and Mrs. Coate also reared a motherless girl, Bessie Wilkins, who is now living on Grand Street, Orange.

Mrs. Coate lived for ten years after coming here, and then she passed away. Two years later, at Santa Ana, on June 12, 1918, Mr. Coate married again, taking for his bride Mrs. Myra E. Morse Holderman, a native of Johnson County, Iowa. Her father was Nathaniel J. Morse, a native of Ohio and a pioneer farmer in Iowa, where he died, closing his useful life when only twenty-five years of age. Her mother was Emily Parks in maidenhood; she was born in Indiana and died in Tustin, Cal. The town of Morse, Iowa, on the B. C. R. & N. Ry., was named for an uncle, Edwin K. Morse. An only brother, Charles N. Morse, is now a resident of Tustin, Cal. Myra E. Morse was married the first time in 1867 to Upton Holderman, a native of Iowa, who also served in the Civil War, a member of Company A of the Twenty-second Iowa Volunteer Infantry. After the war he was a farmer in Iowa, and then moved to the vicinity of Hastings, in Adams County, Nebr., where he farmed for twenty years. Then he came to Tustin, in Orange County, in February, 1893, and bought an orange grove of twenty acres, served four years on the board of supervisors from the Fifth District, and there died in 1913. They had seven children, six of whom grew up and are living: Uppie Ethel is Mrs. Walter E. Parker, of Omaha, Nebr.; Emma is the wife of J. C. Lamb, tax collector of Orange County; Myron is a contractor and builder of Bakersfield; Lyda is Mrs. Eugene Marsh of San Pedro; Nelson Miles grew up in Tustin, and was familiarly called "Neb," was a bugler in the National Guard, and then educated at Occidental College. He served with troops at the San Francisco fire and earthquake, April and May, 1906, and was very efficient as a bugler. He was a natural tactician and deeply interested in military affairs and served as captain on the Mexican border, then as captain in the World War, and was overseas in the Second Division. He was in the famous Lost Battalion, when six hundred of our brave men were surrounded by Germans. They had only two days' rations, yet they held the Germans off for six days until, through the agency of a carrier pigeon, they were discovered and relieved by troops who reached them just in time to save the balance of about one hundred. Captain Holderman was wounded ten times during these six days, but he recovered and served in the Army of Occupation, and returned home in the fall of 1919. He is now commander of the National Veteran's Home, at Yountville, Cal., with the commission of colonel. He is married and has two children. The youngest child of Mr. and Mrs. Holderman is Upton Grant, now a rancher, living near Tustin.

Mr. Coate is a member of Gordon Granger Post No. 138, G. A. R., and is a past commander; he has been adjutant, and is now officer of the day. Mrs. Coate belongs to Gordon Granger Post, No. 54, W. R. C. Both husband and wife are Methodists and also equally loyal Republicans.

MRS. MARY McKEE GILCHRIST.—A woman who is very enthusiastic over the exceptional advantages of Southern California, and particularly Orange County, is Mrs. Mary McKee Gilchrist, the widow of the late Duncan Gilchrist, who passed away on January 21, 1908, lamented by many. She was born at Addison, Vt., and made her first trip to California in January, 1906. The following March she returned East, and in November of the same year was back again in California, and has located at Orange—such was, to her as with so many thousands of others, the lure of the Golden State.

Her father, John McKee, of Scotch Irish descent, was married in New York State to Miss Sarah J. Bingham, and the wedding took place on May 13, 1848. She also came of Scotch ancestry, and proved the right kind of a helpmate for a man forging ahead in that early period of the country. As farmers, Mr. and Mrs. McKee moved to Addison, Vt., but after four years they returned to Moriah, Essex County, N. Y., where Mr. McKee farmed along the shores of Lake Champlain. And there he died, on November 7, 1901. Mrs. McKee spent her declining years with Mrs. Gilchrist and passed away at her home in Orange on January 18, 1914. She was the mother of two children, one of whom, Samuel Bingham McKee, was a civil engineer and prominent in railroad building, and died in Los Angeles on November 29, 1910.

Mary McKee, the younger of the children, was brought up in New York and there attended the Sherman Collegiate Institute, after which she engaged in teaching in her home county. In time she became the principal of a school, and so continued in educational work until her marriage in 1895. Her husband, Duncan Gilchrist, was born in the Isle of Islay, Scotland, and when fifteen years of age crossed the ocean to Ontario with his parents. He was a mechanical engineer—and none better worked near him; and when still young came to Michigan, where he was a master mechanic in the iron ore mines at Marquette, and then at Ishpeming, for seventeen years, and later at Duluth, going from there to Mineville, N. Y., where he was over twelve years with the Witherbee and Sherman Company, when he resigned to come to California. As an exceptionally qualified mechanic, he was always both well known and well liked, and was frequently consulted on account of his expert knowledge. He had desired always to return to Scotland for a visit, and once with Mrs. Gilchrist went on to New York, but he was called back to Mineville on business before he could sail, and putting it off, he died Jan. 21, 1908, so he never was able to make the cherished visit. Mr. Gilchrist was a member of the Masonic order. Since his death, his estimable widow has resided at Orange, treasuring the memory of the last years with him, and has built for herself a fine home at 237 North Orange. She is a devoted Presbyterian, and belongs to the same denomination in which Mr. Gilchrist was for many years an elder. Mrs. Gilchrist is a Republican, and belongs to the Gordon Granger Post, W. R. C., where, as well as in the church, the cultured and refined influence of her pleasing personality is especially felt.

JOHN G. LAUNER.—Among the public-spirited citizens of Orange County, John G. Launer, pioneer resident of La Habra, is deserving of special mention in the annals of the county. A native of Switzerland, he was born at Berne on January 16, 1863, the son of John and Anna (Stambauch) Launer, both of whom came from sturdy French and Swiss families. In order to find more congenial surroundings than were to be found in their own country, Mr. and Mrs. Launer left Switzerland in 1866, when their son John was three years old, and sailed for America, their destination being Highland, a suburb of East St. Louis, Ill. Two years after landing there Mr. Launer started to raise grain and stock on an eighty-acre farm he had purchased, and this was later increased to 160 acres. They lived to a ripe old age and died mourned by a wide circle of friends.

John G. attended the grammar school and at the age of fourteen had to leave his books to help with the farm work. When he was eighteen he worked at the threshing business during the season and in winter took up the sawing of wood and when that was dull he butchered for two winters, thus showing he was willing to do any honest labor in order to make a living. On October 16, 1888, he was united in marriage with Miss Rosa Niggli, the daughter of Chris Niggli, a well-established farmer of East St. Louis. Three children were born of this union: Albert, a graduate of the University of Southern California and now city attorney of Fullerton; he is married and the father of two children—Catherine and Leland; Nelson M., is a rancher at La Habra and secretary of the La Habra Water Company; he attended both the University of Southern California and the University of California; his children are Eunice and Ruth Launer; Erwin, is cashier in the Commercial National Bank in Los Angeles, he has one son, Malcolm Launer. In 1893 the wife and mother passed to her reward and on March 2, 1894, Mr. Launer married Miss Anna Niggli, a sister of his first wife, and two children have come to bless their home: Richard E., secretary of the Chamber of Commerce of Manhattan Beach and an employe of the Standard Oil Company of El Segundo. He has a son, Raymond. The youngest child, Glenn Launer, is at home with his parents.

It was in the early part of 1898 that John G. Launer first came to California as a tourist and so well pleased was he with conditions and future prospects here that he purchased thirty acres of land in the La Habra Valley, paying seventy-five dollars per acre. Twenty acres of the land was devoted to barley and the balance had deciduous trees on it. This land was situated in what is now the limits of La Habra town and after he had returned East and disposed of his holdings in Illinois he brought his family here in the fall of 1898, dry farmed for several years with more or less success, and marketed his products in Fullerton, Anaheim and Whittier. Mr. Launer is never idle and is a hard worker, though always ready to do his part as a citizen who has the interests of his community at heart. As the town grew he sold off all but ten acres of his original purchase in acreage and town lots, the tract lying east of Hiatt Street and extending to Cypress Street, north of Central Avenue. The ten acres left is set to oranges. He also has four acres in walnuts, the balance of ten acres south of the Pacific Electric Railroad. He also owned twenty acres west of Hiatt Street, where the main business section of the town now is situated. This property he sold to the Pacific Electric Railway Company, after he had dry farmed it for four years. He paid $150 per acre for this tract at time of purchase. He erected a fine home on his original ranch and in 1919 he built a $9,000 garage building at the corner of Main Street and Central Avenue that is a credit to the town.

Mr. Launer was instrumental in building up the La Habra Domestic Water Company, which obtains its water from the La Habra Water Company. This company was a mutual affair at first but is now a public utility and under the control of the State

John D. Chaffee M.D.

Railroad Commission, but Mr. Launer is the president of the company. He helped to lay out the system, install the pipe lines and put it on a sound basis. The source of supply of the La Habra Water Company is the San Gabriel River and the water is carried in lateral ditches to the consumers. It has often been said that the good the consumers have derived from this company far exceeds the cost of the service.

For six years Mr. Launer served as a member of the board of trustees of the La Habra grammar school; for two terms he was a member of the Union high school board of Fullerton, and while he was serving there the property was purchased and the school buildings were being constructed. For five years he was deputy assessor for his district, and four years was deputy under Sheriff C. E. Ruddock. He was one of the organizers of the La Habra Citrus Association and the La Habra Walnut Association. During the World War he and his wife were active in the work of the Red Cross and other allied drives and supported liberally the various loan drives. Politically Mr. Launer is a Republican and at one time served as a member of the County Central Committee. He was a member of the right-of-way committee that brought the Pacific Electric through La Habra and the first depot out of Los Angeles on the line was built at La Habra. A self-made and self-educated man, Mr. Launer has the best interests of the county at heart and is highly respected by all who know him for his public spirit and integrity. It is to such citizens that Orange County owes its great progress in recent years.

JOHN D. CHAFFEE, M.D.—A pioneer of Garden Grove, whose homestead, The Pines, was one of the most valuable properties of that district, Dr. John D. Chaffee was a member of an old English family that settled in Vermont. His father, Eber C., was born near Bellows Falls, that state, and the son of Rufus Chaffee, a farmer. When a youth he learned the trades of tanner and currier, but after removing, in 1839, to Kane County, Ill., he turned his attention to agriculture, and improved a farm of 400 acres in Campton township. He married Anna Davis, who was born in Rutland County, Vt., of Welsh and English descent. Both died on their homestead in Illinois. Of their twelve children all but two attained mature years. They were as follows: Sereno S., who died in Los Angeles, Cal.; Fernando H., Mrs. Marcia Ryder; Edmond, who died in Texas during the Civil War; Alonzo, Dorr B., who served in an Illinois regiment during the rebellion; John D., Simon E., also a veteran of the Civil War and Albert J.

Near Elgin, Kane County, Ill., Dr. Chaffee was born November 5, 1843. On completing the studies of the district schools he attended Mount Morris (Ill.) Seminary. From boyhood it was his ambition to enter the medical profession and, in spite of obstacles, which would have daunted one less determined, he persevered, making every occupation in which he engaged a means to the end desired. While still living in Illinois he conducted a large dairy and furnished milk for a condensing factory, building up a business that was profitable and important. On account of ill health brought on by the strenuous life he led while building up and conducting his dairy business, Mr. Chaffee came west to California in 1875, stopping for three months in Los Angeles, then going to Westminster. He found that the climate of this part of Los Angeles County agreed with him and decided to remain here and in February, 1876, he located in the vicinity of Garden Grove where he purchased thirty acres of land. He soon sold off twenty acres and thereafter gave his attention to the development of the ten he retained by setting out various kinds of fruit trees. He acquired another tract of ten acres and set out eucalyptus trees and from the small grove he had in five years' time he cut and sold eighty cords of wood. When Dr. Chaffee bought his land he paid for it in currency and in exchanging for the "coin" of California he lost eleven cents on each dollar as greenbacks were not legal tender in this state.

Years ago, with only one text-book to assist him, Dr. Chaffee began the study of medicine, and his rudimentary knowledge of the science was acquired without the aid of an instructor. Other books were afterward added to his medical library and the contents of each absorbed by his receptive mind. In 1884, the year following its organization, he entered Hahnemann Hospital Medical College in San Francisco, from which he was graduated in 1887. However, he had practiced prior to his graduation, and he was, in point of years of professional activity, one of the oldest physicians in Orange County, and was beloved by many who appreciated him for his true worth and nobility of character.

The marriage of Dr. Chaffee took place in Elgin, Ill., September 29, 1868, and united him with Miss Ellen M. Bradley, who was born at Dundee, Kane County, Ill. She is eligible to membership in the Daughters of the Revolution, some of her paternal ancestors having participated in the first war with England. Her grandfather, Anson Bradley, spent his entire life in Vermont, and her father, William S. Bradley, was also a native of that state, born in Fairfield, but in 1838 settled at Dundee, Ill., becoming a pioneer farmer near that town. In 1881 he removed to California, where he remained retired from active cares until his death, at seventy-six years. He traced his ancestry to English and Scotch progenitors. In religion he was connected with the Methodist Episcopal Church. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Lucia Keiser, was born in New Hampshire and died at Garden Grove, Cal. Their family consisted of four daughters, namely: Jane C., Mrs. Wanzer, a resident of Chicago but who died in Wisconsin; Mary E., Mrs. Hill; Ellen M., Mrs. Chaffee, and Lois E., Mrs. Hitchcock. After completing her education in Elgin Academy, Mrs. Chaffee became a teacher in Kane County, continuing in that profession until her marriage.

Dr. and Mrs. Chaffee were charter members of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Garden Grove and he was always one of its leaders and an important factor in its progress, both as a member and through his service as chairman of the board of trustees and in other official positions. In his political adherence he was a staunch Republican and active in the local work of the party, but at no time in his life an aspirant for official honors. In 1901 the family moved to Long Beach and where Dr. Chaffee built up an extensive practice, and there he passed away on May 2, 1907, in the fine home he had erected on Cedar Street.

JAMES ALEXANDER FORBES.—A full and eventful life has been the portion of James Alexander Forbes, scholar, historian and musician, who at the age of eighty-two is now living at San Juan Capistrano, hale and hearty, and, gifted as he is with a remarkable memory, he can relate many of the interesting happenings of the early days of California. A native son, born March 17, 1838, at Santa Clara, Mr. Forbes has spent practically all his life in the state of his birth, except for some years in Mexico in the consular service, and later spending some time there in superintending his mining interests.

His father, James Alexander Forbes, Sr., one of California's earliest pioneers, was born at Inverness, Scotland, and highly educated there, being a professor of languages and music in a college at Inverness. Entering the service of Spain in the warfare against the Moors, he later came to California on a Spanish man-of-war, landing at Yerba Buena, now San Francisco, in 1829. Returning to Scotland, he came a second time to America, making a prospecting tour to Vancouver, and coming to California in 1833 with a party of the Hudson Bay Company, camping on the San Joaquin River where the city of Stockton now stands. During this time he wrote a history of California for the English Government, which was later published in London, and which is the first history of this part of the country written in the English language. Appointed consul by England, Mr. Forbes removed to the Mission in Santa Clara County, and was stationed there when California became a part of the United States. He soon took a prominent part in the development of the country under the new rule, and built a beautiful residence in Santa Clara, with many modern conveniences, such as dumb waiters, speaking tubes, etc., and bringing from England the first cook-stove to be brought into California. He also brought the machinery for a flour mill from Rochester, establishing the mill at Los Gatos. He was the owner of the rich New Almaden mines, and took out of them enormous sums of money, but later he lost much of this fortune through litigation. Mr. Forbes married a native daughter of California, Anita Maria Galindo, the daughter of Juan Crissotomo Galindo, and spent his last years in Oakland, leaving a name that will always be associated with California's early development.

The second son of a family of twelve children, all of whom were talented, inheriting the literary ability of their father, James Alexander Forbes was given a thorough education at Santa Clara College, and after his graduation he began teaching school at Santa Barbara in 1865, having charge of the public schools there until he went to San Francisco, where he was an instructor in St. Joseph's College. Later he was appointed translator of the California state statutes, and from 1867 to 1870 he pursued this work at Sacramento, and after completing this important work he was called to San Francisco, where he became court interpreter in all the Courts of Record, including the United States Federal Court. Appointed keeper of the Spanish and Mexican archives by the Secretary of the Interior in 1877, he served as official translator for the Government under the following surveyor-generals: Theodore Wagner, William H. Brown, Richard P. Hammond, O. C. Pratt and William Green, holding that position until 1892. Under President Harrison he received appointment as consul to Guaymas, Mexico, in 1892, serving throughout his administration. Coming back to California, he remained here for a time, but returned to Mexico in 1906, becoming extensively interested in silver, copper and quicksilver mines in Jalisco, which would have undoubtedly brought him great wealth, but everything was lost in the revolution during the latter part of the Diaz régime. Returning to the United States in 1918, he came to San Juan Capistrano in 1919 to make his home. His wife, who before her marriage was Carmen Vasquez, passed away in 1916. She was born in Sonora, Mexico, but was reared and educated in San Francisco. The only surviving member of Mr. Forbes' family is his brother, James Alonzo Forbes, of Monterey, Cal., a former judge of Monterey County.

Mr. Forbes has been deeply engaged in his literary labors of late years and has finished for his publishers the manuscript of a comprehensive historical work entitled, "Forbes' Chronology of the World from the Date of Its Creation 4004 B. C. to the Present Time." "The Golden West," just off the press, is one of the most reliable, clear, brief but interesting histories of California ever published for popular use in pamphlet form, and is beautifully illustrated. He has also published "Gramatica del Metodo," for teaching the English language phonetically to Spanish-speaking people, and a like work for English-speaking people who wish to learn the Spanish language. Among the various other works that he has published may be mentioned "The Rights of Indians and Neophytes of the Missions," which was used by the Land Court in Santa Fe, N. M., and so valuable was the material contained in it that Mr. Forbes was presented a substantial check by the Secretary of the Interior in recognition of his research work along these lines. In politics he has always been a staunch advocate of Republican principles, and he has always brought to bear in his daily life those high principles of honor, honesty and uprightness which were part of his inheritance from his noble Scotch ancestry.

CHARLES H. FORBES.—A native son of the Golden West dating back to days prior to the Mexican War was the late Charles H. Forbes, born in Santa Clara, 1835, a brother of J. Alexander Forbes, whose interesting history, as well as that of the Forbes family in California, is on another page in this history. He received a splendid education and became agent and bookkeeper for Don Abel Stearns, and after his death, for Mrs. Arcadia Stearns Baker, continuing for her until his death in 1900. His headquarters were in the Arcadia Block, Los Angeles. His care of Don Abel Stearns' estate and Mrs. Baker's interests made her property worth millions.

In early days he was agent for the following ranches: Los Coyotes, La Habra, San Juan Cajon de Santa Ana, Los Bolsas, Los Alamitos, Los Paredes, Bolsa Chica and La Sierra Jurupa.

Charles Forbes became a prominent and well-known figure in Southern California and a man most highly respected and esteemed. His wife, Louisa Olvera, was born in Los Angeles and was descended from an old Spanish family, a daughter of Don Agustin Olvera, who was secretary of the Departmental Assembly of California during the Mexican régime, and she preceded her husband to the Great Beyond, leaving him twelve children. The passing of Charles H. Forbes took away one of the old interesting and reliable men of affairs in the early history of Los Angeles and Southern California.

ROBERT C. NORTHCROSS.—A native of Tennessee, Robert C. Northcross, popularly known as Bob, was born at Trenton, on March 10, 1877, the son of Marshall Northcross who had married Miss Rebecca Caldwell. They were also natives of Tennessee, and were reared and educated in that state. The grandfather on the paternal side was Nelms Northcross of Virginia, who had married Margery Marshall of Kentucky. He was a planter in the "Volunteer State," and in 1868 came to California by way of the Panama route, and made a tour of the state, going as far north as Lake County and visiting Orange County, after which he returned to Tennessee. He came back to California with his family in the seventies, and settled in the town of Orange and there, in 1881, he died.

The death of Nelms Northcross brought to California, for the settlement of the estate, his son, Marshall, the father of our subject, who was accompanied by his wife, his daughter, Margery, and young Robert. They settled on a ranch near Orange. It consisted of eighteen acres, at the corner of Main and Chapman streets, and was a part of the grandfather's estate. At first, Mr. Northcross cultivated grapes and seedling oranges, which he in time took out and put in Mediterranean sweets. These he also took out, and then planted Navel oranges only to substitute for these Valencias. On this acreage the family lived for thirty-five years. All the children of Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Northcross were sent to the old public school at Orange, and in time Robert was graduated from the high school at Santa Ana, with the class of 1897. At the outbreak of the Spanish-American War, he enlisted for service as a member of Company L of the Seventh Regiment, California Volunteers, and served throughout the war. In 1899, also, he enlisted as one of the Thirty-fifth U. S. Volunteer Infantry, Company D, and served during the Phillipine Insurrection. He was made a sergeant, and was in the Island campaign for eighteen months.

In 1901, Mr. Northcross engaged with a wholesale electric supply concern in Denver, where he remained until December, 1903, when he returned to California and went back on the ranch. In 1905 he entered Occidental College, and in 1906, went with Company L, Seventh Infantry, National Guards of California to San Francisco and took part in the relief work so imperatively demanded at the time of the earthquake and the fire. The same year, he went to Mexico and for a year worked with the engineers of construction on the Yaqui River Railroad. In 1909, Mr. Northcross went on a walnut ranch of ten acres, on Chapman Avenue, west of Orange, and there he remained until 1914. From 1914 until 1915 he lived in Los Angeles, and in January, 1915, he went to work for the Orange County Forestry Commission, to propagate trees for, and plant them on the county highways. At first he was in charge of the county nursery, and now he has full charge of the highway forestry work.

On December 30, 1909, Mr. Northcross was married to Miss Eleanor S. Hammack, a daughter of Judge Daniel M. Hammack, of Los Angeles, whose wife, before her marriage, was Miss Belle Stewart, daughter of Judge James Stewart of Monmouth, Ill. She had attended the public schools of San Diego, had then matriculated at Occidental College Academy, and was graduated from the University of California with the class of 1900. One son, Robert Hammack Northcross, has been born to them. Mr. Northcross has generally stood by the political doctrines of the Democratic party in national political affairs, but he has been willing to waive and forget the claims of partisanship in all local matters, and has always found great pleasure, as has his wife, in supporting whatever seemed likely to make for the best conditions, and to assure the upbuilding of the community.

DR. MARION ALBERT MENGES.—A man of forceful character and fine professional attainments who through his many years of identification with the best interests of Orange County made a substantial contribution to its development in more than one line, is Dr. Marion Albert Menges, whose passing away in 1912 removed from the community one of its most public-spirited citizens. Dr. Menges was born in Elkhart County, Ind., in 1859, the son of George W. Menges, a well-known farmer in Elkhart County. Marion A. Menges attended the local schools and then entered the Northern Indiana State Normal at Valparaiso, where he was graduated. He then began teaching, first in his native county of Elkhart and then in Green County, Ind., and while so engaged he determined to take up the study of dentistry and accordingly entered the dental college at Cincinnati, Ohio, graduating from there in March, 1888, with the degree of D.D.S.

Four years previous to his graduation, in 1884, Dr. Menges had been married to Miss Stella Butcher, who was born at Bloomfield, Green County, Ind.; she was the daughter of David and Wilhelmina (Hopkins) Butcher, natives, respectively, of Missouri and Ireland, the father being a prominent farmer and business man of Green County, where he resided until his death. Mrs. Butcher, who now makes her home at Santa Ana, is the mother of three children, two of whom are living: Mrs. Menges and Mrs. Cora B. Cavins, both of Santa Ana. Immediately after his graduation, with his wife and their two children, Dr. Menges came to California, locating at Santa Ana, where for some time he engaged in the practice of dentistry. He was quick to see the great possibilities of Orange County, both for horticulture and the development of oil, and after a time he gave up his dental practice and, in connection with the late Ralph Smith, began the development of oil on a twenty-acre tract in Brea Canyon. In starting in this field he showed commendable judgment and enterprise, as it was on this lease, after he sold his interest to Otis Birch, that a gusher well came in. This was the first great gusher in this section and although Dr. Menges was compelled to let go of his holding before its final development, it made a millionaire of Mr. Birch, who is now a resident of Pasadena. As it was, Dr. Menges used the capital obtained by the sale of his oil properties for the acquiring of horticultural lands, and for a number of years he was very active in the realty field in Orange County. At the time of his demise he was the owner of considerable valuable property in this section, and was one of Orange County's well-to-do and influential citizens. He was a Knights Templar Mason and past master of Santa Ana Lodge No. 241, F. & A. M.

Five children were born to Dr. and Mrs. Menges: Mina is the wife of Ed King, a rancher at Tustin, and they are the parents of three children: Dr. Mark Menges, who is a practicing dentist at Fullerton, married Miss Gladys Harrison and they are the parents of one daughter; George married Miss Bernice Roper of Santa Ana and manages the home ranch; John is also engaged in the practice of dentistry and is in partnership with his brother Mark at Fullerton; Helen is a student at the Santa Ana high school. The two older children were born at their eastern home, the three youngest being natives of California.

M. A. Menges

Since the death of Dr. Menges, Mrs. Stella Menges has continued to maintain their beautiful ranch home at 1602 East First Street, Santa Ana. The commodious residence, set in the midst of attractive and well-kept grounds and surrounded by a thirteen-acre walnut and orange grove, shows the painstaking care that has been bestowed upon it. It has been brought up to a high state of cultivation through the efficient and careful husbandry of Mrs. Menges' son, George, who, with his accomplished wife, resides on the ranch. The Menges ranch is one of the show places of the locality, with its many ornamental trees and particularly its row of stately palms—one of the finest in Orange County.

The Menges family has throughout its residence in Orange County been prominent in its social and civic life, and Mrs. Stella Menges has aided in many of the movements for the upbuilding and betterment of the community. She is a member of the Christian Church and takes much pleasure in her affiliation with the Eastern Star and the Ebell Club of Santa Ana.

CAPTAIN HARRY GANTZ.—A South Dakotan who has added his mite to the development of Orange County and California, and like all Dakotans has written for himself an enviable record of practical accomplishment not likely soon to be effaced, is Capt. Harry Gantz, the rancher from the historic Deadwood, where he was born on September 4, 1888. His father was Fred M. Gantz, a professional man of that state, who married Miss Molly Christie, a native of Virginia, still enjoying, with her husband, the blessings of life and health. Harry was an only child, and it is safe to say was not neglected in his education.

He not only attended the grammar school, but also went to high school and a first-class military school, where he remained for five years. This school was the Kemper Military School, of Booneville, Mo., from which he was graduated with the class of '07. Then he went to the Philippines, as second lieutenant in the Philippine Constabulary. After three years he came home in 1911, and joined the regular U. S. Army as second lieutenant of infantry. In 1914 he was made first lieutenant in aviation, and in 1916 was promoted to be captain in the same arduous and dangerous field. In the fall of that year, he resigned and went to live on his California ranch. Now he has 140 acres, in Orange County, and employs eight men to maintain them in their high-water condition of development.

At Santa Barbara, on September 1, 1915, Captain Gantz was married to Miss Beatrice Wooster Miller, a native daughter and the only child of Charles Wooster Miller, now deceased, and Gertrude Benchley Miller. They were large landowners at Fullerton. Captain Gantz, who is fond of polo, horses and dogs, has completed with his gifted wife, a beautiful home of pure Spanish design which is, like his ranch, one of the real show places of the county. In national political affairs, he is a Republican, but he works untiringly for the best interests of the locality in an unpartisan manner affording a stimulating example to all young men ambitious of serving society and their country. He is an Elk, a life member of Deadwood Lodge No. 508, a member of the Fullerton Club, the Board of Trade, the Santa Barbara Country Club, and the Army and Navy Club, in each of which established organizations he is known for a strong personality and positive influence.

OLIN E. STEWARD.—Although a native of Michigan, Olin E. Steward, the recently appointed city manager of Anaheim, is associated through his family with the pioneer days of California. His father, Newton B. Steward, came to the California gold fields by way of the Isthmus of Panama in 1853, and for fifteen years followed mining. The mother, who was Lorana Gilbert before her marriage, crossed the plains at the age of sixteen years, in 1852, and some years later met and married Newton B. Steward. After these years of arduous struggle in the mining camps, for there were hardships a-plenty in those pioneer days, Mr. Steward's health failed and he returned East, settling in Michigan. There he remained until 1889, when he came back to California and engaged in ranching at Santa Ana for a number of years until his demise in 1896. The mother still resides there at the age of eighty-four years.

Of the five children of Mr. and Mrs. Steward, all of whom are living, Olin E. is the fourth in order of birth. He was born in Wayne County, Mich., on July 4, 1868. His early education was obtained in the rural schools in his home district, and he then attended Albion College, graduating from there with the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1898. He then pursued a further course of study at Northwestern University in Chicago, and there, in 1901, he received the degree of Bachelor of Sacred Theology. On completing the work there he entered the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church. After devoting four years of his life to this work, his health failed and he was compelled to abandon his plans for a ministerial career and seek other fields of work.

It was then that he took up engineering work, and he has since been successfully engaged in this line of endeavor.

For two years he was with the assessor's office at Santa Ana, and in 1909 he became city engineer of Anaheim, and through his efficient administration great strides have been made in the development of the city, as all the paving, sewer work and sidewalk laying have been done since he took office. In addition to his work as city engineer, he was also superintendent of streets. In November, 1919, Mr. Steward was made city manager of Anaheim, a position he is exceptionally well qualified to fill, because of his intimate connection with the city's material development of the past years, giving him a broad grasp of its future needs and possibilities. In addition to the duties of his office, Mr. Steward is also a member of the Anaheim board of health, is gas and sewer inspector, so that his civic interests radiate in many directions.

Mr. Steward's marriage, which occurred on September 14, 1898, united him with Miss Edna M. Simmons, a native of Michigan. Two children have been born to them, Katherine and Wendell. Deeply interested in the future development of his chosen state, and particularly in Orange County, Mr. Steward ranks high among its public-spirited citizens, as he is always ready to give of his time and energy to every worthy project that has for its motive the upbuilding of the community. He has served for three years in the ranks of the California National Guard. Mr. Steward still manifests an intense interest in the Methodist Church, being president of the board of trustees of First Methodist Episcopal Church of Anaheim.

HON. J. RALPH CARHART.—The Empire State was never better represented, among those who have attained fame as public officials in California, than in the phenomenally successful career of the Hon. J. Ralph Carhart, the popular mayor of Fullerton, whose influence has been so potent in favor of a broad and substantial development of the municipality under his control. He was born in New York City on January 12, of the Centennial year of 1876, and his father was Thomas F. Carhart, the clothing manufacturer so well known to New Yorkers of that day, and founder of the firm of Carhart, Witford and Company. He married Miss Marie Louise Casteria, a native of New Orleans, the daughter of Louis Casteria, a prominent attorney of that city, and they were the parents of seven children, but only two sons and two daughters are now living. Mr. Carhart died in 1882; his widow survives and makes her home with her son, J. Ralph Carhart, giving him an opportunity to minister to her comfort and happiness, while she receives the homage of the whole family.

The second youngest of the family, Ralph attended the Columbia grammar school in his native city; but having removed to California with his mother in 1891, he continued his studies at Throop Polytechnic at Pasadena. His mother had acquired ranch property of value in the San Fernando Valley, and this estate he managed for her for five years. After that he came to Fullerton, and since then he has been successfully engaged in ranching. He has devoted himself in particular to the breeding of Jersey cattle and Poland-China hogs, and his exhibits at fairs have won the first prize.

At Fullerton, on September 28, 1898, Mr. Carhart was married to Miss Helen Anna Benchley, daughter of Edward K. Benchley, president of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Fullerton. Their daughter, Helen Louise, is now Mrs. Stewart S. Miller; and there are two sons, Ralph Benchley and Thomas Fair Carhart. The family attend St. Michael's Episcopal Church at Anaheim and Mr. Carhart is a Royal Arch Mason, a member of Santa Ana Council No. 14, R. & S. M., Anaheim Lodge No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks, the Fullerton Club, the Hacienda Country Club at La Habra and the California Club of Los Angeles. In politics Mr. Carhart is a Republican, and on April 20, 1916, he was elected mayor of Fullerton for a four-year term. His administration has proved just what anyone would expect who knows the man and his peculiar fitness for such a high office of trust.

MARCUS ARTHUR BRIDGE.—A native son of California and the son of a pioneer of the gold days, Arthur Bridge has successfully combined his work as a masonry contractor with citrus ranching, his ten-acre citrus grove at Yorba Linda bearing the marks of intelligent care. Born on March 6, 1879, at Compton, Cal., Mr. Bridge is the son of Marcus L. and Amy (Millard) Bridge. The father crossed the plains in 1850, when but nineteen years of age, settling in Northern California, and remaining there until the Civil War broke out, when he returned East and enlisted in an Illinois regiment, serving throughout the conflict. As soon as the war was over he returned to California, locating in Los Angeles, at that time a small settlement, and he and Mrs. Bridge still make their home there.

Of a family of five children, Arthur Bridge is the third eldest, and with the other children was educated in the public schools of Los Angeles. Early in boyhood he took up the masonry trade, learning the work from his father, who had been engaged in this line for many years. Leaving home at fifteen, he started out in life for himself, and soon was successfully contracting big jobs, among them the extensive building operations of the Janss Investment Company. During this period he worked on some of the largest buildings ever erected in Los Angeles and San Francisco, and made a reputation for himself for this thorough, high-grade work. In 1910 Mr. Bridge came to Yorba Linda and purchased ten acres of bare land and immediately set out his nursery stock, from which his present grove of lemons was planted. In these days there was no water company at Yorba Linda and Mr. Bridge was compelled to haul water in wagons both for irrigation and household purposes, until the present pipe line was installed. All of Mr. Bridge's brothers and sisters are interested in land at Yorba Linda, but at present none of them are permanent residents.

In addition to the development of his citrus ranch Mr. Bridge has also continued his work as a masonry contractor, and since permanently locating here he has had charge of practically every job of plastering and bricklaying both in Yorba Linda and the surrounding country.

On December 6, 1906, Mr. Bridge was married to Miss Myrle Reese, who, like himself, is a native of California. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin M. Reese, were pioneers of California who settled at Santa Barbara in the early days. Mr. Reese died in Arizona and Mrs. Reese is now a resident of San Francisco. Mr. and Mrs. Bridge are the parents of two children, Dorothy Myrle and Donald Arthur, both attending school at Yorba Linda. Mrs. Bridge is a charter member of the Women's Club of Yorba Linda and takes an active part in all the progressive movements of the community. Mr. Bridge is prominent in all the cooperative organizations of Yorba Linda, being a member of the Yorba Linda Chamber of Commerce, the Associated Chambers of Commerce and a charter member of the Foothill Groves Association, of which he was formerly a director, being one of its organizers. In fraternal circles Mr. Bridge is affiliated with the Yorba Linda Lodge of Masons. Politically he gives his support to the Republican party.

PIERRE NICOLAS, Jr.—Whenever the historian of Fullerton shall attempt the agreeable task of narrating the story of this favored spot in Southern California, the knoll overlooking the entire valley whereon is the magnificently-situated home erected by the late Pierre Nicolas, will be a certain reminder of the life and successful labors of one of the most prominent and widely esteemed citizens of that city. He was born in Los Angeles on October 21, 1881, the son of Pierre and Hippolyte (Vincent) Nicolas. The father had originally settled at Whittier and there their son attended for a time the grammar school, later going to the Sisters School at Anaheim and laying a firm foundation for a course at the Orange County Business College of Santa Ana and the finishing course at St. Vincent College of Los Angeles. All these years Pierre lived on his father's ranch and when not in school or otherwise employed, assisted with the ranch work.

On October 21, 1914, Pierre Nicolas was united in marriage with Miss Kathryn Backs, a native daughter of Orange County, born in Anaheim into the home of Joe and Catherine (Hyermann) Backs. Joe Backs came from Germany to America when a child and made his way directly to California; Mrs. Backs came to California when a girl of seven and her life has been passed in this locality ever since. Kathryn received her first schooling in Anaheim and has been reared in Orange County.

The elder Nicolas owned a tract of land north of Orangethorpe Avenue on the avenue now known as Nicolas Avenue which was named in his honor. The property east of Nicolas Avenue that finally came into the possession of his son, Pierre, was owned by his father for six months before he died. Pierre added a tract of twelve acres, making forty-five acres in the home place, all of which he improved with pipe lines and pumping plant and set to oranges, lemons and walnuts, also terraced the property at a big expense of time and money and made of it the show place of Fullerton. He later bought sixty acres on Orangethorpe Avenue and this he set to Valencia oranges and installed a cement pipe line throughout the entire ranch, which is under the Anaheim Union Water Company. Pierre, or "Pete," as he was familiarly known to his friends, was a man of action and was never idle. When he was twenty he was engaged in the livery business in Fullerton, in partnership with O. R. Fuller, and when he embarked in ranching he operated on a large scale, leasing some 2,300 acres which he put into grain. He used the most modern machinery and implements and employed many men to perform the duties on his ranches. His greatest ambition was to make of his home place a desirable place of residence and that he succeeded no one need doubt who has ever visited the spot. Here he and his wife entertained in true Californian style.

Mr. Nicolas was a man of striking personality, six feet in height and weighing 240 pounds. He made friends wherever he went and these he maintained until his death, which occurred on February 10, 1920, after an illness of but a few days from the flu. Mrs. Nicolas, after the settlement of the estate became the owner of the ranch of sixty acres on Orangethorpe, which she is wisely conducting, with the assistance of her brother, Edward Backs. She is widely known for her attractive personality and her deep interest in all that pertains to the advancement of the community. Mr. and Mrs. Nicolas both belonged to the Catholic Church in Fullerton. Mr. Nicolas was originally a member in the highest standing in Santa Ana Lodge No. 794, B. P. O. Elks, and but a short time before his death transferred to Anaheim Lodge No. 1345, and his death was deeply mourned by his brother Elks and by all who ever knew or had business relations with him. He was generous to a fault, was a man of the strictest integrity and a staunch supporter of all progressive movements for the upbuilding of Orange County and Southern California.

HORATIO AUGUSTUS ALLEN.—A much-loved and highly esteemed resident and builder up of Orange County, Horatio Augustus Allen, who passed away in 1916, left the heritage of a well-spent life, filled with kindly deeds whose memory will ever be cherished by those near to him. A native of Canada, Mr. Allen was born on a farm in Oxford County, twenty-five miles northeast of London, Ontario, April 27, 1833. His father, Nathan Prescott Allen, was born in New York state, where he married Miss Armenia Mott, also of that state, and later they removed to Oxford County, Ontario, where they became successful farmers. The Allen family come of old New England stock, tracing their ancestry back to the days of the Mayflower and Plymouth Rock. Nathan P. Allen had twin brothers who became prominent attorneys in New York City, but he was the only one of his immediate family to settle in Canada.

Horatio Augustus Allen was educated in the excellent schools of Ontario and at the business college in Buffalo, N. Y. Returning to his old home, he engaged in farming and in business until he made his first trip to California in 1863, coming by way of the Isthmus of Panama to San Francisco at a period when the Golden State was still but sparsely settled and bearing but little evidence of the wonderful growth and prosperity that have marked its later years. Remaining in San Francisco for nearly two years, he returned to his Canadian home, going by way of the Nicaraguan route, which at that time shared honors with Panama as a passageway from ocean to ocean, arriving home in April, 1865. He was aboard the train from New York to London, Ontario, when the wire came telling of the assassination of President Lincoln.

Upon his return to his native country Mr. Allen engaged in farming, managing his father's farm until 1874, and then began his career in the banking business. In 1877 he opened a private banking house at Port Elgin, in which he was eminently successful, and he became a prominent man of affairs with a very high standing in financial circles, establishing a record for veracity, integrity and honesty of purpose that was never questioned. After being identified with the banking interests of Port Elgin, on Lake Huron, he decided to make his home in the land of sunshine and flowers. His second trip to California was in 1884, when he brought his family to Tustin, where his nephew, ex-Senator Prescott Cogswell, then resided; Mr. Cogswell is now one of the supervisors of Los Angeles County. Mr. Allen returned to Port Elgin in the spring of 1885, but in the fall of 1885 his health became impaired, so in January, 1886, he brought his family out with the intention of establishing his home in California. His first purchase was a ranch of eight acres at Main and Glenn streets, Tustin, the nucleus of the large acreage he later acquired and left to his family on his passing away. He added to his holdings until he became the owner of eighty acres in five different ranches near Tustin, all set to walnuts with the exception of fifteen acres, which were in Valencia and Navel oranges—a well-improved and valuable estate.

Mr. Allen's marriage, which occurred at Mt. Pleasant, Ontario, May 9, 1877, united him with Miss Emma German, also a native of that country, born at Wilton, Ontario, and a daughter of Rev. J. W. and Sarah (Purdy) German. Her father was of English and Scotch-Irish descent and a minister in the Wesleyan Methodist Church, a very able and conscientious preacher, who filled the pulpit for more than forty years, until he retired. Mrs. Allen's maternal ancestors trace back to England through Massachusetts, and her great-grandfather Purdy, being a United Empire Loyalist, moved from New York state to Ontario about the time of the Revolutionary War. She is the second eldest of six children living, and has a brother, Edgar German, who resides in Los Angeles. Emma German received a good education in the schools of Ontario, and after completing the high school course, attended Hamilton College. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Allen was blessed with three children: Lucius of Tustin, and Augustus Horatio of Santa Ana; both assist their mother in caring for her ranches, giving it all of their time and attention. Gerald is a sophomore at Occidental College. Mr. Allen's death, which occurred April 8, 1916, removed from the roster of early enthusiastic settlers an estimable citizen, who had made a definite contribution to the development of the county, and who enjoyed the highest esteem of all who knew him. His example is well worthy of emulation.

Since her husband's death, Mrs. Allen, with the aid of her sons, continues to manage and operate the different ranches, and tries as far as possible to carry out the plans and ambitions of her husband; and, like her husband, she is very optimistic over the future greatness of this favored section of California. She is a member of the Presbyterian Church and of the ladies' aid and missionary societies of that denomination. Cultured, refined, well-read and a pleasing conversationalist, it is indeed a pleasure to know and enjoy her hospitality.

ISAAC CRAIG.—A contracting carpenter who has not only been active in helping to build up Orange County in the material sense, but who, as an influential City Father has contributed to stimulating and guiding its growth along broad and permanent lines, is Isaac Craig, a Canadian by birth, having first seen the light in Ontario on March 19, 1862. His father was John, and his mother Ann J. (McCollough) Craig; they lived busy, useful lives and are now both dead. They had thirteen children, among whom Isaac was the youngest child.

He attended the excellent common schools in Canada, and later learned the carpenter's trade, at which he worked until coming into the States in 1880. He came west to North Dakota and remained there six months, after which he moved on to Manitoba and British Columbia. In 1887, he returned to the States and for six months was employed at Helena, Mont. During the height of the great "boom" in 1887, Mr. Craig came to California and for awhile located at Los Angeles. Then he went north to San Francisco. At the beginning of the century, he came first to Orange County, locating at Olinda and in 1912 came to Brea, where he was one of the first residents; and since then he has built the Brea Hotel and many of the finest residences and business buildings hereabouts. He belongs to the Chamber of Commerce, in which organization he is always ready to shoulder his share of any movement making for the progress of the locality. Mr. Craig was easily elected city trustee in 1918, and was one of the first trustees of Brea, with a four-year term. He was also appointed, and then elected justice of the peace.

In Los Angeles on June 27, 1888, Mr. Craig was married to Miss Mary C. Reardon, a native of Charleston, S. C., and their fortunate union has been blessed through the birth of five boys and two girls. John M., in Sumatra; Mary Jane, wife of C. C. Hosmer, of Alhambra; Sarah E., Mrs. L. B. Depweg, of Honolulu; Edward, James C., William and Thomas, all at home. James C. and Edward were in the World War; the former was in France over a year, serving in the supply department; Edward was in training in the aviation department in England. In club life, Mr. Craig is active and popular in the Grand Fraternity.

JOHN CASSOU.—A highly-esteemed citizen noted for his great faith in the future of Orange County, a faith no doubt quickened because of his own work as a builder up of communities, is John Cassou, of Anaheim, whose good wife is a daughter of an intrepid '49er. He is now one of the oldest settlers of Anaheim living, although he first saw the light in the vicinity of Pau, in the Basses-Pyrenees, France. He was born there on October 18, 1856, and was descended from an old and well-known family. His parents were liberal-minded folks, and he received the best education that the public schools could afford. So well was he equipped for the ordinary station in life that at sixteen he migrated from home, sailed for America and eventually came to San Francisco. He had a brother in Anaheim, and that circumstance led him to proceed to the mother colony, where for two years he was employed in stock raising. Then, having saved some money, he decided to engage in the sheep business, and to establish something for himself.

He was only eighteen years of age, therefore, when he went to San Diego County and bought a small flock of sheep; and from 1875 until 1886 he ranged them on the plains and the mountains, after which he branched out into other lines. In partnership with his brother, Peter, he ran the butcher shop in Escondido, providing the town with the first meat market; and as the property at present of a nephew it is still running. In 1894, he sold out his various interests, save the ranches, which he still owns, to his brother, and came back to Anaheim. On his return, he embarked in the hotel and liquor trade, and in that line he continued for twenty years, or until he felt that his other affairs demanded all of his attention. He owns a business building, as well as a residence on West Center and Clementine, and also the Cassou Block, which he built in 1916. It is 97x155 feet on West Center, a very central location, and the edifice makes a fine business block. He is a stockholder in the First National Bank of Anaheim, of which he has been a director, and also a stockholder in the Anaheim Savings Bank. In addition to these realty holdings in Anaheim, Mr. and Mrs. Cassou have other valuable property in Los Angeles, which they recently erected and which adds to the artistic standards for which that city is noted. Naturally, Mr. Cassou belongs to the Chamber of Commerce in Anaheim, where he is highly esteemed for his progressive views.

The marriage of Mr. Cassou to Mrs. Marie (Sarrail) Blanchard, a native of San Francisco, occurred at Anaheim in 1896, and will long be remembered pleasantly by those who participated in the social event. The bride's father was Rock Sarrail, who in 1849 came to San Francisco by way of the Horn, landing after a six months' trip. He followed mining for a while, and then later took up stock raising, coming south to Los Angeles to range his herds. In the beginning, he let his flocks roam in what is now the business center of Los Angeles, but which was then merely open fields; and his herders moved along what is now Hill Street, between Sixth and Seventh. Mr. Sarrail is still living, at the ripe old age of eighty-one years; and he is enviably honored by all who know him as one of the genuine old-timers. Marie is the oldest child of the family, and was reared and educated in Southern California; and as far back as 1869 she came to Anaheim. She first married Victor Blanchard, a native of the Hautes Alps, France, who was engaged in sheep raising in Orange County, and was a prominent stockman and landowner, operating extensively, when he died in 1891. They had three children, but only one is living, Mrs. Rose Hessel, of Anaheim. One child, Ruby, a graduate of the Anaheim high school and also of a Los Angeles business college, has blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Cassou. Mr. Cassou is a member of both the Anaheim Lodge of the Elks and Eagles.

JOHN C. ORD.—Orange County is widely known for its recognition of old-time residents who have had to do with the founding and developing of this favored part of the Golden State, and it is not likely to forget such a worthy pioneer as John C. Ord, the father of Seal Beach, who was born in Orleans County, Vt., on July 28, 1842. As a boy, he worked in the woods getting out lumber, and also in a saw-mill, and at the outbreak of the Civil War enlisted as a volunteer in the cause of the Union, and served for three years. He belonged to Company E, Ninth Vermont Infantry, and was in the Twenty-fourth Army Corps under his cousin, Gen. E. O. C. Ord. He took part in the surrender of General Lee, and recalls that historic occasion as one of the most interesting events of his entire life. He was in the battle of Winchester and Harpers' Ferry, and was captured at the latter place and sent to Chicago, where he was exchanged. He also took part in the siege of Norfolk and the battle at Newport, N. C. In the last year of the war, he was attached to the Sharpshooter Brigade, and participated in the battle of Petersburg. He was also in the grand review at the close of the war in Richmond. As one result of this meritorious and active service, he helped to organize Baxter Post, G. A. R., at Newport, Vt.

In 1866, Mr. Ord crossed the Isthmus to California, and landed in San Francisco with only $300. This he soon spent and was obliged to find work. The experiment was not without difficulties, and he was forced to tramp through the country in search of employment and begged for something to eat. His first engagement was on a ranch in Contra Costa County, owned by Charles Howard. After that he worked on threshing machines in harvest fields, and then he went to the neighborhood of Monterey in the Salinas Valley, where he chopped wood and again harvested.

In 1869 Mr. Ord returned to his old home in Vermont, on one of the first railroad trains to cross the Continent after the driving of the famous golden spike; but like so many who have found it impossible to say goodbye to California, he came back to the Coast and located at Grass Valley, in Nevada County, where he mined, and built two houses which he sold. He then went to Los Alamitos, Orange County, and erected a two-story store building, in which he kept a general store and also served as justice of the peace.

On February 29, 1904, Mr. Ord hauled his store building to what is now Seal Beach and located it on Main Street, where it is still standing and doing good service. It is owned by John P. May, who conducts there a general store and the local post-office. This was the first building in Seal Beach, and Mr. Ord lived alone in it for three months. Later, he leased out the store and took a six months' trip to New Zealand.

On his return, Mr. Ord started in to build up Seal Beach. He bought lots in the area of the proposed town, some of which he still owns; was appointed first postmaster of the place, began to sell his own property, advertising "Bargains in Second-hand Houses and Lots," and cleaned up a handsome profit through his sales, and he also attracted visitors through a fine collection of skunks, squirrels and coyotes, which served as an attraction to beach visitors. He had thirteen skunks, quite as tame as kittens, and perfectly harmless, although he kept them caged.

John G. Ord

Besides faithfully fulfilling his duties as postmaster of Seal Beach, Mr. Ord also served as agent for the Wells Fargo Express Company on their entering the town, and this enabled him to help still more effectively in building up the place. He planted the first tree in Seal Beach, a blooming acacia, as well as other needed trees, and when the acacia was cut down, a gavel was made from some of the wood and presented to Mr. Ord by his friends; and this gavel he used in presiding over the deliberations of the board of town trustees. When Seal Beach was incorporated, on October 19, 1915, he was elected chairman or mayor, and was reelected to that office, retiring from office in April, 1920, to the regret of all who knew him.

Mr. Ord married Miss Mary White, a Vermont lady, now deceased, who became the mother of a son, Ernest W. Ord, a graduate of the Grass Valley high school. He is now foreman of a large lumber company in Cambridge, Mass. In Irasburg, Orleans County, Vt., Mr. Ord joined Central Lodge of Masons, No. 62, A. F. & A. M., and at Newport, Vt., he was raised to the Royal Arch degree and entered the fellowship of the Commandery, when he became a Knight Templar. Later, he demitted to the Norwalk, Cal., lodge of Masons.

GEORGE EDDIE ROBINSON.—A substantial citizen of Santa Ana long and highly honored not only among all old-timers, but particularly among the Masons of Orange County is George Eddie Robinson, one of the oldest stockholders in the Orange County Trust and Savings Bank. He was born at Winterset, in Madison County, Iowa, on August 16, 1857, a member of the family of H. J. Robinson, a native of New York, who was reared in Ohio. In his young days he was a boatman on the Wabash Canal. With his devoted wife, who was Julia Carpenter before her marriage, a native of Ohio, he came to Winterset, Iowa, in 1854. In 1858 he located at Fremont, Nebr., the seventh family to locate in that district, there being a village of 1,500 Indians across the Platte River from them. He engaged in building saw mills and flour mills, made the cottonwood lumber for the early settlers, and later made flour. On account of his health he came to California in June, 1875, and for years was engaged in farming here. For twelve years prior to his death he lived retired in Santa Ana. During these latter years his association with Masonry gave him much diversion and comfort. Mrs. Robinson, who was the mother of two children, is also deceased.

The younger of the offspring, George E. Robinson went to the local public schools and remained in the Middle West throughout his youth so that he was a young man of seventeen when he came to California in 1875. He was engaged in farming in Santa Barbara County with his father until 1883, when he came to El Modena, Orange County, and for three years gave his time to the cultivation and care of a twenty-acre tract of vineyard and oranges. On selling this he bought ten acres, now the southwest corner of Fourth and Baker streets; this he subdivided as the Robinson tract and it was soon sold. For fifteen years Mr. Robinson also followed teaming, so that he not only has seen much of the development of Santa Ana and vicinity, but has actively participated in the work of bringing about the miraculous changes. He was a stockholder in the Balboa Company and helped to lay out the town of Balboa, early took stock in the Orange County Savings Bank, now the Orange County Trust and Savings Bank, and thus attracted to it other capital, and erected three houses worthy of the vicinity. In many ways, therefore, Mr. Robinson has been very much, as he still is, interested in the development of the town and the county.

On September 3, 1890, Mr. Robinson and Miss Fannie Swift were married, but the following year his estimable companion passed away. She left a daughter, Eva F., who is now Mrs. James S. Elliott, through whom Mr. Robinson has one grandchild, James S. Elliott, Jr.

In every good movement for the benefit of the neighborhood, socially and morally an untiring leader working without partisanship, Mr. Robinson is a Republican in matters of national politics, and there endeavors to use his influence for the best nominees. Mr. Robinson is a member of Santa Ana Lodge No. 241, F. & A. M., Chapter No. 73, R. A. M., Santa Ana Council No. 4, R. & S. M., and Santa Ana Commandery No. 36, Knights Templar. He is also a member of Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., at Los Angeles, and of Hermosa Chapter No. 105, O. E. S. He has been tyler of all the Masonic bodies in Santa Ana for over fifteen years. Mr. Robinson was a member of the California National Guards under Hal Finley, and later under Walter Greenleaf. He was also constable of Santa Ana Township for six years and for eighteen years deputy county clerk, giving his attention to the registration of voters, which position he has held satisfactorily under four different county clerks. As a Republican he has been a delegate to many county and state conventions and has always taken an active part in county politics.

GEORGE HENRY AMERIGE.—Not many men living can point with pride to such a city as Fullerton and claim, as may the brothers, George H. and Edward R. Amerige, that the splendid reality is the child of what was once a mere dream, and one at which some people even smiled; but such is the occasional step in the evolution of the great Pacific commonwealth, itself the veriest reality crowning the fancies and vision of those who dared to look far ahead. These founders of one of the most attractive and promising of all the municipalities in Southern California were born in Malden, Mass., one of the suburbs of Boston, descendants of an old Colonial family, one of their number being George H. Amerige, an uncle of our subject, who came out to the Coast as a genuine '49er, traveling by way of Panama, and later founded the well-known newspaper, Alta California, in San Francisco. The Amerige family dates back to one of the oldest Protestant families of Italy, who were driven out of their native land at the time of the persecution of the Protestants. They fled to Germany and later to England, and there Maurice Amerige was born and reared. He and two of his brothers came to Boston, Mass., where he became a prominent business man. He married a Miss Brown, the daughter of Solomon Brown one of the early shoe manufacturers of Lynn.

The father of our subject, Hon. Henry Amerige, was born in Boston, and like many New England lads, went to sea for awhile; later becoming well known as a manufacturer and outfitter of sailing vessels, his place of business being at No. 1 Commercial Wharf, Boston. He was one of the first mayors of Malden, which he helped to lay out, and he gave this attractive suburb the land necessary for a park, now known as Amerige Park. He was a representative in the Massachusetts Legislature, a member of the board of assessors of Malden, was state commissioner and superintendent of highways for many years, and always occupied a position of prominence in the locality, where he was held in the highest respect. The mother, who was Harriette Elizabeth Giles Russell, was born in the old Benjamin Franklin home in Boston; her father, Benjamin Russell, was born in Salem, Mass., and married Miss Giles, whose father, Benjamin Giles, served in the Revolutionary War; he had married Miss Endicott, a cousin of Governor Endicott of Massachusetts. They were all of English descent and of old Puritan stock. Mr. Amerige's great-grandfather, Benjamin Giles, gave the sounding board to the old South Church in Boston. Benjamin Russell owned several vessels and was engaged in the merchant marine trade. He brought the first two colored boys from Africa to Salem and educated them until they were able to make their own way, and also brought the first rubber from South America to Massachusetts. All in all the Amerige ancestors were among the prominent and interesting old families of New England.

There were five children in the family of Henry and Elizabeth (Russell) Amerige, of whom George H. was the second eldest. The other members of the family were Edward H. Amerige, late of Fullerton, who died on May 3, 1915; Hattie A. is the wife of Albert B. Morgan, a prominent druggist of Malden, Mass.; Miss Ella Amerige also of Malden; and Alfred B., who makes his home at Everett, Mass. Mrs. Morgan is the only member of the family of five children to have issue and has been blessed with three children: Henry A., who enlisted and served in the U. S. Navy during the World War, is now associated in the drug business; Russell B. also enlisted for service in the World War, serving in the U. S. Army overseas for eighteen months and since his discharge is also associated with his father; Alva B., the youngest is attending the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. George H. Amerige, as stated before, was a native of Malden, Mass., born March 22, 1855, and the lad who was destined to play such an interesting role in California history, grew up under exceptionally advantageous circumstances in Malden, where he attended the local schools and was closely associated with the business life of the suburban cities of the Hub. As a young man he engaged in the wholesale and retail handling of hay and grain at Boston, in partnership with his brother, Edward R., and although they started in a small way, they were soon able to ship in carload lots; they had four different stores in Massachusetts and built and owned warehouses. Hearing of the turn given to land and other affairs in what is generally spoken of as the "boom" period in California, they disposed of their Massachusetts interests and arrived here in May, 1886; here they continued together in business, cooperating in harmony and joy in each other's association until the passing away of Edward R. Amerige in 1915, a loss to town, county and state.

George H. Amerige has told in an admirable historical document, just what they did when once they had cast their lot here, and much of his story is well worth repeating. After a thorough and careful inspection of all the country round about what is now the Fullerton district, these two young men formulated a plan to start a town, thinking that here of all places would be an ideal location for a successful and permanent municipality. Its close proximity to the then only well-developed portion of this region, the beautiful and productive Placentia district, was a potent factor in the decision.

The original purchase was made in the spring of 1887, and comprised 430 acres of land, a rich and fertile tract formerly belonging to the Miles estate. Having obtained the information that the Santa Fe Railroad Company would soon build a line from Los Angeles to San Diego, passing through Orange County, then a part of Los Angeles County, and near the Amerige land, the brothers negotiated with the company and induced them, by giving them an interest in the townsite, to change their route so as to run through the new tract. Frank Olmstead of Los Angeles was engaged to survey and plot the townsite; and the first stake was driven in his survey at what is now the corner of Spadra Street and East Commonwealth Avenue, then a field of wild mustard, by Edward Amerige on July 5, 1887. Visionary as this scheme of a town in a mustard field might have then seemed to many, the land was soon cleared, streets laid out and various buildings erected.

The first of these was the one built by the Amerige Brothers and used by them as an office, and ever since for business purposes. At this time the great boom in Southern California was rapidly subsiding, and the town was seriously handicapped by lack of transportation facilities to and from Los Angeles, the Santa Fe having failed, for a year, to complete its line, as agreed upon, to Fullerton. Wilshire Bros., hearing of the remarkable prospects of the new town, desired to purchase an interest in the venture, and prevailed upon the Ameriges to accommodate them; and later all interests were merged into the Pacific Land and Improvement Company, to better facilitate the new town's growth. When it was proposed to name the place after the founders, they modestly expressed their appreciation of the compliment, but did not wish to have it done; whereupon it was named in honor of George H. Fuller, then president of the Pacific Land and Improvement Company, which was really a branch of the Santa Fe Railroad Company, organized to promote the Santa Fe's interests, and to arrange for rights of way and railroad land. Later the Wilshire Bros. and C. C. Carpenter purchased the Pacific Land and Improvement Company's interest, and the Fullerton Land and Trust Company came into existence. The Wilshires failing to fulfill their contract with the Pacific Land and Improvement Company, their holdings were taken over by the land company. Then the interests of Amerige Brothers and the Pacific Land and Improvement Company were segregated, and the Fullerton Land and Trust Company dissolved, and Amerige Brothers stayed with the town.

Fullerton did not receive any natural benefits from the boom, for before the advent of the railroad, it was all over. The first train to reach the town was in the fall of 1888, and the first building of any importance to be erected was the St. George Hotel, named for George Amerige, costing over $50,000, which was wrecked in 1918 to make room for a modern business block, erected by Geo. H. Amerige. The Wilshire Block at the corner of Spadra and Commonwealth avenue was also built in 1888, and it is still standing. The first bank to be established was the First National Bank and Fullerton Savings Bank, affiliated, which came into existence largely through the efforts of Amerige Brothers.

Most of the streets of the town were named by the Amerige brothers, after the streets in or near their native Massachusetts town. Commonwealth Avenue, one of the finest, derived its name from the famous thoroughfare of Boston. Malden Street and Highland Avenue were named for the city and street where the founders formerly lived, and Amerige Avenue perpetuates the name of the town's founders. Other streets were named after officials of the Pacific Land and Improvement Company and of the Santa Fe Railroad Company.

The Amerige Brothers also planted and developed a sixty-acre walnut orchard, since sold by them, and sent their walnuts in carload lots to the East. They erected a number of buildings in the city and George H. Amerige has recently completed two new modern business blocks on his property on East Commonwealth Avenue, a block having 350 feet frontage on Commonwealth and 175 feet on Spadra Street. He also owns two buildings on Spadra Street of fifty and seventy-five feet front and is now building a concrete business block on Amerige Avenue, having a frontage of 100 feet. He still has business interests in Massachusetts and owns valuable property in his native city, Malden. Deeply interested in Fullerton from its inception he had to do with every enterprise and movement started, most of which have had a bearing on making it the splendid residence place of today. He put in the first waterworks that the first citizens to locate might enjoy the convenience and abundance of the necessity of life and with his own hands planted the first trees along the avenues in Fullerton, starting the beautifying of the city that is now so much enjoyed.

Mr. Amerige's marriage was solemnized in Boston, September 12, 1894, when he was united with Miss Annetta Jackson, who was born in North Searsport, Maine, but reared in Boston. She also comes of a very old and prominent New England family, whose ancestors served in the Colonial and Revolutionary wars. She is the daughter of Joseph Jackson, a native of Maine who was a shipbuilder in Searsport and later in Boston, where he continued shipbuilding until he retired, he and his wife spending their last days there. Her mother, Eliza Thorndyke Sawyer, was born in Thorndyke, Maine, a daughter of Rev. John Sawyer and Elizabeth (Gilman) Sawyer. Grandfather Sawyer was a well-known Baptist minister in his day. They are closely related to ex-Governor Sawyer of New Hampshire and the Chadborns and Hamlins of Maine. The Gilman family also dates back to England; when Mrs. Amerige's great-great-grandfather Gilman, with three brothers, came from England in their own ship to Beverly, Mass., they were given a grant of land in New Hampshire and proceeded to colonize it. Thus Gilmanton, N. H., was named for her ancestors. Annetta Jackson was the youngest of a family of six children, and was reared and educated in Boston, residing there until she came as a bride to Fullerton. A woman of culture and refinement, Mrs. Amerige is much loved and highly esteemed by her many friends, who appreciate her for her kindness, amiability and worth. She has always been intensely interested in her husband's affairs and has encouraged him in his ambitions, and both have always bent every effort to aid in the civic and moral uplift of Fullerton. She is a member of the order of the Eastern Star and the P. E. O.

Mr. Amerige was one of the five founders of the Fullerton Lodge of Odd Fellows and is a member of the Fullerton Club and the Board of Trade. He is a strong Protectionist and Republican and has been prominent in the councils of the party. Almost every year with his wife he makes a trip back to his old home in Massachusetts, visiting their many friends and relatives. Particularly do they maintain a live interest in the growth and development of Fullerton and freely give of their time and means to all enterprises that have for their aim the beautifying of the city and enhancing the comfort and happiness of its citizens. Mr. Amerige can safely be said to be not only Fullerton's oldest but also its foremost citizen.

PETER GODDICKSEN.—Prominent among the steady, industrious citizens of Orange whose character and foresight enabled them to succeed themselves and to be able and willing to point the way to success for others, is Peter Goddicksen, a native of Flensburg, Germany, where he was born on December 10, 1853. His father was Claus Goddicksen, a farmer, who had married Elise Clare Carlsen. They are now deceased, but they left behind to honor their worthy name five children, two of whom are in the United States; Nicholas Goddicksen is still living in South Dakota.

Peter, the eldest, was brought up on the home farm, emigrating in 1875, to the United States and located in Pottawattamie County, Iowa, where he was employed on a farm, in Avoca township, for a couple of years. He then homesteaded 160 acres, and preempted another 160, and besides secured a timber claim of 160 acres, in 1882, all in Douglas County, S. D.; and while pioneering there, converted this raw land into an improved farm. He broke the prairie, raised hogs and cattle and thus got a fairly good start. He was both a trustee and the treasurer of the school committee, and all in all was honored by those who knew him.

Later he sold out and removed to Hornick, Woodbury County, Iowa, where he was a farmer for six years; and in 1901 he made his first trip to Southern California, when he visited Orange. Two years later, in January, he returned to California, and located at Orange, where he bought a ranch on East Chapman Street; and there, on one place, he resided for seventeen years. There were eighteen and a half acres, and nearly all the tract he set out to orange trees, particularly Valencias, and to lemons, and after awhile had there an unusually well-developed orchard. He joined the Santiago Orange Growers Association, and was one of the first members of the McPherson Heights Citrus Association, and was on its first board of directors, and was also a member and a trustee of the Lemon Growers Association. He had an orange nursery, and was one of the first to set out avocados. He had nine acres of land set out to oranges, olives and lemons, and this he sold, disposing also of some six and a half acres set out to oranges, north of Whittier Heights. In 1919, Mr. Goddicksen sold his ranch and located in Orange, where he now resides at 306 North Center Street, still retaining a twenty-acre orchard of apricots at Nuevo, in Riverside County; he also owns ten acres of unimproved land there, and twenty acres of oranges half way between Orange and Anaheim.

During his residence in Dakota, Mr. Goddicksen was married to Miss Emelie Ertinger, a native of Wuerttemberg, Germany, and the daughter of Albert and Katherine (Kik) Ertinger. As far back as 1874, Mrs. Goddicksen came with her parents to Clay County, S. D., and settled near Yankton, the family later removing to Douglas County. Mr. Ertinger was a judge in Germany, and he never wanted for courteous and complimentary attention, and the full appreciation of his worth as an American citizen. After his death, his widow was married a second time to Fred Seiser, and they now reside on East Chapman Street, Orange. Five children of Mr. and Mrs. Goddicksen are still living; Elise E. educated at the Los Angeles high school and at the Orange County Business College, was city stenographer of Santa Ana, and is now a public stenographer and notary; she is very musical and is a pianist, vocalist and whistler. She is a member of the Presbyterian Church; William resides in San Francisco, and with him is his brother, A. Lenz, an instructor and consulting man for the Cleveland tractor. William was a member of the Three Hundred Sixty-fourth Regiment and saw service overseas for two years; A. Lenz was in the service and did limited duty; Elsie K. is in the Orange high school, and the youngest is Grant C. Goddicksen.

Mr. and Mrs. Goddicksen are members of the Evangelical Lutheran Church at Santa Ana, and they are both strong Republicans. Mr. Goddicksen is a member of the Ancient Order United Workers, and of Orange Lodge No. 225, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; and his wife, and daughter Elise, are members, with him, of the Rebekahs.

EDWARD RUSSELL AMERIGE.—In the annals of Fullerton a name that will ever stand out distinctly in its history is that of Edward Russell Amerige, one of Orange County's foremost citizens, who with his brother, George H. Amerige, founded this thriving town, now one of the prosperous municipalities of the Southland, and gave all his energy and effort to its upbuilding. In civic life he was also a leader from the formation of Fullerton; he was prominent in the county and represented his district in the Legislature, where his aggressive enterprise and influence made themselves felt. Liberal and progressive in his ideas, at his passing away on May 3, 1915, Orange County lost one of its best men.

Edward Russell Amerige was born in Malden, Mass., August 1, 1857, the son of Henry and Elizabeth Giles (Russell) Amerige, prominent citizens of Malden, a history of the Amerige family and their forbears being recounted in the biography of George H. Amerige, on another page of this work. Mr. Amerige grew to manhood in his native town and after completing his education there he entered into partnership with his brother, George H., in the wholesale and retail hay and grain business, and with their characteristic energy built up a very large and successful business. They had become intensely interested in the Pacific Coast region and after much thought and investigation concluded to cast in their lot in the Golden State. Disposing of their business interests in Massachusetts, they arrived in California in May, 1886, coming first to Pasadena, the vicinity of which was then mostly grain fields. They immediately purchased a ranch and here they made their headquarters for a few weeks, during which time they traveled over various parts of the county.

They became much interested in the Anaheim section, as they saw great possibilities for the locality between that place and the Placentia district, so in 1887 they purchased 430 acres of wild, uncultivated land, the present site of Fullerton. It was covered with wild mustard and brush, but with their natural optimism and New England foresight, they saw the possibilities of locating a town, since the Santa Fe Railroad Company was planning to build its road to Santa Ana and on to San Diego. They made their plans and had the town laid out, the first stake in the survey being driven by Edward R. Amerige on July 5, 1887, at the corner of Spadra Street and Commonwealth Avenue. They had interested the Santa Fe Railroad Company by giving them an interest in the town site, so the railroad was located through the new town. Other partners were taken in and changes made in the joint ownership. The subsiding of the boom caused a cessation of progress for the time being, but through all these years the Amerige brothers never lost their optimism and faith that it would some time be a large town.

When the railroad was surveyed through, the naming of the town had to be decided on. Mr. Fuller, president of the Pacific Land and Improvement Company, a subsidiary of the Santa Fe Railroad Company, as well as others, wished to name the town Amerige, but the brothers modestly requested that some other name be given, their only wish being to make it a good, substantial, growing town, and they suggested that it be named Fullerton, after the aforesaid official, which was done. However, the old-time citizens know how hard George and Edward Amerige worked to build up the town, never losing faith in the place during all the hard times, and think it an injustice that the town should not have borne the name of its founders. Subsequent events show how Edward Amerige and his brother did all they could to build up the city, taking a prominent part in its civic life and in the establishment of its financial institutions.

Edward R. Amerige was the first mayor of Fullerton and served two terms on its board of trustees as well as trustee of schools. He also served two terms (1903-1905) in the Assembly of the State Legislature. He was prominent in matters pertaining to irrigation and was for a time president of the Anaheim Union Water Company. A Knights Templar Mason, he was a well-beloved member of that organization and was one of the founders of the Fullerton Lodge, F. & A. M., and it was largely through his efforts that the first Masonic Temple was built in Fullerton, and at his passing the funeral service here was conducted by the Knights Templar, while according to his request his body was taken back to Massachusetts and buried in the old family lot in Forest Dale Cemetery, at Malden.

ELMER ELLSWORTH JAHRAUS.—Of French and German descent, E. E. Jahraus of Laguna Beach is the son of Andrew Jahraus, who was one of the leaders in the revolution against German militarism in those stirring days from 1832 to 1846. With Carl Schurz, who was later so prominent in the public life of America, and a member of President Grant's cabinet, Andrew Jahraus fled from Germany to America in 1847, after a reward had been offered for their capture, dead or alive, by the militarists. Mr. Jahraus located in Hamilton County, Ohio, near Cincinnati, and there established himself as a decorator and building contractor. His marriage, which occurred there, united him with Miss Christine Gruber, a native of Alsace-Lorraine, who was brought to America by her parents when but a babe. Of a family of five sons and three daughters, E. E. Jahraus, the subject of this sketch, is the youngest son. He was born January 27, 1866, at the family home in Hamilton County, Ohio, and when he reached school age he attended the public schools at Urbana and Dayton, Ohio.

Leaving home at the age of eleven to make his own way in the world, Mr. Jahraus found his first employment in a cigar factory at Urbana, Ohio, and also worked for two years in a woolen mill. When he was fourteen years old he entered the employ of one of the largest broom manufacturing concerns in the East, thoroughly learning the trade and remaining with them for seven years. Leaving Ohio in 1886, Mr. Jahraus went to Au Sable, Mich., on Lake Huron, where he became an expert in the cigar manufacturing business. After becoming a foreman he determined to carry out his long-cherished ambition to become a traveling salesman, so he started on the road for his brother, who was a cigar manufacturer of Au Sable, and continued his work as a salesman for some time, and recalls many interesting experiences he had during his travels. Later he went to Alpena, Mich., and for many years was superintendent of a large cigar factory. A brother-in-law of Mr. Jahraus having located in Oregon, he planned to remove to the Northwest, but finally came to Los Angeles instead.

Coming to Santa Ana in 1900, he remained there for a year and a half, where he was in the employ of Leo Goepper. In 1902 he moved to Laguna Beach and opened a cigar factory and curio shop in the Beach Hotel, shipping souvenir boxes of cigars to all parts of the United States. While in this business he became interested in the future of this beach city, and this interest has grown with the years, so that a large measure of the development work carried on there in late years is due to his enthusiasm and energy. Starting in a small way in the real estate business as the Laguna Beach Realty Company, Mr. Jahraus is now the largest realtor in that district. At the time of the organization of this company there were only about ten permanent families there, and the tourists were depended upon to make up the life of the town. The only connection with the rest of the state was by stage from El Toro, so that it was practically inaccessible to the average traveler. Under the efficient leadership of Mr. Jahraus, in cooperation with the Chamber of Commerce and the public, the community has begun to show marked improvement, with good schools and good roads, and it is on the coast line of the proposed State Highway. The Sanitary District was also established largely through Mr. Jahraus' efforts and he is a member of its board.

Among Mr. Jahraus' many other activities he is president of the Chamber of Commerce, vice-president of the Associated Chambers of Commerce of Orange County, one of the members of the board of control of the Laguna Beach Art Association, which is making this beach a mecca for artists from far and wide, and he was for many years a member of the school board. During the war he was chairman of the Liberty Loan Committee of Laguna Beach, and as one of its four-minute speakers did much to further their drives. During his youthful days he served for four years in the Ohio State Militia, and was detailed for service at Cincinnati during the riot that caused such disturbances there in 1884. Politically Mr. Jahraus has not actively aligned himself with any party, preferring to give his support to the best men and measures, regardless of party affiliations.

Mr. Jahraus' marriage united him with Miss Henrietta Beadle, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Beadle, both natives of England, who were for many years engaged in the hotel and mercantile business in Canada. Mr. and Mrs. Jahraus are the parents of two children, Joseph R. and Pauline C., the latter graduating from the State Normal School at Los Angeles in 1920.

Joseph R. Jahraus enlisted on April 1, 1918, in the Thirty-third Engineers Corps, U. S. A. Stationed at Fort Douglas, Utah, for one month, he was then sent to Camp Devens, Mass., thence overseas, landing at Brest, France, July 12, 1918. He was on one of sixteen troop ships, sailing under a convoy of two battleships and six destroyers, and when they reached the submarine zone they were met by a fleet of twenty-four destroyers, and as they neared the coast of France they were under the protection of three dirigibles and many small craft. Mr. Jahraus was detailed at once to active service as a wagoner in the Engineer Corps, and was overseas ten months. Arriving in America May 1, 1919, he was given his honorable discharge at the Presidio at San Francisco, June 2, 1919.

In October, 1914, Joseph R. Jahraus organized the Laguna Beach Lumber Company, being president of the same, and except for the period of his overseas service he has served continuously as manager of the business. Their shipping station is at Irvine, on the Santa Fe Railroad, and all lumber is hauled by truck to Laguna Beach. The company is enjoying the heaviest business in its history, and this bids fair to increase greatly with the continued growth of Laguna Beach.

The Jahraus family all stand high in the regard of the residents of Laguna Beach and enjoy a well-deserved popularity there, for they are everywhere recognized as among the most enthusiastic and dependable workers for the best interests of this attractive beach town. They are members of the Episcopal Church at Santa Ana and prominent in its circles.

STEPHEN TOWNSEND.—Among the representative citizens of Southern California, and held in the highest esteem by all who knew him, Stephen Townsend came to the Golden State as early as 1876. He first located in Pasadena, where he proved an important factor in the development and upbuilding of its best interests, securing its first franchise and building its first railway; and later the Altadena and other street car lines; establishing the Pasadena Warehouse and Milling Company and conducting the same successfully; and as a member of the city board of trustees advancing plans which were acceptable to both the conservative elements and were acted upon to the entire satisfaction of the people. In 1895 he became associated with the interests of Long Beach, in which city he foresaw a wonderful future.

Mr. Townsend was a descendant of English ancestry, the first members of both paternal and maternal families having located in this country during its colonial period. Descendants drifted into the Middle West, and in the state of Ohio, David, the father of Stephen Townsend, was born and reared to manhood as a farmer's son. He married Sidney Maudlin, also a native of Ohio, and until 1855 they remained residents of that state and of Indiana. In the last-named year they emigrated to Iowa and in Cedar County, near Iowa City, engaged in general farming and stock raising. He continued in that location until 1876, when he brought his family to California and became a member of the Indiana Colony, now Pasadena, where he engaged in horticulture up to the time of his death. He was survived twenty years by his wife, who passed away in 1903, at the age of eighty-three years.

Stephen Townsend, the eldest son and sixth child of their thirteen children, was born in Hamilton County, Ind., October 19, 1848. He was but seven years old when the family located in Iowa, where he received his education in the public schools and later the Iowa State University. Upon leaving the university he began to farm on his own responsibility upon land purchased in Franklin County, where he made his home for three years. Following this he was similarly employed in Cedar County for two years, when in 1876, he accompanied the family to California. The West appealed to him, with its broader opportunities and responsibilities, and he readily became one of the most prominent men of Pasadena, developing his latent powers of management and executive ability.

Prior to Mr. Townsend's location at Long Beach he purchased twenty acres of land on the Anaheim Road, adjoining the city limits and one mile from the beach. The year after his location at Long Beach he engaged in the real estate business, laying out various divisions there and also helping in the development of Huntington Beach. He was a partner in several real estate firms, among them Bailey and Townsend, Townsend and Campbell, the Townsend-Robinson Investment Company, later the Townsend-Van de Water Company. He also contributed extensively to the development of Orange County, being one of the organizers and directors of the Orange County Improvement Association of Newport, of which he acted as president, serving in the same capacity for the La Habra Land and Water Company and for the Sunset Beach Land Company. In addition to the foregoing Mr. Townsend was vice-president of the First National Bank of Long Beach and president of the First National Bank of Huntington Beach. He organized and was president of the Land and Navigation Company which owned 800 acres where the Long Beach harbor was dredged; in fact he took an active interest in all movements tending to promote the welfare of this section of California. The real estate firm which he organized was one of the most substantial in this part of the state, and carried on an extensive business, the high character of ability enlisted in the work making it one of the most successful enterprises of Long Beach. In addition to his engrossing real estate interests he was active in the municipal life of Long Beach, in 1903 being elected president of the board of trustees, which office he filled with efficiency.

In Iowa, near Iowa City, in Johnson County, on October 19, 1869, Mr. Townsend was united in marriage with Miss Anna M. Carroll, who was born near LaPorte, Ind., and who came to Iowa with her parents when she was seven years of age. While a student at the University of Iowa she met Mr. Townsend, the acquaintance resulting in their marriage. They became the parents of five children, two of whom died in early childhood, and Frances Maye passed away in 1901, aged twenty-eight years; she had graduated from the College of Music of the University of Southern California in 1894; Esther Belle, who is a graduate of the Los Angeles State Normal School, is the wife of Dr. A. T. Covert of Long Beach; Vinton Ray graduated from the University of California at Berkeley and from the medical department of the University of Southern California, as an M.D., married Miss Ada Campbell, the daughter of W. L. Campbell, and they reside at Los Cerritos.

Mr. Townsend was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and prominent in all its good works, officiating as a member of the board of trustees and superintendent of the Sunday school, and was a member of the building committee when the new church was erected at Long Beach. He was also a director of the Young Men's Christian Association and served as president of the Long Beach Hospital Association, of which he was one of the organizers. It can truly be said of Mr. Townsend that he was representative of the best in American citizenship, living up to a high standard in public and private life, and in his passing away on July 22, 1920, the community lost one of its most valued citizens, whose influence had ever been exerted for its moral uplift and betterment. Like her distinguished husband, Mrs. Townsend has always been prominent in the life of the city, particularly in the circles of the Methodist Episcopal Church and of the Ebell Club, and aiding in all other movements for the community's good.

MME. HELENA MODJESKA.—No complete and satisfactory history of Orange County ever can be written that does not record the life and labors of Mme. Helena Modjeska, the famous tragedienne, and her happy and fortunate relation to the California Southland, in which she passed so many dreamy and eventful days, and where at length, scarcely more than a decade ago, she closed her eyes forever to the scenes of an admiring world. She was born at Cracow, Poland, on October 12, 1840, the daughter of Michael Opid, a noted musical instructor there, whose home was the rendezvous for artists and musicians in the old capital, and very naturally aspired toward the stage; but it was only after she had married Gustav Modrzejewska—abbreviated later to Modjeska—that she was able, in 1861, to overcome family opposition and appear in an amateur performance in Austrian Poland. So great was her success that her husband organized a company to support her on a tour of Galicia, and within two or three years she had become, on her return to her birthplace, the leading lady at the local theater. All Poland soon sounded her praises; her fame extended to Germany, France and England; and even the younger Dumas paid her the high compliment to invite her to Paris to take the part of Marguerite Gautier in his famous "Dame aux Camelias," best known to the world through the acting of Sarah Bernhardt. She remained loyal to Poland and the Polish stage, however, and only ventured abroad after her first husband's death.

In September, 1868, she married a second time, choosing for her new companion Karol Bozenta Chlapowski, a gifted fellow-countryman, and a year later settled in the more brilliant Warsaw, where she appeared in the principal female parts of Shakespeare, Goethe, Schiller and Molière, as well as plays by Polish authors. Failing health, worry over the harassing, absurd Russian censorship, and other difficulties, induced her to leave the stage, and with her husband she came to the United States and California, hoping to found there a colony for Polish political refugees or other congenial spirits.

The coming Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia, engrossing in particular the curiosity of her son, then an embryo engineer and full of interest for science, was really the first incentive to Mme. Modjeska and her husband to come to America, as she tells so charmingly in her always readable "Memories," and the person who piled on torch after torch to the burning fagots was none other than her friend, Sienkiewicz, the author later of "Quo Vadis." Despite the reports of rattlesnakes, bears and the California jaguar, it was agreed by the company of enthusiasts who met evening after evening to look over maps, books and pictures, that one need not starve in the Golden State, for rabbits, hares and partridges were to be had for the mere shooting, and gold was to be dug almost anywhere; and in her intense longing for a change that would mean rest to tired nerves, Pani, or Mrs. Helena, as her friends called her, pictured herself under the blue skies of California, riding on horseback with a gun over her shoulder, or cooking out in the open, in the land of freedom, or bleaching linen at the brook like the maidens of Homer!

After a delightful visit in New York, when they saw and met some of the stage celebrities of the time, the party traveled south to Panama, and there crossed the Isthmus, "a two hours' enchantment," and then came north to San Francisco; and the very next day after their arrival at the Golden Gate they witnessed Edwin Booth act in a series of performances, including the roles of Shylock and Marc Antony. Once in the Southland, they made for Anaheim, then inhabited mostly by German colonists and Spaniards, and were welcomed by Sienkiewicz and others of the Polish company who had gone ahead to Anaheim Landing. After a life spent in the fine old ancestral homes and mansions of Poland, Mme. Modjeska tells us that the little house at Anaheim which had been rented for her seemed painfully small—a dining room, a so-called parlor, with a square piano and a sofa, two bedrooms, a front yard, which "looked like a poorly-kept small graveyard"; but there was one redeeming point, at least, and that was the magnificent view of the Sierra Madre Mountains to the north, and of the Santa Ana range to the east.

Space will not suffice to tell in detail the many novel, exhilarating and also discouraging experiences of this charming idealist and her dreamy, impractical, if also delightful associates, who so identified themselves with first one canyon or beach or other corner of Orange County that forever these places will be hallowed to all who are privileged to trace out and follow in their footprints. The reader may need only to be reminded again how, when it was evident that the voyageurs from over the seas could no longer live on sunshine and cigarettes, something had to be done, not merely to supply a supportable income in a raw and undeveloped country, but to satisfy the longings of the higher self, Mme. Modjeska, in the spring of 1877, went back to San Francisco on a visit, encouraged by overtures from theatrical managers whose interest she had long before enlisted, but had never made use of, and after scarcely less than four months' study of English, made her first appearance in the historic California Theater as Adrienne Lecouvreur. Her success was instant, and from the first evening of her performance she scored an acknowledged triumph as one of the leading American actresses. Thereafter she made numerous tours of the United States, and played in London and the other leading cities of the British provinces, and even returned to the stage in Poland, distinguishing herself in no less than twenty-five or thirty classical parts acknowledged to be sufficiently difficult to test her claims to have been a truly great actress.

Besides her home in Santiago Canyon, maintained for a while under conditions in strange contrast to what she had left behind in the Old World, and satisfying only to those in such search for the romantic that they drew largely upon their imagination and were blind to commonplace, everyday facts, Mme. Modjeska made her home at various places in Southern California, generally not far from where she first had settled, and in each place not only shared her comforts (as well as, no doubt, a few of the discomforts!) with some of the most gifted and even brilliant, as well as noble hearted of her compatriots, but entertained at various times many of the most famous men and women, particularly in the dramatic or musical world, who happened the way of the Pacific, or journeyed long distances to enjoy her company or partake of her unbounded hospitality, dispensed with rare humor and a full appreciation of the droll or the ridiculous. She counted the greatest minds and the largest hearted of Americans among her friends, and when such of these, as the poet Longfellow, could not visit her, their friendly, devoted or affectionate missives found their way over sea and land and into the forest or canyon recesses to where she, in periods of rest, loved to come again and again. The residence she finally erected was at Forest of Arden, in Santiago Canyon, Orange County, which she named for the scene in the celebrated Shakespearean play, As You Like It. It has long since been a Mecca for tourists to California who know of her only by name. It was roomy, dignified, elaborate and luxurious, both as to its ornate exterior and its well-appointed, richly furnished interior, especially its large and rich library; and there are still living those who may recall the breakfast parties presided over by this rare woman, held out in the open and further animated by her son, Ralph Modjeski, the eminent civil engineer of Chicago, and his interesting family. The last home of Mme. Modjeska was on Bay, now called Modjeska Island, in East Newport, to which she had removed a few months prior to her death, on April 8, 1909—a cosy, worthy seaside residence which she bequeathed to her grandson, Felix Bozenta Modjeska, who now occupies it with his family, and maintains it as nearly as possible as it was when she so gracefully moved about on the verandas and enjoyed the refreshing breeze.

SAMUEL KRAEMER.—Wonderful have been the changes witnessed by Samuel Kraemer since his boyish eyes first beheld the vast unsettled tracts of Southern California. It was in 1867, when he was ten years of age, that he arrived here with other members of the family, at the expiration of a long and tedious voyage from the East. Vast tracts were then untrodden by the foot of man, but were given over to countless herds of wild cattle and horses. Travel was almost wholly on horseback through pathless fields in which the wild mustard at times hid the animal and rider from view. Now his swift automobiles convey him over perfect roads and through a country densely populated with a contented, prosperous people. Then he aided in the cultivation of the ground with such rude implements as could be obtained; now his land is cultivated by workmen having the most modern machinery that money can buy. In those days he gazed aloft with no prophetic vision of the time, when under his supervision an aeroplane would be constructed, not only as a demonstration of the possibilities of science, but also for future usefulness and enjoyment. Financial institutions were not in vogue in those days, for currency was too scarce to render banks a necessity; nor could his vision point ahead to his present service as a director in the First National Bank of Anaheim and the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Fullerton, in which latter institution he also officiated as president for one and one-half years. He was also an organizer and is a director in the Placentia National Bank, is a director in the Placentia Mutual Orange Distributors Association and president of the Anaheim Walnut Growers Association.

Born in St. Clair County, Ill., July 9, 1857, Samuel Kraemer was a son of Daniel and Elenora (Schrag) Kraemer, natives, respectively, of St. Johannes, Germany, and Landauch, on the Rhine. They emigrated to the United States in early years and passed away in California at advanced ages. The family became pioneers of California in 1867. The journey was commenced at St. Louis, Mo., whence they traveled to New York, arriving in that city at the end of four days. A steamer was there boarded for Panama and after a tedious voyage of sixteen days they landed at the Isthmus. Three days were spent in unloading on the eastern side, crossing the Isthmus and loading up on the Pacific side, after which they sailed on a steamer bound for San Francisco. The voyage consumed fifteen days and the only stops made by the steamer were at Acapulco and Manzanillo, Mexico. The fact that the ship did not anchor at any port in Southern California caused extra expense and delay to the Kraemer family, who were forced to wait for twenty-one days in San Francisco before any vessel started for the southern part of the state. Eventually they landed at San Pedro, Los Angeles County, after a voyage of five days from San Francisco, and from San Pedro, proceeded to Anaheim. At that time Los Angeles County embraced all of what is now Orange County. The environment was uninviting, for Americans had not settled in sufficient numbers to embark in any improvements and wild stock roamed the ranges.

Immediately after his arrival, the elder Kraemer bought thirty-nine hundred acres of land (which was the smallest land tract that could be bought) in what is now known as the Placentia district. The land was originally owned by A. D. Ontiveras, a Castilian gentleman, a native of Spain, who received his grant from the Mexican government. In time Mr. Kraemer had fenced eighty acres of the tract, besides making other improvements. The entire country was open with the exception of twelve hundred acres at Anaheim, which was fenced, admission being through four gates on the four sides of the tract, and by means of this solid fence all wild cattle were excluded. Eight years later the fence law kept out cattle and brought settlers. From the first Samuel aided his father in the many difficult tasks connected with improving the wild tract and it was not possible for him to attend school regularly, but he was a pupil in the Yorba school for a time, and since then by reading and observation he has become a well informed man. Five hundred acres of the original estate is now owned by him, the larger part of the land being in grain, but in addition he has sixty-five acres in oranges and 130 acres in walnuts. Stock is raised for the needs of the ranch, but not for the general markets.

On September 30, 1886, Mr. Kraemer married Miss Angelina Yorba, a native of California and the daughter of Castilian parents now deceased, representing early settlers of the state, Prudencio and Dolores (Ontiveras) Yorba. Ten children were born of the union, of whom five sons and three daughters survive: Adela is Mrs. Walter Muckenthaler of Fullerton; Samuel P. married Miss Edna Wentz of Ohio, served in the U. S. Army in the World War and is an orange grower in Placentia; Elena Mauri of Oakland, is an orange grower at Placentia; Gilbert U. married Esther Arnold R., who served in the U. S. Naval Reserve, stationed in New Jersey, and married Munger of Santa Ana, and is a rancher on Kraemer Avenue; Angeline is the wife of Edward Backs and resides in Placentia; Laurance P. is attending Occidental College; Geraldine and Louis are attending the Union high school.

Caring little for politics or secret orders, Mr. Kraemer nevertheless finds much to occupy his time. The supervision of his large estate, the discharge of duties as bank director, the enjoyment of domestic and social pleasure, the recreation through travel and the development of irrigation and fruit interests keep him fully occupied. While serving as a director of the Anaheim Union Water Company he also for a time filled the office of vice-president. Even more than many horticulturists, he has realized the importance of a successful solution of the water problem and at all times he has been an active factor in the development of irrigation interests. The fact that the water supply is so abundant and so satisfactory is due not a little to his influence and timely actions. Other important local measures have had the benefit of his aid and cooperation and very justly he occupies a leading position among the pioneer citizens and horticulturists of the county. In company with William Crowther, A. S. Bradford, H. H. Hale and C. C. Chapman, Mr. Kraemer became one of the promoters of the new town of Placentia. They gave the right-of-way to the Santa Fe Railroad and Mr. Kraemer donated besides ten acres of land on which the depot and side tracks are situated. Work was begun in August, 1910, and four packing houses have in the meantime been erected, one of which Mr. Kraemer erected at his own expense. He is a shareholder and director in the Placentia Mutual Orange Association. They have just completed a large modern packing house at a cost of $150,000, one of the finest in California. His influence in Orange County is felt far and wide and his name is mentioned with honor and respect because of a well-regulated and well-spent life, contributing in no small manner to the well being and upbuilding of the county.

JOSE SANSINENA.—An early settler of the La Habra Valley in what is now the northern part of Orange County, who came to California in 1872 and from a humble beginning by perseverance and close application became one of the largest and most successful stockmen and landowners, is the late Jose Sansinena, who was born at Aldudes, Basses Pyrenees, France, in 1854, where he was reared and obtained his education in the local school. His parents were farmers and stock raisers, so from a lad Jose assisted on the farm and became adept in the care of stock.

From his countrymen who had returned from California he learned of the many opportunities that awaited young men of brain and brawn who were willing to work. So his desire was whetted until he started for the land of gold and sunshine on the Pacific Coast, arriving in 1872 a young man full of ambition and hope to make a fortune in the new world. Soon after his arrival he entered the employ of Mr. Bastanchury and his steady habits and watchful care of his employer's interest attracted Mr. Bastanchury, so that when the young man had saved enough money and showed a desire to engage in business Mr. Bastanchury took him into partnership and they continued together, meeting with success and became owners of large flocks. In those early days there was no market to speak of in Los Angeles so each year they drove bands of sheep to San Francisco where they were sold in the market, the price per head ranging from $1.50 to $2.00 with the wool. These trips usually consumed two and a half to three months' time.

The marriage of Mr. Sansinena and Miss Dolores Ordoqui was celebrated at the historical old Plaza Church, Los Angeles, in 1889, the ceremony being performed by Father Liebana. The bride was a native of Navarra, Spain, but reared in Los Angeles. She came with her parents, when a girl in 1872, and was educated in the Sisters Convent, Los Angeles. Soon after their marriage the partnership with Mr. Bastanchury was dissolved and Mr. Sansinena continued in the stock business and purchased 5,000 acres of the Stearns Rancho in the La Habra Valley and they took up their residence on the ranch, making the necessary improvements for their comfort and convenience, and here they made a specialty of raising sheep, ranging them on the broad acres of their ranch which was well adapted for the purpose, being well watered by numerous springs. His flocks increased until he had from 10,000 to 15,000 head, and when the railroad was completed from San Francisco to Los Angeles, as well as the Santa Fe into Southern California, he shipped both to the Northern as well as the Eastern markets. His keen perception and business ability was felt and he rose rapidly to a position of affluence and acquired an independent position financially and a competency for himself and family. However, he was not permitted to enjoy the fruits of his labors for he was called to the Great Beyond, May 1, 1895, mourned by his family and friends. He was buried in Calvary Cemetery, Los Angeles. He left a widow and four children as follows: Antoinette; Joseph, who served in the U. S. Navy in the World War and now ably assists his mother in the care of their large ranch; Magdalena and Marian. They all reside with their mother and having been reared in an atmosphere of culture and refinement the daughters ably assist her in gracefully presiding over the home. Mrs. Sansinena afterwards became Mrs. Ysidoro Eseverri and all make their residence at the old home.

Mr. Sansinena was a modest and unassuming man but of strict integrity and honesty of purpose which greatly endeared him to all with whom he came in contact. He was industrious and energetic and was never afraid of work nor to venture in this new country, where in his prime he entered the wilderness and claimed the virgin soil as his heritage. Thus it is to pioneers of his type that Orange County today owes much of its present development and greatness, for without their spirit of energy and optimism the present generation would not now be enjoying the well improved country with its paved roads and other public conveniences and essentials to give them the present day comforts and pleasures. Liberal and kind-hearted to a fault, Mr. Sansinena's example is well worthy of emulation.

JOSEPH WILLIAM JOHNSON.—Among the best-known ranchers and business men of both Yorba Linda and Placentia may well be listed J. W. Johnson, a leader in legitimate "boosting" for the locality, who lives on the Richfield Road near the Yorba Linda Boulevard. He was born in County Durham, England, near the famous cathedral and the old, historic town of that name, on June 22, 1863, the son of Manuel Johnson, a farmer and a landowner, whose chief crops were hay and grain. He had married Miss Annie Walker, a daughter of an old and well-established family that had sent, in her brothers, several representatives to Parliament.

From a boy, our subject had yearned for travel; and when only fourteen he crossed the ocean to New York City, and then came on to the coal regions, where he found employment. Since then he has crossed and recrossed the Atlantic seven times. Having enjoyed the benefits of a good common school education in England, the lad readily made his way in America, being apt at learning; and having become a mining expert, he was busy for a while in New Mexico, serving even as deputy sheriff at Albuquerque. In 1891, however, he decided to abandon mining, and coming on to California, he stopped for a while at Los Angeles, and then came on to Santa Ana, which was then but a small village.

After serving as game warden at the Bolsa Gun Club, he leased land on the Irvine Ranch, and has been pursuing agriculture there or elsewhere ever since. In 1899 he removed to Placentia and purchased five acres on the flats east of Richfield; and this land he improved and developed, making of it a very profitable grove of oranges. Meanwhile, he contracted for the making and grading of roads and the care of the water reservoirs for Yorba Linda, and altogether he spent fifteen years in the service of the Santa Fe Railroad, grading and making crossings, and also graded the streets for the town of Placentia when it was laid out. Of late years he has had full charge as superintendent of some ninety acres in Yorba Linda, and has set out much of this to lemons, using nursery stock developed on his own ranch. Having recently sold his five-acre ranch, he intends to locate on more open land and to improve a still larger area. This has not weakened Mr. Johnson's interest in Placentia and Yorba Linda in any respect, for he still has the utmost confidence in a brilliant future for both; and as both an American citizen of the one hundred per cent type, and a staunch Republican, he supported vigorously all the varied work of the recent war, and also all movements for the building up of the community. Mr. Johnson has one daughter, Mrs. Laura Speck, of Santa Barbara, and she is the mother of a daughter, Ethel Speck.

JOSEPH KEE.—For twenty years Joseph Kee of Buena Park has been identified with the general farming interests of Orange County, having located on his present ranch in 1900. At that time the land was in its primitive state and he, as well as many other ranchers, was obliged to put up with many inconveniences, and suffered the setbacks common in those days among the early settlers in a new territory. By hard work and sound business management Mr. Kee has overcome his earlier obstacles and today is counted as one of the successful and substantial ranchers in his section of the county.

Joseph Kee was born in McHenry County, Ill., on March 10, 1850, a son of James and Rachel (Morton) Kee. His father was a native of the Emerald Isle, while his mother was born in either New York or Illinois of Irish parents. The family of Mr. and Mrs. James Kee consisted of twelve children, six of whom are living.

Historic Record 3

In April, 1877, Joseph Kee moved to McPherson County, Kans., where he remained until 1887, when he migrated to Los Angeles County, Cal. He lived near San Gabriel for thirteen years, then settled on his present ranch of twenty acres, situated on Almond Street, Buena Park.

In March, 1878, Joseph Kee was united in marriage with Miss Jennie B. Mitchell, who was reared on the adjoining farm in Illinois where Mr. Kee was born, and of this happy union four children were born: Clarence, Elenora, wife of Robert Brown of Santa Ana; Ormiston, and Charlotte, wife of Willis Cornwell of Stanislaus County. Mrs. Kee is a native of Illinois and is of Scotch ancestry.

In addition to his general farming operations, Mr. Kee devotes considerable time to raising poultry, his flock of fowls numbering about 250. In politics he has supported the Republican candidates since he has voted, and he is highly esteemed in his community for his integrity of character and good citizenship. He was reared in the Episcopal Church.

MRS. DOLORES ESEVERRI.—A woman who has nobly done her part to build up and improve the northern part of Orange County and who has displayed wonderful native business acumen and optimism in her effort of transforming the raw land into beautiful orchards loaded with golden fruit, such a woman is Mrs. Dolores Eseverri, who is a native of far away Spain, born at Pamplona, Navarra, a country noted for the modesty and high moral character of its people and where the honor of the home is very sacred and guarded with the most zealous care.

Her parents were Juan and Antonia Ordoqui, also natives of Pamplona, where her father was a carpenter of known ability. When the news of the discovery of gold in California reached Navarra he immediately joined the rush to the new Eldorado and was one of the Argonauts, coming via the Isthmus of Panama to San Francisco in 1849. After several years he returned to his home in Spain; however, he was so well impressed with the opportunities in the land of sunshine and flowers on the Pacific Coast and the call of the West became so strong that he finally concluded to make it his home. So responding to the allurements, he brought his wife and two children, Manuel and Dolores, settling in Los Angeles County in 1872, where he became a well-to-do sheep raiser, and during his lifetime became the owner of large herds as well as a ranch now the present site of Palms, near Los Angeles. Later he purchased a residence in Los Angeles where he made his home until his death in 1909, his widow surviving him until 1911. The son Manuel is now a business man in Los Angeles.

Thus in this beautiful environment of sunny Southern California Dolores Ordoqui grew to womanhood receiving a liberal education in the Sisters Convent in Los Angeles. She was first married in her early womanhood, the ceremony being performed at the old Plaza Church at Los Angeles, when she was united with Jose Sansinena, who was a native of Aldudes, France, and had come to Los Angeles County in 1872 and had become a successful stockman. After their marriage they gradually enlarged their operations until their flocks became very large and they acquired by purchase 5,000 acres of the Stearns rancho, which at the time was all grazing land and being well watered by springs was well adapted to sheep raising, in which they specialized. Mr. Sansinena was most successful in his business, increasing his herds year by year until their flocks numbered about 15,000 head. He passed away in 1895 leaving his widow and four children, Antoinette, Joseph, Magdalena and Marian.

On March 25, 1901, Mrs. Sansinena was married a second time when Ysidoro Eseverri became her husband. He was likewise born in Navarra, Spain, the son of Pablo and Josefa Eseverri, the father being a prominent merchant in that locality. He received his education in his native land and when still a youth he came alone to California, where he engaged in sheep raising. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Eseverri continued ranching, gradually selling off their sheep and engaging in farming and horticulture. Mr. and Mrs. Eseverri are the parents of one daughter, Josephine. They have disposed of a considerable portion of the Sansinena ranch, which at one time was one of the largest in this part of the county. The whole acreage formerly lay in Los Angeles County, but when Orange County was organized its northern boundary line passed directly through the Sansinena ranch. The family have planted large orchards to Valencia and Navel oranges, lemons, walnuts and avocados now in bearing, while the balance of the ranch is devoted to raising hay. The place is under an excellent system of irrigation for, besides service from the La Habra Water Company, they have installed their own pumping plant, thus giving ample water for irrigating their orchard and crops. In 1917 a large and beautiful new residence of colonial style of architecture was erected, where Mrs. Eseverri resides with her husband and children, who are devoted to her and shower on her their affection and loving care, and in their liberal and unostentatious way they are all pleased to welcome their many friends and take great delight in dispensing the old-time Californian hospitality.

WILLIAM H. BURNHAM.—An experienced business man of the East who has distinguished himself as a good financier and has therefore been able, as a resident of California, to exert an important and helpful influence in controlling and directing movements in the development of the Golden State, is William H. Burnham, who was born at Ellington, Conn., in 1851. Both his father, John Burnham, and his grandfather, of the same name, were natives of Brattleboro, Vt., the family having been founded in Hartford, Conn., in 1636, by Thomas Burnham who came from England. John Burnham, the father of our subject, settled in Ellington and later was associated with Daniel Halladay, the windmill manufacturer at Coventry; and in 1856 he came to Chicago as sales agent for the Halladay Company. Under his able initiative, their western business rapidly increased, and they established a factory at Batavia, Kane County, Ill., on which account Daniel Halladay came out to Chicago, and had the concern incorporated. The enterprise was known as the U. S. Wind Engine and Pump Company, and Messrs. Halladay and Burnham were the principal owners. The Daniel Halladay referred to afterwards located in Santa Ana, where he was prominently connected with that city's growth and development. In time, John Burnham became president of the company, and he held that office for many years; and when he retired, to spend his last days at Orange, where he eventually died, he was succeeded as president by his son, our subject. Mrs. Burnham was Miss Delia A. Damon before her marriage, and she was a native of Lunenburg, Worcester County, Mass., and the daughter of the Rev. David Damon, a prominent Unitarian minister of English descent, who for many years preached at West Cambridge, now Arlington. She also died at Orange, the mother of two children, of whom William H. alone grew to maturity.

He attended the public schools of Batavia, Ill., and later studied at Lombard University, reluctantly abandoning his courses in the sophomore year when, on account of failing health, he had to hie away to Florida. On his return, in the spring of 1872, he entered the employ of the United States Wind Engine Company, beginning at the bottom in the paint shop and advancing as draftsman, shipping clerk, and traveling salesman. In the latter capacity he visited almost every section of the United States, Canada and even Mexico; and having served the company with signal ability as general sales agent, he became superintendent and finally president, a position of honor and responsibility he filled for several years.

Undoubtedly Mr. Burnham inherited much ability for executive management, for especially during his presidency the business of the company was greatly increased, and they came to enjoy a large and ever-expanding trade with both the United States and foreign countries, a volume of work and prosperity of direct personal interest for father and son held a controlling interest in the concern. Finally, the close application and strain again told too much upon him, and, desiring to conserve his health, he concluded to give up the management. The Burnhams, therefore, in 1892 sold their controlling interest, but retained a tenth of the stock and the business of making windmills, pump fixtures, tanks, railroad water stations, steel towers for tanks, water cranes and standpipes goes on under the old firm name. They made the steel towers used by the Edison Company of Southern California, and they turned out three differing patterns of mills—the United States, the Gem and the Halladay Standard.

In the spring of 1893, Messrs. John and William H. Burnham came west to California; and taking a fancy to Orange, they purchased property there and that summer built a residence. In October, they moved to the Golden State "for good," and at once began to improve the place, grubbing out the old trees and setting out oranges and lemons. About seventeen other families also came here from Batavia, Ill., and accordingly they named the street Batavia, as a result of which the property of the Burnhams was situated on the corner of Batavia and La Veta.

From the time when he was once well established here, Mr. Burnham has taken a prominent part in local affairs. He became interested in the old Commercial Bank in Santa Ana, and was a director, and later he was also interested in the Bank of Orange, when it was principally owned by the Commercial Bank of Santa Ana, and was a director there as early as 1898. When the Bank of Orange was taken over by Orange people, he continued to be a director, and later he was made president. He continued in that enviable office when it was made the National Bank of Orange; and after many years of service as a president and a director, he resigned first from one office and then from the other, but he is still interested in the bank as a stockholder. He was also one of the organizers of the Orange Savings Bank, in which he is still interested. Mr. Burnham was also one of the organizers of and a director in the Santiago Orange Growers Association, withdrawing after many years when he sold his ranch in 1916 and moved to Los Angeles, where he and his family now reside at 401 South Kingsley Drive. He was one of the organizers and director of the H. R. Boynton Company, afterwards changed to the Pacific Pipe and Supply Company, and succeeded Mr.

J. J. Duck

Boynton as president, a position he filled for some time, until he resigned to accept the vice-presidency, as it required less of his time. For the past ten years he has been a director of the Title Insurance and Trust Company of Los Angeles.

At Geneva, Ill., on December 9, 1880, Mr. Burnham was married to Miss Katharine P. French, a native of St. Charles, Kane County, Ill., and the daughter of Rolla and Mary C. (Cook) French, born, respectively, in Vermont and Erie County, N. Y.; they were joined in matrimony at St. Charles, after which Mr. French became a stock broker in Chicago. When he died, he was an officer of the Miner Bank of St. Charles. Mrs. Burnham's maternal grandfather, Franklin Cook, emigrated with his family, including herself and her mother, to Denver in 1861, crossing the great plains with ox-teams, and in 1862 he died at Guy House, Colo. Mrs. French with her daughter, Katharine, returned to Illinois in 1868 and located in Chicago on account of the educational advantages offered there for her daughter, making the trip from Denver to Cheyenne by the Overland stage, and then by rail to the city on the lakes; and in Chicago, Mrs. Burnham enjoyed the best educational advantages in the West. The fortunate union of Mr. and Mrs. Burnham has been blessed by three children, all of whom have reflected the highest credit upon the family name. Ralph F., the eldest, and William H., Jr., the youngest, are both graduates of the Throop Polytechnic Institute at Pasadena, and together they have developed a citrus ranch of 140 acres three miles east of Riverside, which they have named La Colina. Mary, the only daughter, a graduate of the Marlborough School in Los Angeles, married Henry Fay Grant, who died at Franklin, Pa., and now she assists her mother to preside over the Burnham home.

Mr. Burnham was one of the original trustees of the Orange Union high school, having been prominent in the energetic work required to bring it into existence; and he was also one of the original members of the Orange County Highway Commission and did yeoman service with Charles C. Chapman and M. M. Crookshank. In national political affairs Mr. Burnham is a Republican; but he is too broad-minded to permit narrow partisanship to interfere with his hearty support of every good candidate and every excellent measure likely to help upbuild the community in which he lives and prospers.

JOSEPH G. QUICK.—A successful real estate broker, who has done much to bring about sound and stable conditions in California realty, is Joseph G. Quick, a native of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., where he was born on April 1, 1856. His father was Andrew Jackson Quick, a farmer and wheelwright, who married Elizabeth Gardiner. Andrew J. Quick was born in Penn Yan, N. Y., in 1831, of an old family of that state. He came to Illinois in about 1852, where he ran a carriage and wagon factory and also engaged in farming. Joseph G. Quick's maternal grandfather, Joseph H. Gardiner, came from Penn Yan, N. Y., to Fulton County, Ill., about 1836, when his daughter Elizabeth was a little girl. The parents both passed away in Illinois. They had nine children, among whom Joseph was the eldest.

Joseph attended the grammar and high school of his district, and later took a course at the business college in Jacksonville, Ill., then for a while he farmed and later manufactured brick and tile at Cuba, Ill. In both of these fields he succeeded, until his health broke down and he was advised to seek a milder climate. In June, 1887, he came to California and Santa Ana and in the latter place established himself in the real estate business and is today the oldest dealer in town. He was successful from the first, and having acquired local experience and extended widely his circle of friends, he did a general brokerage business. He made a specialty of handling estates, having served as state appraiser of Orange County for many years and is well qualified to advise people who come here and wish to invest in property or otherwise set their affairs in order. He was one of the organizers and secretary of the Santa Ana and Fresno Land Company; this company owns nine sections of land about fifteen miles southwest of Fresno, which is devoted to general farming. Mr. Quick has seen Santa Ana develop from a small village to a city of its present size, and he has been privileged to help shape the destiny of the town. He has served as a city trustee, and it was during his incumbency that the city hall was built. As a man of business affairs Mr. Quick's worth was recognized in his election to be a director of the California National Bank, in the organization of which he was a charter member. Influential in the councils of the Republican party, Mr. Quick has always attended to his local duties in the most nonpartisan manner.

At Cuba, Fulton County, Ill., on March 6, 1879, Mr. Quick was married to Martha Grigsby, daughter of William and Dorcas (Collins) Grigsby, well-known residents of the Prairie State. William Grigsby served in the Union Army during the Civil War and was killed at the battle of Missionary Ridge. Mrs. Quick was educated in Fulton County, Ill., and for some years was engaged in educational work, teaching in her home district about six years. Both Mr. and Mrs. Quick are home-folks and take pride in their beautiful residence at 1608 East Fourth Street. They are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Santa Ana and have actively participated in its up-building and benevolences. Mr. Quick was a member of its board of trustees for many years and is now president of the board, and during the building of the church and later during its remodeling he was member and treasurer of the building committee. Both are musical and Mr. Quick was leader of the Methodist choir for twenty years until about ten years ago when he resigned from the position. Always intensely interested in raising the standard of education as well as society and its morals, they have made their influence felt and are much loved and highly esteemed for the part they have taken in the community's welfare.

REV. JACOB KOGLER.—A man of God who has had much to do with the development of education in Orange County on a broad and lasting basis is the Rev. Jacob Kogler, now enjoying a well-earned retirement. He came to Orange in the early eighties, and has been connected with important town and county interests ever since. He was born near Stuttgart, Wuerttemberg, Germany, on January 6, 1847, the son of Michael Kogler, a worthy carpenter and builder, and Caroline Kogler, his devoted wife. They were conscientious Lutherans, and they both died where they had lived.

The lad received the customary elementary training given to the German youth, and then entered the high school at Ludwigsburg, and later on a preparatory institute at Steenden, Nassau, where he was prepared for the ministry. As early as 1870, he crossed the ocean to America and entered the Concordia Seminary at St. Louis, from which he was graduated in 1874. He was ordained at Minneapolis as a minister of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, and soon afterward accepted a call as pastor of St. John's Lutheran Church, whose congregation he served for four years. Then he removed to Belle Plaine, Minn., where he was pastor until 1881.

In that year he came to Orange, Cal., where he organized St. John's Lutheran Church, which was started with a membership of six families; also started St. John's parochial school, for which a lot on the corner of South Olive and Almond streets was purchased. To that site an old building was moved, and in 1882 the nucleus of the congregation was formed. Both that and the school grew, and the building was enlarged, so that it had an area of 24x48 feet, used for both school and worship purposes. The Rev. Kogler was pastor from the start, and he also taught the school until a teacher could be supported; and now the school maintains four teachers. In 1893 the church edifice at the corner of Almond and South Olive streets was built, and in 1913 the congregation built the imposing new stone structure at a cost of $50,000, including the pipe organ.

The Rev. Kogler continued active as pastor until 1917, when he resigned and retired. He had helped found and was an active member of the California and Nevada Synod, of which he is an ex-president, and he organized the Evangelical Lutheran Church in Anaheim, and was pastor there when the church was built. After a while, the church became strong enough to call and support its own pastor. He also started the Trinity Lutheran Congregation in Santa Ana.

Rev. Mr. Kogler was married at Minneapolis to Miss Dora Schultz, a native of that city, and a charming woman most suitable as his life companion and real helpmate. Eleven children blessed their marriage, nine of whom are still living. They are Paul, Henry, William, Edwin, Walter, Dora, Alma, Lydia, Clara, and they all reside in Orange County; there are also twelve grandchildren. Patriotic and devoted to the institutions of the country in which they have lived, labored and prospered, the Rev. and Mrs. Kogler may look back upon fields of religious and civic endeavor well tilled, and upon harvests of which no one need be ashamed. They have always been deeply interested in all that pertains to the permanent welfare of Orange and Orange County, and have lived long enough to see veritable miracles wrought in this most favored section of the Golden State.

ANGUS JAMES CROOKSHANK.—In every community that has shown a gradual growth and development of its varied industrial, agricultural and horticultural interests, the most active factor in that growth is the financial backing behind every movement which has as its aim the permanent building up and the stabilizing of commerce. The bank is the institution to look to for capital, and the banker has to be an extra human being with broad ideas to so safeguard the finances in his care that a minimum of loss will be a result. In Santa Ana the financial institutions are of the soundest and those men at the helm have shown their true worth in so looking after the loans and investments of their banks as to bring the greatest good to the greatest number of people. The First National Bank was established in 1886 by Miles M. Crookshank, an experienced banker, whose career as a financier began in

A. H. Kleutz

Iowa, and it was his guiding hand through a long term of years that firmly established the institution in the community. He had the co-operation of his sons, C. S. and A. J., and today, Angus James Crookshank, as president of the bank, has succeeded to the position long held by his sire.

Angus J. Crookshank was born in Central City, Iowa, on June 1, 1865, the son of Miles M. and Margaret A. (McLeod) Crookshank, both born in Nova Scotia, of sturdy Scotch ancestry. After his school days were over A. J. began his active career in his father's bank at Gladbrook, Iowa, and in that institution he remained until the family came to California in July, 1886, and settled in Santa Ana. After the First National Bank was organized he has held a position in the bank, with but a short time that he was out of it on account of his health, up to the present time. His father died on January 15, 1916, at which time A. J. succeeded to that most important position. Besides he is a director in the Farmers and Merchants Savings Bank, the department organized as a savings bank from the original institution, and with these varied cares he is recognized as among the leading financiers in Orange County. Other business interests claim some of his attention, but it is as a banker that he is best known. In fact, there have been but few progressive movements put forward in this county that have not had his assistance and advice. He is loyal to the county of his adoption and has won friends in every part of Orange County.

Mr. Crookshank was united in marriage at San Jose, Cal., on January 5, 1898, with Miss Josephine M. White, a native daughter, born in Nevada County, the daughter of James M. White, an early settler of the state and for years an official in Nevada County. This union has been blessed by the birth of the following children: Miles J., Constance V., Josephine N., and Marion F., all natives of the Golden State. Mr. Crookshank is an active member of the Congregational Church of Santa Ana, having been for years an officer in the church. He is a stanch Republican in national affairs, but in local matters he places the man or measure before party. He has never failed to do his part as a public-spirited citizen and many are the projects that he has fostered that have helped to make Orange County one of the best-known localities in California.

FRANK L. KLENTZ.—Among the ablest of all the sugar manufacturers of the United States, F. L. Klentz, superintendent of the Santa Ana Sugar Company's plant at Dyer, is also one of the best known men in his line. He is also known to his many friends and admirers as a benevolent man with generous impulses and broad, liberal ideas. Born at Norfolk, Nebr., February 6, 1875, Frank L. attended the common schools of his locality and when sixteen years old entered the employ of the Oxnard Sugar Company at Norfolk, and remained with that concern for eight years, mastering the technical details of the business. In 1898 he went to Kalamazoo, Mich., and for two years was with the Kalamazoo Sugar Company, and for the two years following was in the employ of the sugar company located in Rochester, that state. A couple of years were spent with the Detroit Sugar Company, then for one year he was with the Menominee River Sugar Company, at Menominee; and still later spent three years identified with the Chippewa Sugar Company at Chippewa Falls, Wis. At Charlevoix, Mich., he superintended the erection of a large sugar mill for the West Michigan Sugar Company, and operated it for three years. In 1909 Mr. Klentz came to California and was with the Southern California Sugar Company, at Santa Ana two years.

The eventful period in his eventful career came to him in 1911, when the Santa Ana Cooperative Sugar Company was organized with Mr. Klentz as superintendent, to procure for the company one of the most up-to-date sugar mills that could be brought into being here in Orange County. This was accomplished by Mr. Klentz writing his own specifications for the mill and letting the contract to the Dyer Company of Cleveland, Ohio, to erect the mill as specified. This mill has proven to be the most economical mill in the United States from the point of cost of production. Not only did he superintend the building of the large plant but he has superintended the manufacture of the sugar there ever since.

The Santa Ana Sugar Company was started as a cooperative concern by the Crookshanks, Mr. Irvine and other Santa Ana capitalists, who financed it until it was purchased by the Holly Company, and it has done much to firmly establish one of the most important industries in the county. The factory at Dyer is 66x266 feet in dimension, is situated two miles southeast of Santa Ana, and is said to be the most sanitary, the best equipped and most productive of high grade sugar from the beet, made in the most economical way of any of the great factories in California. During the busy season as many as 425 men are employed and the factory easily handles 1,000 tons daily, or 1,200 tons if pushed to extra exertion; 80 to 100 tons of lime rock is used daily for refining the sugar; and this is produced by burning the rock in its own kilns on the premises. In 1920, to enhance the efficiency of the mill, a new Steffens House.

costing $300,000 was erected and equipped with the most modern of machinery known to science for the manufacture of beet sugar. The manager is E. W. Smiley; the master mechanic is F. J. Wagner; the field superintendent is William Gearhart and the superintendent is Mr. Klentz.

The Holly Sugar Corporation of Denver is a gigantic concern and besides owning the Southern California Sugar Company at Delhi, the Holly Sugar Company, at Huntington Beach; and the Santa Ana Sugar Company at Dyer, owns and controls many other factories in other counties in this state as well as other parts of the United States. The first mill of this company was started in Colorado. C. A. Johnson is the western manager, and has his headquarters at Huntington Beach, as has G. J. Daley, the general superintendent.

As a rough estimate it is safe to say that Orange County will produce $15,000,000 of sugar beets and $22,000,000 of manufactured sugar in 1920, considering the present inflated prices; this is interesting as compared with the output of the Santa Ana (Co-operative) Sugar Company's plant in 1912, when 226 independent ranchers grew 9,061 acres of beets, and there was an output of 600 tons daily capacity of the plant.

Frank L. Klentz was married in Chicago to Miss Lucy C. Breunig, of Humphrey, Nebr., and one son has blessed their union, Lawrence B. He is in the aviation service of the United States and is stationed at Riverside, Cal. The family home is at 806 South Birch Street, and is the center of a genuine, unostentatious hospitality.

JOHN M. BUSH, JR.—A thoroughly enterprising and successful rancher worthily representing a very thorough-going pioneer who stood for great things in early days, is John M. Bush, Jr., the youngest of ten children of John M. Bush, who was born in Kentucky, April 10, 1829, and who removed with his parents to Clay County, Mo., when he was twelve years of age. At the outbreak of the excitement concerning the discovery of gold in California, young Bush, on the day he was of age, set out across the wide continent, crossing the plain in an ox-team train, and in his new venture he succeeded well enough to prefer to remain where he was, rather than to return East. In 1851 he was married in Northern California to Sarah A. Watson, of Independence, Mo., where she was born in 1836. In about 1869 he came to what is now Orange County and bought land in Peralta district with his partner, Jonathan Watson, accumulating a large tract of land, part of it now known as the Bixby ranch. He sold off most of it but retained 150 acres which he highly improved and is now divided between his children. He was for a while a walnut rancher on the Santa Ana Canyon Boulevard, about two and a half miles northeast of Olive. He died on February 8, 1913. Mrs. Bush, his faithful companion for so many years, passed away on the home place, March 26, 1920, in the eighty-fourth year of her age. At her demise, the Santa Ana Register published the following obituary:

"Mrs. Sarah Ann Bush, pioneer, died at her home at Olive, where she had lived since 1869. In going, this remarkable woman leaves 105 descendants—ten children, fifty-five grandchildren, forty great-grandchildren. Her husband, John M. Bush, died seven years ago. Of their fourteen children, ten are living and nine were present at the bedside of their mother when death came. One, Taylor Bush, for many years zanjero for the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company alone was absent, being in the East on a visit. Everyone of Mrs. Bush's ten children are married. Each has a family, but none of them has equalled in numbers the family of their dear mother. One has nine, another eight, two have seven each, one has six, another five, two have four each, another three, while Taylor has two. Some of Mrs. Bush's children have grandchildren. Mrs. Bush came across the plains with her parents when she was a girl of twelve. Her father ran a hotel and did a freighting business at Dry Creek, near Marysville, during gold excitement days. It was in 1869 that she and her husband, John M. Bush, moved to Olive with her brother, Jonathan Watson, the well known pioneer sheepman, now an orchardist at Olive. The ten children left by Mrs. Bush are: Mrs. P. J. Ralls, Charles T. and Jonathan Bush, Mrs. L. J. Stone and Mrs. Lillie Holloway, all of Kern County; Mrs. Elizabeth Borden, of San Bernardino; J. M. and J. Taylor Bush, and Mrs. Phoebe Burbank, all of Olive; and Mrs. S. C. Howard, of Long Beach."

John M. Bush, Jr., was born, a native son—of which fact he is naturally proud—on the home ranch above Olive, on December 18, 1880, and was educated in the public schools of Olive, in which community he also grew up. In 1903 he was married to Miss Amelia Lemke, the daughter of the late Chris and Julia Lemke of Olive, originally of German descent. She first came to America in 1890, and was fortunate in settling in the beginning in Orange County. They are the parents of three children: Victor M., Terry N. and Mildred. Both as an agriculturist and a horticulturist, Mr. Bush has attained an enviable position among Orange County farmers, and his thirty acres of walnuts and Valencia oranges, which he set out himself, might well be the pride of anyone ambitious of developing a ranch to a high state of productivity. He still cares for the old home ranch which is devoted to walnuts and has the oldest walnut trees in the county. He is a member and director of Mutual Orange Distributors Association at Olive, and for several years served as a trustee of Olive school district. Always a public-spirited citizen, Mr. Bush and his good wife respond in particular to any movement likely to advance permanently the best interests of the town and the county in which they live and prosper.

GERALD W. SANDILANDS.—A well-trained American of Scotch parentage who has joined in helping to develop the resources of the state, and who, as manager and secretary of a live organization has aided in particular in advancing the citrus interests of Orange County, is Gerald W. Sandilands, a native of London, where he was born on April 28, 1874. He is the son of George M. Sandilands, who was in the government service at Singapore, India, and there served as a member of the local legislature; he had married Miss Jane F. C. Gordon, by whom he had nine children. Five of these are living; and among the family, Gerald was the second youngest.

Having been prepared at both public and private schools in England, Mr. Sandilands then attended the famous College of London, after which, at the age of eighteen, he came out to the United States. He had a brother at Anaheim, and this circumstance led to his coming here and to buying a ranch at Placentia. For four years he raised oranges, and then he embarked in buying oranges at Riverside, and soon came to operate the largest packing house in that city. His brother handled the Riverside end of the business, and Mr. Sandilands for three years represented the enterprise in New York.

Next Mr. Sandilands went to Porto Rico and Jamaica, and handled oranges there for three years, becoming thoroughly familiar with that market. After that he came back to California, while his brother went to Montreal, and for five years he managed the independent shippers. In 1909 he took the management of the Anaheim Citrus Fruit Association, which he so well organized that he built it up to be the largest association, in membership and acreage, in California. The original organization became so large that it was necessary to organize another association, which was done in July, 1918, when the Orange and Lemon Association came into being in order to properly handle and market the fruit. The membership of the new association is over 150 and the acreage represented is more than 2,400. During the season it takes 200 persons to handle the output, which averages each year 1,000 carloads of fruit. Besides his connection with the marketing of citrus fruits, Mr. Sandilands is actively engaged in growing oranges, having developed one grove himself. He has thirty-five acres of oranges in his two groves and is the second largest producer in the association. His success has been made possible because he is familiar with every branch of the business he has followed for the past twenty-eight years, from preparing the soil to selling the product, a recognized authority on all subjects connected with each department.

On November 2, 1898, Mr. Sandilands was married to Miss Rose B. Robison, and their fortunate union has been blessed with the birth of one son, Donald W. Mr. Sandilands is a Mason, but so full of the fraternal spirit that he is capable at all times of demonstrating his public-spiritedness, and his willingness to cooperate with others for the highest standard of good citizenship.

THOMAS E. DOZIER.—Two highly-esteemed pioneers of Orange County, who represent distinguished families of North Carolina, among the flower of Southern chivalry and worth, are Mr. and Mrs. Thomas E. Dozier, who reside in their elegant and hospitable home at 532 East Chapman Avenue, Orange. Mr. Dozier was born in Booneville, Yadkin County, on December 9, 1849, and lived in North Carolina during the Civil War. When he was nineteen, however, he struck out into the world, leaving the ancestral home for Missouri, where he already had a brother, who was doing well. The head of the family was Dr. Nathan Bright Dozier, who for thirty-five years practiced medicine at Booneville; he had been married in Yadkin County, the same state, to Miss Olive C. Vestal, so that both father and mother were born, married and died in North Carolina. They had fourteen children, and among them Thomas was the fifth in the order of birth. Grandfather Dozier, who became a substantial planter, migrated from Old England, and in doing so brought with him, for his posterity, some of the best blood inheritable.

Our subject arrived in Missouri in the fall of 1870 and at once hired out to work on a farm in Platt County. After a year, he went on to Boone County, Ark., and thence went up to Hardin County, Iowa, where he was married to Miss Nancy C. Reese, on February 12, 1873. She had been born in the same county in North Carolina, on July 29, 1851, the daughter of Martin and Sarah Ann (Woodruff) Reese, and had attended the same school where Mr. Dozier studied. After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Dozier farmed in Hardin County, Iowa, for thirteen years, and thence they moved to Sumner County, Kans., where they remained for a couple of years. And from Kansas they came to California during the great boom in 1887.

Settling in Whittier with his wife, Mr. Dozier broke the first ground for the first five-acre orchard ever planted in Whittier. It was owned by Strowbridge and Wiggins—Frank Wiggins, who was then, as now, a leading spirit, and is now the secretary of the Chamber of Commerce of Los Angeles. After a year and a half, the Doziers moved over to the Villa Park District, then Los Angeles County and there bought twelve acres of land; and for a generation, or twenty-one years, they continued to reside in and work for the development of Villa Park. For the past eleven years they have lived in the city of Orange. They helped start the McPherson Heights Orange Growers Association, and worked hard for good roads and prohibition, as well as city sewers and other needed and not always easily-obtained improvements. They joined the Friends Church at El Modena, and also the Orange County Farmers Mutual Insurance Company. He was much interested in the formation of the new county of Orange, and was on the election board when it was voted.

Four children have been granted this worthy couple who have always endeavored, as in matters of popular education, to advance the interests of childhood generally. The eldest, Melvin Bright, died in Iowa when he was eighteen months old; Ray Sylvester is a walnut grower at Walnut Center, near Puente; Martin Edward is manager of the Orange packing house at Garden Grove; and Ernest Leland is an orange grower and resides on South Tustin Street, Orange. Orange County has prospered through just such pioneers as Mr. and Mrs. Dozier, who may well be regarded as having helped to lay the cornerstone of the new republic along the Pacific. At present Mr. Dozier is devoting himself to real estate, with an office at his residence; and his known experience, good judgment and honesty easily make him a desirable agent for those who wish to invest securely and for the future.

MRS. SARAH AMANDA WATSON.—The romantically successful career of a long-honored California pioneer is recalled in the interesting family history of Mrs. Sarah Amanda Watson, widow of the late David Watson, an early sheepman and citrus grower, and for years one of the leading merchants of Olive. He was born in Missouri on November 29, 1846, a son of Henry and Tilda Watson, who were married in Missouri and came to California with their family in 1849, when David was only three years old. Of English, historic ancestry, Henry Watson was born in Virginia in 1812, and in his younger years had settled in Missouri with his wife, whose family name was Cox. The call of California, however, due to the discovery of gold, so affected them that they abandoned their comfortable Jackson County home and in company with thousands of other emigrants, hurried across the great plains. They tarried for a while where they first landed, in Sacramento, and then went to Dry Creek, near Marysville, where Mr. Watson had a hotel, at the same time that he engaged extensively in freighting. After a while, he sold out his interests there, and lived successively at San Jose, Watsonville, and Visalia, and he was also interested in the sheep business, in the San Joaquin Valley. For a while, too, he ran a grist mill. In 1869 he came to what is now Olive and became the largest landowner here, buying a part of the Rancho Santa Ana de Santiago, the property of the Peraltas.

David Watson also became a large landowner. His first marriage made him the devoted husband of Mary Ann Field, who died in 1874, leaving him three children: Louis, who is at home with Mrs. Watson; Nealy, the rancher, who is married and lives near Olive; and his twin sister, Minnie, now the wife of Chris Loptien, who resides at Delano. Mr. Watson was married a second time in Santa Ana, in 1875, to Miss Sarah Amanda Stewart, a native of Chattanooga, Tenn., who was taken by her parents to Arkansas when she was two years old, and there lived until her fourteenth year. Then she went to Texas, and there grew to young womanhood, being nineteen years old when she came to what is now Olive, then called the Bull Well Point. There was then nothing at Orange, and nothing worth while at Santa Ana. After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Watson settled on their ranch at Olive, and Mrs. Watson brought up her three stepchildren.

As has been said, in early days, David Watson was a sheepman; and keeping thousands of sheep, he had a full complement of herders, cooks and other employes. When he disposed of his sheep, he bought a grocery store, which he managed for twenty years. He also became the owner of a grain farm of 300 acres. When he died, he owned the twenty-four-acre ranch at Olive, and also 160 acres near Newhall, Los Angeles County. On this ranch of twenty-four acres, Mr. Watson died on October 17, 1919, after an illness of about four years. He was a member of the Christian Church at Orange, and was interred in the new cemetery south of town.

*Mr. & Mrs. Samuel Armor
As Pioneers of Orange Cal.*

Mrs. Watson, who also owns a ranch of eight acres near Olive, is a daughter of John and Eliza (Wood) Stewart, both of whom were natives of and married in Georgia. Her father was a school teacher, and died when she was a baby, followed to the grave soon after by her mother. They left four children. She was brought up by her grandmother, Agnes Wood of Georgia, who passed away when our subject was twelve years of age. Sarah Stewart then went to live with her oldest sister, who was married and resided in Texas; and from the Lone Star State, she came with her brother, Robert Stewart, now the rancher at Stockton, to Southern California, in June, 1869. Mrs. Watson, like her husband, is also a member of the Christian Church. In many ways, her lines have since fallen in pleasant places; and today Mrs. Watson enjoys the esteem and good will of a large number of admiring friends.

MR. AND MRS. SAMUEL ARMOR.—A native of the state of New York, Samuel Armor was born near Moriah, Essex County, March 20, 1843. He remained with his father's family until he was eighteen, working on the farm in summer and going to school in the winter, wherever the family might be. In the fall of 1854 the family moved to Le Claire, Iowa, where they remained about eighteen months. From there the Armors went to Sheffield, Ill., to stay another eighteen months. They then went to Lucas County, Iowa, where they remained until the family gradually broke up during the early years of the Civil War.

The subject of this sketch left home about the year 1861 and went to Illinois, where he found farm work south of Galva in the summer, going to school each winter. In 1863 he went with half a dozen young men to St. Louis to join the army; but the other young men backed out, so all returned home. He then entered the C class of the Kewanee (Ill.) high school and continued with that class until the spring of 1865, when he enlisted with classmates and others in the Ninth Illinois Cavalry to fill in the ranks that were decimated at the battle of Nashville. In September of that year he was discharged from the service by reason of the close of the war.

After teaching a small school a year, to partially recover his health, Mr. Armor took up his studies again, this time in Knox Academy and College at Galesburg, Ill., with the class of 1871. In the middle of the Freshman year he changed over to Oberlin College in Ohio, where he continued through the classical course and graduated with his class. All these years of study he paid his way by working at whatever he could find to do, teaching one term of school in the winter each year.

About two months after graduation Mr. Armor married Miss Alice L. Taylor, of Claridon, Ohio, a classmate at Oberlin. Having obtained employment of the United States Government as principal and matron of the manual labor boarding school on the Indian reservation at White Earth, Minn., the young couple left for their new field a few weeks after their marriage. They organized and conducted this school with marked success for two years, until the Indian agent was changed, when they resigned their positions and went into a similar school on the Sisseton and Wahpeton reservation in Dakota. Here they remained only one year, because of the failure of Mr. Armor's health, which necessitated their coming to California.

The first winter in this state they spent in Los Angeles compiling a directory of that city; but, Mrs. Armor having obtained a position in the Orange schools, the couple moved to West Orange April 25, 1875. Previous to leaving Los Angeles, Mr. Armor had taken up carpenter work, with which he was familiar, for the sake of the exercise in the open air; this he continued to follow for several years in Los Angeles and Riverside counties. Meantime, he improved a thirteen-acre ranch on North Main street; but, having to hire so much of the work done, he sold the place and moved into Orange in the year 1881. About the same time he quit carpenter work and went to teaching again. After three years and a half in the Orange schools he resigned his place, on account of the nervous strain, and finished the year clerking for W. B. Forsythe. About August, 1885, Mr. Armor started a book and stationery store on the corner where the Ainsworth block now stands, and later a stock of shoes was put in on the other side of the room. Probably no store in Orange ever did as much business on so small a capital as this store did during the first five years of its existence. From early morning till late at night two persons, and sometimes three, were busy waiting on customers. The next ten years, from 1890 to 1900, the business gradually fell off to practically nothing, for reasons that will appear in the succeeding paragraphs.

When the county of Orange was formed in 1889, Mr. Armor was persuaded to accept the office of supervisor in his district; this office he held for nearly ten years, being elected three times. In 1892 he was appointed to fill the vacancy on the board of directors of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, caused by the resignation of William Blasdale. He continued in this position nearly thirteen years, ten of which he served as president of the company. In 1900 he was elected a member of the board of trustees of the city of Orange, which position he held for eight years, being president of the board for two years. In each and every one of these offices he was an active worker, personally examining everything that came before the board and standing firmly against whatever was prejudicial to the interests of the whole people.

As already intimated, the business of the store commenced to dwindle almost as soon as Mr. Armor began to hold office. This was not due to any neglect of the store, for he always kept the best of clerks and gave much of his own time to managing the business; but it was due to antagonisms created by his sturdy defense of the public interests while he was in office. It is not necessary to give examples of such antagonisms or to explain the deterioration and depletion of the stock; suffice it to say that the store was voluntarily closed in 1900 by its owner with no loss to any one, except himself.

But even this loss had its compensations, for, with the sacrifice of his business, Mr. Armor had more time to assist his wife with her newspaper, and thereby use it in defense of his public work, the success of which was more important to him than any personal gain would be. Hence, he wasted no time in vain regrets and would not have changed any of his acts in the past, if he could. In fact, the logic of events since has vindicated the wisdom and value of his pioneer work for the county, the city, the water company, the schools, the churches, and good government generally.

At the present time Mr. Armor is serving his second term as justice of the peace of Orange township. Since the community is orderly and the merchants, doing business on a cash basis, have few collections to make, the justice is not overburdened with official business; nevertheless, any one seeking his aid or counsel generally finds him at the office in office hours. None of his decisions have been reversed by the higher courts, and the only reflection on his judicial work—if such it can be called—is found in the fact that, in criminal cases, the “rich malefactor” hires a lawyer who invariably calls for a jury trial and wins his case, while the poor devil, overtaken in a fault, pleads guilty and gets “justice” dealt out to him by the court. Perhaps the jury thinks the payment of a lawyer’s fee is punishment enough for the offender to undergo!

Alice L. Taylor was born August 20, 1848, at Stockholm, St. Lawrence County, N. Y. Her father, Rev. E. D. Taylor, was one of six brothers, who were all Congregational ministers. Her mother was Mary Ann Lewis of Lenox, Madison County, N. Y. When Alice was about three years of age, the family removed to Chagrin Falls, Ohio, and four years later to Claridon, Geauga County, Ohio. Mr. Taylor was pastor of the Congregational Church at Claridon until the death of his wife in 1872, and in that place his children spent the years of their childhood and early youth. As the schools of that period were primitive in character, Mr. and Mrs. Taylor taught select schools at different times and in these and the district schools their children received their earlier education, later attending private schools and academies in other places, the two girls being students for a time at Lake Erie Female Seminary at Painesville, Ohio. The only son, E. D. Taylor, Jr., served for three years in the Federal Army during the Civil War.

In the fall of 1865 Alice Taylor went to Algona, Iowa, with an uncle, Rev. Chauncey Taylor, a pioneer home missionary of that state. She remained in Iowa a year, teaching two terms in country schools. Returning home in the fall of 1866, she went in November to Lexington, Ky., in the employ of the American Missionary Association, and taught in the colored schools of that city until June of the following year. In the fall of 1867, she entered Oberlin College, beginning the first year of the literary course. During the four years of her college course, she taught school several terms and also taught classes in the preparatory department of the college. Shortly after graduation, August 9, 1871, she was married to Samuel Armor and with him took up school work among the Indians for the Government. After three years of this work, the Armors came to California in the fall of 1874 and to Orange in the following spring.

Mrs. Armor got a first grade certificate at the teachers’ examination for the county of Los Angeles and on the same papers she was granted a first grade state certificate and life diploma. She taught many years at Orange, Garden Grove and Tustin and was considered a first class teacher. Superintendent Hinton urged her to apply for a place in the Los Angeles schools; but she told him that, if his rating of her work as first class was correct, they needed first class teachers in the country as well as in the city and she would stay where she was. All this time she was doing her own housework, caring for the animals when Mr. Armor was working away from home, singing in the choir and at all kinds of meetings and entertainments and teaching a class in Sunday school. Members of that class of about thirty-five years ago, learning recently of Mrs. Armor’s illness, sent her valuable presents and letters expressing their appreciation of her worth as a teacher and gratitude for the help and inspiration her teaching had been to them.

H. C. Head

About 1890 Mrs. Armor quit teaching and began work on The Orange Post as proofreader, city editor, bookkeeper and general factotum. As the proprietor was contemplating giving up the struggle, Mrs. Armor put in her account for work with some additional money and bought the paper in January, 1892. She inherited literary tastes and was a graceful writer; her articles in college entertainments, teachers' institutes and literary periodicals were well received and won her praise. However, newspaper work for her, without sufficient capital to hire help for the routine work, was like harnessing Pegasus to the plow—too much drudgery to keep the poetic afflatus active and aglow. Nevertheless, it is her proud record that she got out the paper on time each week for twenty-three years without missing a single issue. During the settling up of the country and the formative period of its institutions, The Orange Post had considerable influence in getting things started right and was liberally quoted by its exchanges.

After the sale of her paper early in 1915, Mrs. Armor found ample scope for her usefulness in the King's Daughters, the Woman's Relief Corps, as a deaconess of the Presbyterian Church, in visiting the sick and shut-ins, and in writing letters of cheer and comfort to those at a distance. In these ministrations of helpfulness, she herself has often been cheered and comforted by the calm fortitude and abiding faith of these unfortunates, "of whom the world was not worthy."

HORACE CALDWELL HEAD.—Prominent among the distinguished members of the California Bar, and as favorably as he is well-known, must be mentioned Horace Caldwell Head, who has been a resident of California since his sixth year, when he accompanied his parents on their removal, in the famous Centennial Year of 1876, from their home state, Tennessee and located near Santa Ana, then Los Angeles, but now Orange County. He was born at Troy, in Obion County, Tenn., on August 22, 1870, a son of Dr. H. W. Head, a prominent physician and surgeon in great demand in that county, who had married Miss Maria E. Caldwell, a lady of accomplishments. In 1876, Dr. Head came to California with the intention of retiring from the practice of medicine, and engaged in horticulture; but the scarcity of physicians forced him, out of regard to society, into practice again, and he spent several years alleviating pain and doing good. He was also much interested in and became prominent in civic affairs—so much so, that the citizens of his district elected him in 1882 a member of the Assembly of the State Legislature; and he served in that responsible capacity for the sessions of 1883 and the special session of 1884, and later took a leading part in the formation and organization of Orange County. He became, in fact, a well-known pioneer, who was a prominent, familiar figure throughout the county; but in later life he lived retired, and died on December 5, 1919, survived by a widow and seven children.

The eldest of these, Horace Caldwell Head, received the nucleus of his education in the public schools of Garden Grove, completing it in the University of California at Berkeley, from which he was graduated in 1891 with the degree of Ph.B. After that, for a couple of years, he turned his attention to teaching, and he then entered the Hastings College of Law in San Francisco, the law department of the University of California, from which he received the degree of LL.B. in 1896. In May of that year, he was admitted to practice at the California Bar, and in the fall of 1896 he located at Fullerton, and began to practice his profession.

From the beginning, he met with such merited success that he was elected district attorney in 1902, and took office the following January, for a term of four years, which necessitated his removal to Santa Ana, a change to which he was evidently not personally opposed, for he has since made that delightful city his home. At the close of his term of office, he engaged in the practice of law in Santa Ana, and later he formed a partnership with A. W. Rutan, under the firm name of Head and Rutan, and opened offices in the Farmers and Merchants Bank Building.

At Fullerton, in 1900, occurred the marriage of Horace C. Head and Miss Anna G. Hansen, whose parents had settled at Placentia in 1874. Her father, Peter Hansen, is still living, honored by all who know his sterling worth. Two children have blessed this fortunate marriage, and they are named Melville and Iris Head.

Since his term as district attorney, when he attained a very enviable reputation for his common sense, but fearless administration, his prosecution of criminals, defense of the best interests of the county, and his influence in favor of a better and higher civic sense, Mr. Head has devoted himself to private practice, enjoying more and more a large and highly creditable clientele. His standing is attested by the interesting fact that he is president of the Orange County Bar Association, and an influential director in the Santa Ana Chamber of Commerce. During the late war, he was active in all the bond and war drives, and was one of the most acceptable "four minute" speakers. He takes a deep interest in the welfare of young men, recognizing in youth the strength and the hope of the nation, and is an unselfish, untiring worker in the various departments of the Y. M. C. A.

Politically a Democrat, but decidedly nonpartisan in his support of local movements, measures and men, Mr. Head is a Knights Templar Mason, and also a member of the Odd Fellows, and is a past exalted ruler of the Elks.

MRS. MARIA FAACKS.—The well-kept and productive ten-acre orange ranch of Mrs. Maria Faacks, widow of the late Herman Faacks, is located on Santa Clara Avenue, Orange. Both Mr. and Mrs. Faacks were born near Berlin, Germany, the former in 1840, the latter in 1844. She was a daughter of Wm. and Johanna (Henning) Schulz, farmer folk, who brought their family to St. Paul, Minn., in 1865. Maria Schulz was the second oldest of their eight children, all of whom are living, but she is the only one in California. She was first married in St. Paul in 1866 to Julius Schmidt, a native of Saxony, Germany, who had come to Minnesota in the fifties, and served as an officer in a Minnesota regiment in the Civil War, after which he engaged in business in St. Paul until his death, which occurred in 1871. She afterwards married Herman Faacks, who had come to St. Paul in 1867 from his native place, Brandenburg, and by trade was a painter and decorator, a business he followed until, on account of his health, they came to Orange, Cal., in 1884, where they purchased ten acres on Santa Clara Avenue. It was a vineyard, which they grubbed out, and when they got it in shape set to Valencia oranges.

They had six children: Dora, Mrs. Logan, resides near San Francisco; Rudolph lives in Los Angeles, and has three children; Herman is in charge of operating the home farm; Edward died in Los Angeles; Oscar and Henry are in Lankershim, and the latter has one child.

Change of climate did not restore his health, and an impaired constitution soon brought Mr. Faacks to the end of his earthly journey while still in the prime of life. He died January 20, 1890, and was buried in the old cemetery adjacent to his ranch, and his widow and children were left to mourn his untimely decease. A worthy citizen, loyal to his adopted country, a devoted husband and a loving father, his memory is cherished in the hearts of loved ones who remember his sincerity of purpose and many noble qualities of character. In her religious convictions, Mrs. Faacks is a Lutheran, and politically is a strong Republican.

J. D. SPENNETTA.—A fruit buyer and shipper who well understands the ins and outs of that intricate business is J. D. Spennetta, proprietor of the Red Fox Orchards, who has made that brand widely and favorably known and has built up a good trade such as anyone might be proud of. He first came to Southern California in 1904, and since that time has witnessed many changes in the rapid advance to which he has been such a large contributor. He was born near St. Joseph, Berrien County, Mich., in 1886, the son of H. J. Spennetta, a farmer now residing at Orange, and attended the local grammar and high schools. Four years after the dawn of this eventful century he located at Cucamonga, Cal., and became the bookkeeper for the Cucamonga Citrus Fruit Growers Association there, working under Manager Stanton; and after the latter's death he left that concern and entered the employ of the Mutual Orange Distributors. At the end of a year, he was transferred to the main office at Redlands, where he became cashier; and in that position of considerable responsibility he remained until 1913, when he resigned and removed to Orange.

Here he bought a ranch, now famous as the Red Fox Orchards and in 1913 he set up a packing house in Orange and began as a fruit buyer. Since then, by foresight, study and hard work, he has built up a large patronage. The first year he shipped seventy-five cars, and now he despatches 650 cars. He has a line of trucks, and engages in a general trucking trade. Mr. Spennetta also handles fertilizer of the very highest grades and in quantity about 10,000 tons per year. He enjoys the reputation of being also the largest dealer of barley and bean straw in Orange County, handling approximately 7,500 tons. He is one of the original stockholders, directors and a vice-president of the First National Bank of Olive; in national politics he is a Republican, but he allows no partisanship to deter him from lending a hand when and wherever he can to boost both city and county of Orange.

While in Dakota, Mr. Spennetta was married to Miss Edna Cheuning, a native of Missouri, by whom he has had three children—Elizabeth, Paul and Mary. He was made a Mason in Orange Grove Lodge No. 293, and belongs to Orange Grove Chapter No. 99 of the Royal Arch Masons and Santa Ana Commandery No. 36, Knights Templar. He also has risen to the thirty-second degree in the Los Angeles Consistory of the Scottish Rite Masons, and he belongs to the Al Malaikah Temple of the A. A. O. N. M. S. of Los Angeles, and the Santa Ana Lodge of Elks.

ARTHUR H. DOMANN, M.D.—A distinguished representative of the medical fraternity of California, and one whose influence particularly in the Southland has been felt in favor of the most scientific conservation of the public welfare, is Dr. Arthur H. Domann, for the past five years County Health Officer and County Physician. He was born at Milwaukee, Wis., in 1879, where his father, Gustave Domann, still resides, with an honorable record as a first-class printer. His devoted mother, a splendid woman popular in maidenhood as Wilhelmina Stark, is also living there. Their union was blessed with three children—the subject of our review, the first born; William Domann a practicing physician at Menomonee Falls, Wis.; and a daughter, now Mrs. Arthur Murray of Milwaukee.

Commencing with the grammar schools of Milwaukee, Arthur was later graduated with honors from the excellent high school of that city, and when eighteen began to study pharmacy, under John A. Martens in Milwaukee. He remained in that field until 1902 when he moved to the Pacific Coast, settled for a while in Montana, and was later for several years in the state of Washington. Returning to Milwaukee, he entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons there, one of the best medical schools west of the original institution of that name in New York City, and for two years studied medicine. Coming once again to the Coast, and to California, in 1909, he continued his medical studies at the University of Southern California, where he was graduated with the degree of M.D.

Since settling at Orange, Dr. Domann has rapidly advanced to the position of confidence in the public esteem which he now enjoys, being widely known as a successful physician and surgeon. His appointment as county physician and county health officer gave general satisfaction. Naturally, he belongs to the Orange County Medical Society, the State Medical Society and to the American Medical Association. In addition to his scientific research and practice, Dr. Domann is interested in citrus culture, and owns an orange and lemon orchard of thirty acres in the Peralta Hills, which he himself set out and improved from the start.

At Spokane, Wash., Dr. Domann was married to Miss Birdie Carter, a native of Kentucky, who is a member with him of the Scepter Chapter No. 163 of the Order Eastern Star of Orange. Dr. Domann was made a Mason in Fort Benton Lodge, F. & A. M., Montana, when he was twenty-one years of age, and he is now a member of Orange Grove Lodge No. 293, F. & A. M. He is also a member of Orange Grove Chapter No. 99, R. A. M. He belongs to Santa Ana Commandery No. 36, Knights Templar, and to the Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., and he is an Elk, belonging to the Santa Ana Lodge, and a member of the Orange Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

JOHNTY P. BORING.—One of the decidedly interesting early settlers of Orange, who has done his part faithfully for both the building up and the upbuilding of the town and county, is John P. Boring, who came here in the summer of 1882. He was born at Palestine, Crawford County, Ill., on January 7, 1860, the son of Washington M. Boring, who was born in Marion County, Ind., member of an old Kentucky family, who were early settlers of the Hoosier State. Washington Boring came to Illinois with his parents, and was a wheelwright in Bridgeport and, later, at Ingraham. He passed his last days peacefully at Orange. Mrs. Boring was Matilda Robbins before her marriage, and she was a native of Vincennes, Ind., of French descent. She also died at Orange, the mother of three boys and a girl, one of the sons being now deceased. The daughter Florence is Mrs. D. C. Pixley of Orange; and the other son living is Knox R. Boring of Oakland.

John P. was educated in the public schools of Ingraham, and when eighteen, began clerking in a general store there. In August, 1882, he came to California, and pitched his tent at Orange, then such a small place that it had no sidewalks or any other public improvements. He began clerking for D. C. Pixley, with whom he continued for five years, and he was then in the hardware business under the firm name of Pixley and Boring for two years. After that he was with C. S. Spencer in the grocery business, and later still was for eight years with Samuel Armor in his shoe and stationery store.

About 1900 Mr. Boring built a frame structure on his lots on South Glassell Street, and there opened a bicycle, gun and sporting goods store. Four years later, when he had no insurance, he was burned out, with a loss of $4,000. Nothing daunted, he began again at the bottom and built up a new business on the same site, and so well succeeded that he now has a new building on South Glassell Street, having a frontage of 120 feet, and occupied by six different stores. He continued in business until July, 1918, when he sold out his stock and has since rented his buildings. Since then he has built a two-story, four family white plastered flat in East Hollywood, modern and up-to-date, which yields a splendid income. Mr. Boring is a director in the Orange Building and Loan Association, having been connected with it for about a quarter of a century, and he is a member of the security committee of the association. He is also interested in citrus growing, and owns an orange and lemon orchard at Villa Park. He is a member of the Villa Park Orchard Association, and the Central Lemon Association.

On January 20, 1887, Mr. Boring was married, at Orange, to Miss Belle D. Hall, a native of Richland County, Ill. Two children have blessed this union; one is living Ronald A. Boring, who is attending the Orange Union high school. Mr. Boring was school trustee of Orange for many years, and also clerk of the board. He was, besides, city trustee for four years, and chairman of the finance committee; he was a member of the board when the sewers were being built, and when the paving of streets was first undertaken. A true-blue Republican, Mr. Boring was more than once a delegate to conventions in the days before the primaries.

Mr. Boring was made a Mason in Orange Grove Lodge No. 293, F. & A. M., and was exalted to the royal arch degree in Orange Grove Chapter No. 99, R. A. M., and he was knighted in Santa Ana Commandery No. 36, Knights Templar. He is a member of Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., in Los Angeles, and he is a member of the Odd Fellows Lodge in Orange and with his wife he is a member of Scepter Chapter No. 163, Order Eastern Star, and Mrs. Boring is also a member of the Woman's Club of Orange. They are charter members of the Christian Church, in which Mr. Boring was a trustee for many years. In addition to being active in all the business associations in Orange, Mr. Boring has long participated in civic endeavors and in every good movement for the welfare of the community.

DANIEL F. ROYER, M. D.—An eminent physician more than distinguished for both his scientific and technical ability and his uprightness of character, is Dr. Daniel F. Royer, now one of the leading and most popular citizens of Orange. He was born at Waynesboro in the Cumberland Valley, Pa., and after sound schooling, was graduated from Carlisle College in Pennsylvania, after which he entered the State Normal School and completed the full course. Then he matriculated in the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, one of the foremost schools of medicine in the world, and having graduated from this institution with high honors, he entered with a fine scientific foundation upon a year of practical work in a large city hospital. This experience, so many-sided in its nature, proved invaluable to him, and when he was ready to attempt private practice, he did so as a skillful surgeon and a highly-trained professional man.

Dr. Royer located for a while in Alpena, S. D., and soon attained an exceptionally prominent position in the field of medicine, while filling with honor and credit important public offices. He was for some time U. S. pension agent there, and for many years represented the Government in a similar capacity here. He was U. S. Indian agent at Pine Ridge during the stirring days when Sitting Bull had the populace of that entire section so alarmed, and during the fatal conflict with the two Indian chiefs, Dr. Royer fulfilled every duty in just such a manner as those personally acquainted with him might expect. He was also city treasurer of Alpena for six years, and served on the board of education for nine years. He was a member of the Dakota legislature during the two terms previous to the division of the Dakotas, and was a leader on the floor, and was speaker pro tem for several weeks during the absence of the speaker. As a registered pharmacist, he was one of the state board of pharmacy examiners and a member of various medical associations.

Dr. Royer came to Southern California on Christmas Day, 1896, and intended to establish himself in Los Angeles. In looking over some property he owned west of Orange, however, he carefully inspected the entire locality and decided to cast his lot here. The prospects for growth and development were very apparent, and he decided to make Orange his future home. He has been identified with the advancement of the city from the outset, and has participated in many of the movements which led the community to establish municipal undertakings of great necessity and importance. He was a member of the board of trustees of Orange for six years, and was mayor for one of the terms. There, as at other times and places, he exerted his best efforts for the good of the community, and in spite of his extensive medical practice, he devoted considerable time to the duties of his public offices.

Dr. Royer has met with pronounced success in Orange in the practice of his profession, and his strong personality, intensive application to everything he undertakes, and careful, conscientious regard for all things pertaining to the responsibilities of his calling, have called forth a responsive note in the public mind, and he is held in the highest esteem both by his fellow citizens and his fellow practitioners—a circumstance amply demonstrated in innumerable ways. Dr. Royer is a member of the County

D. F. Royer.

Medical Association, the State Medical Society, the American Medical Association, the Southern California Medical Association, and the Pacific Coast Railway Surgeons' Association, and is the local surgeon for the Santa Fe, the Southern Pacific and the Pacific Electric railroads.

During the World War, Dr. Royer was a member of the local exemption board for District No. 1, of Orange County, which examined nearly 6,000 men, and gave freely of his time and services. He is a Knights Templar Mason and Shriner, as well as an Elk and an Odd Fellow, and enjoys in the circle of each of these well-known fraternities an enviable and deserved popularity.

THEODORE E. SCHMIDT.—A singularly appropriate analogy between the past and present is suggested by the fact that Theodore E. Schmidt spent his well-earned retirement in Anaheim, for in the very early days of the city's immaturity he was a prophet of wise foresight, and even suggested the name of the city. As his name implies Mr. Schmidt was of German ancestry, and in his native town of Bielefeldt he was educated in the public schools, and at a comparatively early age embarked in the dry goods business. This business experience was supplemented by extensive travel in different parts of Europe, principally in France and Spain, after which he enlisted in the German army as a private in the Fifteenth Infantry of Fusileers and for meritorious service was advanced to the rank of lieutenant. After an honorable discharge he came to America in 1848, and in the latter part of the same year he started out to cross Texas and Mexico, and at Mazatlan boarded a French sailing vessel which eventually anchored at San Francisco, the entire journey having consumed about seven months. As a means of livelihood he went to work in a brickyard, and afterwards became the proprietor of a bakery establishment which he conducted for two years. Later he engaged in the dry goods business. Meantime he became one of the chief promoters of the Los Angeles Vineyard Company, of which he was the first president and leading director. The company bought the tract of land upon which Anaheim is built, and as before stated, the name of the embryo town was the suggestion of Mr. Schmidt. In 1860 he located here and engaged in horticulture upon forty acres of land, and continued with fair success until 1871. A desire to visit the land of his birth was the natural outgrowth of his success, and he therefore spent about a year in Westphalia, and upon returning to New York was accompanied by his brother. In New York City he started a wholesale wine business, his chief object being the marketing of the Anaheim wines, but his stock also included other brands. From a comparatively modest beginning at the foot of Broadway, on Bowling Green, he was obliged with the increase of trade to remove to more commodious quarters on Warren Street, where, under the firm name of James M. Bell & Company, he managed a thoroughly successful venture for many years.

In 1893 Mr. Schmidt disposed of his New York wine interests and removed to Vineland, N. J., where he purchased fifty-two acres of land and engaged in horticulture. This property he retained and owned until his death, but in 1899 he returned to Anaheim, Cal., and here he lived retired until his demise in 1911. He was married in San Francisco in 1859 to Clementine Zimmerman born in New Orleans, La., who came to California with her parents in pioneer days; she died while on a visit to San Francisco on October 8, 1913. They had five children, two boys and three girls, and two are living: Mrs. Clementine Turck of Anaheim and Mrs. J. H. Bullard of Los Angeles. It is an interesting fact that the south twenty acres of his original purchase is built up for business houses and residences, while the north twenty acres has been kept intact by the family until now the city has voted bonds to take it over for a city park, and a most beautiful location it is.

RAY C. LAMBERT.—A young man who has well fulfilled the Latin motto, "Seize the day," and has so improved his opportunities that he has succeeded beyond his most sanguine expectations, making good as a citrus grower who thoroughly understands the attractive industry and renders it still more attractive by his scientific methods of operation, is Ray C. Lambert who leases and cultivates a valuable part of the Irvine ranch. He is a son of Charles C. Lambert, the pioneer of Tustin still living and retired, a native of Iowa who came to California as a young man and set himself up in business as a grading contractor. Among the extensive contracts undertaken by him was the grading for the Salt Lake and Santa Fe railroads in Los Angeles. Later, he joined the Fourth Street Meat Market in Santa Ana and helped build up its trade. He married Miss Amelia Hadley, who died in 1904, leaving four children: Everett Clayton, who patriotically served his country on board the Oregon, passed away in 1904, in Japan, a victim of pleuro-pneumonia—a favorite with his sailor-fellows and with all the officers, as well; Ray C. Lambert is the subject of our review, and he is assisted by his brother, Charles C., Jr.; Gertrude Amelia lives in Los Angeles.

Ray attended the public schools at Tustin and put in a couple of years at the Santa Ana high school. Then he engaged in the nursery business at Tustin until he came to his present place on the Irvine ranch, in 1913, having secured an optional lease on 160 acres and immediately began the work of developing water, which he found he could have in abundance by sinking two wells 300 feet deep. He began with one well, and now both are pumped by two engines of twenty-five horsepower each, giving him over 100 inches of water which is more than ample to irrigate his entire holding.

Mr. Lambert made an agreement with Mr. Irvine by which, after a number of years of successful operation, he becomes the owner of half of the ranch he is now tenanting, and in the spring of 1914 began to plant Valencia orange trees. This work he continued through 1915 and 1916, and in the latter year he also set out lemon trees. He also installed a cement pipe line system, all the pipe being made on the place. The orchard has been interplanted with lima beans; and as he has been able to carry out his contract with Mr. Irvine to the letter the orchards having the required elevation, thus placing them in a thermal belt where it is practically frostless, and with the deep loam sediment soil he is, especially as a young man, very comfortably situated.

On August 10, 1915, Mr. Lambert was married at Santa Ana to Miss Clara Wells, a daughter of George W. and Clara (Stearns) Wells. He was a native of Illinois, and she a native of New York state, and they were married in Kansas and came to California in 1901. They settled at Santa Ana and are now living in the Yorba Linda district. Miss Wells attended the public schools at Santa Ana, and later was a student in the exclusive school for young ladies, Huntington Hall in Los Angeles. One child has blessed this union, Barbara Amelia. Mr. and Mrs. Lambert are prominent members of the First Presbyterian Church at Santa Ana, and Mr. Lambert is valued as a stand-patter in the Republican ranks. In 1916, Mr. Lambert built a handsome residence, at a cost of $15,000 dollars, on an elevation, among the foothills at the east of the Irvine ranch, and from his home, on a clear day, one can obtain an inspiring view of San Pedro and the blue Pacific twenty-five miles away, as well as an enchanting vista of the wide-spreading, picturesque Irvine ranch. Having thus succeeded to such an exceptional degree during these few early years of his activity, Mr. Lambert gives promise of far greater things in the immediate future; and it is this capital in men and women of capacity for accomplishment which makes California truly a "Golden State."

DOMINGO ERRAMUSPE.—A native son of the Golden West, whose rise amid the inspiring and favoring conditions of agricultural life in Southern California has given him a level business head, is Domingo Erramuspe, one of the bonanza farmers operating a trim ranch of his own fortunately situated between the Moulton and the Irvine or San Joaquin ranches, and believed to be valuable oil land. He was born in Los Angeles on September 3, 1877, the son of John Erramuspe, one of the early landowners south of Santa Ana, who came from the Basses-Pyrenees country in France, and brought with him a devoted wife, who was Miss Grace Etcheverria, a native of Navarra, Spain. After they were married in the old country, they migrated to South America, where Mr. Erramuspe had two brothers, and for five or six years they remained south of the Equator, speculating and trying various ventures, before they came northward to California in 1870. Here, on the old O'Neill Ranch, east of Capistrano, he ran 20,000 sheep for Louis Lartiga. Two children were born to these parents, who have been dead now for the last ten years; the elder, Domingo, the subject of our instructive sketch, and Bernardo, who resides at San Jacinto and is engaged in ranching.

Domingo grew up around Santa Ana, and there, in 1911, he was married to Miss Marie Etcheverria, a native of Navarra, Spain, a woman with just those accomplishments needed for the happy domestic life of a well-equipped ranch, and one who has entered heartily into all of her husband's ambitious plans. Two children came to cheer them further, Grace and Dominique. In 1915, Mr. Erramuspe had his comfortable home built, a pretty two-story dwelling, with all modern improvements. In national political affairs preferring the platform of the Republicans, Mr. Erramuspe is a good mixer, a good booster, and supports well-endorsed local projects without any political or religious bias whatever.

At present Mr. Erramuspe is cultivating 168 acres absolutely in his own right, while he also leases and farms 700 acres of the Moulton Ranch, and 500 of the Whitney, and 350 acres of the O'Neill ranches, or nearly 1,700 acres in all. Fourteen hundred acres of this are under the plow. Drilling for oil will soon begin on his home place, and there are indications that the flow of the precious liquid will be ample when once the source has been struck. He uses four eight-mule teams and has a sixty horsepower Holt Caterpillar tractor for motor power, and farms strictly according to the most scientific methods, getting assured, superior results.

EARL G. GLENN.—A pioneer resident of Santa Ana who has been privileged to see much of the town develop, and a popular social favorite who has been closely identified with fraternal lodge life and the activities of the local fire department, is Earl G. Glenn, the efficient U. S. mail carrier, who was born in Springville, Iowa, on May 21, 1870. His father, Frank Glenn, moved to St. Paul, Minn., in 1878, and lived in that city for six years as the auditor of the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railroad. He had married Katherine Wynans, and in 1884 they removed to Iowa, going back to Springville. Three years later, in the great "boom" year, they came out to California, but it was not until 1888 that Earl Glenn, who wished to complete his schooling, followed them to the Golden State and the "promised land." His success, with a foundation of education acquired in the St. Paul high school and the junior college at Springville, a high standard of character, and a genial, winning personality, has made him feel that the promises California then held forth she has since quite made good.

In 1888, then, Mr. Glenn came to Santa Ana, and for a year, under Rev. A. T. McDill he worked as a printer on the Santa Ana Herald, putting in the next year on the same paper with Messrs. Shaw and Wallace. When he left them, he was employed on the Morning Blade; and when that was made an evening paper, he became foreman of the job printing department. In 1895 he quit printing altogether, and then he became an employe of J. A. Hankey in the bicycle trade. He was a racing rider, and in 1897 established the record that still stands as the best local effort in Orange County today: he rode twelve and a half miles on a dirt course in thirty minutes and thirty-one seconds.

Mr. Glenn was a charter member of the Santa Ana National Guards in 1890, and reenlisted in 1899, and spent two years in the Philippines, where he saw spirited action in eleven engagements. In 1901 he was honorably discharged. On his return he spent another year with Mr. Hankey in the bicycle business. The next year, however, Uncle Sam laid hold of Mr. Glenn as the most desirable candidate for mail carrier service in Santa Ana, and he has been serving the public in that capacity ever since, to the joy of the public and the satisfaction of his colleagues.

On April 8, 1903, Mr. Glenn was married to Miss Nina Mansur, a daughter of Carlos F. and Columbia L. Mansur, and a native daughter proud of her association with California, where she was born at Camptonville, in Yuba County, in December, 1870. Carlos F. Mansur was a pioneer of Santa Ana, coming here first in 1876, and locating here permanently in 1881. He was born in Barnston, Canada, July 8, 1840, where he was reared until he was seventeen, when he migrated to Randolph Center, Wis. He was married there on September 8, 1861, to Columbia L. Gale, born in Goshen, Vt., October 16, 1843. The day after his marriage Mr. Mansur enlisted in the Eighth Wisconsin Regiment, serving until the close of the Civil War. After the close of the war he returned to Canada, but in 1867 came to California, via the Isthmus of Panama, locating at Camptonville, where he engaged in the dry goods business and was postmaster. In 1876 he made his first trip to Santa Ana, coming here to make his home in 1881. For a time he was manager of an orange packing house. He was one of the organizers of the Orange County Savings Bank and was its cashier for many years, until he resigned about 1902 and retired from active life, making his home in Santa Ana until his death in 1915, Mrs. Mansur having passed away in 1912. Mr. and Mrs. Mansur were the parents of six children: Ozro is the secretary of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company; Fred is secretary of the Orange County Title Company; Nina is the wife of Earl Glenn of this review; Albert lives in Los Angeles; Lelia is Mrs. Talbott of Brooklyn, Iowa; Carl makes home in Los Angeles. Active in the formation of Orange County, Mr. Mansur was the first county treasurer, serving two terms. A staunch Republican, he was prominent in the ranks of the G. A. R., and was commander of Sedgwick Post, Santa Ana. In fraternal circles he was affiliated with the Masons, being a member of the Blue Lodge and past high priest of the Chapter. He was also a member of the Elks.

Mrs. Glenn was sent to the Santa Ana public schools, and was graduated with honors from the high school of this city. She belongs to the Baptist Church. Two children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Glenn: Margaret is the older, and then there is Frederick, and they are both pupils of the grade schools.

Mr. Glenn has been active as past master in Santa Ana Lodge No. 241, F. & A. M., and past chancellor in the Knights of Pythias; and he is also a member of the Elks and the Redmen of Santa Ana. He has belonged to the Santa Ana Band, and has the longest continuous service in the Santa Ana Volunteer Fire Department, having been identified with that organization for the past twenty-four and a half years, or through the period when it ceased to be a volunteer department and was made a city fire department. With his wife, he belongs to the Eastern Star.

During the recent war, Mr. and Mrs. Glenn supported vigorously the campaign of the Government in the various drives, and they both participated in practically all of the war activities. In 1905 Mr. Glenn purchased their home place at 1803 North Broadway, where he has lived with his family for the past fifteen years, and he also came to own four lots closer in on Broadway. So early did they pitch their tent on North Broadway that they camped there, so to speak, when there were only a few other houses that far out.

LEWIS TUTTLE WELLS.—A splendid example of what a man may do who intelligently, honorably and persistently battles against adversity, is afforded by Lewis Tuttle Wells, the well-known and influential rancher in the Talbert district of Orange County. He was born in Lincklaen, Chenango County, N. Y., on October 20, 1852, the son of John R. Wells, a New York State farmer who was a native of Rhode Island. He had married Cordelia E. Sanders, who was born in New York and was a near relation of Professor Sanders, once so well known as the author of Sanders Union Series of text-books. Elisha Wells, our subject's grandfather, was born in England and settled in Rhode Island, and there, too, he was married.

Lewis Wells grew up in New York State, but as his parents were poor, he had a hard time acquiring an education. Until he was eighteen, he enjoyed but three months a year of schooling; and during the two years, from his eighteenth to his twentieth year, when he stayed at home, he went to the De Ruyter Institute, when harvesting was over, and there made such progress that he was able to pass the required examinations and secure a second-grade teachers' certificate. He taught in Chenango County the next winter, and the next year was able to go to the State Normal at Cortland, N. Y. He then took an examination successfully for the first-grade teachers' certificate, taught again, and went to school, besides; and while again engaged in teaching, took the next important step of his life.

When he was twenty-four, at Brookfield, Madison County, N. Y., he was married to Miss Jane E. Silliman, of that place; after which he taught for another year. Then he removed to Rooks County, Kans., where he farmed for eighteen years. The results were, all in all, very satisfactory until the fifth year when a disastrous hail storm and cyclone destroyed all the crops; and he had to return to teaching, to keep from starving. He taught for four years, and in the meantime his wife died, leaving him with four children. Two of these went to his own school and were taught by him in Kansas. In 1891-92 he had a large wheat crop but only received thirty-five cents a bushel for it.

Mr. Wells sold out in 1897 and came to California, stopping for a while at Los Angeles, where he worked at whatever he could best find to do. Then he came to Artesia and rented a ranch of ten acres. About that time he heard of the peat-land district at Smeltzer, in Orange County, and going there, he bought and sold fruit and vegetables for a couple of seasons. After that, he came to Talbert.

Getting acquainted with W. T. Newland, he rented sixty acres from him for three years. He cleared the land, but during the first two years made nothing; the third year he had the land in such shape that he put twenty acres into sugar beets and the balance in corn and cabbage, and cleared about $1,000 above expenses. He then bought forty acres, his present place—a fortunate purchase—and two years ago, bought another forty acres, so that he now owns two ranches of forty acres each, excellent land, both in the Talbert district. He resides upon one of these, and one of his sons lives upon the other, the last purchased, which is at Talbert Station. He also owns five houses in Huntington Beach, and also six lots there. He raises two crops a year on his land—a crop of barley and a crop of corn. His ranch is very productive and raised pumpkins of monster size, in fact, so large a man alone could not lift one; also raised a sweet potato weighing eighteen and three-quarter pounds, and it, with the monster pumpkin, was sent to the Louisiana Purchase Exposition at St. Louis and placed with the Orange County exhibit. For many years he raised celery and was very successful; in one year his two-thirds shares from nine acres realized him $1,860; however, of late he raises sugar beets and lima beans. Many years ago he also set out an orchard of apples, peaches, pears and plums which he finds very profitable, and his hard, intelligent labor has brought him success. He donates two and a half acres of his ranch for a government experiment station. Since oil was struck at Huntington Beach, he has leased for oil.

Mr. Wells was married a second time, in 1910 in Orange County, to Mrs. Maude (Shanklin) Perry, a native of Kentucky, who had married Harvey Perry. She had two children by him—Lorina, who married Berry Stice, the butcher at Santa Ana, and Eugene, who is in the U. S. Navy on the battleship New Mexico; and her union with Mr. Wells has been blessed with two other children—Lavaughn and L. T. Wells, Jr.

Lewis J Wells

Mr. Wells' children by his first wife are: Lena, who is the wife of George Gilbert, a rancher in Kansas, is the mother of two children; Arthur, another rancher in Kansas, who is married and has five children, and owns 320 acres of land; Seabury, who married Helen Huffman of Kansas, and resides with her and his two children on one of Mr. Wells' ranches; and Gertrude, the wife of Clyde Gilbert, the rancher at Talbert, who has five children. Mr. Wells is a member of the Knights of Pythias at Huntington Beach, and also of the Odd Fellows there.

REUBEN A. ADAMS, M. D.—The passing of a physician of such high rank in the history of American medicine as the late Dr. Reuben A. Adams, and an influential leader in the Grand Army of the Republic, deserves more than ordinary mention; for such men, in more senses than one, have become both pillars and founders of the Union. He came of a noted New England family, and was born at Marion, N. Y., on April 3, 1841, where he spent his boyhood, attended the local public schools and graduated from the Marion Collegiate Institute. From boyhood he was intensely patriotic; and when the Civil War threatened to destroy the Federal Government, he enlisted, in August, 1862, in Company D, One Hundred Sixtieth Regiment New York Volunteers, and went to New Orleans with General Banks' expedition, serving under him throughout the Louisiana campaign. He was present at the siege of Port Hudson, and later fought under General Sheridan in his engagements in the Shenandoah Valley, participating actively, all in all, in fourteen battles. He was twice wounded—the first time at Fort Bisland, in Louisiana, and the second time at Cedar Creek, Va., and carried the scars the remainder of his life. When he was mustered out of service at the close of the war, Dr. Adams received the exceptional honor of a letter of commendation signed by every surviving officer of his regiment. This he prized even far more than the rare and costly presents and thanks from the imperial household of Japan, for service to a prince and officer of the Japanese army and navy, whom he came to know when the foreigner was in distress.

On returning from his arduous service in the Civil War, Mr. Adams took up his studies at the Homeopathic Medical College of Pennsylvania, and was graduated from the Hahnemann College of Philadelphia on March 4, 1868. In July of that year he lost no time to establish himself at Churchville, N. Y., where he successfully practiced medicine until May, 1873. Then, ambitious for a field with greater possibilities, he removed to Rochester, N. Y., where he soon took rank with the most prominent physicians of the day. His ability as both a physician and a surgeon was recognized in his appointment, in 1874, as the city medical officer, and in assuming that responsibility he became one of the first homeopathic physicians to occupy that position.

Dr. Adams also served as president of the Monroe County Homeopathic Medical Society, vice-president of the Rochester Hahnemann Society, and also vice-president of the New York State Homeopathic Medical Society. He was a member of the New York Homeopathic Medical Society, and of the American Institute of Homeopathy, and was consulting physician on the staff of the Rochester Homeopathic Hospital from its incorporation in 1887.

His voluntary and strenuous participation in the War for the Union naturally led Dr. Adams to cherish fondly all the associations of that awful conflict, and as a member of the George H. Thomas Post, G. A. R., he was proud to have taken part in the original presentation of a United States flag to each of the thirty-five schools of Rochester, thus starting a patriotic movement that has extended pretty generally throughout the United States. He was fond of fraternal life, was a thirty-second degree Mason and a Shriner.

Besides working long, aggressively and conscientiously for the advancement of homeopathy, Dr. Adams was twice unanimously elected medical director of the Department of New York, of the Grand Army of the Republic, and at the forty-ninth annual encampment, held in Washington, in September, 1915, he was unanimously elected surgeon general of the Grand Army. He also found time to direct the general management of a large grain farm in North Dakota, and orange groves and English walnut orchards in Southern California. He first came to Orange in the late eighties, at the height of the great realty "boom"; and while others could not see beyond their face and therefore failed, he looked deeper and further into the future, and invested in both country and city property, even developing the same at an initiatory loss. He left two sons, John Adams, of Orange, Cal., and Sidney I. Adams of Rochester, N. Y.; two brothers, Dr. Myron H. Adams and Seth Adams; and two sisters, Mrs. Louise Snyder and Mrs. Helen Gilbert of Marion, and a grand-daughter, Elizabeth Fiske Adams, of Rochester. When he died, in his seventy-seventh year, he breathed his last at his Rochester home, at No. 3 Upton Park, on December 9, 1918.

JOHN ADAMS.—An enterprising, successful and influential citizen of Orange County, who is greatly interested in the development of this favored section of Southern California and has, therefore, become one of the effective "boosters" of the region, is John Adams, a native of Rochester, N. Y., and the son of Dr. Reuben A. Adams, who is mentioned on a preceding page of this work. John was educated in the grammar and high schools of Rochester, and later commenced the study of medicine at the medical college; but other matters having absorbed his main attention, he did not graduate. In 1908, on the contrary, he located at Orange to take active charge of the management of his father's property, and since then he has continued the important work of developing the holdings.

The home ranch and also his residence is located on Batavia Street, where he grows Valencia oranges; while the large ranch is at the corner of North Main Street and the Santa Fe track, and there he has fifty acres of Valencias and fifty acres of walnuts. Besides teams he uses two tractors in the operation of the farm; and in all the departments he applies the most modern methods and the most up-to-date machinery. He is a member of the Santiago Orange Growers Association, and also a member, vice-president and director of the Richland Walnut Association.

While at Rochester, Mr. Adams married Miss Dora A. Hooker, a native of New York, and an accomplished lady who has shared his ambition, his toil and his rewards. In the same city he was made a Mason, in Genesee Falls Lodge No. 507.

Orange bid high, from the beginning of her history as a county, for just such go-ahead settlers as John Adams, the worthy bearer of a long-honored name; nor did either the city or the county of Orange bid in vain. The result has been a degree of prosperity, reflecting the high intelligence of their citizens, highly creditable to the state called Golden.

CARL G. JORN.—A young man who has been in close touch with the city of Orange since he first came to California at the age of fifteen and who has materially aided as well as shared in the prosperity of the fast-developing town; is Carl G. Jorn, the well-known insurance man. He was born at Chicago, Ill., in 1880, the son of Charles Jorn, who had a real estate, insurance and loan business at the corner of Twenty-sixth and Wells streets and spent several winters in the Golden State. He died in Chicago in 1913. He had married Marie Moehlenbrink, who died when Carl Jorn was four and a half years old. Of this union he is now the only child living. However, he has a half-brother, John F. Jorn, who is continuing his father's business in Chicago under the old firm name, Charles Jorn & Company, and his half-sister, Mrs. Lydia Jaeger, who also resides in Chicago.

Having attended the local parochial school, Carl Jorn was sent to Concordia College in Milwaukee for a couple of years, but on account of failing health he came west to California in 1895, and for fourteen months remained at Orange, where he attended the Orange County Business College at Santa Ana, the proprietor then being R. L. Bisby. Then he returned to Chicago and entered the employ of the J. K. Armsby Company, having a good position in their main office. That fall his health failed again and he came West once more, settling again in Orange, and resumed his studies at the business college, and during this time was secretary to R. L. Bisby of that college. On the completion of the course he spent three months as a stenographer in Los Angeles, when he again returned East with his father and for six years was with him in business in his office until again the lure of California drew him to the West.

In the spring of 1906, Mr. Jorn journeyed back to Orange, where he started an insurance business. He also became the agent of the Oliver Typewriter Company, and such was his success and years of service that he became the dean of agents in Southern California. In 1913 he returned to the East for the summer on account of the illness of his father, which terminated in his death, but he did not give up his association with the Pacific commonwealth, in whose bright future he has such unbounded faith. As early as 1909 Mr. Jorn bought the northwest corner of Chapman Avenue and the Plaza, and with his father erected the original Jorn Building, which he has since materially enlarged. He carries on an important real estate and insurance business and was once secretary of the Orange Chamber of Commerce, in which he is still a member. It is but natural for one so optimistic for the future of the citrus industry and land values that Mr. Jorn is also interested in horticulture and owns an orange and lemon grove in the Peralta Hills above Olive. He was also the first secretary of the Associated Chambers of Commerce of Orange County. He belongs to the Merchants and Manufacturers Association, in which he is untiring in his efforts to develop the commercial interests of the town and county, and as a Republican he is no less tireless in helping to elevate civic standards.

Carl G. Jörn

At Orange, on July 13, 1909, Mr. Jorn was married to Miss Bertha Loescher, a native of Iowa; she came to California with her father, who located at Orange, and is now making his home with Mr. and Mrs. Jorn. One child has blessed this union, a daughter, Mary Louise. Mr. and Mrs. Jorn are active members of the Lutheran Church of Orange, in which they are both very influential. Mr. Jorn is the leader of Circuit B, District Three, California and Nevada District of the Lutheran Laymen's League, and in that capacity is in close touch with the different congregations of the circuit from Santa Barbara to San Diego and from the Coast to the Colorado River. He also belongs to the Lutheran's Men's Club and the Orange Men's Club. Both husband and wife are intensely interested in the various movements for sociological uplift for the community and Mr. Jorn is rendering valuable service as a member and clerk of the library board of the Orange Public Library; in fact, there is no movement for the building up of Orange and the enhancing of its commercial importance that does not receive his hearty support.

ALEXIS EVERETT FRYE, A.M., LL.B.—Among the regular summer visitors at Newport Bay is Alexis Everett Frye, author of the most widely-used text-books in the world. His winter home is the beautiful "Villa Cuba," at Redlands, on the picturesque ridge joining Prospect Park with Smiley Heights. His summer home is the stately villa known as "Miramar," meaning "Seaview," fronting on the smiling bay at Newport. As one of his own poems expresses it:

"And for his home the cunning hand
That chisels peak and headland bold,
With chips of sand forms arm of land
'Twixt smiling bay and ocean cold.

"Then bloom of snow-white foam he brings,
To beautify the sculptured rim,
Like brazen sea the Scripture sings,
With flowers of lilies round the brim."

Enthusiastic about our bay, he has personally made the largest collection of shells ever taken from its waters, and has found several not known to exist here. He now has ready for the press a little volume of poems, from which the above lines are taken, revealing the hidden beauty of the sea birds, the dune plants, the sea shells, the sunsets, the great stone face over the tidal river, and the water sprites, and, of course, the "mermaids"—

—"the teeming mermaids fair,
That dip and dive, or ride the sea,
With shapely form and streaming hair,
Like Nereids in motion free."

Another proof of his abiding interest in the bay is his purchase of the commodious Engstrom house, the most beautiful on the bay. It is a center of summer life and activity, especially for children.

Mr. Frye was born at North Haven, Maine, on November 2, 1859, the son of Captain E. S. Frye, forty-four years a mariner, who sailed from Boston and other Atlantic ports. Captain Frye is now eighty-eight years old, strong and vigorous, a type of the hardy men who "go down to the sea in ships." He is one of the oldest stock of "Fryes of Maine," his forebears having lived there continuously since 1661, when Adrian Frye settled in Kittery. He is a giant in strength. When going aboard ship one day, he saw two of his sailors sweating over an anchor they were trying to lift and carry from the wharf to the deck. One end would go up, and the other down, then vice versa. Telling one sailor to sit on the crown and the other on the stock, Captain Frye picked up the outfit, anchor and men, and carried all aboard, placing them on the deck as lightly as a basket of eggs. He is a lineal descendant of Edward Doten, who came over in the Mayflower in 1620.

Captain Frye married Jane King, a descendant of six of the Mayflower passengers, including the famous Brewster and Hopkins. Edward Doten came as an "apprentice" to the same Stephen Hopkins. He is the Doten who fought the first duel in the Plymouth colony; and he and his rival, Edward Lester, had to pass a day in the "stocks," to be jeered at by the shocked Pilgrims. Jane King Frye died in Highlands, in this state, April 2, 1912, aged seventy-eight years. Four sons and one daughter were born to the family. One son died in infancy, but the others are living.

While still a boy, Alexis E. Frye removed with his parents to Quincy, Mass., and there completed the grammar school course, and attended Adams Academy. During a large part of 1875 he was at sea "before the mast" with his father. In 1878 he graduated from the English high school of Boston, receiving one of the medals given for scholarship from the fund of Benjamin Franklin. Mr. Frye was the first young man to graduate from the Training School of the famous educator, Francis W. Parker, at Quincy, Mass. He became greatly attached to Colonel Parker, taught with him in Quincy, worked with him when supervisor of the schools of Boston, and went with him to reorganize the Cook County Normal School, now the Chicago Normal School. He was pleased to be known as Colonel Parker's faithful "Man Frye-day." Mr. Frye was principal of the model school, and teacher of methods in the normal school. In recognition of his work he was made an honorary graduate of the western school. Here he worked from 1883 to 1886.

Returning East Mr. Frye took the law course at Harvard University, adding to his honors the degree of LL.B., and was admitted to the practice of law in Boston, but he never availed himself of the privilege, preferring to remain in the educational field and become a lecturer before teachers' institutes and conventions. He has delivered upwards of 2,000 lectures upon methods of teaching. This work led to extensive travel and gave wide acquaintance with the needs of schools in this country. He also found time to roam widely in Europe, Asia and Africa. Both the lecturing and the travel proved a natural introduction to his next great undertaking—the writing of the well known series of geographies which bears his name. It is probably true that his text-books have outsold every other book in the world, save the Bible. The word "millions" means little, but if one end of the paper used in printing his books could be tacked to the Capitol in Washington, and then unroll with a width of the common book page, the strip would go down to the equator, round the earth, off to the moon (243,000 miles), round the moon, back to earth, again round the equator, and back to the Capitol, with a remnant of sufficient length to wind round the state of California many times.

For more than a quarter of a century Mr. Frye has written all the text-books on geography issued by the great firm of Ginn and Company. His first book was on methods of teaching geography by sand modeling and was called "Child and Nature." This was in 1888. Three years later came "Brooks and Brook Basins." In 1892 he issued a work on psychology, which was well received. In 1894 was printed his Primary Geography, which proved a record breaker. Then came his large complete geography, which set a new pace. Mr. Frye's plan was to embody as much of his ideal as the schools would take, and then write another book as soon as the schools were ready to move forward with him. This plan gave him the field.

Now came a long series of books. In 1898 the Elements of Geography, and a Home and School Atlas. The next year the Spanish Geografia Elemental, adopted for the federal schools of Mexico, as well as Cuba and Porto Rico. In 1902 one of his text-books was translated into Chinese, and is largely used in mission schools of the "Flowery Kingdom," now a republic. One of his books was adapted by authority for use in the schools of Canada. Another was adapted for use in England, by an Oxford professor. Still another was used as the basis for a book for Norway. There is not a nation of the civilized globe that has not been influenced in its school work by the text-books of Mr. Frye. Among the more active of his books at the present time are the Grammar School Geography, a New Geography (1917), and a Home Geography. Mr. Frye also wrote the first text-book of geography widely used in the Philippines.

In 1899 President McKinley, through Mr. Root, his secretary of war, sent Mr. Frye to organize and equip the new public school system of Cuba. He wrote the national school law and the course of study for the island. In 1900 he brought about 1,300 Cuban teachers to Harvard University for study, and then led them on a tour of the East, landing all safely at home. Mr. Root placed him in charge of five steamships for the expedition. For this work, and for other work done for the little nation, Mr. Frye received the Medal of the Legion of Honor of Cuba, and in 1904 and 1906 was made president of the National Teachers' Association of Cuba, perhaps the only instance of a foreigner being made president of such an association. Besides the Franklin medal, and the medal of honor mentioned, Mr. Frye was awarded a silver medal, upon recommendation of William Howard Taft, for his text-book for the Philippines. He also holds the silver cup for the wrestling championship of Harvard University, a gold medal from the teachers of the Province of Santiago, Cuba, and others. In connection with the work in Cuba it is of interest to note that Secretary Root, writing to President Eliot of Harvard, said of the voyage of the Cuban teachers: "This body of teachers going back to every municipality of Cuba will carry back more of saving grace for Cuba than the whole power of the (American) government could accomplish in any other way." And it did.

In 1897 Mr. Frye earned the degree of A.M. from time-honored Harvard University. During the Spanish War he helped to organize, and at one time was in command of, the battalion at Harvard, and captained the graduates' company. In 1898-99 he was lieutenant of Battery K, the "Boston Tigers," of the First Heavy Artillery, thus keeping up his connection with military affairs. He has been captain of five companies, including Company E, California National Guard. As head of the school department in Cuba, Mr. Frye was associated with Generals John R. Brooke, Leonard Wood, Adna R. Chaffee, Hugh L. Scott, Tasker Bliss, and the late Surgeon-General Gorgas, all of whom are among the world's great men.

W. B. Cole

Mr. Frye has been elected a life member of various societies, including the American Geographical Society, National Geographic Society, the Harvard Union, the Society of Mayflower Descendants, and the New England Historic Genealogical Society. It is needless to say that he is an enthusiastic member of the Newport Yacht Club. In the early nineties Mr. Frye became a resident of California. He has improved and owned upwards of 300 acres of orange groves, but has sold his groves to be free to continue his literary work.

WALTER J. COLE.—A rancher who owns a prosperous forty-acre ranch on Park Avenue between Hansen and the county road, Walter J. Cole is one of the first settlers in this section of the county. He located here when the ranch was a part of a 40,000-acre sheep range, with only a very few settlers anywhere near him. The Spanish heirs claimed to own an interest in the land, which interfered with a clear title, and consequently stopped the sale of the land for several years. In the course of time, however, clear titles were given, and the property was bought and sold. Mr. Cole, as stated above, bought his present acreage in the early days, and began at once to develop it as he was able. He has from the first conducted a general farming and dairy ranch, which he has continued up to the present time, but he is now contemplating a change to the production of citrus fruit.

Mr. Cole was born in Batavia, New York, in 1859, his parents being Walter and Sophronia (Blanchard) Cole. Here he spent his youthful days, receiving an education in the public schools of his vicinity. When he had reached the age of twenty-five, he decided to try his fortune in the West, so in 1884 he came to California with Capt. Arthur J. Hutchinson, who was then a partner of "Lucky" Baldwin, and who shipped a herd of Devons to this state, paying $600 per car for shipment. Mr. Cole was with Captain Hutchinson for three years, and through this experience became well versed in judging and handling cattle on the great Baldwin ranch in Los Angeles County, which consisted of several thousand acres.

Immediately after settling on his own land, in 1887, Mr. Cole took up the dairy business, which he has since followed. He was the owner of a fine herd of registered Jerseys, some of which he occasionally sold for a fancy price. He is a firm believer in the necessity of raising pure bred stock, and has always been a strong advocate of that belief. Mr. Cole's parents came to California in 1885, one year after their son's arrival, and settled on the Baldwin ranch, where they lived for three years, when they purchased a thirty-acre ranch near what is now Hansen Station on the Pacific Electric Railroad. The father entered the dairy business here, and made this home until his death, in February, 1899. Mrs. Cole still resides there, in her ninety-fifth year.

Walter J. Cole was married on October 1, 1891, to Miss Emma Schneider, the daughter of Jacob Schneider of Anaheim, who was one of the original members of San Francisco Company. They have become the parents of six children: Delos is married and has one daughter, Dorothy; Ethel; Bernice, Mrs. Frank Schacht; Vera, Mrs. Albert Sparks, has two children, Bernice and Maxine; Margaret, the wife of John Sullivan; and Donald. When this locality began to settle up and the necessity of a local school was seen, Mr. Cole donated an acre of land and helped locate and establish the Savanna School district, and has served for many years as a trustee. He was one of those who worked hard to establish Orange as a separate county. As one of the pioneers of this section, Mr. Cole is held in high esteem in the community which has been his home for so many years. Comfortably endowed with worldly goods, the result of honest and diligent labor, he can now enjoy the fruits of his toil.

WILLIAM PANNIER.—A far-seeing, enterprising, effectual builder of Anaheim, whose success in his own affairs has been due, primarily, to his tenacity of purpose which led him to stick to his guns when so many settlers, easily discouraged, were glad to sell out and move away, is William Pannier, who has seen the fellow-rancher come and go, and, in many cases, bitterly repent when it was too late, the going. He was born in Prussia in September, 1859, and when six years of age came to Illinois and settled with his folks, sturdy farmer folk, near Belleville, in June, 1866. There were four girls and two boys in the family and Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Pannier; and the third in the order of birth, he is the only one now living, as he was the only one who came to California.

He was reared on a farm in the Whiteside Township of St. Clair County, Ill., and attended public school there, while he assisted in the farm work and was initiated into an industry he followed thereafter. On January 12, 1887, in the midst of the great "boom," he came to California and Santa Ana, and for a few months was employed by Mr. Yoch. The next spring he went to Oregon and sought employment in a logging camp in Clatsop County, after which he worked at harvesting until the rains. These proved too much for his liking and he came south again to Santa Ana.

For four years he teamed for Mr. Smiley, and when the boom burst he bought two teams and some implements, and for a year farmed to grain on the San Joaquin ranch. He next sold his outfit and for a year worked in a lumber yard. After that he bought forty acres of raw land in the East Anaheim precinct, where he located, built a home and began improvements, clearing away the cactus and the brush, and at that time he was the only settler there outside of the city limits. He sank a well and got good water.

At Anaheim Mr. Pannier was married to Miss Sarah Hasheider, who in 1883 had come to California with her parents, early settlers of Anaheim, and then he built a new home and made still more extensive improvements. He continued to buy land until he had seventy-six acres, all of which he cleared and leveled. He set out nine acres of walnuts, forty-five feet apart, from which the owner, in 1919, received $8,400. He also cleared away twenty acres for the Bissells, and forty acres for the Boeges; and having sold some, he now owns thirty-five acres in a body on Southeast Street.

For six years Mr. Pannier did general farming, and then he began to set out oranges. Now he has sixteen acres of Valencia oranges, twelve acres of budded walnuts, and five acres in lemons. At first he had a gasoline pumping plant; now he pumps by electrical power. He belongs to the Mutual Orange Distributors Association of Anaheim, and to the California Walnut Growers Association of Orange.

Six children blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Pannier: Milton, who assisted his father as only a wide-awake, interested son can, was in the World War and served overseas for seven months; Alice and Ruth are at home, and Howard, Donald and Charles are in the Anaheim High School, about to graduate. Alice also attended the University of Southern California and during the World War volunteered her services in one of the departments in Washington until the armistice, and Ruth took a thorough course at a leading business college. Mr. Pannier belongs to the Fraternal Union and the Evangelical Association of Anaheim, where he has been a trustee for fifteen years, and long a chairman of important committees. In national politics he is a Republican.

DAVID E. COZAD.—A man who has met with a large measure of success in life, David E. Cozad now enjoys the reward attending sagacious and painstaking effort, and the adversities he has encountered in toiling along life's pathway have but served to develop the qualities of frugality, thrift and industry that are inherent traits received from a long line of American ancestors who have played no unimportant part in making the nation what it is today.

David E. Cozad was born at Roseville, Warren County, Ill., April 27, 1857. His father, Henry, was a native of New Jersey, and his mother, Mary (Tuttle) Cozad, was born in Pennsylvania, in which state his parents were married. From Pennsylvania they journeyed overland in a wagon to Illinois, where the father farmed in Warren County and worked at carpentering and as a painter. They removed to Iowa when David was between eight and nine years of age, in 1866, and their life was spent on the frontier, keeping in advance of the railway building west through Iowa and Missouri to Nebraska. They lived in many different places and moved often, and when they located at Long Island, Kans., they were thirty miles in advance of the railway. David E. is the fourth child in order of birth in the family of nine children, consisting of one girl and eight boys. The daughter, Elizabeth Hillyard, is a widow and resides at Santa Ana. Stevenson, of Lincoln, Nebr.; James is a rancher in Buaro Precinct; William J. is a storekeeper at Westminster; Charles C. is a carpenter and builder at Santa Ana; Simeon I. clerks in a store at Westminster; Harry W. resides at Santa Ana, and Arthur, the youngest, is a rancher at Hemet.

Mr. Cozad's educational advantages were limited, owing to their frontier life. His marriage occurred in 1880, near Seward, Nebr., and united him with Miss Nancy J. Howard, a native of Lincoln, Nebr., who was educated in the common schools. Her father, Amos M. Howard, was born in Indiana, and her mother, who was Zerelda Ray in maidenhood, was born in Missouri, where her parents were married. She and her brother Titus were the children of her father's first marriage, and they were made half orphans when Mrs. Cozad was seventeen months old, by the death of her mother. Five children resulted from her father's second marriage, four of whom are living. Mrs. Cozad's brother, Titus, is a lawyer at Greeley, Nebr., is county attorney, a Repub-hican of the Forty-ninth District, and still retains his seat in the Nebraska Legislature to which he was elected. Her father was among the early California gold seekers and made his first trip to California in 1849.

E. G. Ware

Mr. and Mrs. Cozad are the parents of seven children, all of whom were born at Long Island, Kans., except Henry A., the eldest, who was born at Seward, Nebr. He is one of the employees of the Fresno Building Association and married Miss Montana Gibson of Los Angeles, and they have two children. Mary Z. is the wife of Fred Hoffmann of Redondo, an employe of the Standard Oil Company at El Segundo, and they have one child. Charles T. died in Kansas City at the age of seven. David J. was accidentally killed in 1905, when nineteen years old, by an electric shock while working as a lineman at Redondo. Leslie E. died when five days old. Florence is the wife of Richard Criddle, a rancher at Gridley, Cal., and they have two children.* Arthur W. is a rancher and owns ten acres in Buaro Precinct; he married Ola Oliphant of Kansas, and they are the parents of one child.

After his marriage Mr. Cozad followed the trade of house painter and decorator for one year at Seward, Nebr., and in 1882 moved to Kansas, where he homesteaded 160 acres at Long Island, proved up on it, sold it, and purchased 160 acres of school land at Long Island. He was principally engaged in farming and raising cattle and swine before he came to California in the spring of 1901. He lived at Redondo in 1902-3, where he was employed as a car builder, and came to Buaro Precinct in 1903, where he purchased forty acres of land, planted twenty acres of it to walnuts and Valencia oranges and gave twenty acres of it to four of his children. Mr. Cozad has the American knack of being able to handle tools of almost every kind, and can do cement work as well as house painting. He and his excellent wife are kindly and hospitable, and Mrs. Cozad is a woman of rare good sense and motherly qualities, a humanitarian in her views and wide-awake to all that is of benefit to the community. Fraternally Mr. Cozad is a member of the Santa Ana lodge of I. O. O. F., and in his political views is a consistent Republican, and both he and his wife are members of the Rebekahs.

EDWARD G. WARE.—A pioneer who deserves the esteem of posterity as well as his contemporaries was the late Edward G. Ware, the planter and grower of the first Valencia oranges in the Garden Grove section. He was born at South Deerfield, Mass., in 1846, the son of Samuel and Mary (Chandler) Ware. The former came to Illinois with his parents when he was twelve years old, and in that state grew to maturity. Mrs. Samuel Ware was born at South Hadley, Mass., and graduated from Mt. Holyoke Seminary. She died at Garden Grove in 1908, aged eighty-seven years.

When Mr. Ware came to Garden Grove, it was a grain field. He tried different kinds of farming, and became much interested in advancing the farming interests here. He took an active interest in farmers' institutes, and was accurate and well posted, and often gave talks and prepared dissertations for his fellows. Later, he took up horticulture, and devoted his attention to both Navel and Valencia oranges, and walnuts. On the ranch at Garden Grove now occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Arthur C. Stanley there still stands the original "Eureka" walnut tree from which all the "Eureka" nut trees in Southern California have originated; also the "Prolific" nut, and the Earhart. All three were propagated and budded here by the late D. C. Dusher, who conducted a nursery and experimental work that later have proved of so much value to the walnut growers of the state. The last named was called after Mr. Earhart because of the fact that he developed the nut that has been such a success for withstanding disease. Such were Mr. Ware's powers of observation and deduction, that the professor of horticulture at the State University called him the best authority on walnuts in the state of California.

As a grower of Valencia oranges Mr. Ware was the pioneer in the Garden Grove section, and enjoyed an enviable local fame. He had prophetic vision, and once said to the pioneer, Albert J. Chaffee, "My daughter will yet live to see the choicest of Valencia oranges in the United States grown here at Garden Grove." In his later years he became interested in poultry, raised white Minorcas, and took the prize at the San Francisco poultry exhibit at the Pacific Panama Exposition.

He married October 14, 1875, at Batavia, Ill., Mary Johnson, and she passed away in 1914. She had been interested particularly in temperance work, and served, with the exception of one year, as secretary of the Garden Grove W. C. T. U. from its organization until she died. They had one child, Lillian Agnes, now Mrs. Arthur C. Stanley, a native of Garden Grove and a graduate of the Santa Ana high school, Class of '97, and Los Angeles Normal School, Class of 1900. She formerly belonged to the M. E. Church, and is now a member of the Friends' Church, in the Alamitos School district, and is active in all church and Sunday School work.

Samuel Ware, the great-grandfather, was a minister in the Congregational Church and was born at Norwich, Mass., on September 5, 1781. He died on August 29, 1866, in Massachusetts. Henry Ward Beecher boarded with him at Amherst while he was a theological student. The progenitor of this family was Robert Ware, who was born in England and came to the Massachusetts Bay Colony some time before the autumn of 1642. When Edward Ware came to Garden Grove in 1876, from San Francisco where he had lived for several years, he purchased his place of forty acres; and at his home, one mile north of Garden Grove, he died on December 17, 1917, and was buried at Santa Ana. He had a wide circle of friends, who appreciated him at his real value and who honored him in death, as they had in life.

HARVEY V. NEWSOM.—A resident of Garden Grove since 1890, Harvey V. Newsom has by his industrious and diligent efforts developed a well-kept citrus grove of ten acres northeast of Garden Grove, and is also the owner of a ten-acre grove of young lemons east of his home place. Mr. Newsom was born near Azalia, Bartholomew County, Ind., October 18, 1866, and is the son of Alfred J. Newsom, who died on August 9, 1920, at Garden Grove, being in his seventy-eighth year; the mother passed away here in 1904. Mr. and Mrs. Alfred J. Newsom were the parents of ten children, eight of whom are living, all residents of California: Harvey V., the subject of this sketch; Benjamin W. is connected with the shipyards at Long Beach; Luther R. is a rancher near Stanton; Joseph A. is at home; Maggie is the wife of Orson Moody, a dairyman at Bishop; William C. is a rancher at Rivera; Annis is the wife of Henry West, an oil man at Fullerton; Willis is a teacher and a rancher, and resides on his ranch near Garden Grove.

The parents moved from Indiana to Iowa in 1869, remaining there for three years, and returning to Indiana; from there they went to Kansas, where they resided for twelve years, coming to California in 1887. They settled at El Modena, and also lived at Pasadena and Burbank before coming to Garden Grove in 1890, and here the family home has since been established.

In 1898 Harvey V. Newsom bought his ranch, then consisting of twenty acres, and began its development, selling ten acres of it in 1906. In 1900 he was united in marriage with Miss Mina A. Robinson, daughter of the pioneer, Richard Robinson, whose biography appears elsewhere in this volume. They are the parents of one daughter, Vesta Marie, a graduate of the Anaheim high school, and now attending Junior College at Santa Ana, and a son, Stanley O., who died in February, 1911. Mr. Newsom located on his place before the building of the Pacific Electric Railway. By dint of hard, painstaking work he has made of his acreage a valuable property and has erected a fine, new bungalow. He is a member of the Orange Growers Association and the Lima Bean Growers Association of Garden Grove, and the Garden Grove Farm Center. A staunch believer in temperance, he has been an adherent of the Prohibition party for many years. Mr. and Mrs. Newsom are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Garden Grove, and are highly respected citizens of the community.

JASPER N. DE VAUL.—A pioneer couple representing, in their historic American ancestry, some of the best of American brain and brawn, are Mr. and Mrs. Jasper N. De Vul, who live three-quarters of a mile northeast of Garden Grove. He was born in Grundy County, near Trenton, Mo., on January 31, 1845, the son of James R. De Vul, and the grandson of Daniel P. De Vul, a veteran of the War of 1812. The De Vauls were among the first whites to settle at Trenton, having come overland from Kentucky to Missouri, and James De Vul served as a soldier in the Black Hawk War. Daniel De Vul joined the Argonauts of '49 and came to California, where he mined at Placerville; and shifting to San Benito County, then Monterey County, he died there, aged seventy-six. James De Vul continued in Missouri and married Miss Sarah Howel; and in 1880 he moved to Oregon, and settled at Myrtle Point. After lives, respectively, of ninety-three and seventy-eight years, Mr. and Mrs. De Vul passed away in their northern home. They had twelve children, eight boys and four girls, among whom Jasper N. was the fourth in the order of birth.

He attended the little log schoolhouse of his native district, and in 1863, during the Civil War, served for five months in the state militia. In 1864 he crossed the plains with an ox-team train, driving a four-mule team, and taking five months for the journey. He stopped at Woodbridge, eighteen miles north of Stockton, and there worked on a ranch. He was married in San Jose to Miss Mary Meadows, and by her had three children—Nettie, Emma and William. He was married a second time, in 1880, to Miss Marv Holt, a native of Nova Scotia, and the daughter of J. W. and Nancy (Peel) Holt, Nova Scotians of English blood. The father went to sea until he was twenty-five, when he married and took up farming; and in 1868 they came to California with their family, and making the neighborhood of Hollister their headquarters, they moved around considerably. The father died, at the age of eighty-eight.

Mr. and Mrs. De Vault lived for eight years at Lompoc, and their next move was to Garden Grove, coming there in 1890. They have had five children: Eugene is field manager for the Anaheim Sugar Company, and married Miss Jessie Hickman of Bolsa; they have one son, and reside at Santa Ana; Ira is a rancher near Garden Grove; he married Lulu Chase of Alhambra, and they have one daughter; Oscar died at Lompoc, seven months old; Eva is the wife of W. F. Winters of Garden Grove, and they have two children, and Iola married Earl Crane, an apiarist, and has one daughter. Mr. Crane was in England during the war, and had his right arm badly wounded, and is now a student in the Agricultural College at Davis, Cal. Both Mr. and Mrs. De Vault are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Garden Grove, and are Republicans, and in every loyal way participated in war activities.

Having become the owner of some sixty acres, Mr. De Vault has farmed the same; while Mrs. De Vault, having inherited twenty-five acres, retains fifteen for farming. Ten acres are set out to walnuts and two to oranges. They maintain a home that is a model for comfort and attractiveness, and they dispense, in modest but sincere fashion, an old-time, warming hospitality.

JOSEPH M. BACKS, JR.—Orange County points with pride to the rank and file of its public servants, nor need one be surprised in view of the record of such men as Joseph M. Backs, Jr., the efficient and popular county clerk. A native son, fortunate in starting life in intimate touch with the great commonwealth whose destinies he has been called upon to shape, he was born at Anaheim on April 17, 1876. His parents were Joseph and Catherine (Heyermann) Backs, the father being one of Anaheim's pioneers and prominent in the mercantile life of that city for many years; the birthplace of the mother was in Mexico, and she later removed to San Francisco with her father, Dr. A. F. Heyermann, who was at one time connected with the German Hospital, and also for many years engaged in the drug business in that city.

Coming to Los Angeles in December, 1869, then a straggling village, bearing little resemblance to its present metropolitan proportions, Joseph Backs, Sr., for a time worked at his trade of carpenter and cabinetmaker, and then, with his brother Ferdinand, embarked in the furniture business, conducting the same for a year, when it was sold. In 1871 the brothers came to Anaheim, where they assisted in furnishing and equipping the two hotels there, after which they started a business of their own, under the firm name of F. & J. Backs, this partnership continuing until 1890, when the business was divided, Joseph Backs continuing in business for himself. He was a pioneer furniture dealer and the first undertaker and embalmer in Anaheim, and in this capacity, as well as in a general business way, he was widely known, not only in Orange County, but in neighboring environs. He continued actively in business until 1914, when he sold out, and now he is living retired at his Anaheim home, his beloved wife having departed this world in 1918. Mr. and Mrs. Backs were the parents of seven children: Joseph M., Sophia, Katie M., Frieda, Adolph, Clementina and Edward. All are living and are residents of Orange County.

The eldest of the family, Joseph M. Backs, Jr., attended the public schools, and also the Woodbury Business College in Los Angeles, where he received an excellent preparation for some of the work he has since been called upon to do. From boyhood he assisted his father in the business mornings and evenings and during his vacations, later working for two and a half years for H. A. Dickel in the general merchandise business. Another profitable year of good training was spent in the main post office at Los Angeles, when it was located at Eighth and Spring streets. Returning to Anaheim he entered the employ of the Union Telephone and Telegraph Company, first as manager for the northern half of Orange County, becoming district manager in 1909, having under his supervision all of Orange County, and maintaining his headquarters at Santa Ana. Continuing in this position until 1912, he resigned to become deputy county clerk under W. B. Williams. At the August Primary in 1918 he was elected to the office of county clerk for a four-year term, hence, there was no opposing candidate at the November election, and this office he is now occupying to the greatest satisfaction of all his constituents.

At Anaheim, April 15, 1903, occurred the marriage of Joseph M. Backs, Jr., when he was united with Miss Ella Warner, a native of Minnesota, who came with her parents to Anaheim in her girlhood, and there it was she received her education and was one of the popular belles of the place. One child has blessed this union, a daughter named Edna Inez. Fraternally, Mr. Backs is a member of the Elks, and in national politics is a Republican. About the time he reached his majority Joseph Backs, Jr., served as a member of Company E, Seventh Regiment, California National Guard, and being fortunate in the inheritance of a strong interest in and love for California and Orange County transmitted from parents, who are among the most highly esteemed pioneers of the section, it is little wonder that he loyally responded and served acceptably as a member of the registration board during the recent war and was active in all the bond and war drives, and as such sought to do his civic duty in the highest degree possible.

A splendid type of man, Mr. Backs is faithfully serving the citizens of the county, and through his affable manner and his readiness to assist anyone deserving information regarding the office or their affairs in connection with the county, as well as other investigations they may be making, has so endeared him to the people that he has become one of the most popular officials. His mind and heart have been engrossed in the well being of the county, and such has been his success in the solution of problems that his fellow-citizens more and more have reposed confidence in him. Liberal and kind hearted, his pleasing personality has attracted hosts of friends, who appreciate and esteem him for his nobleness of mind and heart. Thus, still in the prime of life, with apparently many years of usefulness before him, Mr. Backs already enjoys a prestige and confidence accorded to but few.

JONATHAN HARMON.—Honored among the interesting pioneers of California, and destined long to be held in grateful remembrance for his part in developing the Golden State, is Jonathan Harmon, who crossed the great plains with his father's family in 1852, a well-to-do rancher and prominent old settler of the vicinity of Santa Ana. They traveled with mule teams, and spent five years as placer miners in the gold regions of Sierra and Plumas counties. In 1857 the family moved to Petaluma, in Sonoma County, and so it happened that they saw California in her formative days.

Mr. Harmon was born at Olean, N. Y., on October 8, 1841, the son of Luther N. Harmon, who was born in Suffield, Conn., a member of the same family as the Hon. Judson Harmon, ex-Governor of Ohio. Two Harmon brothers came from England to America in 1645, and John was the progenitor of this family. While in Erie County, New York, Luther Harmon married Miss Martha Hall; and he being a hatter, and she a tailoress, they were able somewhat to work together in times that were hard. It is no wonder that with a state of affairs when there was little or no money, the effect of the discovery of gold in California was such as to induce the elder Harmon to migrate to the Pacific Coast and to try his fortune here. He set out from Grand Rapids, Mich., in 1850, mined for gold successfully, and had the good fortune to be here early enough to vote upon the admission of the state. But he did not reach that goal without adventures that might have cost him more than they did. On his first trip across the plains in 1850, the Indians stole his horses, and he had to travel 300 miles afoot. Later, however, he went back to Michigan, and in 1852 brought his family here.

Jonathan Harmon grew up in Petaluma, and early worked in the mines in the northern part of the state, and at Petaluma, in 1870, he was married to Miss Martha E. Warren, a native of Lorain County, Ohio, who came to California with her parents in 1864. In Sonoma County Mr. Harmon cleared a farm of the stumps and improved the place, and little by little set out orchards until he had one of the show places in Sonoma County, with a large, beautiful residence and farm buildings. He had a variety of fruit trees, and at the Sonoma County fair took the sweepstake premium for the finest exhibit of fruit from one farm. However, wishing to locate in Southern California, he came south to Santa Ana, in what was then Los Angeles County, in 1888, at the height of the boom, and bought sixty acres of land; and to this he has added from time to time by subsequent purchases, so that he is now owner of 140 acres of the most desirable land. He has sunk wells and equipped a pumping plant not only sufficient to irrigate his own ranch, but furnishes water for irrigation to several of his neighbors. His ranch is equipped with cement pipe lines, this complete irrigating system making it one of the most valuable ranches in the district.

He is a member of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Santa Ana, as was Mrs. Harmon, who died in 1918, at the fine old age of seventy-two years. Two children blessed their fortunate union: Edward W., a successful dairyman on a part of the Harmon ranch, and John W., an orchardist at Nuevo, in Riverside County.

As a Republican, Mr. Harmon voted for Abraham Lincoln—the first vote he ever cast—an incident of which not so very many men living can boast; but he is really nonpartisan, especially in his attitude toward local men and measures, and always endeavors to satisfy his conscience, and to base his action on principle. In recent years he has favored Prohibition.

VARD W. HANNUM.—A well-trained and thoroughly efficient public official is Vard W. Hannum, the city electrician and superintendent of the Municipal Power House at Anaheim. He was born in Hart, Oceana County, Mich., on June 28, 1883, and reared and educated there, duly graduating from the local high school. Then he went to New York City and took the excellent courses at the New York Electrical School, and from 1910 he was employed in the electrical department of the Union Carbide Company at Sault Sainte Marie, Mich., after which he was a year with the Algoma Steel Company on the Canadian side.

In the fall of 1911 Mr. Hannum came to California and entered the service of the Pacific Electric Railroad Company, Los Angeles, giving them a year in their electrical department, in installation work at the substation. On August 12, 1912, he came to Anaheim and commenced to work for the municipality. He began in a somewhat subordinate capacity, as one of the engineers, then as foreman, and gradually and properly worked his way up to his present responsible post, to which he was appointed in February, 1917.

Mr. Hannum has charge of the operation of the power plant, and is also responsible for electrical inspection of the city, so that, with the necessity of keeping thoroughly apace with the last word of science and mechanics, and the actual labor of installing, repairing and renewing parts of the system, it will be seen that he is a very busy man. Fortunately for the city of Anaheim, he had years of most valuable experience before he came, to which his day and night labors are constantly adding, and he is fond of hard work, and both mentally and physically able to bear the strain.

In December, 1912, Mr. Hannum was married to Miss Bessie L. Palmiter of Hart, Mich., a charming lady, capable at all times of creating for herself a desirable circle of devoted friends, and herself devoted to others, and ready for any good work. Mr. Hannum belongs to the Wigton Lodge No. 251, F. & A. M., at Hart, Mich. and to Anaheim Lodge No. 1345 of the Elks.

WILLIAM H. PHILLIPS.—A veteran citrus grower who may well take pride in his accomplishment, including the rebudding on an entire grove with his own hands, is William H. Phillips, a splendid old man of nearly eighty years, living on Fairhaven Avenue near Prospect in Orange. He was born near Munfordville, Ky., on June 7, 1842, the son of William Newton and Mary (Moss) Phillips, old settlers of that state. He grew up on his father's farm of 400 acres located on the Green River, and enjoyed a good grammar school education and the comforts of a good home. At twenty-one he left home to seek his own fortune. He purchased seventy-five acres across the Green River from his old home, and started to farm. He also married, in October, 1871, Miss Emma Hodges, who was born in the vicinity of Munfordville, and received a good education at Georgetown College. She made her home with her parents until she was married, and for seven years after they took up their residence on the farm she enjoyed life there, when she passed away.

In 1878 Mr. Phillips sold out his holdings, and with four motherless children started for California, arriving in Santa Ana on March 17, 1878. Porter, the eldest of the family, died in California at the age of twenty. William Albert is living at Orange, and is in the real estate business. Cora Hanson is married to Edward Gray, and is living with Mr. Phillips in Fairhaven. Mary K. is married to L. Hutchins of Alhambra. In 1880 Mr. Phillips was married to Mary Ella Crozier, a widowed mother of two children—Payne and Nancy, and this union was blessed with two children—Robert Ethel and Ernest C. Robert Ethel is a graduate of the Cummock School of Expression, and is now teaching at that institution, and Ernest C. Phillips, also a graduate of the above school, traveled a season with Madame Modjeska and her company, and is now teaching expression in the Santa Ana high school.

After arriving in California, Mr. Phillips purchased twenty acres on Tustin and Fairhaven thoroughfares, land now owned by Henry Rohrs, which was devoted to general farming. He raised two crops of potatoes each year for nineteen consecutive years, and also raised some corn, broom corn and popcorn. He lived there for eleven years, and there the children grew up. In 1889 he removed to Tustin, to his wife's ranch, where the next nineteen years were spent.

In 1908 Mr. Phillips purchased his present home site of ten acres on Fairhaven Avenue. It is devoted to budded Valencias, and he has one of the finest orchards in all Orange County. The grove is under the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company. Here he built for himself a beautiful home and large garage, and made many other improvements. He is a live citizen, and aims to support the right candidate, rather than any party. He is a member of the McPherson Heights Citrus Association and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He is now one among the oldest settlers in these parts, and has aided materially in its upbuilding.

JOSEPH H. MEFFORD.—Among the ablest drillers of water wells in Orange County—an industry, by the way, of greatest importance to the ranchers of this section, and one requiring, more and more, men of highest expert training—is J. H. Mefford, who has resided in Santa Ana for twelve years, and in Orange County ever since its organization. He was here, in fact, "before the creation," for he was born in San Diego County, on February 17, 1869, and as a boy roamed over the picturesque area now dotted with towns and thousands of homes. He came to the Westminster country in Los Angeles, now Orange, County when a lad, and grew up on a farm there. He also attended the public schools; and if they were not of the best or their sessions of the longest, he got out of the instruction imparted what he could.

When old enough to do so, Mr. Mefford began to work in the water fields. He sought and secured a position with Joe Caldwell of Westminster, than whom, perhaps, no better master mechanic could be found engaged in that occupation; with the result, that when he had finished his apprenticeship, he and Joe were about evenly mated, the one scoring some points of advantage over the other.

In October, 1917, at Riverside, Mr. Mefford was married to Mrs. J. H. Roberts, whose maiden name was Laura J. Clatworthy, a native of England who came to and settled in America, and finally very wisely chose California for her home, where she has lived for twenty-five years. With her domestic experience, she was able to accord home comforts to our subject, and thus to help lighten the arduous work in which he was daily engaged, and by which he was to build up that enviable reputation of having drilled good wells all over the county.

Mr. Mefford started in business for himself at Santa Ana twenty years ago, and since then he has contributed much to the great work of developing water in Southern California. He understands the difficult technical processes involved, and he also has special gifts in divining the sources of good water. His years of hard labor have enabled him to boast of hundreds of satisfied customers, and among other places of note owing half of their success, in the matter of natural resources, to his skill in commanding an adequate water supply, may be mentioned the famous Irvine Ranch. Mr. and Mrs. Mefford live at 1004 West Fourth Street, Santa Ana, where they dispense a whole-hearted hospitality to their friends.

Mr. Mefford enlisted for service in the Spanish-American War in Company L, Seventh Regiment, United States Volunteers, and was encamped in San Francisco. For twenty years he was a member of the Orange County baseball nines, and in that wholesome sport he is favorably known by many.

MRS. MARY N. TONEY.—A well-traveled resident of Santa Ana, who has chosen Southern California for her home, and has come to be favorably known as one of the successful orange growers contributing to the wealth of the Golden State, is Mrs. Mary E. Toney, widow of the late S. Toliver Toney, of 826 North Baker Street. She was born near Little Rock, Ark., on March 30, 1854, the daughter of Benjamin and Sobrina (Stover) Large. Her father was a blacksmith by trade, and he also became a landowner in Arkansas. When three years old, she was brought by her parents to California and given a home in Shasta County, where Mr. Large followed his trade at the mining centers. After a while he purchased some Shasta County acreage and engaged in cattle raising.

In 1859 Mr. Large sold out and removed to Hydesville, Humboldt County, where he followed his usual occupation, and from there he went to Trinity County, where he had a shop and ran a hotel at Hayfork, near Weaverville, for a short time. Then he went up into Shasta County on the old overland stage trail between Red Bluff and Yreka, and opened the Loomis House, which he conducted for several years, becoming well-known to all the early travelers. He returned to Hay Fork, bought a hotel, and ran it till he moved to Mendocino County. He made several moves, and finally passed away at Hayfork. The old hotel is owned by his daughter and conducted as the Kellogg Hotel by his grandson. Mr. Large was a Democrat in politics and a Mason.

It was in Mendocino County that Miss Mary Large met and married, at Willits, on November 8, 1870, S. Toliver Toney, a native of Fayette County, Texas, where he was born on November 17, 1846. His parents were Seth and Mary Adaline (Cox) Toney, natives of Mississippi and Georgia, respectively. When S. Toliver was eight years of age the family came overland to California from Texas, during which time the Indians were very troublesome, but the wagon train, of which Seth Toney was captain, managed to get through all right, due, perhaps, to the fact that the captain understood Indians, having fought as a volunteer from Texas in the Mexican War. Arriving in California, the Toney family stopped for a time at El Monte, then moved on to Mendocino County and built up a fine home place near Willits. The reason of the Toney immigration to California was that Mrs. Seth Toney's father, the Rev.

Joe H. Mefford

John Toliver Cox, and family had preceded them, having come by the Isthmus of Panama in the early 50's, settling first at San Bernardino. Reverend Cox was a Methodist preacher, and was well known all over the state of California. He finally settled near Santa Rosa, and when he died, about 1866, he had accomplished much for humanity during his span of life. He is buried at Mark West in Sonoma County. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity.

S. Toliver Toney was extensively engaged in the raising of sheep in Mendocino County, and Mrs. Toney lived for eleven years near Willitts. Then Mr. Toney sold out, and the industrious couple, feeling the need of rest, spent some time in travel. Finally, in 1884, he settled in New Mexico, where Mr. Toney purchased land near Lordsburg and Silver City and again engaged in cattle raising. In 1905, however, he removed to Douglas, Ariz., where he met with his best success in the cattle industry.

In 1914 Mr. Toney settled up his affairs in Arizona, came to Santa Ana, and purchased a half acre of oranges and a home on East Seventeenth Street, and there, on July 20, 1916, he passed away and was buried at Redlands. He had a wide circle of admiring friends. Mrs. Toney lived at the Seventeenth Street home until February 18, 1920, when the place was sold, and a week later her present home at 826 North Baker Street was purchased. This is a three-acre grove, one-third of which is set out to oranges, and two-thirds to walnuts and apricots.

Mrs. Toney is a member of the Spurgeon Memorial Methodist Church of Santa Ana, and continues to take a live interest in public affairs, as did her lamented husband, who was a school director in both Arizona and New Mexico. She has had six children, and three are still granted her. Mrs. Sarah C. Harper is the widow of the late Francis M. Harper of Deming, New Mexico. William Toliver is a cattleman of Superior, Ariz. Mrs. Maude E. Cox is the widow of Thomas M. Cox, and lives at home with her mother. She was born in Alhambra, N. M., attended the district schools of Silver City, in that state, and on March 7, 1906, was married to Thomas M. Cox. Mrs. Toney has fifteen grandchildren and eleven great-grandchildren living.

DALLISON SMITH LINEBARGER.—Prominent both in civic affairs and in the horticultural development of Orange County, Dallison Smith Linebarger is a native of Oregon, born near Albany, August 1, 1862. When he was a small child the family moved to California, and he was reared in Ventura County, where he later followed stock raising and ranching. As early as 1899 he located in Fullerton, and bought the livery stable of Thomas Jennings, and with two partners established the business under the firm name of Davis, Drown and Linebarger. They also owned a branch stable at Olinda and besides doing a large livery business they did teaming to the oil fields, hauling derricks and machinery. Mr. Linebarger was general manager of the concern, which was conducted on an unusually large scale, using fifty head of horses, a large bus, and all the necessary equipment for the success of such an establishment.

During this time Mr. Linebarger followed ranching as a side issue, raising stock and grain in Los Angeles and Orange counties, also owning an orange grove near Yorba, which he later sold. In 1910, he sold out his interest in the livery business and that year he began the development of some land which later was increased to about seventy acres, lying between Fullerton and Brea, and this he has developed into one of the finest orange and lemon orchards in the county; forty-two acres are in lemons, and the balance in Navel and Valencia oranges. It has taken large sums of money and hard work to bring the property into its present state of cultivation, but the right man was at the helm, and it is now in full bearing, with three wells and pumping plants installed and cement pipe lines for irrigating purposes; one of the show places of Orange County.

As further evidence of his devotion to the advancement of his section, Mr. Linebarger has served ten years as supervisor of Orange County, being elected to the office three times on the Democratic ticket in a strong Republican district, the Third. During his term of office the good roads movement was started, and many of the beautiful boulevards which have made Orange County famous were begun by the sale of bonds.

The marriage of Mr. Linebarger, which occurred in Ventura County in 1882, united him with Ellen Stone, and six children were born to them, five of whom are living: Cephas A., William L., Archie A., Mrs. Clara McWilliams, and Clema D. The sons are all ranching for themselves and meeting with the success warranted by the sons of such a father. It is to such men as Dallison Smith Linebarger that Orange County owes its rapid rise to prosperity, and they and their families make up the representative citizenry of this wonderful county, which stands apart even in a state full of wonders. Mr. Linebarger is a member of the Fullerton Lodge of Odd Fellows.

GEORGE L. WRIGHT.—A wide-awake caterer to the public, who has come to establish one of the most prosperous enterprises in Santa Ana, is George L. Wright, proprietor of Wright's Transfer, now an indispensable organization in local life. He was born near Osage, in Mitchell County, Iowa, on July 23, 1860, the son of John A. Wright, a farmer. His mother before her marriage was Miss Mary Fay. The family came West and the father died in California four years later, or in 1913. The good mother also passed away. There were seven children in the family, and George was the third child.

He attended the schools of Iowa as a boy, and then helped his father at farm work. Then he wandered to South Dakota for a couple of years, and on December 19, 1885, arrived in Santa Ana. For a year he busied himself with real estate, and then he worked as a carpenter until he went into the transfer business. On July 3, 1887, he started his venture with one horse, and now, as the oldest transfer proprietor in the city, and the one operating most extensively, he has three auto trucks, and cares for most of the Santa Ana transfer trade.

But Mr. Wright has not only made a success in private business enterprises, he has also participated, as a man full of civic pride, in public life. His national political bias makes him a Republican, and his known fitness for the responsibility of a city father led to his being elected councilman for four years. He held office during the term when the city hall was erected, and he was also charged with the duty of providing an addition to the waterworks and of extending the city's paving. One of the pioneers of Santa Ana, he has seen the city grow from a mere village.

Mr. Wright has resided here long enough to recount the building-up of the entire city of Santa Ana, and in fact the development of Orange County, for he tells of when there were but few business blocks—and they were of pioneer construction—and the streets were unpaved. Nor were there any oranges or walnuts growing hereabouts; the principal industry was the growing of grapes for raisins but the soil was not adapted for their successful culture and the business was later abandoned. He remembers the time when but ten carloads of oranges were shipped from the state and when 110 cars of raisins were sent out from Orange alone. The old pioneers are passing away and to hear such men as Mr. Wright tell again the story of the local conditions is an interesting circumstance. He has always put his shoulder to the wheel and given every project the necessary "boost" to bring Orange County before the eyes of the world at large.

In 1887 Mr. Wright married Emma Moore, and their union was blessed with the birth of four children. Fay Linton has been both a private soldier and instructor in the United States Aviation service and he married Miss Avis Winkle, born in Orange County the daughter of a pioneer family; while Mary has become Mrs. E. T. Brennan. Burton is at Berkeley, attending the State University. Vera died when she was ten and a half years of age. The family are Unitarians and Mr. Wright belongs to the Odd Fellows, the Woodmen of the World, and the Fraternal Brotherhood.

ALBERT C. WILLIAMS.—A financier and a vigorous promoter of everything calculated to steady the financial resources of both Tustin and Orange County, Albert C. Williams is a native son of California, born near Healdsburg, Sonoma County, October 15, 1858, the only son of Washington Williams, who was born in Missouri and came to California, across the plains, in 1853. Here he had married Elizabeth Martin, a native of Tennessee, and a member of a family well-known in Georgia, whence they originated. They came to California in 1856 by the overland route, in an ox-team train, and located in Sonoma County, and so they also became pioneers of the Golden State. Mrs. Williams failed to enjoy the best of health in the North, and she and her husband came south to Tustin in 1874, arriving here on September 23, after twenty-two days of hardship, crossing the mountains with teams. Washington Williams died in 1911, and his devoted wife followed him three years later.

After completing this arduous journey with all their supplies, Mr. Williams and his family located on twenty acres on what is now known as Williams Street—a thoroughfare bearing their name—and McFadden Street, in Tustin, and Albert C. Williams, in 1874, helped his father to erect the temporary dwelling that two years later was supplanted by a better home. The son also worked upon the farm, while he attended the grammar school at Tustin. His father acquired twenty-four acres at Delhi, which was also farmed to grain and stock. He was an agriculturist and an horticulturist, and he owned several threshing outfits. Associated with his father, A. C. Williams withstood the disastrous effects of the several dry years, and by "sticking it out" reaped the benefits. In 1880 he took a trip north to Oregon, driving four horses hitched to a big covered wagon, going via Siskiyou and Jacksonville, returning to Crescent City, Cal., and there he remained for a winter, coming back to Tustin in May, 1881. When he was twenty-two years old he worked a vineyard.

Geo L. Wright.

at Villa Park, raising grapes, apricots and apples. He set the land later to walnuts, receiving as his share sixteen acres of the thirty-six acres. At the present time he owns nine acres—four and a half on each side of Williams Street—and his last crop of walnuts was nine tons. He markets through the Santa Ana Walnut Association, and is a member of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company. In 1888 he went north to Fresno County, purchased eighty acres there, and set the same out as a vineyard. He also has financial interests in oil and mining stocks.

On November 6, 1889, Mr. Williams was married to Caroline Fatima England, a native of Calaveras County, Cal., and three children have made still happier their union: Ralph E. married Miss Lorina Burd of Santa Ana, and they have one son, Howard E. When Ralph was sixteen years old he entered the Glenn Martin Auto Machine Shop, and later, when Martin began to make aeroplanes, he helped him with the first plane ever constructed in Santa Ana. Martin went East after a few years, and became famous. Then Ralph entered the employ of the William F. Lutz Company, and he also worked for the Santa Ana Commercial Company, and it was while there that he started his own shop, in 1915. A. C. and Ralph E. Williams, father and son, became interested in the manufacture of "Silver Beam" spotlights, and they enlarged their factory; soon, however, removing to Los Angeles, where they were afforded greater facilities. Ralph is now secretary and manager, and A. C. is vice-president, and the company is known as the Williams Manufacturing Company, and is incorporated under the laws of California. Ernest R., the second son in the order of birth, is foreman of the machine shop in the Williams Manufacturing Company, and is an expert tool maker. He married Miss Marguerite Ruth Brown, of Princeton, N. J. He enlisted in the recent war, and served his country from January 1 to December 3, 1918. Albert G. is a graduate from the Tustin grammar school, class of 1920.

Mrs. Williams was active in Red Cross work during the World War, and the whole family generously supported the various loan drives. Mr. and Mrs. Williams are both members of the Fraternal Aid Union, in which Mr. Williams has gone through the various chairs. They also belong to the Methodist Church. Mr. Williams is a Democrat, but not an office seeker, and believes in both trying to make the world better, and in enjoying the world as it is.

WILLIAM T. MITCHELL.—An aggressive and successful real estate operator who has attained both influence and affluence despite the handicaps of early life, is William T. Mitchell, a native of Cedar County, Mo., where he was born on a farm on August 9, 1866. His father was James C. Mitchell, a farmer, and he married Miss Jane Fleeman, who shared the hard work of an agricultural life.

Because of the conditions at home, William enjoyed but very limited educational advantages, and when the opportunity presented itself, he learned and followed the carpenter's trade. In 1903 he came to Santa Ana, and for a while he worked as a carpenter for A. C. Black. Then, with C. G. Ramsey he engaged in contracting, and finally he undertook contracting and building for himself. He has erected many of the better class residences in the city.

In 1918, on account of war conditions, Mr. Mitchell entered the real estate field, and therein he has been very successful. His practical experience as a builder, and his wide knowledge of realty and other matters in California, together with his good judgment and high sense of honor, have enabled him to be of much service to others in advising them reliably as to purchase, sales, or investments.

On Christmas Day, 1889, Mr. Mitchell was married to Sarah Elizabeth Savage, and three children have blessed their union. Cammie B. is Mrs. L. S. Haven; and there are Philip T. and John B. The family attend the Christian Church, and Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell have long been active workers in the cause of prohibition.

EDWARD A. LONG.—A worthy descendant of an honored pioneer family of Orange County, Edward A. Long, the successful truck farmer, residing southeast of Stanton, was born at Santa Ana on October 15, 1878, the son of Thomas Y. and Melissa A. (DeWitt) Long. In 1859 Thomas Y. Long crossed the plains from Texas to California in an emigrant train of oxen and wagons. Without the fearless and courageous pioneers who endured the hardships and dangers and the discomforts of pioneer life and modes of traveling, the great commonwealth of California would still be a wilderness with barren plains. Those who have more recently come to California to enjoy the highly improved conditions existing today do not always realize what a great debt of gratitude they owe to these early settlers, who laid the foundations of a greater civilization and permanent prosperity.

Thomas Y. Long was born in Tennessee, and was eighteen years old when members of the Long family, consisting of his father and mother and his brothers and sisters, as well as some of their friends, making up a train of some twenty-three people, started on the long overland journey to California. The company invested their money in cattle, buying them for five dollars per head, and accumulating about 3,000 head which they planned to drive across the plains and mountains into the Golden State of which they had heard so much, and where they anticipated disposing of the entire band at a good profit. In crossing the Indian infested plains in Arizona the company were many times attacked by the Apache Indians, who finally overpowered them and succeeded in stampeding and capturing the entire herd of cattle, leaving only the wagons and oxen. After a long, tiresome and hazardous journey of five months the train reached California.

Arriving in this state the Long family located in San Bernardino County, where Thomas Y. engaged in teaming to and from Anaheim Landing and onto the desert to the mines and he also mined for a time. He was married in San Bernardino to Miss Melissa A. De Witt, a native of Iowa but who had been brought across the plains by her parents when she was a small child. She was reared and educated in San Bernardino and they lived there for two years after their marriage and then Mr. Long bought twenty acres of land south from Santa Ana, paying thirty-five dollars an acre for it. That land is now, with improvements, easily worth thousands of dollars per acre. He improved the ranch and lived there with his family until the fall of 1888, then sold out and moved to the vicinity of Garden Grove and in that locality members of the family have since lived and prospered. It was on their home place there that both Mr. and Mrs. Long passed their last days. He died in 1905 at the age of sixty-one, his widow surviving until April, 1919, when she passed away at the age of sixty-nine. They became the parents of six children: Thomas is deceased; Edward A. of this review; Lena became the wife of E. E. Miles; Jesse is a rancher near Stanton; Ray is also living nearby; Nellie became the wife of Arthur Lindley a rancher in this county.

Edward A. Long, the subject of this review, born at Santa Ana, was reared and educated in Orange County. With the exception of fifteen years spent in the well-drilling business, he has followed farming and now owns a twenty-acre ranch southeast of Stanton, where he carries on truck farming.

In 1905 Mr. Long was united in marriage with Miss Winifred McKee, daughter of Joseph and Mattie (Funk) McKee. Three children have been born to them, only one of whom, Helen, is living. Mr. Long is held in high esteem in the community and is rated as one of its substantial and progressive citizens.

FREDERICK H. TAYLOR.—The trite saying, "Tall oaks from little acorns grow," in illustrating the magnitude that may be attained from very small beginnings, has an exemplification in the growth and importance that Taylor's factory, at Santa Ana, Cal., for preserving California fruits, has attained. Fred H. Taylor, president of the company, was born at Freeport, Ill., July 8, 1877, and is the son of Fred G. and Elizabeth (Sharp) Taylor, who came to California from their Eastern home in 1886 and located at Santa Ana. The mother of the family, in common with other good housekeepers, looked after the interests of her family table by preserving fruit for family use. Then, wishing her Eastern friends to taste of the toothsome dainties that California produced, she sent some of it to old friends in the East. They were so pleased that their appetites were whetted for more, and from a few pounds of preserves prepared on the kitchen stove the birth of a new industry was heralded. Tons of fruit are annually prepared and shipped to various places all over the United States. The large plant occupies a commodious concrete building equipped with all necessary modern machinery to facilitate the preparation of the fruit for consumption. One hundred and fifty people are employed in preparing it, and the pay roll amounts to $50,000 per annum, while business amounting to over $300,000 annually is transacted.

Fred H. was a lad of seven years of age when he came with his parents to California, and his education was acquired in the public schools and in the larger school of experience. When the business began to expand, he with his brother J. E., took over the management of the business, the mother retaining her interest in the same. In January, 1918, Fred H. took over the interest of his brother, and in March, 1918, he incorporated the business as Taylor's, a close corporation, of which he is president and manager; he has enlarged the plant, the new buildings all being constructed of concrete and are fireproof. The large warehouse on East Fourth Street has sidings from both the Southern Pacific and the Santa Fe railroads.

A very interesting feature of the business is the marketing of the product, for all of the goods are sold directly to the consumer, with a trade now reaching into nearly every state in the Union. After twenty-seven years the business has grown to such proportions that it is now the largest of its kind in the county, and the goods are still prepared practically the same as when they started on the cook stove, only on a larger scale. Mr. Taylor has personally made and invented appliances to facili tate the manufacture, which has increased from 100 cans to 20,000 cans, and each can has the same care as when they started. The company built and own their twenty-ton ice plant, as well as a commercial storage plant with a capacity of twelve cars.

Mr. Taylor's marriage occurred in Sacramento January 1, 1905, uniting his destiny with Miss Rena Collins, a native of Iowa, whose father, the late W. H. Collins, one of the early business men of Santa Ana, located here as early as 1887. Two children have been born of this union: Phillip and Marguerite. Politically Mr. Taylor is a strong Republican, and fraternally is a member of the Elks.

Active in civic and business circles, Mr. Taylor is energetic and progressive, giving his support to all measures that contribute to the general welfare, and taking a deep interest in the growth and development of Orange County.

JOHN McMILLAN.—Prominent among the public officials in California of whom the United States Government may well be proud is John McMillan, the experienced and attentive postmaster at Newport. He was born at Campbelltown, Argyleshire, Scotland, on February 5, 1862, and grew up in the land of Scott and Burns until he was eighteen years of age. He learned the sailmaker's trade, and as a sailmaker went to sea for ten years, making the journey from London to Australia and return several times. In January, 1881, he came to the Pacific Coast, and sailed north from San Francisco to Eureka, and south to San Diego.

He visited Santa Ana, and after his marriage there, on December 13, 1884, to Miss Annie Mills of that city, he traveled on the tow boats from San Pedro to and from Catalina, meanwhile, until 1893, residing at San Pedro. In that year, he located at Newport, which he had first visited in 1881. He is therefore the oldest actual, continuous resident of Newport, and well merits the position of responsibility in the service of the municipality, being in charge of the water department. The water for Newport is obtained from artesian wells about four miles northwest of the town, one of the wells being 242 feet, and the other two each 264 feet deep, and is pumped into a reservoir located on the Newport Heights, and thence by gravity it goes over to Corona del Mar, Balboa and Newport. The system and supply are all that could be desired, proving one of the important attractions to would-be settlers here.

On January 28, 1908, Mr. McMillan was appointed postmaster of the town, and that dignified office he has held ever since. He has two deputy postmasters, or post-mistresses—Mrs. A. E. Jasper of Newport Beach, and Mrs. Ida Durkee of the same place, who share his popularity with the discriminating folk of the community.

Five children have blessed the fortunate union of Mr. and Mrs. McMillan: Hugh is the well-known real estate dealer at Newport Beach; Neil is employed near by; John is a student at the Santa Ana high school; Sadie is the wife of W. A. Irwin, the realty dealer of Newport Beach, and Agnes married Don Kelly, the rancher, of Burbank. Mr. McMillan has an interest in the Newport Syndicate. He is also interested, but in another manner, in the Knights of Pythias of Santa Ana, being one of its most popular members.

HENRY WEST.—A sturdy old pioneer whose devotion to home duties, together with an intensely patriotic interest in the world-events of recent, exciting years have undoubtedly contributed to keep him hale and hearty when nearly eighty years of age, is Henry West, who was born on March 11, 1843, in the beautiful Wiltshire country of England. His parents were Stephen and Eliza West, and his father was a mechanic. The lad enjoyed a good common school education, and then learned the carpenter's trade, at which he worked for ten years in London.

In the world's metropolis, too, on December 23, 1871, he was married to Miss Sabina H. Austing, a native of London, where she was born on March 16, 1850. Her parents were James and Sarah Austing, and her father was a brass worker. She was educated in a private school in London. On May 1, 1872, Mr. and Mrs. West migrated to America, and soon after they came west to the Pacific Coast, arriving in San Francisco on May 13.

For a while Mr. West worked in a planing mill near the water front, but in November, 1874, he came to Southern California, and traveling over San Gabriel, El Monte and east as far as San Bernardino, returned to Los Angeles when he heard of the land at Orange with the water, so he came down and bought twenty acres, and then returned to San Francisco and made preparations to move. So, in June, 1875, he brought his family here. Later he sold ten acres to his brother Arthur. He had three acres of grapes, three of oranges, and three of olives; but the grapes having been killed by blight, they were grubbed out, and so were the oranges, which had red scale. He plowed up the entire ranch, in fact, and established the well-known Santiago Jersey Farm. He had nine head of choice dairy, pedigreed cows, and he not only made the choicest butter, but he sold young stock all over the state. On account of the tremendous amount of care, however, Mr. West began to sell off his stock in January, 1902. Two years before that he had embarked in the orange industry, as he found his place ideal for a nursery, and he therefore raised nursery stock between the trees of his grove, supplying the vicinity with fine young orange trees. This nursery he sold out in 1905.

In 1905 it was deemed necessary to make a change for the benefit of Mr. West's health, and Mr. and Mrs. West removed to Los Angeles. He bought a home on Benton Way, north of Temple Street, where he lived until February, 1917, by which time he had regained his health. In 1917 Clarence H. West, the son, purchased the Benton Way home, and Mrs. West came to Orange. They leased a home, where they stayed for a year in 1918, and he bought a home on North Lemon Street, where they at present reside.

Six children were granted this worthy couple. Amy W., the eldest, is married to Henry Meier of McPherson; Walter L. married Pearl Stone, since deceased, and is living on Prospect Avenue, Orange; he is the father of two children—Leo and Arletta; Percy G. is the husband of Ethel Traynor; they live at Sacramento, and have one child, Robert; Spencer A. is married to Bertha Hawthorne, and is the father of a daughter, Carmelita; Clarence H. married Gertrude McCullah, and lives at the old home on Benton Way, in Los Angeles; A. Roy West is employed at the Merchants National Bank of Los Angeles. Mr. and Mrs. West are members of the New Jerusalem Church of Los Angeles; they are Republicans in national politics.

Two sons have enviable war records, both having volunteered for the United States service. Both were with the One Hundred Forty-fourth Field Artillery, and both were made corporals. A. Roy West enlisted in August, 1917, and Clarence in November of the same year. Clarence served in the capacity of a clerk, and Roy was in charge of a squad. They went with the Grizzlies to France, leaving Camp Kearny on August 2, 1918, and sailed direct for Brest. From August, 1918, until January, 1919, they saw foreign service. Finally, at the Presidio, in San Francisco, they were honorably discharged.

EDWARD ATHERTON.—Exceptionally interesting among the annals of pioneer literature is the life story of Edward Atherton, the rancher and owner of the Fullerton Ostrich Farm, who was born at Capetown, South Africa, on May 29, 1860, the son of John Atherton, a native of Manchester, England, who became a pioneer at the Cape. He was not only a merchant, but he owned 500 acres used for grain, stock and vineyards; and on his farm he had two factories—one for scouring wool, the other for distilling liquor. Edward's mother died when he was an infant; but in common with the other five children, he enjoyed the best educational advantages that the local municipal schools afforded, and until he was twenty-six, he assisted his father on the farm, and helped develop the natural resources of the place.

In 1886 Mr. Atherton came to the United States, being accompanied by a Mr. Conning, with whom he associated himself to sell ostrich plumes. They came to California, bringing with them a large stock of feathers but did not find the ready sale they expected and soon abandoned their efforts. Mr. Conning remained in San Francisco and later engaged in the banking business but Mr. Atherton decided to stay with the ostrich business and in December, 1886, came to Anaheim and arranged to take charge of the ostriches that had been shipped to California in 1881, which originally numbered twenty-one birds, but which had increased to forty-six. The first shipment was on exhibition in San Francisco and was shipped to Anaheim in 1882, and was owned by a corporation known as the California Ostrich Farming Company, of which R. J. Northam was the manager. In 1887 the birds were moved to the ranch now owned by Mr. Atherton and situated two and one-half miles northeast from Fullerton. In 1891 the company sold out to Northam and Atherton, and in 1899, after an auction had been held to dispose of as many birds as possible, Mr. Atherton bought out Northam's interest and became the owner of forty birds. In 1902 he bought sixty-eight acres of land where he now lives, for ostrich farming and this he improved and eventually sold off all but thirty-one acres. He now owns eight ostriches. The land has been set to Valencia oranges and walnuts which are in fine bearing condition. He is a member of the Placentia Mutual Orange Growers Association and a man of much public spirit.

In 1897, Mr. Atherton was married to Miss Carolina J. Sellinger, daughter of John Sellinger, a pioneer vineyardist of Fullerton and Anaheim; and three children have blessed their union. Malcolm is the eldest; then comes Miranda; while the youngest is named Dalton. Mr. Atherton belongs to the Independent Order of Foresters. Both Mr. and Mrs. Atherton enjoy the friendship of a wide circle, and the fruits of long years of earnest, straightforward endeavor.

R. J. Gregory

RICHARD SPENCER GREGORY.—A careful student of real estate in all its phases, and of land and realty development, Richard Spencer Gregory, a native of the fine old commonwealth of Virginia, has become well and favorably known in the insurance and real estate fields of California, and has for some time been privileged to influence the trend of events making for a safer and sounder future, with more flourishing conditions, for Orange County. He was born in Chesterfield County on March 30 of the eventful Centennial Year of 1876, the son of E. S. Gregory, a farmer and merchant, who remained faithful to the Confederacy, fought with the Confederate Army, and finally died with an honorable record of forty years as justice of the peace. He married Miss Rosa H. Franklin, a charming Virginian, who is also dead. They had ten children, eight of whom are still living.

Trained for the most part in the public schools of the locality, Richard Gregory reached California at the age of seventeen, in 1893, and at the beginning located in Placentia, Orange County, coming to Fullerton as early as 1896. For four years he followed ranching, and then for another four years he engaged in the transfer business. When he sold out, he began his present business of realtor. With Messrs. Balcom, Fuller and Welton he purchased 100 acres just north of Chapman and east of Spadra, and subdivided a part as the Central subdivision of Fullerton, afterwards another addition, known as "Hill Crest," and the whole is now practically built up with beautiful homes. The new high school, which occupies twenty acres of the tract, is the pride of the people of northern Orange County. His residence on Hill Crest is one of the most attractive homes in the city. Mr. Gregory also laid out the following subdivisions to Fullerton: "Hermosa," "Jacaranda," "Ramona," "Orange Grove," "Wilshire," "Gregory," "Glenwood Square," as well as subdividing several ranches into smaller tracts. He has always engaged in citriculture, having improved several orange groves, and still owns a splendid orchard in the culture of which he takes much pleasure and pride. He has been very successful in all that he has undertaken, despite, or perhaps because, he was "self-made."

At Fullerton, on August 2, 1899, Mr. Gregory married Miss Mabel B. Schulte, a native daughter, born in Orangethorpe, and the daughter of Wm. and Mary Schulte, pioneers of Orange County. She is now the mother of two children—Erma and Merrill. The family are members of the Baptist Church of Fullerton, of which Mr. Gregory is a trustee.

An Independent Democrat, Mr. Gregory was a member of the City Council for six years, the last two of which he gave to the duties of mayor. During his service as trustee and mayor was the era of the beginning of public improvements in Fullerton. The streets were paved, the city sewer plant constructed, the city water plant built, the fire apparatus bought and the fire department started. Not wishing to serve longer, he was not a candidate for reelection, and retired from the board at the close of his second term. During the late war he was a member of the Home Guards.

He is a director of the Home Mutual Building & Loan Association of Santa Ana, and a director of the Farmers & Merchants National Bank of Fullerton. Public-spirited and active in all the bond and war "drives," he is still a director of Orange County Y. M. C. A. work. He belongs to the Fullerton Club and Newport Yacht Club, and fraternally he was made a Mason in Fullerton Lodge No. 339, F. & A. M.

FRED A. STOFFEL.—One of the most successful business men that ever "struck" San Juan Capistrano is Fred A. Stoffel, who built up the Mission Inn Cafe and is now erecting, at a cost of about $75,000, a new two-story hotel and store building. His education, experience and industry have contributed to enable him to overcome keen competition, while his genial, sympathetic personality, his disposition to please and to accommodate, have made him so popular that everybody in San Juan Capistrano is his friend, and thousands of the traveling public look back with satisfaction to hours spent in his hostelry and restaurant. Indeed, from a patch of weeds and rubbish to the picturesque, attractive San Juan Cafe, in the short space of five years, is the transformation wrought by the energy of Mr. Stoffel, who first came to San Juan Capistrano in 1915.

Fred was born in Frankfort-on-the-Main, Germany, on January 1, 1885, the son of John Stoffel, still living, who was a decorator of window glass, a fine art in the industry of glass painting. He had married Miss Caroline Reuscher, who died in 1919. They had six children, and Fred, who first saw the light on New Year's Day, 1885, was the fourth in the order of birth.

He was given unusually good educational advantages, and besides being instructed in his native German, was taught English, French and Spanish, and allowed to travel widely. When he married, he chose for his wife one of the most attractive women of Bavaria, Miss Louisa Steinmuller, who has made an excellent helpmate; and one son, Fred A., Jr., blessed their fortunate union.

In 1906 Mr. Stoffel came to America, and after spending some time in Canada, Dakota, Milwaukee, Galveston, Houston, and a trip to South America, was in the service of George Borgfeldt and Company, the most important importers of toys and many other lines of high-grade wares in America, doing business on Sixth Street and Irving Place, New York. Coming to California, Mr. Stoffel pitched his tent at San Juan Capistrano, in January, 1916, and began business here right after the disaster to the Otay Dam at San Diego, which was carried away by a freshet. Then the Santa Ana River overflowed its banks, and the waters of the Trabuco and the San Juan flooded the streets of San Juan Capistrano, and buried the Santa Fe tracks, so that traffic was crippled for three months. It was discouraging enough to the young man who had just invested so much opposite the Mission, but nothing daunted, he bought more land, until now he owns about two acres in the heart of the town, the choicest lots in town, and is located on the south side of Central Avenue, over to the Santa Fe right of way. It is the site of the old San Juan Inn, which burned down in 1918; and there Mr. Stoffel has built the New Hotel Capistrano.

This is a very fine structure of two stories, in the mission style of architecture, made of brick, 125 front by 85 deep in size, on a site 127x120 feet square, and it has three fronts. It contains four stores, forty rooms and six apartments, a social hall and a lobby, and those who are familiar with Mr. Stoffel's way of doing things may rest assured that in all its appointments, and the manner in which it will be managed, it will meet the demands and preferences of the most fastidious and exacting taste. The surroundings will be restful; there will be ample ground for parking the motors of tourists, and the establishment is certain to become the resort both of the transient guest and the student and artist more and more coming this way.

California, from the time of her proud entrance into the Union, has been fortunate in the character and experience of a large number of those who have undertaken to cater to the cafe and hotel wants of the public; and Orange County may well congratulate itself on the coming of this thoroughly-trained gentleman, by temperament as well as by personal knowledge of the ins and outs of his enterprise so capable of success in his difficult field, and so likely, in his success, to do a fine thing for San Juan Capistrano, Southern California, as well as for himself.

ABE W. JOHNSON.—A representative of fine old Yankee stock, whose father was a captain in the Union Army, Abe W. Johnson, a Missouri boy, is making good in California, ranching as a wideawake tenant on the San Joaquin, with a full complement of mules, horses, a Fordson tractor and all the other necessary, up-to-date implements. He was born in the interesting old town of Kirksville, in Adair County, on June 13, 1872, and there grew up in an environment which has been helpful to some of the finest types of American manhood. His father, John Johnson, was born at Albany, N. Y., migrated to Missouri, and there, when less than eighteen years of age, enlisted as a bugler—owing to his lack of years—in Company E, Seventh Missouri Volunteer Infantry. He campaigned for four long years, and by merit alone rose to be captain, his sword, one of the precious heirlooms of our subject, speaking eloquently for his devotion to a righteous cause. He had the respect, admiration and confidence of every man in the company, and was a prominent G. A. R. man. But whatever glory he acquired was dearly purchased, for he was severely injured, so that he suffered much from its results. When the war was over, he married, at Kirksville, Miss Mary A. Waddill, then resident there, who was a native of Coles County, Ill., and buying a farm of 160 acres four and a half miles northeast of Kirksville, he pursued agriculture, and gradually recovered from his injuries, which were due to a horse falling upon and crushing him in the chest. When he died, our subject was only twelve years of age, and he then became one of the mainstays of the mother, who is still living at Kirksville, in her eighty-second year. They had four children, and one died in infancy; the others, still living, being Alice M. Grassle, wife of George Grassle, a retired banker and capitalist, at Kirksville; Abe W. Johnson, our subject, and Dr. John K. Johnson, of Jefferson, Green County, Iowa.

Abe grew up on a farm in the country until he was eight years of age, and then his folks moved into Kirksville, where he attended the grammar school, and afterward studied at the Kirksville State Normal, which graduated both General Pershing, and Captain Arthur L. Willard of the Flagship New Mexico, U. S. Navy. For three years he was apprenticed to the cigar-maker's trade at Kirksville, and when twenty-one assumed the management, with his brother, of his mother's farm. At Kirksville, too, he married Miss Jennie Wayman, who was born in Illinois, and after his marriage he continued to farm until 1899, when he decided to come west to the Pacific Coast.

Henry Hockeneyer

Minnie C. Hockeneyer

Arriving in California, he farmed for a year at Garden Grove, and then he went to the Fred W. Bixby Ranch at Long Beach, where for three years he farmed 700 acres to barley. In 1904 he came to the San Joaquin Ranch, and he has been here ever since. For several years he farmed grain, planting as much as 1,200 acres to barley and wheat. The second year that he was on the Irvine Ranch he raised a crop of sixty acres of lima beans. Since then he has been successful, and he is one of the pioneer lima bean growers on the San Joaquin. Now he is a member of the Southern California Lima Bean Growers Association.

Four children blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Johnson: Leonore is the wife of Oscar Wilson, a rancher on the San Joaquin, one mile south of Irvine; Mary E. married Walter Stromeson of the U. S. Army, who is stationed at the fort at San Pedro, and Wayman K., husband of Miss Jessie Huff, of Santa Ana, is a rancher on the San Joaquin. Mr. Johnson is a Republican in national political affairs, and a nonpartisan, broad-minded advocate of everything worth while for the community. He has always been public-spirited, believing that only in proportion to what a citizen puts into the development of his town or county is he likely to get out, and for several years he served as road overseer of the district.

HENRY HOCKEMEYER.—Among the worthy pioneers of later date whose useful lives are pleasantly recalled by all who were fortunate to know and profit from them, was the late Henry Hockemeyer, for several years superintendent of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company. He was born in Adams County, Ind., on February 4, 1852, was reared and educated in his native state, and for years confined himself to his chosen occupation, that of a tiller of the soil. He was the son of Anton Hockemeyer, a farmer in Indiana.

In 1883 Mr. Hockemeyer migrated to California, and located in Orange County, where he purchased his ranch of eleven and a half acres. At that time only a few acres were set out to vines, as viticulture here was only an experiment; and on account of the unprofitableness of vineculture, due to a disease on the vine, he soon turned his attention to apricots and walnuts. Eventually he found, with others, that the soil was better adapted to citrus fruit culture, and now the ranch is in a high state of cultivation, producing Valencias, Mediterranean Sweets and Navels.

In Orange, in 1886, Mr. Hockemeyer was united in marriage to Miss Minnie C. Peck, who was born near Milwaukee, Wis., a daughter of Adolph and Louise (Witte) Peck. Minnie Peck spent her early life and received a good education in Rochester, Minn., residing there until 1884, when she came to Orange, her parents joining her a year later. Her father has passed away but her mother is still living, making her home in Orange. Mr. and Mrs. Hockemeyer have three daughters: Alma, now Mrs. Schnutzen; Dora, the wife of Fred Newcomb and Mrs. Minnie Heinecke and all reside in the vicinity of the home.

After a useful, well-spent life, Mr. Hockemeyer passed away in August, 1905, leaving many friends to mourn his loss. He bequeathed to his widow a most comfortable and elegant home in which to spend the balance of her days. The family are members of and liberally support the Lutheran Church in Orange. Mrs. Hockemeyer is a member of both the Santiago Orange Growers Association and the Santa Ana Walnut Growers Association.

ARTHUR H. PATERSON.—Identified for a number of years with the oil industry, Arthur H. Paterson has for the past four years been the special agent for the Union Oil Company at Santa Ana, and through his efficient handling of the work the business has each year steadily increased. A native of Canada, Mr. Paterson was born at St. Mary's, New Brunswick, on December 18, 1880, his parents being Dr. Edward M. and Maud (Appleton) Paterson. Dr. Paterson, who was a well-known physician and surgeon, brought his family to Oakland, Cal., and there engaged in the practice of his profession, and there he remained until his death, which occurred in July, 1917, Mrs. Paterson having passed away several years previously.

Coming to California at the age of five years, Arthur H. Paterson received his early education in the schools of Oakland and after finishing his studies there he went to Marburg, Germany, and took up a course in medicine, thinking to follow in the footsteps of his father. He did not finish his course there, however, and returned to California, where he decided to engage in commercial pursuits. He started in this line of work as a salesman in 1901 for the Imperial Home Bakery and also as their routing manager, continuing with them until 1906 when he was interested in contracting and building for eighteen months. The next two years were spent with the well known firm of H. Jevne, in Los Angeles, where he gained a well-rounded experience through his connection with all the departments comprising their extensive business.

In 1910 he entered the oil business and since that time he has given his exclusive attention to that field. He was first with the Union Oil Company, spending two years at their refinery at Oleum, then taking the position of special agent with the Union Oil Company at Redwood City, which he held for three years. Four years ago he came to Santa Ana as the special agent of the Union Oil Company, and he is still occupying that position, having made an unqualified success. The business has constantly increased during that time and Mr. Paterson now has five stations under his supervision. He also has an independent interest in the oil business, being president and manager of the Tepathol Oil Company; also secretary-treasurer of the Nuevo Oil Company.

In politics Mr. Paterson adheres to the principles of the Republican party, and is an active member of the Chamber of Commerce and the Merchants and Manufacturers Association. He is prominent in fraternal circles, being a member of the local lodge of Elks and of the Masons, holding membership in the Chapter, the Consistory, the Commandery and Shrine, and is Worthy Patron of the Eastern Star. Mr. Paterson's first marriage occurred on May 9, 1906. At San Rafael, on November 27, 1912, he was united in marriage with Miss Blanche E. McCarter, and they are the parents of two daughters, Margaret Alice and Melba Anita. During his residence in Santa Ana he has entered enthusiastically into the civic life of the community and is ever ready to put his shoulder to the wheel to help its progress.

WILLARD SMITH.—A native son of whom the Southland may well be proud is Willard Smith, the able and popular president of the Villa Park Orchards Association, and one of the best known citizens of Villa Park precinct. He is the only child of James M. and Sophronia (Abbott) Smith, natives of the state of New York, and was born on the home ranch he now operates in conjunction with his two half-brothers, O. K. and A. B. Clark, under the firm name of Smith and Clark. His maternal ancestors were of English origin and were among the Pilgrims who accompanied Miles Standish to the New World on the Mayflower and settled Plymouth. The family were prominent members of and took an active interest in the early doings of the Massachusetts Bay Colony and did valiant service in the Colonial and Revolutionary wars, so Mr. Smith is entitled to membership in the order of the Sons of the American Revolution.

Mr. Smith's father was born in Orange County, New York, and died in Orange County, Cal., at the advanced age of eighty-five. He was a tailor by trade and occupation and made his start in life with the needle. He came west, and lived in various places in the Middle West. A general breakdown of his health caused him to come to California in 1878 to rest and recuperate. He spent his first winter at Santa Barbara, and despite the doctors' prediction that he would not survive many months he recovered his health in the genial California climate. After coming to California he married Mrs. Sophronia Clark, the widow of Dana Clark, an early Californian who originated the citrus industry in Southern California, and who planted the first orange orchard in Santa Paula. She crossed the Isthmus in 1866, and after her marriage to Mr. Clark lived at Santa Barbara, where Mr. Clark died and where the widow met Mr. Smith after her husband's death. They were married in Orange County, in 1880, which was then a part of Los Angeles County. The mother passed away at the age of sixty-five, five weeks before her husband's demise.

When a young man, Willard Smith served an apprenticeship in the photo engraver's trade at San Diego, Cal. He became proficient in this trade, which he followed for a period of five years, most of the time in Los Angeles. Quitting the engraver's trade he came back to the home ranch, which he has operated ever since. The ranch consists of sixty-two acres, forty acres of which are planted to Valencia oranges, and sixteen acres to Eureka lemons. Mr. Smith helped organize the Villa Park Orchards Association in 1913, a very important Orange County business institution. This association has recently built a large orange packing house on a spur of the Southern Pacific Railway at Villa Park, and the magnitude of its business may be judged from its 1919 shipments of oranges, which amounted to $750,000 worth of fruit, which sum was disbursed to orange growers at Villa Park and vicinity. Mr. Smith is also a director in the Bixby Development Company, and with Hugh T. Thomson laid out, irrigated and planted 300 acres of the 400-acre tract known as the Peralta Hills Tract. The directors of the Bixby Development Company are: Willard Smith, Hugh T. Thomson, George H. Bixby, Jotham W. Bixby of Long Beach, and Attorney O'Melveny of Los Angeles. Mr. Smith, who is interested in many other enterprises and projects in Orange County, is well informed and a man of ripe experience and excellent judgment. His counsels are eagerly sought in matters of commercial and political importance. His marriage, which occurred June 1, 1910, united him with

Mr & Mrs J. A. Maag

Miss Edna Lee, daughter of Albert A. Lee, and they have two sons, George Abbott and Willard Irving. Mr. Smith is also president of the Serrano Water Company and is a member of the Republican Central Committee of Orange County. He was made a Mason in Orange Grove Lodge No. 293, of which he is past master; a member of Orange Chapter No. 99, R. A. M.; knighted in Santa Ana Commandery No. 36, K. T.; Los Angeles Consistory 32nd degree; is a life member of Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., Los Angeles, and with his wife is a member of the Order of Eastern Star, Orange; he is also a member of Santa Ana Lodge No. 794, B. P. O. Elks.

JOHN A. MAAG.—The owner of two fine ranches which comprise his thirty-one-acre home place on Fairhaven Avenue, immediately south of the city of Orange, and sixteen and a half acres at Olive, John A. Maag is a phenomenally successful citrus grower. His success is due to industry, close attention to every detail of the business, and unusual executive ability.

He is of German lineage and birth, having been born in Westphalia, Germany, October 31, 1851, where his father, Frank Maag, was a tenant farmer, and who died when John A. was a child two and a half years of age. The mother, Elizabeth (Schmeltzer) Maag, courageously assumed the responsibility of bringing up her two sons, John A. and Frank P., kept the family together, and through many vicissitudes and hardships successfully accomplished the task.

John A. lived in his native country until he was a lad of fourteen. He acquired his education in the local public schools and in the summer time worked for the neighboring farmers herding cattle. In 1865 the mother and her two sons sailed from Bremen for the shores of the New World, and landed at old Castle Garden, New York City, going thence to their destination at Eagle River, in the Northern Peninsula of Michigan. They lived in Michigan five years, then went to Columbus, Platte County, Nebr., in 1871, where the mother took up a homestead. She was the first white woman settler in Union Township, in Platte County, Nebr. The family lived through the discouragements incidental to the grasshopper scourge, blizzards, and other vicissitudes and hardships, and young John helped break the virgin sod of Nebraska with oxen. His brother Frank became a Nebraska farmer and died in that state in 1917, leaving a widow and three children. On reaching his majority, John A. homesteaded 160 acres, which he improved and brought under cultivation. This was his first real estate holding and he continued to farm in Nebraska from 1871 until 1891. He was married in Platte County, Nebr., in 1884, to Miss Catherine Steffes, a native of Michigan, who came to Nebraska as a girl. Their union was blessed by the birth of twelve children, ten of whom are living. Two children died in Nebraska, and the youngest six children were born at Orange, Cal. The ten living children are: Frank P., a rancher near Olive, married Virgil Meats of Olive. They are the parents of two children; John W., also engaged in ranching; Mary lives at home; Joseph A., a rancher in the Santa Ana Canyon; Henry, a rancher at Covina, married Florence Amons; William H., who married Catherine Kermer, and is now ranching in Santa Ana Canyon; George W., who is also ranching in the Santa Ana Canyon, served six months in France in the Thirty-sixth Balloon Company and was honorably discharged; Charles E., at home; Elizabeth Mary, a student at Ramona Convent at Shorb, and Clarence Edwin, who is fourteen years of age.

In 1889 Mr. Maag made an extended trip to the Pacific Coast, and was so favorably impressed with the land of sunshine that he made a second trip in 1891 and visited Los Angeles and Orange County. He liked Southern California so well that he decided to move his family to the state. When they first came they stopped at Los Angeles and remained five months, purchasing a horse and wagon with which they drove all over Southern California. Finally, after looking over the country they bought their present home place in the fall of 1891.

Mr. Maag has taken an active part in the community since he first settled in Orange County. He helped organize the Santiago Orange Growers Association and was the second man who subscribed to its stock. He was president of the association two years and has been a director in it for twenty years. He is a member of the Central Lemon Growers Association at Villa Park, which he also helped organize, is a stockholder, has served as director ever since the association started, and is still on the board. He is a charter member of the Olive Heights Orange Growers Association and has been a director in it since its inception, and is still on the board. He is also a member and director of the Richland Walnut Growers Association, as well as the Orange County Fumigating Association. He helped organize the Citizens Commercial and Savings Bank at Santa Ana, which was afterwards consolidated and is now the California National Bank, being a stockholder in the institution. In 1899 Mr. Maag built a fine two-story frame residence which would cost $10,000 to build at the present time. It is a twelve-room house, commodious and up to date in its appointments. Mr. Maag was reared in the Catholic faith, and he and his wife and family are communicants of St. Joseph's Catholic Church at Santa Ana. Mr. Maag gives due credit to his excellent helpmate for much of the success he has attained in life. She, like himself, has worked and striven, early and late, and their large and highly respected family of children are following in the footsteps of their parents. Upright in character and enterprising in disposition, Mr. Maag is a man of whom Orange County may well be proud.

ANDREW F. MILLS.—Among the native Californians residing in Orange County is Andrew F. Mills, more familiarly known as Frank Mills, who occupies a prominent position among the substantial agriculturists that have acquired a competency in their calling. His one hundred sixty acres lies half a mile south of Garden Grove, and is the eastern quarter section of the old Mills family home owned by his father, who settled in the neighborhood in 1875, fourteen years before Orange County was organized and before the town of Garden Grove was in existence.

Andrew F. was born at Princeton, Colusa County, Cal., August 18, 1865, and is the son of Andrew Mills, senior, a California pioneer who came to the coast with a drove of cattle from Missouri in 1851. The elder Mills, a native of Massachusetts, was born near Great Barrington in 1814, and as a young man went West, locating in Missouri, where he married Miss Ruth Ann Ripper, and became a prominent stockman. After coming to California he settled in Colusa County, where he became one of California's early and prosperous stockmen and horsemen, at one time owning 2,000 head of cattle. Of the six children in the parental family Julia is the wife of George McCrindle, and resides at Long Beach, Cal.; Maria is deceased; Abe died at the age of twelve; Jane is the wife of James Young, a rancher at Lemoore, Kings County, Cal., and Andrew F. and his brother George H. are ranchers at Garden Grove, where George owns the west quarter section of the old homestead adjoining his brother's quarter section. Andrew, or "Frank," was ten years old when he accompanied his parents and their family to Los Angeles County in 1875. Anaheim was their post office and trading town and there was only one store at Santa Ana in those days. Frank grew up on his father's ranch and in 1899 was united in marriage with Miss Ura B. Conkle, daughter of Samuel Q. Conkle. They are the parents of three bright and interesting children: Andrew R., Ruth M., a student in the Santa Ana high school, and Floyd H., a pupil in the Garden Grove grammar school. Mr. Mills owns some of the best soil in the vicinity of Garden Grove and rents his acreage to tenants for growing chili peppers. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Church.

WILLIAM R. YOST.—A sturdy, active man and a very interesting personality, representing as he does the good old pioneer days of the blacksmith and wagon maker who knew his trades, and now classed among the prosperous farmers of the Southland, is William R. Yost, of Talbert, who was born near Troy, Davis County, Iowa, near the Missouri boundary line, on January 27, 1863. His father was Isaac Yost, a native of Indiana, who married Miss Nettie Hix, a native of Iowa. In 1873, they removed to Santa Ana, Cal., and pitched their tent for a time in what was then called the Gospel Swamp. In a short time, however, they removed to Santa Ana. In coming west, the Yosts traveled by way of the Central Pacific, and the Union Pacific, over what was known as the Ogden Route, to San Francisco, after which they journeyed south on the steamship "Orizaba," to Wilmington Harbor, and then to Gospel Swamp by wagons.

The elder Yost was a blacksmith by trade, and soon set up his forge at the corner of Main and Fifth streets, Santa Ana. A year later he sold and the family moved to Klamath Falls, Ore. Being a good millwright he built a saw mill on Lost Run Creek, run by water power. Selling out eight months later he returned to Santa Ana and built a blacksmith shop on Fifth and Broadway, and came to have a very interesting association with the early development of the town. He died in Santa Ana in 1882.

The maiden name of Mrs. Yost was indicative of her Scotch-Irish blood, although she came of the best Revolutionary stock, and her father, one of the early settlers of Iowa, fought in the Black Hawk War. She died on December 24, 1919, eighty-three years old, the mother of ten children. Charles is a vineyardist at Coachella; Clara is the wife of John Miller, a merchant at Phoenix, Ariz.; William R., now a farmer, is operating the McQuiston ranch of 120 acres at Talbert; John was accidentally killed at El Toro; James resides in Santa Ana; Mary is the wife of William McLaughlin and resides in Ventura County; George, also a rancher, resides in Fresno County; Malin works in the shipyard at San Pedro; Myron is in the auto business at Los Angeles; and Leo is the wife of Fred Cole, of West Fourth Street, who owns a walnut ranch of twenty acres in Santa Ana.

William R. attended the common schools in Santa Ana, learned the blacksmith's trade under his father, and in the same town started in business for himself. He ran a machine shop and a foundry, and made all kinds of vehicles and implements such as would be demanded thereabouts, and he did all the blacksmithing work for James McFadden, who was the chief spirit in building the Santa Ana and Newport Railway as well as for the Fairview Railroad, now a thing of the past. His shop was located at the corner of Fifth Street and Broadway, and there, among other exceptional things not turned out by everyone, he made all the switch plates for the Newport road.

Andrew Baker
Elizabeth A Baker

After a while, Mr. Yost quit smithying and became a cattle buyer and a drover, raising, buying, selling and shipping cattle in Riverside, Orange, Los Angeles and San Diego counties. About 1906 he began farming on the O'Neill ranch near El Toro, and then he went to San Juan Capistrano, leased a ranch where he raised grain and beans, then back on the San Joaquin ranch where he farmed about five years. In 1920 he leased the McQuiston place of 120 acres near Talbert, where he raises beets and alfalfa.

On April 30, 1889, Mr. Yost was married to Miss Ida Kell, a native of Sacramento, and a daughter of William and Sallie (Sharp) Kell, early Californians. Her father later settled at Pomona, and there she was married. They have had nine children. Lucy is Mrs. James Leonard and resides at Los Angeles. Edith is the wife of H. P. Thelan of Santa Ana. Wilmath is in the telephone office at Santa Ana. Ida is Mrs. Jack Melchard, and lives in Santa Ana. Wilfred is an engineer at Sacramento. John is with his father on a farm, and so is Robert; and Ruth and Angela are at home.

Mr. Yost is prominent as an Odd Fellow in Santa Ana, and has been very active in many ways in furthering the development of Orange County; and he is well known among and highly esteemed by the pioneers of both Santa Ana and Orange counties.

ANDREW BAKER.—An enterprising and successful rancher who has devoted over a quarter of a century of his life towards the development of Orange County is Andrew Baker, a resident of Stanton. He was born in Perquimans County, N. C., on December 25, 1848, the son of James A. and Lucretia (Blanchard) Baker, who moved to Indiana before the Civil War. It was some years later that Andrew Baker migrated further westward, stopping in Jasper County, Mo., where he followed farming until 1879, then disposed of his holdings and located in Morris County, Kans. Thirteen years later he decided on a new move that would take him to California, and he arrived in Orange County on March 22, 1892, purchasing his present property the following year. This forty acres was situated on what was called the alkali flat, and was a part of the great Stearns Rancho. The land was in its primitive condition, covered with cacti and infested with jack rabbits. Possessed with the indomitable spirit of the pioneer settler, Mr. Baker at once began to clear the land and make necessary improvements so he could begin ranching, and even had to help to build the roads in this section, which had only been staked off. He hauled off from his property over fifty wagon loads of cactus, and has made of his place one of the best and most productive ranches in this part of Orange County. At first his water for irrigation came from an artesian well, but this source of supply soon gave out, and he sunk a new well to the depth of 159 feet, which gives him an abundance of water for irrigation and domestic purposes. For seven years he pumped the water by horse power, then installed a thirteen horsepower gas engine. He grows a diversified lot of products, and is well satisfied that he has cast his lines in such pleasant quarters as Orange County.

Mr. Baker has always been interested in every movement that had as its aim the upbuilding and development of the best interests of his community, and took an active part in the incorporation of the town of Stanton, and in the educational affairs of his district. He was the prime mover in having the Magnolia School district organized in 1895, and gave the name to the school, and he was a member of the first board of trustees. His ranch is near the school on Magnolia Avenue, and therefore he was more deeply interested in the maintaining of a good school, which now has an enrollment of almost 100 scholars.

On January 1, 1878, Andrew Baker was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth A., daughter of John P. and Martha (Hayworth) Mills. Mrs. Baker was born in Keokuk County, Iowa, on March 8, 1853, lived there until she was fifteen, and then accompanied the family to Jasper County, Mo., where she was united in marriage with Mr. Baker, at the city of Carthage. This happy union has been blessed with six children: Arthur G., a graduate of the Hastings Law School in San Francisco, is a well-known attorney in Los Angeles. He is married and lives in Pasadena. Fannie M. is the wife of J. T. Lyon, a realty dealer of Anaheim; Dora M. became the wife of G. N. Miller, and had two children, Viola and Alice. She died June 24, 1919. Oliver G. was in charge of the Pacific Electric station at Stanton for over eight years. He owns eight highly improved acres of oranges on Stanton Avenue, where he and his wife reside. James A. owns ten acres of oranges on Broadway, was a teacher for several years, but is now a member of the realty firm of Lyon and Baker in Anaheim. He is the father of three children, Marjorie, Warren and Gerald. Paul Noble received a high school education and was an electrical engineer in the employ of the city of Los Angeles, and when the first call came for soldiers and sailors for the great World War, he enlisted as a common sailor in the U. S. Navy, and through his exceptional ability and efficient service rose to the rank of ensign. He is still in the Navy.

Mr. Baker is a firm believer in Christianity and supports all movements that come to his notice for the elevation of the standard of morals and the social betterment of his community. He and his family are very highly esteemed by all who know them for their genuineness of character and high ideals of citizenship.

HENRY ROHRS, JR.—A resident of Orange County since his fifth year, Henry Rohrs, Jr., is developing a flourishing and productive orange and walnut orchard on West Fairhaven Avenue in the vicinity of Orange. Ohio was Mr. Rohrs' native state, his birth occurring at Defiance, Henry County, in that state August 3, 1876. His parents, Fred and Anna (Grobrugge) Rohrs, were both natives of Germany, coming here in the days of their youth. The father located at Defiance, Ohio, and after purchasing eighty acres of land, which he cleared of timber and stumps, there engaged in raising stock and grain.

There were five children in the Rohrs' family; Henry, the subject of this review; Fred, John, George and Minnie. When Henry Rohrs was five years of age the family removed to Santa Ana, Cal., arriving on March 12, 1881, where the parents still make their home. He attended the public school in Santa Ana and at the same time worked on the home ranch, his father being engaged in ranching after coming to California. Until he was twenty-four years of age Henry remained at home, working hard in helping his father with all the duties of the home place. He was always thrifty and industrious, so that in 1900 he was able to purchase eleven acres on West Fairhaven Avenue to the development of which he diligently applied himself. In 1916 he became the owner of nine acres at Tustin and Fairhaven avenues, which was planted to Navels and Sweets, but he has since reset the whole tract to Valencias, which bids fair to be one of the best producing groves in this locality.

At the home of the bride's parents in the Orange district on March 21, 1901, Mr. Rohrs was united in marriage with Miss Minnie A. Franzen, the ceremony being performed by Reverend J. Kraeber. Mrs. Rohrs is a daughter of Asmus and Dorothea (Schmidt) Franzen, who were born near Flensburg, Denmark. The father served in the Danish army in the Slesvig-Holstein War, 1864 to 1866, and afterwards also served in the Franco-Prussian War in 1870-71. He resided near Flensburg until 1879, when he came to America, and later brought his family to Columbus Junction, Iowa, where he pioneered, cleared the raw land from brush and broke the soil for growing crops. In March, 1889, he located in Orange County and soon afterwards bought twenty-seven and a half acres on Fairhaven Avenue at the corner of Yorba Avenue, where he built a residence and made his home until 1908, when he sold it and moved to Santa Ana, where his wife died at the age of seventy-three. He then made his home with Mr. and Mrs. Henry Rohrs, Jr., until his death on February 4, 1916, at the age of seventy-seven. Mr. Franzen for his services in the Slesvig-Holstein War received a medal of honor from King Christian of Denmark. The last three years of his life he received a pension from the Danish government. Mrs. Rohrs is the youngest of four children, three of whom are living. She came here in her youth and received her education in Orange County.

Mr. and Mrs. Rohrs are the parents of four children, to whom they are giving the best educational advantages within their means: Frances A. who is in the Orange Union high school class of 1921; Alvin H.; and the twins, Clarence and Kenneth. They are active members of Zion's Evangelical Church at Santa Ana.

In partnership with Mathias Nisson and John Maier, Mr. Rohrs sunk a well 400 feet deep on his place and installed a Pomona deep well pump run by a twenty-horse-power motor. This was completed June 12, 1912, and with its flow of forty inches of water has since then been of exceptional value to the three ranches although they all get service from the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company.

Mr. Rohrs is a member of the Santa Ana Walnut Growers Association and is deeply interested in public affairs, gives intelligent consideration to all the vital questions of the day, although he personally does not care to hold public office. While a supporter of Republican principles he casts his vote for the best man in local affairs, regardless of party. Both Mr. and Mrs. Rohrs' highest ambition is to rear their family according to the loftiest ideals of American citizenship.

J. EDMUND SNOW.—The inspiring annals of pioneer life are certainly recalled in the family history of J. Edmund Snow. His father, H. K. Snow, was born in White-side, N. H., in 1834, being directly descended from the three Snow brothers of Snow Hill, London, who arrived in this country four years after the Mayflower landed. When only eighteen years of age he came to California around the Horn on the "Witch of the Wave," the voyage lasting 116 days. Arriving in California, he went at once to the mines of Calaveras and Mariposa counties, where he remained four years. He crossed the Isthmus of Panama four times.

Later he was engaged in business at Osage, Iowa, and while there married Miss Cynthia Downs. In 1859 they moved to Bandera County, Texas, where they engaged in the cattle business. When the Civil War broke out, they moved to California; being Union sympathizers they could not pass through El Paso, so, driving an ox team, they made a detour through Chihuahua, arriving in San Francisco late in 1861. For seventeen years Mr. Snow engaged in business in Vallejo and while there served for two years as county recorder.

In 1877 he removed his family to Tustin, buying a home place of fifty acres in orchard, and later bought and sold other properties. He devoted all his time to the improvement of these lands and to the extension of the irrigation system, being one of the originators of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation system. Mr. Snow made his name familiar to every horticulturist in the state while in Tustin. When the California Legislature recommended a tariff of twenty cents a cubic foot on citrus fruits he believed the amount too small and determined to give his efforts toward securing a higher rate. He originated the idea of the tariff of one cent a pound on citrus fruits. Accompanied by M. J. Daniels he was sent to Washington by the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce. Securing the support of Senator Perkins and Senator Jones of Nevada, and of Senator White, a Democrat, his efforts were successful, after spending five months in Washington.

Not alone were his efforts devoted to citrus fruits, for he was one of the enterprising parties to establish the peat drainage district at Smeltzer. In 1903 the Tustin home was sold to Ray Osmun, who erected a beautiful home of Mexican type upon it. Here the world-famed Madame Modjeska resided for a time, and later it was purchased by A. J. Crookshank, president of the First National Bank of Santa Ana, who now makes it his home.

Mr. Snow moved to Ventura County, building a new home on his walnut ranch. Here he lived the remaining days of his life, passing away in 1913. He was a life-long Republican and was a thirty-second degree Mason, belonging to the Chapter and Consistory. His second wife, Elva Downs, a sister of his first wife, still resides at the Ventura County home.

James Edmund Snow, the third son of Mr. and Mrs. H. K. Snow, was born in Vallejo and was but two years of age when the family moved to Tustin. Here the lad attended the public school and later attended the Santa Ana high school. In 1899 he went to Cibola, Ariz., and proved up on a half section of land lying along the Colorado River. At this time he also purchased from his father what was known as the Allen ranch, lying between Talbert and Costa Mesa. This place was adapted to the raising of grain and celery and for dairying. It was sold in 1906 to Goldschmidt Bros., and it is of interest to note that it was on this ranch that gas was first noticed in Orange County. Some fifteen years before this, Mr. Allen, the original owner, found gas coming from an artesian well. This he collected in a tank placed over his well, pipes carrying it to his home and it was used successfully for fuel.

In 1903 Mr. Snow was married in Santa Ana to Miss Edith Johnston, daughter of John and Laura (Safley) Johnston, who moved to this state from Tipton, Iowa, when Edith was nine years of age. The Johnstons purchased a home on North Main Street, Santa Ana, and here Mr. Johnston still lives, Mrs. Johnston having passed away in 1914. Mrs. Snow was educated at the Santa Ana high school and at the Los Angeles State Normal School.

In 1908 Mr. Snow moved from Santa Ana to the Imperial Valley, where he purchased government land relinquishments near Brawley, until he had 800 acres under development with the service of the Imperial Water Company, No. 5, from the Colorado River. In 1912 this ranch was traded for seventy acres of oranges at Riverside. Here the family resided until the death of Mrs. Johnston, when they returned to Santa Ana and for the next three years kept the home on North Main Street for Mr. Johnston.

In February, 1918, the present home at 335 West Eighteenth Street was purchased, and here Mr. and Mrs. Snow now live with their interesting family of three sons—Jack W., James Edmund, Jr., and Paul Johnston, who are pupils in the public schools. Mr. Snow is engaged in the real estate business. He is a Mason and in national politics is a Republican, but in local affairs is as nonpartisan as they make 'em.

HENRY EVANS.—The handsomely built city of Norwich, Norfolk County, England, with its world-wide reputation as a center for the manufacture of textile fabrics, was the birthplace of Henry Evans, the owner of a fine ranch located a mile southwest of Garden Grove.

Mr. Evans was born May 6, 1848, a son of William and Mary (Pierce) Evans, both natives of England who married, lived and died in their native country. The father, who was a stockman, died at the age of seventy-six, and the mother at forty-eight, when Henry was twelve years old. In a family of four children Henry is the youngest child and the only member of the family now living. His sister Sarah, and brother William, both unmarried, lived with him on his Garden Grove ranch and died there. Another sister lived and died in England. Henry grew up on his father's 100-acre stock farm in England, and was educated in the common schools and in boarding schools of his native country. Coming to America in 1881 he located in Texas, and after a year and a half drifted to the San Fernando Valley, Cal., where he spent eight years before he came to Garden Grove in 1891. He has lived on his present ranch thirty years, and now, at the age of seventy-two, has retired from the more active duties of life, and rents the property to tenants who raise chili peppers on it.

Mr. Evans has seen much of the development of this section of the state and Orange County and is a man of forceful personality, gifted with a high order of intelligence, and his mental and moral characteristics are such as have won for him the esteem and confidence of all who know him. In his religious convictions he is an Episcopalian.

JOHN REEDER GARDINER.—A progressive upbuilder and a native son of Orange County, J. R. Gardiner of Fullerton has demonstrated his public spirit in many ways as a supporter of every movement that has had for its aim the betterment of conditions in general for Fullerton and its environs. He was born near what is now the town of Fullerton, on December 21, 1873, a son of the late Alexander Gardiner, a native of Scotland who came to the United States when he was eighteen years old and settled in Rockford, Tenn. He became the superintendent of a cotton mill there and demonstrated his ability as a machinist and an engineer on many occasions. He was married in Rockford to Miss Susan Reeder, a native daughter of Tennessee and they migrated to California in 1868, traveling by train to San Francisco and thence by boat to Los Angeles County, settling on a ranch in what is now known as the Orangethorpe school district. There he developed a ranch and lived until he answered the final roll call in August, 1916, at the age of seventy-eight. His good wife survived him until June, 1920, when she passed away at the age of eighty-three years, the mother of seven children, six of them now living.

John R. Gardiner received his schooling in the Orangethorpe school district, and remained on the home ranch until he was eighteen years of age, when he went to Duarte to learn the trade of blacksmith and horseshoer in a shop owned by his brother-in-law. After mastering the trade he returned to Fullerton in 1896, the flourishing city being then little more than a village, and started in business. The venture did not prove profitable and he left it to work in the oil fields in Bear Canyon for a year. In 1900 he took charge of his brother's livery business and carried it on for three years, then went to Los Angeles and engaged in selling real estate. It was in 1907 that he again felt the lure of his native town calling him and he returned and began to work at the forge until 1910, when he purchased his employer's business and here he has been ever since. The business grew from a small beginning until it assumed the proportion of the largest blacksmith shop of its kind in this section of the county, Mr. Gardiner, by his genial manners and efforts to please, retaining his patrons, who came from far and near to secure his services. In 1920 he added to his establishment a complete line of agricultural implements, trucks and tractors, the whole representing many thousands of dollars invested and here he requires the services of from five to ten men to handle his work. The most modern of equipment is found in operation and his quality of work is considered his best advertisement.

On February 19, 1902, Mr. Gardiner and Miss Louise Dean were united in marriage at Fullerton. She is a native of Wisconsin and a daughter of James W. and Susan (Brown) Dean, both now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Gardiner have had three children: Carroll D., Kenneth R. and Donald William. Mrs. Gardiner shares with her husband the good will and esteem of their many friends.

In politics Mr. Gardiner is a Democrat on national issues, but in local matters he is strictly nonpartisan and works for every local improvement. He was one of the first trustees of Fullerton after the incorporation of the city and he was reelected, serving for three terms, during which time many substantial and lasting improvements were installed. For eight years he served as city treasurer. He is a charter member of the Fullerton Club and when the World War was in progress he joined the local Home Guards and otherwise assisted in war work. Mr. Gardiner is a Mason, holding membership in Fullerton Lodge No. 339, F. & A. M., of which he is a past master; he is a member of Fullerton Chapter No. 90, R. A. M.; Santa Ana Council No. 14, R. & S. M.; Fullerton Commandery No. 55, Knights Templar and Fullerton Chapter, No. 191, Order of Eastern Star, in which he is a past patron. Mrs. Gardiner is past matron of the Eastern Star.

DAVID G. WETTLIN.—A gentleman unusually well qualified as a public official is David G. Wettlin, city clerk and ex-officio city assessor of Orange, formerly an experienced practicing attorney, who came to California about a decade ago. He was born at Woodville, Miss., on May 20, 1886, the son of G. A. Wettlin, a native of Germany, who settled as a merchant in Mississippi, where he lived until he retired. He now resides at Alhambra, Cal. He had married Maggie Lindenmeyer, a native of Mississippi, who died there when David was in his second year. They had three children, and our subject was the youngest in the family.

He was brought up at Woodville, where he was educated in the preparatory school, and at Sewanee, Tenn., in the Episcopal military academy, and after having finished their courses entered the University of the South at Sewanee, Tenn., where he continued for two years. Then he matriculated in the law school of the University of Mississippi at Oxford, from which well-known institution he was duly graduated, in 1907, with the degree of LL.B. He was admitted to the bar of Mississippi and practiced at Woodville for two years.

In 1910 Mr. Wettlin came to California and located at Los Angeles, where he engaged in real estate transacting, and at the end of two years removed to Huntington Beach, for the practice of law. His knowledge of legal procedure was soon appreciated, and he was elected city attorney of that place, and when he gave up that responsible office, it was to leave there an enviable record for both ability and fidelity.

In 1913 Mr. Wettlin located at Orange, where he practiced law with success, and in April, 1918, he was elected city clerk of Orange, and in the middle of that month took up the duties of that office. In April, 1920, he was reelected city clerk without opposition, and has entered upon his second term. He was also made, by virtue of his office, city assessor. He belongs to the Orange County Bar Association, and as a Democrat is a member of the Democratic Central Committee from Orange County. He is a member of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association, and is secretary and treasurer of the Men's Club of Orange.

While at Huntington Beach, Mr. Wettlin was married to Miss Vera Pryor, a native of Arkansas, by whom he has had two children—Emma June and David G., Jr. He belongs to the Episcopal Church, and was superintendent of the Sunday School there last year. Mrs. Wettlin belongs to the Christian Church of Orange.

Mr. Wettlin was made a Mason in Woodville Lodge, Miss., and was exalted in Woodville, Miss., Chapter, R. A. M., and was knighted in the Malta Commandery at Woodville. He is also a member of the Eastern Star at that place, and is now affiliated with Orange Grove Lodge No. 293, F. & A. M., and Orange Grove Chapter No. 99, R. A. M., and the Santa Ana Commandery, Knights Templar. With Mrs. Wettlin, he is a member of the Scepter Chapter No. 163, O. E. S., of Orange; he belongs to the Orange Lodge of Odd Fellows, and he and Mrs. Wettlin are members of the Rebekahs.

GODFREY J. STOCK.—Prominent among the successful, influential citizens of Anaheim must be mentioned Godfrey J. Stock, an American doubly interesting because of his career as a "self-made" man. He was born in Lenawee County, Mich., on September 29, 1868, was reared on a farm, and attended the country schools of the neighborhood. Just twenty years later he arrived at Anaheim, Cal., where he had two sisters living; and although he came here sixty dollars in debt, he is now comfortably prosperous, having long ago repaid all that he owed.

His first work was for H. C. Gade, who conducted a trucking and transfer business; and in time he bought him out, and carried on the business himself. The firm is now known as the Anaheim Truck and Transfer Company, and it is one of the pioneer institutions of the city. After selling out, Mr. Stock bought nineteen acres of the John Adams ranch on South Walnut Street, then partly set out to fruit, and this property he has greatly improved with orange and walnut trees. He erected two houses there, and has made of it one of the best-developed ranches in the county. He also has put up two modern garage buildings on South Los Angeles Street, on lots he bought seventeen years ago. For a number of years he has been engaged in real estate transactions, buying, selling and subdividing property, having put several subdivisions to Anaheim on the market.

Mr. Stock served for a number of years as trustee of the city of Anaheim, and during that period many important improvements were undertaken. Streets were paved and sewers were built, and other steps forward made, of which Mr. Stock had long been a foremost advocate. He is a stockholder, and was formerly a director, in the Anaheim Citrus Fruit Association and the Walnut Growers Association, and he has contributed toward their growth, as he has profited by their activities.

On Christmas Day, 1892, Mr. Stock was married to Miss Mary Boege, a native of Anaheim, and the daughter of T. J. F. Boege, the pioneer. Three children have blessed the union. R. F. Stock graduated from the Polytechnic high school in Los Angeles, and was employed by the General Electric Company when the war broke out, at which time he resigned and enlisted for service of the U. S. Government in the electrical engineering and anti-aircraft division. He entered the officers' training school, successfully passed the examination, and was commissioned a first lieutenant. When he arrived in France he was placed with the Searchlight Division, and his command was at the front when the armistice was signed. He returned to the United States, and received his honorable discharge, and resumed his former position with the General Electric Company. He married, in Chicago, Miss Bernardine Price, formerly of Anaheim, and they have a daughter, Bertha. Oswald Stock is at home. Arthur, the youngest son, enlisted in the U. S. Marines in 1919 and is still in service. Both the younger sons graduated from the Anaheim high school. G. J. Stock has attained to all the chairs in Odd Fellowship and the Encampment, and he is a member of Anaheim Lodge No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks, and of the Knights of Pythias.

JOHN H. SCHROEDER.—A hard-working rancher, whose intelligent foresight, industry and thrift have been crowned with success, is John H. Schroeder, of 2203 Lincoln Street, Santa Ana. He was born at Visselhovede, in Hanover, Germany, on November 20, 1857, the son of Frederick and Mary Schroeder, highly-esteemed residents of that country, and was educated in the excellent schools of Visselhovede. He lived at home until he was twenty-two years of age, and then he migrated to America. Landing at Castle Garden, New York, in 1879, he came almost directly to Napoleon, Henry County, Ohio, where he spent a few months trying to get his bearings. Then he went to Kelly's Island, Erie County, Ohio, to work on farms, but soon returned to Henry County.

In November, 1880, Mr. Schroeder came out to California and soon found employment as a farm hand in the vicinity of Santa Ana. He also early purchased ten acres lying between Santa Ana and Tustin, but within a year, sold it. In 1882, he purchased the homesite on which he is now living. This tract contained fifteen acres, one acre being planted to a variety of fruit trees. In 1890, he sold two acres, and the remaining thirteen are now devoted as follows: five acres to walnuts, five to oranges, and three to apricots. The whole tract is served by the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company.

Some years after the date of these transactions, Mr. Schroeder purchased a seventeen-acre tract in West Orange, half of which is devoted to walnuts and apricots interset, and seven acres to oranges. On this tract he built a home which is now occupied by his son, Albert F. Schroeder. Little by little Mr. Schroeder added improvement after improvement, planting the trees with his own hands, so that he can feel more than the mere pride of ownership in what he has title to. He is a member of the Orange, the Apricot and Prune and the Walnut Associations and has always been favorable to them as the sure way to market his crops at living prices. He has added, in the truest sense, to the wealth of the county, as he has, in the education and upbringing of his family, added to the honor and dignity of the state.

On April 20, 1893, Mr. Schroeder was married to Miss Sophie Haase, daughter of Frederick and Sophie Haase, and a native, like himself, of Visselhovede. She came alone to New York in 1885, her parents following seven years later; and reached California first in 1893. Five children blessed this auspicious union. The eldest was the late H. William Schroeder, one of the genuine heroes of the late war; while the second in order of birth was Albert F. Schroeder, who lives on the seventeen-acre ranch in West Orange. Freda is taking a course in the Normal School at Los Angeles; Carl is at home working on his father's ranch; and Emma is a pupil in the Santa Ana grammar school.

Henry William Schroeder, whose sacrifice for his country will be spoken of with pride so long as the annals of Orange County tell to future generations the devotion and suffering of Santa Ana youth, entered the United States service in September, 1917, and trained at Camp Lewis in Company D of the Three-hundred sixty-fourth Infantry. In March he was sent to Camp Green, N. C., where he was transferred to Company M of the Forty-seventh Infantry. At Camp Green he trained for two months, when he went East to Camp Mills, N. J., and set sail for France. He served in the great Chateau Thierry drive, St. Mihiel, and on September 30, 1918, died in the field hospital, after notably brave action and initiative, and where he had so conducted himself that he reflected honor on himself and all those closely related to him, breathing his last from wounds received in the fierce Meuse-Argonne offensive. In such a death as this of one of the most promising of Orange County's young men, may it not be said that John H. Schroeder, the pioneer, has generously paid whatever debt he once owed to the land of his adoption.

ASMUS PETER JACOBSEN.—A man whose untiring industry and exemplary management have made him comfortably well-to-do, so that now he owns a fine estate of twenty acres, with a cosy, well-furnished residence, is Asmus Peter Jacobsen, who first came to California in the "boom" period of the late eighties. He was born in Flensburg, province of Schleswig, on September 9, 1862, the son of a farmer, on which account he was reared on a farm and educated in the local schools. In 1878 the Jacobsens emigrated to the United States and located at Sycamore, in De Kalb County, Ill., and there Asmus continued his schooling, while he also assisted his father. He worked for his father until he was twenty-five years of age, and during that period of faithful apprenticeship he helped to clear the home place of debt.

In 1887, Mr. Jacobsen pushed out for himself, west to California, and settling at Orange began to work on a citrus ranch and in a vineyard. His employer was Mr. Leslie, and the latter soon appreciated both the ability and the willingness of the young man. Once well established here he married Miss Marie Ehlen, a native of Hanover, Germany; and with her help as new capital of the most desirable kind he rented the farm of twenty acres he at present owns. In 1902 he was able to buy the ranch, and he at once set to work to make improvements thereon. He set out the choicest Valencia oranges and lemons, and added to the number of buildings, and in due time had a ranch of the kind prized by the most experienced, enabling him with confidence to share the activities of the Santiago Orange Growers Association, the Central Lemon Association, and the Richland Walnut Growers Association.

Mr. Jacobsen has a family of four children—Walter, Sirene, Esther and Ernst—all of whom are at home in the fine residence erected by their father. The family attend the Lutheran Church, and Mr. Jacobsen serves on the board of trustees. Orange County has always extended the most cordial welcome to such pioneer settlers as the Jacobsens, and it must be said that the welcome has not been offered to the thousands of desirables flocking here in vain.

GEORGE D. DIERKER.—A dependable American citizen of much executive ability and pleasing personality, who is both an experienced citrus grower and horticulturist and a successful business man, is George D. Dierker, who resides with his family in his beautiful country bungalow on his ranch of twenty-five acres, two and a half miles northeast of Orange, on Tustin Street. He was born in the fine old county of St. Charles, in Missouri, on December 9, 1869, and is the oldest son and third child of Henry Dierker, long one of the most honored citizens of Orange, Cal. When two years old he was taken to Cuming County, Nebr., where his father was to farm, and there attended first the common district schools and then the high school at West Point.

In 1892, with the rest of the Dierker family, he came out to California, and settled at Orange. At first he bought ten acres on an extension of North Main Street, in the West Orange precinct, and planted the same to Navel oranges, lemons and apricots. He stayed there ten years, in the meanwhile improving his acreage, and in 1904 sold it at a good advance in price. Two years before, Mr. Dierker bought his present place, twelve acres of which he has planted to Valencias, five acres to Navels, and six to lemons. The balance of the twenty-five acres is given up to yards surrounding his fine dwelling, which he had erected in 1911-12. He is an active member of the Villa Park Orchards Association, which has a packing house at Villa Park as its main shipping point. He is also a director in the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, which irrigates 17,000 acres. He has served continuously as director for the past fifteen years, and was president of the company from 1909 to 1915.

In 1894 Mr. Dierker was married to Miss Lena Bandick, a native of Kansas, who came to California a little girl in the early eighties, accompanying her parents. Now they have four children. Agnes W. is the wife of the Rev. W. L. Westerman of Kansas City. Esther H. is the wife of John Eltiste, of Fullerton. Alma M. is a graduate of the Orange high school. Urban G. is the youngest of the family. Mr. and Mrs. Dierker are members of the Lutheran Church at Orange, and he served on the building committee at the time of the erection of the large, new Lutheran Church edifice in Orange, put up in 1914 at a cost of over $52,000. He has endeavored to lead a clean, industrious, exemplary life, and votes for the best men and the best measures, irrespective of party affiliations.

NEREUS H. LEONARD.—A well-known rancher whose exceptional prosperity, enabling him in later years to live comfortably retired, could not fail to make him satisfied with Orange County and devoted to the great Golden State, is Nereus H. Leonard, who long ago campaigned for prohibition, when that ideal, now a glorious reality, seemed far away as a goal. He was born at Greensboro, N. C., on January 21, 1852, the son of Elisha and Laura (Reynolds) Leonard, who were in sympathy with the North and opposed to slavery, and so found it advisable, when sectional troubles came, to remove to a more peaceful zone. In 1857, therefore, they sold their farm of 100 acres in North Carolina and migrated to Danville, Ind.; and there they stayed until 1860, when they again disposed of their property and removed to Spring Valley, Minn. And in the latter place they acquired 200 acres of land.

Nereus Leonard left home in December, 1873, to seek his fortune, and almost directly came to San Bernardino, Cal., where he worked on a ranch and also for W. S. La Praix in the lumber business. Three years later, he returned to Spring Valley and purchased a large tract of cheap land; and then, for twenty-one years, he engaged in the raising of stock on an extensive scale.

On August 22, 1878, Mr. Leonard married Lucy A. Bradley, at Spring Valley, the daughter of Philo and Mary Ann (King) Bradley. The Kings early took Government land in Sumner township and later near Fairmount, Minn., and after great hardships due to the grasshoppers, they returned to Spring Valley. In 1897, Mr. Leonard came to California with his family and seventeen years later sold his Spring Valley holdings.

Choosing Orange County, the Leonards built their home near the old Ocean View schoolhouse on a ranch of forty acres devoted to celery, corn and potatoes. At the end of two years, they sold this property, and moved to a ten-acre ranch on Santa Clara and Grand avenues. There they lived until 1905, when Mr. Leonard purchased forty-six acres at West Orange, later selling nineteen acres to his son-in-law, C. S. Minter.

Mr. Leonard afterward purchased forty acres known as the Mayberry Tract; and this, together with his previous acquisition, gives him sixty fine acres, thirty-two of which are under the service of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company. He lived on his ranch until 1907, when he built a house at 2227 North Broadway, Santa Ana, and moved into it. On the first of January, 1920, he removed to 601 West Fifth Street, where he at present resides.

Despite his busy life, Mr. Leonard has always been a leader in the promotion of progressive movements for the community's good, and on no one thing can he look back with more satisfaction perhaps, than in the active part he took in the organization of the Orange County Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company, a sketch of this company being given elsewhere in this work. A member of its first board of directors, Mr. Leonard served as its vice-president for several years, and personally wrote the first four or five applications filed with the secretary of the company.

Four children have honored these worthy parents. The eldest is Mrs. Eleanor Minter, who lives on a ranch at the north end of Bristol Street and the mother of four children—Ivo, Neal Dow, Glenn and Claudine. Doxander P. resides on a ranch in West Orange. He married Edna M. Ward and they have four children—Dorothy, Dorcas, Rodney and Hazel. Edith has become Mrs. E. F. Minter, of Sanger, Fresno County; while the fourth in the order of birth is Frances, who is a student nurse at the Santa Ana Hospital.

D. R. MACDONALD.—Emphatically a man of energy and enterprise, who is aiding in a most substantial way the higher development of the citrus industry of Orange County is D. R. Macdonald, the popular and successful dealer in fertilizers. He was born in Ontario, Canada, May 25, 1873, and when he reached young manhood migrated to the United States, locating in Montana, where he entered the employ of Nelson Story, on his 4,000-acre ranch near Bozeman. At first he rode the range as a cowboy; later on he was advanced to the responsible position of foreman of the Story ranch, where both cattle and grain were raised.

During the year 1901, Mr. Macdonald located in Seattle, Wash., where he engaged in the contracting business, making a specialty of street grading, and did a large and important work in cutting down the hills and leveling the land in that city. In 1910, Mr. Macdonald came to California and located at San Diego, where he was engaged as superintendent of construction work under State Highway Engineer A. B. Fletcher, and helped in constructing the splendid state highway in San Diego County; he also built the roadway on the Poway grade and helped in the construction of other roads in the county.

In May, 1916, Mr. Macdonald came to Orange County, locating at Garden Grove, where he engaged in raising sugar beets. Later, with keen business foresight, he saw an opportunity for the development of a great field in the handling and selling of fertilizers, for in these days of scientific farming a broad knowledge of fertilizers and modern methods of their application to certain soils is absolutely essential to success, and this is particularly true in citrus culture. With his characteristic progressive spirit he entered into the new venture and opened an office at Anaheim at 171 West Center Street, and has built up a large and lucrative business. Not only does he furnish fertilizer to the orchardists, but makes contracts for spreading it. One of the largest contracts received by him was one for 139 carloads of fertilizer for the Sam Kraemer ranch at Placentia.

In June, 1901, Mr. Macdonald was united in marriage with May Pickering, a native of Utah. Fraternally he is a member of the Woodmen of the World, and in religious matters he is a member of the Catholic Church. One of Anaheim's sterling and dependable citizens, he can always be found enthusiastically supporting every movement for the advancement of the best interests of Orange County.

J. FRANK SCHWEITZER.—California has been fortunate in the large number of expert workmen of one kind or another who have been attracted to her promising domain, and who have therefore made no small contribution toward her development on broad, progressive lines, and among such efficient workers must be mentioned J. Frank Schweitzer, the popular foreman of the Brea and Pacific gasoline plant. He is an Ohioan by birth, and so comes rather naturally by a liking for, and a knowledge of an industry early developed in parts of the East and now so important in California.

Born at Toledo on February 3, 1877, Frank is the son of William and Mary (Luty) Schweitzer, both of whom are now living, retired from their long and active labors. They were worthy folk, and devoted to their three children; and none the less helpful to our subject, the second child, who was sent to the grammar schools and then given two years of study at the high school.

As soon as a good opportunity presented itself, Frank learned the trade of a machinist, and this he worked at previous to coming to California in 1905. At first he located at Olinda, in Orange County, and since then, his experience and ability being more and more recognized, he has had charge of various shops.

In 1914 Mr. Schweitzer took the position which he holds at the present time and which he fills so well to the satisfaction of all concerned. He has become an active member of the Chamber of Commerce, and although recognized as a Republican in matters of national politics he supports the best men and measures in local affairs; he was once appointed to fill a vacancy in the city trustees, and since then he has been elected for a four-year term beginning with 1918.

On July 24, 1906, Mr. Schweitzer was married to Miss Julia E. Meissner, by whom he has had two children, Dorothy and J. Frank, Jr. The family attend the Christian Church, and cooperate in all movements for social uplift, as they also show their public-spiritedness in endeavoring to raise civic standards.

JOHN ALLEN AKERS.—A native son of the great Golden State, who, by hard, intelligent work has won a place for himself in the agricultural world, is John Allen Akers, residing with his family in the La Habra district of Orange County. He was born at Santa Paula, Ventura County, November 23, 1872, the second eldest son of John Akers, born at Salem, Ind., November 26, 1835, but was a farmer in Iowa, whither he went as a young man and there married, March 25, 1858, Miss Sarah Harbord, who was born in Missouri on December 7, 1841. With three small children the family crossed the plains with ox-teams in an early day and settled near Salt Lake City, where Mr. Akers operated a sawmill for two years. There another child was born. The family came to California in November, 1866, and for a while lived at El Monte, later moving to the vicinity of Santa Paula, where they stopped a short time and then settled on a ranch of 200 acres on the Sespe River, near the town of Fillmore, improved the place and raised grain and stock. Mr. Akers met an accidental death on May 6, 1885. This ranch is still in the possession of the family. Of their eight children, seven are alive. Mrs. Akers is living at Santa Paula and is in the enjoyment of all her faculties and the best of health. Her father, Robert Harbord, was a soldier in the Black Hawk War, and a brother, James Harbord, died from exposure while a soldier in the Northern Army during the Civil War.

John A. Akers attended the common schools of his district until he was thirteen, when the circumstances of his father's death threw the responsibility of the care of his mother and two younger children upon his shoulders, and he was thus able to minister to and relieve his devoted mother of much hard work. When the season's work on the ranch was finished he went to work in the oil fields north of their ranch and at the age of twenty-five was an expert driller. In 1900, he removed to Orange County and entered the employ of a contractor in drilling oil wells for the Brea Oil Company, making his home in the canyon. In 1902 Mr. Akers bought twenty acres of land, where he now makes his home and upon which he set out a walnut grove in 1905. Such were the conditions of the soil at that time that he was ridiculed for his purchase and attempt to raise walnuts without irrigation. While the grove was maturing the family lived in Los Angeles, whither they had moved after the oil industry had taken a slump and where he found employment until 1910, when they settled on their ranch. In spite of all discouragements Mr. Akers continued his experimental work, and in 1919 he harvested sixteen tons of nuts from his acreage, ninety per cent of which were classed as A1. This fine crop he marketed independently. He has also developed a fine family orchard of pears and other fruits.

At Los Angeles on December 20, 1900, Mr. Akers was married to Miss Eva May Chase, the daughter of Fred G. Chase, a pioneer merchant of Los Angeles. He was born at Lowell, Mass., July 18, 1851, came to California in 1872, and settled on a bee ranch near Pomona. He married Margaret L. Cunningham on October 25, 1877. She was born at El Monte on January 24, 1858, and became the mother of five children. Through her father, Mrs. Akers traces her ancestry back to Aquila Chase, who came from Cornwall, England, in 1670. The Chase family married into the Leland family, members of which came from England to America in 1652, Mrs. Akers representing the ninth generation in a direct line from the progenitor of the family in America. She is a native daughter, and a graduate from the Los Angeles Normal class of '99, and was a public school teacher a few months in Ventura. She has served as president of the Parent-Teachers' Association of La Habra, and treasurer of the Woman's Club. Three children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Akers: Dorothy May, born in Brea Canyon, March 18, 1902, and died May 25, 1913; John Fred Akers, born February 6, 1906, in Los Angeles, attends the Fullerton high school, and Elizabeth Lois, born November 17, 1909, in Los Angeles, goes to the grammar school of La Habra. Both Mr. and Mrs. Akers have supported the work of both the Red Cross and the Salvation Army, and Mr. Akers, as a Democrat, has sought to elevate civic life standards.

SAMUEL ROSS.—The good old days of the pioneer and his picturesque prairie schooner, of the bravery and the sacrifices of the men and women who founded the great commonwealth of California, are recalled by the life story of Samuel Ross, the early settler long honored throughout Orange County, and especially so at Santa Ana where he made his home. He crossed the plains in 1865 with his bride, Catherine Leonard before her marriage, to whom he was joined in matrimony in Ross Township (now Rossville), Vermilion County, Ill., a place named after his father, Jacob Ross, who also came in the same wagon train. This train was made up largely of farming people in Vermilion County, Ill., and Hoosiers, from across the Illinois line in Indiana, and was augmented with two wagons falling into line in Nebraska. There were 87 wagons in all, and they were drawn by horses, oxen and mules. In the company were Jacob Ross and his wife—whose maiden name was Elizabeth Thompson—and four sons and a daughter: William Ross, Samuel Ross and his wife, Josiah Ross and his wife, and Jacob Ross, at that time single. Ross Street in Santa Ana was named after this brother, Jacob, who was later tax-collector and assessor for Orange County. In the party, also, was Christie A. Ross, now Mrs. S. T. McNeal, of 1004 Baker Street, Santa Ana.

The Rosses settled first in Monterey County, where they rented land for two years, and then they came to Orange County, in 1868, then a part of Los Angeles County, and bought land where Santa Ana now stands. The elder Jacob Ross bought all the land from Broadway to Ross Street, and later he sold it to William H. Spurgeon. Samuel Ross took up agriculture, and established as comfortable a home as any of the company; but in 1890 his devoted wife died, leaving seven children—three having already passed away. Of these seven, Lambert Ross died, unmarried, at the very promising age of twenty. The six living are: Frank Ross, who works for a lumber yard in Los Angeles, and married Annie Hansen, by whom he has had one child, Harvey. Ida B. is Mrs. King, a widow, who farms on the Irvine ranch. James Arthur is popularly known as Ott Ross; he married Mrs. Jennie Kight, nee Smith, a daughter of William Smith, who had married Carrie Reed, pioneers of Georgia. They have four children—Catherine, Lulu, Christie A. and Leonard. Myrtle is the wife of John Froehlich, and resides in Los Angeles, where he is a carpenter for the Fox Film Studios, and also their foreman. Alda Lawrence is a farmer at Holtville, in the Imperial Valley, and has five sons; and Jessie May is the wife of Glenn W. Wells. They have three children and reside at Yorba Linda.

Mr. Ross still owns a house and seven lots in Santa Ana, and 320 acres in Arizona, where he lived for three years. The Rosses are among the interesting families in America reaching back to the Old World. Samuel Ross's great-great-grandfather was John Ross, who came from Scotland to Ohio; and the Rosses were prominent in the United Brethren Church. Most of them have also been life-long, stand-pat Democrats.

ARTHUR STALEY.—A resident of Orange County since early boyhood, and taking an active part in its growth and development since reaching maturity, Arthur Staley is a native son of the state, born near Santa Rosa, Sonoma County, April 28, 1870, a son of Theodore and Drusilla (Teague) Staley, the former a native of Missouri, and the latter of Indiana. Both parents were pioneers of California, Theodore Staley having crossed the plains with ox-teams in 1856, and Drusilla Teague was brought on the long overland journey by her parents in 1865, the wagons being drawn by horses, and some trouble with Indians was encountered by the young pioneers.

Theodore Staley farmed in Sonoma County until 1881, when he located at Orange, remaining there one year, and then located in Placentia, where he followed grape, orange and walnut growing. He was an active member of the Christian Church, and a charter member of the Anaheim Church of that body. He was a man of broad interests and active in politics in the county, affiliating with the Democratic party and serving on the County Central Committee in early days; and as school trustee, he did his share in the educational upbuilding in the county. Three children were born to this pioneer couple—Arthur, Mrs. Myrtle Lillie and Walter, all residing in Placentia. The father passed to his reward in 1903, and the mother still resides on the home ranch in Placentia.

Arthur Staley attended the Orange and Placentia public schools, and graduated from the Fullerton high school, finishing his education at Stanford University, from which he graduated with the class of 1900. Since that time he has been very active in the development of the orange and walnut industry in Orange County. For five years he was secretary of the Fullerton Walnut Growers Association, and the Placentia Orange Growers Association; and for two years he was cashier of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Fullerton. He is at present secretary of the Fullerton-Placentia Walnut Association, and a director in the following concerns—the Yorba Linda Water Company, the Placentia National Bank, and the Fullerton Masonic Temple Association. A man of foresight, and a firm believer in the future prosperity of Orange County, Mr. Staley has been an important factor in bringing his home section of the state to its present state of productiveness and development, and takes a just pride in being one of the farsighted men who have accomplished its upbuilding in all the ways which go to make Orange County an ideal home community, and with business interests which reach to the far corners of the world.

The marriage of Mr. Staley united him with Bessie Pendleton, a native of Placentia and daughter of Alexis T. and Sarah J. (McFadden) Pendleton, both pioneers of the state. In addition to his other business interests Mr. Staley owns a finely developed orange grove of twenty-five acres at Yorba Linda, now in full bearing, which he planted from nursery stock in 1910.

Active in Masonic circles, Mr. Staley is a past master of Fullerton Lodge, No. 339, F. & A. M.; a member of Fullerton Chapter, No. 90, R. A. M.; master of Santa Ana Council, No. 14, R. & S. M.; past commander of Santa Ana Commandery, No. 36, Knights Templar; now commander of Fullerton Commandery, No. 55, Knights Templar, and a member of Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Los Angeles.

CLARENCE S. SPENCER.—A leader in Republican county politics, and the owner of an exceptionally fruitful and attractive grove of oranges, Clarence S. Spencer is not only influential in citrus fruit circles, but he is also one of the path-breakers in the fast-developing oil industry. He comes from a family of representative Californians, and is himself one of the best representatives of the ideal Californian of the future.

He was born in Chariton, Lucas County, Iowa, on September 23, 1881, and is the son of Thomas and Mary A. Spencer—the former from Newcastle, England, and the latter from Iowa. The father was both a physician and a druggist, and in 1849 crossed the plains in a prairie schooner drawn by an ox-team. He settled in Santa Rosa, Cal., opened a drug store and resumed the practice of medicine. There the first Mrs. Spencer died, and Dr. Spencer returned to Iowa, where he married a second time. His bride was then Miss Mary A. Rogers, and she became the mother of our subject.

In 1888, Doctor and Mrs. Spencer came to Orangethorpe and purchased twenty acres of apricots and a few walnuts. Dr. Spencer took out both the apricots and the walnuts, and set out seedling oranges and lemons, and some young walnut trees. He devoted fourteen acres to the walnuts, and six acres to the oranges and lemons. Then, on June 1, 1891, he passed to his eternal reward, kindly remembered by all who knew him as a man who had contributed his best influence, wherever he had dwelt, for the building up and the upbuilding of the community. After his death, the widow, with the assistance of our subject and his two brothers, handled the estate.

On August 3, 1916, Mr. Spencer was married to Miss Annie Irene Thomas, a native of Cold Springs, Texas, and the daughter of James S. and N. V. (Dobson) Thomas. Her grandparents were plantation owners, and when she was very young, her parents moved to Shepherd, Texas, and there she was reared and educated. Later she attended the Normal School at Huntsville, Texas, but having finished her studies, she took up nursing near Shepherd. One child has blessed this fortunate union—a daughter, Gladys Bernice.

To the original Spencer estate now in the name of the widow of Dr. Spencer, twenty acres were added in 1906, making forty acres in all, and five of these forty Clarence S. Spencer purchased for himself. He built a beautiful home there in 1917, and by other improvements has made a neat "show place" such as one is willing to journey a few miles to see. Since the time of the purchase of the twenty additional acres, Mrs. Spencer has bought forty acres half a mile to the north, and one mile west of Fullerton. These forty acres are open land, as yet unimproved.

Mr. Spencer was a delegate to the Republican County Convention in 1912; and he is a stockholder in the Fullerton Citrus Orchards, and also in the Fullerton Leasing Company, handling oil leases. He belongs to the Knights of Pythias Lodge at Anaheim, and is among the most popular of its devoted members.

GEORGE S. SMITH.—If there is anyone in Orange County who has demonstrated a proper appreciation of both the responsibility and the delicacy of the task committed to the undertaker, then surely that man is George S. Smith, who came here to California during the great "boom" in Southland realty, and has seen Orange County and her sister districts gradually develop and take to themselves the best that modern social and business life, in all their complexities, can afford. He was born on a farm near Albany, Ill., on July 25, 1871, the son of S. W. Smith, who came here in 1886 and later established the undertaking business which in 1891 became Smith and Son. He retired from active work in 1914, and on March 24, 1916, himself passed way. Mrs. Smith, too, who was Elizabeth Myers in maidenhood, is also dead.

George received his early training at the grammar and high schools of Santa Ana, and finished his course at the Los Angeles Business College. Then he learned the difficult work of undertaking with a first-class firm in Los Angeles, and after that became associated with his father in the partnership referred to. When S. W. Smith withdrew, the firm was named after our subject. In 1915 it became Smith and Tuthill, a name now widely and well known. For eight years, Mr. Smith was coroner and public administrator. As a leading business man, he belongs to both the Santa Ana Chamber of Commerce and Merchants and Manufacturers Association, serving as treasurer for several terms, and was at one time a director of the Merchants and Manufacturers organization and the Chamber of Commerce. As an orchardist, Mr. Smith has developed four ranches.

On May 1, 1894, Mr. Smith was married to Miss Carrie R. Jones, who attends with him the Presbyterian Church. A daughter is Mrs. Georgia Atsatt of Berkeley. Mr. Smith is a Republican in national politics, and for two years was secretary of the Orange County Republican Central Committee. He is a Mason, a Knight Templar, an Odd Fellow and an Elk; and belongs to the Orange County Golf Club.

F. D. PLAVAN.—A well-educated, genial gentleman, who easily evidences his descent from the best of Roman ancestry, is F. D. Plavan, the successful ranch owner residing at 506 South Birch Street, Santa Ana. He was born on December 21, 1867, in the Waldensian Valley in the Duchy of Savoy—that picturesque and romantic country, once a part of the Sardinian Kingdom, but ceded to France in 1860. His father was David Plavan, a horticulturist and agriculturist, a native of that country, who had married Elizabeth Balmas, also of Savoy; they passed on to their eternal reward, the father at the age of eighty-four, the mother four years older. The grandparents of our subject were also hardy and long-lived, attaining each an age above ninety.

Having enjoyed the best of educational advantages in the schools of his native district, in which he was taught both French and Italian, while he learned the patois of the Waldenses, Mr. Plavan bade good-bye to home and parents when fifteen years of age, and followed an older brother, David, now deceased, who had migrated to America and settled in Missouri. Sailing from Havre, he landed in New York on July 28, 1883. At Plymouth, Mo., he joined his brother and remained for a month, then the two brothers came west to California. F. D. secured employment in Santa Clara County, working on fruit ranches and in almond orchards and vineyards in the Santa Clara Valley for four years.

In 1887 Mr. Plavan went back to Missouri and engaged in farming, and there he was married in 1889 at Monette to Miss Katie Planchon, born in South America of Waldensian parentage. After two years of farming he rented out his land and went to work in the railway shops at Monette for the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway, and he continued in the employ of this company for eighteen years, being for nine and a half years a locomotive engineer.

George W. Pollard
Martha C. Pollard

In 1905 Mr. Plavan returned to California, and settled near Huntington Beach. He bought and improved a ranch of ten acres, then sold it and moved east to Talbert, where he improved a 200-acre ranch. At one time he farmed from 300 to 500 acres, usually putting 300 acres into sugar beets. Before that time he grew celery very extensively and successfully, and served as a director in the Orange County Celery Growers' Association. In 1920 he had 140 acres in sugar beets, 120 acres in lima beans, barley and alfalfa. He and his wife also own a fine dairy ranch of 100 acres near Talbert. With his oldest son, Urban H., of Huntington Beach, he owns some 440 acres of land at Lake View, Riverside County. Mr. Plavan helped organize the Greenville Bean Growers' Association, and with others was instrumental in building the large fireproof warehouse at that place.

Mr. and Mrs. Plavan have eight children, who have belonged to the First Presbyterian Church at Santa Ana, and in this organization Mr. Plavan was an elder for three years: Urban H. resides at Huntington Beach; Alma is the wife of Loren Mead, a Santa Ana boy, a graduate of Cornell University and an employee of the Standard Oil Company; Ernest farms at Lake View, and Paul is also ranching there; Clyde assists his father on the ranch; Leland and Edith are graduates of the Santa Ana high school, and Wilma is a student there. Paul and Clyde rendered good service to their government during the late war, and were honorably discharged.

Orange County may well be proud of the invaluable contribution made to its permanent growth and real progress by such citizens as Mr. and Mrs. Plavan and their family.

GEORGE W. POLLARD.—A man who by hard and honest toil has become one of the best known ranchers of his district and has come to enjoy a large place in the confidence and esteem of his fellow citizens, is George W. Pollard of Tustin, who from a very small beginning has accumulated a large acreage now yielding, under his wise management, a bountiful harvest. His homestead comprises ten acres, which are devoted to the production of oranges and English walnuts. In addition, he owns sixty acres in Delhi, in two ranches of forty and twenty acres, where he raises sugar beets. If we look for a self-made man, then surely Mr. Pollard will fill the bill.

He was born in Erie County, N. Y., on December 1, 1859, the son of Hopkins and Sarah (Grannis) Pollard of New England stock, and was reared and educated until his twelfth year, in Darien, Genesee County, N. Y. In 1872 he removed with a sister to Kansas, near Chanute, and in that state he remained until 1884, when he came to California. He first settled in Santa Ana, where he was employed on ranches for one year and then purchased the street sprinkling outfit from William Bush and continued to sprinkle the streets of Santa Ana, until the city was incorporated. He pumped the water from a well at the corner of Spurgeon and Second streets with the old-fashioned horsepower method, using one horse, and the streets were served by a sprinkler drawn by a team. He also had a tank wagon to furnish water to contractors in making foundations. When Santa Ana was incorporated he sold them the sprinkler and followed teaming for some years. He had the contract to haul the steel and granite for the new court house, and when it was completed, he moved on to the Ritchey ranch and ran it for four years and then bought twenty acres, his present place, but has since sold ten acres of it, retaining ten acres on Walnut Street, south of Red Hill Street in Tustin. This he has set to Valencia oranges and walnuts, and he has an electric pumping plant with thirty-inch capacity. As early as 1887 Mr. Pollard purchased land at Delhi and he now owns two ranches there, each having an electric pumping plant and devoted to sugar-beet culture. He was among the first in this vicinity to raise beets for the sugar factory, at times having out several hundred acres, at which he continued until he turned it over to his sons. Mr. Pollard helped to build the street car line to Tustin and also helped to build the railroad to Newport. He hauled the material for many of the early buildings in Santa Ana, as well as freight from Newport Beach to Santa Ana. Since that time he has turned his waste land into its present productive condition, and not only evidenced his own farsightedness, efficiency in general and special adaptability to just such problems, but he has demonstrated beyond question what California, and in particular what Orange County and Tustin can do for the ambitious settler.

At Santa Ana in 1889 Mr. Pollard was joined in marriage to Miss Catherine Woodhouse and they are the parents of seven children: Walter J., who resides in Tustin, is a rancher at Delhi; Albert is farming at Delhi; Clarence is a student at the University of California at Berkeley; William is farming with Walter; Jennie is a student nurse at the Methodist Hospital, Los Angeles; Helen and Ronald are at home. Albert, a member of the American Expeditionary Forces in the World War, saw service in France and he also saw service, prior to going abroad, on the Mexican border; Clarence was at Camp Lewis; and William served in the army at Camp Kearny, where he was stationed when the armistice was signed.

Mrs. Pollard is a native daughter, born at Bolsa, five miles west of Santa Ana, and the daughter of John and Mary J. (Cook) Woodhouse, born in Scotland and Missouri, respectively. Her father was a sailor for fifteen years and came around Cape Horn to San Francisco at the time of the discovery of gold and in 1849 quit the sea and went to the mines, following gold mining for fifteen years with its ups and downs, during which time he met Miss Cook, who, when a child, had crossed the plains with her parents to Sonoma County; after their marriage they came to Bolsa and were farmers until their demise. Mrs. Pollard, who was educated in the public schools of this county, is a woman of rare attainments, good judgment and much business acumen and has always encouraged her husband in his ambition and thus assisted and helped him in every way. Cultured and refined, they are both highly esteemed and appreciated by all who know them.

Republicans in matters of national political import and nonpartisan supporters of every good movement for the uplifting of the community, Mr. and Mrs. Pollard are Presbyterians, but give their support with equal heartiness to any rational program for religious growth.

JACK JENTGES.—Up-to-date and progressive in every feature of its life and development, Garden Grove attracts energetic, progressive men who are on the lookout for a place where wealth is poured into the lap of the worker who will use the intelligence with which he has been endowed. Among the men of this order residing at Garden Grove, Jack Jentges is worthy of special mention. He was born December 12, 1873, at Korich, Canton of Kapellen, in the independent grand duchy of Luxemburg. His father, Peter Jentges, a farmer in Luxemburg, and his mother, Mary Ann (Engels) Jentges, were the parents of eight children, six of whom, four boys and two girls, grew to maturity. Five of the children are living: Jack and his brother Harry, residents of Garden Grove; Michael, a farmer at Heron Lake, Minn.; and a sister and brother in their native country of Luxemburg.

Jack Jentges was educated in the public schools of his native land and speaks and writes French and German fluently. He was eighteen years old when he left home and sailed from Antwerp for America's shores, and landing at New York, he proceeded to Iowa, where he worked by the month as a farm hand for two years, and attended the public school for two months one winter. His knowledge of English was acquired after coming to America. From Iowa he came to California in December, 1894, with a depleted pocketbook, and learning that employment was to be had at Westminster, he went there and secured work with John H. Edwards at fifteen dollars per month on the Edwards ranch. He continued to work for Mr. Edwards as a ranch hand for several years, and afterward engaged with Lawsing and Larter, for whom he worked four or five years.

The marriage of Mr. Jentges united him with Miss Dorothy E. Watkins, a native of Goldendale, Klickitat County, Wash., daughter of Charles and Elizabeth (Kurtz) Watkins. Her father, a native of Milwaukee, Wis., and her mother, a native of Indiana, were both descended from good old Pennsylvania stock. Her father is living at Santa Ana. Mrs. Jentges was two years old when her parents removed from Washington to Shasta County, Cal., and was nine years old when her mother died. After her mother's death her Grandmother Watkins reared her and an older and a younger sister. She was twelve years old when she accompanied her father and the family to Santa Barbara, Cal., and at fifteen she removed with the family to Orange County and lived at Westminster and also at Wintersburg, where she was her father's housekeeper. She moved to Santa Ana with her father and his family, and was married at Santa Ana December 1, 1911. Mr. and Mrs. Jentges are the parents of two children, Gertrude May and Thomas William.

After his marriage Mr. Jentges worked for the Golden West Celery and Produce Company at Westminster and Smeltzer, being engaged in the business when it was at its zenith. Later he rented land, became an independent celery grower and was among the unfortunate growers who suffered the loss of all they had when the celery blight came and celery growing failed. With eighty dollars in his pocket he moved to Santa Ana and went to work, making pipe for irrigation; January, 1911, he embarked in the business for himself at Garden Grove, was very successful in the six years that he was engaged in the occupation, built up a fine business and acquired a reputation as an irrigation contractor. He laid 80,000 feet of pipe in Orange and Los Angeles counties, and received $20,000 for one contract alone. In 1914, with Mr. Rogers, he added the feed business to his cement business, under the firm name of Jentges and Rogers. Later he purchased Mr. Rogers' interest, then sold the feed business to Dungan and Dungan, continuing the cement business one year. He then purchased back the feed business and continued both lines of business from 1917 until December 12, 1919. In 1919 Mr. Jentges purchased a house on Fourth Street at Garden Grove, where he lives with his family. He also owns property upon which in 1920 he erected an up-to-date, reinforced concrete building, 50x120 feet in dimensions, for a first-class garage. The building is strictly modern, with machine shop, rest rooms, display rooms, etc. Politically he makes a study of questions relating to government and votes his honest convictions, regardless of party affiliations. Fraternally he is a member of the I. O. O. F. at Westminster, and the Canton at Santa Ana. Mrs. Jentges is a member of the Rebekahs at Westminster. Thoroughly reliable and enthusiastically enterprising, Mr. Jentges is now engaged in the trucking business. He is a live wire in the development and upbuilding of Orange County, and his sterling qualities of mind and heart make him a man well liked and respected by all who know him.

E. J. Greenleaf

Fannie S. Greenleaf

MRS. FANNIE S. GREENLEAF.—Among the highly-esteemed landowners of Orange County who have shown the most commendable foresight and the most admirable public-spiritedness in the handling of their properties, must be mentioned Mrs. Fannie S. Greenleaf of Santa Ana. She is a native daughter of the Golden State and was born near Sacramento in 1855, the daughter of Robert and Lucilla (Sproule) Moore, who crossed the great plains in 1853, and stopped for a short time at the mining town of Gold Hill and later made settlement on the American River near Sacramento. When their daughter was four years of age the family removed to Sonoma, and there, while they managed a small fruit orchard, she attended the Sonoma Academy. She lived in Sonoma for eleven years and then went with her parents to Hollister, where she lived with her sister, Mrs. Lucilla A. Snyder, while her father carried on a sheep ranch eighteen miles from that town. After that the family moved onto a sheep ranch in the Panoche Valley.

At Hollister, on June 19, 1877, Miss Moore was married to Dr. Edward F. Greenleaf, a native of Mississippi, born in Yazoo County, on November 22, 1841, the son of Dr. Eli F. and Mary C. (McIntyre) Greenleaf, who removed to Clark County, Mo., when Edward F. was a lad. There he received his schooling and then took up the study of medicine and was graduated from Lind University—now the Northwestern University—of Illinois. After his graduation in 1864 the young physician began his practice at Leland, LaSalle County, Ill. In 1867 he came to California and his first location was at Millerton, in Fresno County, after which he located in San Benito County, where he taught school at the New Idria mines and at the same time practiced his profession. The Greenleafs lived there until 1882, when they moved into Los Angeles County and settled at Santa Ana, which was the scene of the doctor's operations until his death on October 22, 1906. Here he improved a fine ranch and prospered, having the esteem of all with whom he came in contact. The original home site of thirty-five acres on what is now Greenleaf Street was purchased in 1881, but the family lived in the town until their ranch could be improved for a home. In 1883 they moved onto the tract and have since resided there, in the house that was erected by the doctor. Dr. Eli Greenleaf had settled here as early as 1871 and had acquired some good land and part of this is still owned by the Greenleaf family.

Three children blessed the union of Dr. and Mrs. Greenleaf: Walter Frank, born at the New Idria quicksilver mines, on March 12, 1878, graduated from the Santa Ana high school and on December 25, 1907, married Miss Nellie C. Coke, a native daughter, whose parents were old settlers. They were J. H. and Alice E. Coke, the former still a resident of Downey. Frank is manager of his mother's ranch and one of the rising young men of Santa Ana. The second son was Elvin J. and he was born in Santa Ana on October 7, 1882, was educated in the public schools of his native city and in May, 1909, was united in marriage with Miss Mary Agnes Finn, a native of Ireland. They had one son, Charles Frank, the only grandchild of Mrs. Fannie Greenleaf. Elvin J. died in 1915 and his widow makes her home with Mrs. Greenleaf on Greenleaf Street. The third son and youngest child is Clifford A., and he was born on March 31, 1891, educated in the Santa Ana schools and married Nola R. Kennedy and they reside in Los Angeles, where he is employed as a traveling salesman.

Mrs. Fannie S. Greenleaf is an interesting conversationalist and is a firm believer in the preservation of California history. She is of an artistic temperament and many products of her brush are to be seen in her home. Of a quiet disposition, she enjoys the companionship of her children and grandchild and has always done her part to make Orange County, and Santa Ana in particular, a better place in which to live. She belongs to the Eastern Star Chapter in Santa Ana and is beloved by a wide circle of staunch friends.

MRS. ANNA DERKSEN.—A resident of Anaheim and vicinity since 1889, Mrs. Anna Derksen is so well posted on various local conditions, of recent years and the immediate present, that she is among the most sanguine in her hopefulness for the future of all Southern California, and especially in the matter of the development of oil interests in this section. She was born in Westphalia, Germany, the daughter of Christian Schluter, a native of that country and a shoemaker, who died there, as did also her mother, whose maiden name was Maria Deiter. They had seven children, and Anna was the fourth in the order of birth.

She grew up in Westphalia, and in 1868 was married there to Henry Derksen, a native of the picturesque Black Forest village of Muehlingen, on the Rhine. He was a coal miner, and in 1881 they migrated to America and Pope County, Ark., where they bought a farm of eighty acres and followed agricultural pursuits. Seven years later, Mr. Derksen died there. It had been their dream to come to California; hence, the following year Mrs. Derksen removed to the Golden State.

She settled in Anaheim, then a very small place, and rented a ranch; she bought cows, and poultry, and made butter and also sold eggs. She raised what feed was needed on the ranch, and little by little so progressed that she was able to rent, and then to buy the forty-eight acres she at present manages, and which she has since improved. When she first took hold of the land, there was not a tree upon the place; and she herself has set out everything. Now she has a walnut orchard of ten acres, and sixteen acres of Valencia oranges; the whole, irrigated by the Anaheim Union Water Company, forming one of the most desirable places of its size for miles around.

Mrs. Derksen, who has a son, Henry, in the service of the Santa Fe Railroad Company at San Bernardino, is a devout member of the Catholic Church at Anaheim, and finds pleasure in participating in any good work, religious, social or political, likely to benefit the community. She is a good student of California affairs, and is especially well-posted on oil conditions; her knowledge and her optimism leading her fellow ranchers to fortify their faith in the glorious future in store for Anaheim and the enviroing country.

CLAUDE EDGAR AND GUY SMITH.—The sons of one of La Habra's esteemed pioneer settlers, and one whose early development work meant much to this vicinity, Claude Edgar and Guy Smith, sons of Stephen M. Smith, are following in the footsteps of their father and continuing the splendid work which he began. A native of Kentucky, Stephen M. Smith was born in the vicinity of Lexington on August 6, 1859, and was a son of Thomas and Lottie (Cordell) Smith, who were also natives of that state, the father a stock raiser in that famous Blue Grass region. When but fifteen years of age he left the home of his boyhood days and started out to earn his living in Texas. There he spent a number of years, and was active in the cattle business in different parts of the state when that industry was at its height there. Coming to California in 1884, Mr. Smith engaged in general farming before locating at Rivera, Los Angeles County. Here he at once entered into the active development of the town, becoming its first general merchant and it was not long until his business assumed large proportions. He remained at Rivera for eleven years and during all that time he occupied the position of postmaster there, to the entire satisfaction of the Government and the citizens whom he so faithfully served.

In 1897 Mr. Smith came to La Habra Valley and purchased a tract of 104½ acres at the corner of Central and La Mirada avenues. The prospect was far from being an attractive one as the land was in its raw state and covered with wild mustard, but Mr. Smith at once applied himself energetically to the task of its cultivation and was unusually successful in carrying out his plans. Practically all of the acreage was set out to walnuts, from nursery stock which he himself raised. In later years Mr. Smith disposed of some of the acreage and the Pacific Electric and Salt Lake Railroads both came through the ranch, each taking off considerable portions of it, so that it now consists of sixty-five acres.
